She heard these abuses in the tin shed in front of the room in which the corpses were burnt, where she happened to be sitting at the time and retorted with great vehemence in a very loud voice. When Pearey went back she kept crying for some time and directed him to take a letter to Powayan and bring Bijai Varma or a motor car to take her home. She also said that she would now realize her maintenance through Court. About 2 hours later when he was going to the bazar, Jai Singh who was sitting on the chabutra in front of the room of his new kothi called him and inquired what Deo Kumari had been saying. He told him all that she had said. Jai Singh also asked Pearey if he was going to Powayan and on his making the reply that he would have to go if ordered, Jai Singh abused him and ordered Mata Din, Anandi Din, and Murli to take him inside the bhusauri and strangle him there. They dragged him twenty or twenty five paces and then on his entreaties, Jai Singh who was following a few paces behind, got him released and coming close to him told him that he would have to do as he desired, otherwise he would be given a severe beating such as had been administered to Gaddhu Gaddi and a Pasi and Pasi. As he remembered the serious injuries which had been inflicted on these persons and was terrified that he would be treated in the same manner if he failed to carry out Jai Singh's orders, he promised to obey. Jai Singh then ordered him to keep awake that night and to open the northern window of Musammatt Deo Kumari's house when he heard a knock there. Mata Din said that everything must be finished that night and Jai Singh agreed that this should be done. He understood by these expressions that Deo Kumari was to be murdered that night. Accordingly he kept awake during the night. When after midnight he heard a knock at the window, he opened it. Soon after his opening the window nineteen or twenty persons armed with swords, spears, bankas and lathis entered the house. He recognised Jai Singh, Kalaktar Singh, Anandi Din, Baji Lal, Balwa, Chunni Kothari, Hira Lal, Mata Din, Ohet Singh, Chandrika

Singh, Suraj Bali Singh and Hira Singh. He did not recognize the seven or eight Pasis nor did he know their names. When the assailants entered the house, everybody inside the house but himself was fast asleep. Jai Singh killed Deo Kumari and her daughter Musammatt Baba. The others attacked the rest of those who were sleeping. A dog which was inside the house began to bark and on being ordered by Jai Singh he turned it out of the house. Jai Singh ordered the corpses to be thrown inside the eastern room which was done by those who were with him. He further ordered that the goods inside the house should be piled upon them and after sprinkling kerosine oil fire might be set to the room. All this was accomplished. A lock was put to the room in which the corpses and goods were burning. One tin containing kerosine oil was brought by Balwa from outside. Pearey informed Jai Singh that there was some kerosine oil in a tin in the house and pointed out the place where it was. All the oil in the two tins was sprinkled on the goods heaped on the corpses. On the orders of Jai Singh Pearey also helped in heaping up goods on the corpses. He also brought a few pieces of fuel woods and got the Pasis to bring some beams, from the upper storey which were all placed upon the corpses. The culprits then left the house and Jai Singh directed Pearey to follow him. Jai Singh took him inside his house and gave him Rs. 200 and directed him to go to the Police Station with Mata Din and lodge a report that Bijai Bahadur, Sundar Singh, Chhota Singh and many other of Ohachrapur had committed the murders and set fire to the house. He promised to start after easing himself and being permitted to do so, went back inside the house of Deo Kumari. As he was feeling very thirsty he began to drink some water there. Just at that time Babua son of Sofley got up and asked him where his mother and Deo Kumari had gone. He replied that they had gone to the house of Jai Singh's daughter and he should go to sleep. He lay down again and began to sleep. As it was about 4 a. m. and Pearey was afraid to go to the thana, he took some clothes and left the house for Jahani Khera Railway Station. He met some people on the way and at the Railway Station, he also met Ohet Singh, Chandrika Singh, Surajbali Singh and Bhaiya Singh the four men from Lucknow District referred to above. At the Railway Station he boarded a train for Sitapur where he changed for Lucknow. From Lucknow he went to Benares and from Benares to Calcutta. He made some purchases in Calcutta. Ultimately he reached Garhwa and settled down there. He used to make a living by selling goods in neighbouring bazars until he was discovered by Sofley and placed under arrest.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has in one place in his judgment remarked that it was only through compulsion that Pearey had been made a tool of by others and therefore he could hardly be regarded an accomplice in the strict sense of the term. The learned Government Advocate did not attempt to support this view of the learned Additional Sessions Judge and we think very rightly so. The fact of Pearey having agreed to open the window with the knowledge that Jai Singh meant that Deo Kumari should be murdered that night and the act of his giving admission to the culprits inside the house when he heard the knock as well as his conduct in co-operating with the culprits as he did when they sprinkled kerosine oil and piled up goods on the corpses, clearly constitute him an accomplice in the crime. When he came to know of the conspiracy which had been hatched by Jai Singh for the murder of Musammatt Deo Kumari, he never informed her. In his statement in the Sessions Court he clearly admitted that he agreed to the proposal of Jai Singh as he thought Maiyan Sahib was going to Powayan and his only chance was to be taken in service by Jai Singh. There can be no doubt that he was on his own showing actuated by sordid motives in joining the conspiracy. If his story is true he is guilty of the worst betrayal that one can think of and it is hardly possible to say anything in extenuation of his conduct. We can hardly believe that he committed all these acts in consequence of fear as, after he had promised to join the conspiracy, there was ample opportunity for him to give the necessary warning to Deo Kumari or to run away from the village. We have no hesitation in holding that Pearey is a guilty associate in the crime and must be regarded as an accomplice.

The learned Government-Advocate made reference to s. 133 of the Indian Evidence Act and contended that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. This section ought to be read with s. 114

illustration (b) of the Act, which provides that the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. It is a rule of general practice resting on wide human experience that an accomplice as particeps criminis is an immoral person and his testimony is generally tainted. When he gives evidence under promise of a pardon he may naturally be expected to favour the prosecution. Section 133 simply lays down that a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not illegal. The effect of it is that in very exceptional cases if the Court is satisfied that the presumption of untrustworthiness attaching to accomplices in general is rebutted by special circumstances, the Court can accept the uncorroborated testimony of the accomplice. But the established practice of all the Courts in England as well as in India is ordinarily to require corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice in regard to material particulars. The same view was taken by one of us in Munna Lal v. Emperor (1). Far from there being anything exceptional in the character of the accomplice with whom we are concerned, we have already observed that the conduct of Pearey, in betraying his mistress as he did is of the blackest hue. He tried to implicate four men belonging to Lucknow, none of whom he was able to identify in Jail. We cannot but reject his explanation that the culprits belonging to Lucknow might have given false names to him because he had met them several times and had come to know their names not only from them but also from several other persons. There is considerable force in the suggestion made by the defence that he mentioned these four names in order to oblige some of his fellow prisoners in Jail. The learned Sessions Judge himself has disbelieved his testimony with regard to six of the persons who were placed before him for trial. Under the circumstances we must follow the general practice which is virtually now a rule of law and insist upon Pearey's testimony being corroborated in material particulars.

The next question arises as regards the nature of the corroboration necessary in order to give effect to the testimony of the accomplice against an accused person. The corroboration may relate either to the circumstances attending the commission of the offence or it may relate to facts and circumstances connecting and identifying a particular accused with the crime. The confirmation of the testimony of an accomplice as regards the circumstances attending the commission of the offence would no doubt indicate the presence of the accomplice at the scene of the occurrence but it would not afford any confirmation of the fact that a particular accused took part in the offence. For this reason there is a general consensus of judicial opinion that the corroboration must be with regard to circumstances showing that the particular accused was connected with the crime. The same rule was laid down by another Bench of the Court to which one of us was a party in Durga v. Emperor (2).

It therefore becomes necessary for us to examine the corroboration forthcoming with regard to the statement of Pearey the approver in the light of the observations made above. But before we do so it will be proper for us to discuss the contention forcibly urged by Mr. Jackson on behalf of the accused that the confession of Pearey approver recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 6th of August 1930 ought not to be regarded as a free and voluntary statement and that the procedure adopted in securing it is open to serious objections. It is necessary to state a few facts bearing on this point. Pearey as stated before reached Hardoi on the night of 25th of July. That night he remained in the custody of the Hardoi Police.

Next day he was taken to the Magistrate who remanded him to Jail. Four days later on the 30th of July 1930 the Prosecuting Inspector made an application to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in which it was stated that when the accused was brought to Hardoi, Police Sub Inspector Pandit Har Swaroop Sharma questioned him in connection with the case and he told him that he was ready to say the whole truth. He therefore asked that the accused be remanded to Police custody for a period of seven days for making further investigation.

On the 1st of August 1930 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order under s. 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directing that Pearey should be remanded to Police custody for seven days.

(2) 132 Ind. Cas. 70; 8 O. W. N. 247; 32 Cr. L. J. 830; Ind. Rul. (1931) Oudh 230.]

The reason given by him was that having seen the diary of the case he was of opinion that the case if challaned on the evidence then available was only half mature. He also said that he had been given to understand that if the accused was remanded to Police custody further evidence would be obtained to find out the real facts of the case. In pursuance of this order Pearey was sent from Jail to the kotwali on the 2nd of August and was kept there till the 9th August, on which date he was again sent back to Jail. On the 12th of August Pearey made an application expressing a desire to see the Prosecuting Inspector and the Superintendent of Police before he was required to attend the Court the next day which was the date fixed for the hearing of the case. On the 13th of August the Prosecuting Inspector made another application to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate asking that as the accused had applied from Jail to see the Superintendent of Police, the latter "wishes to see the accused any time preferably tomorrow morning." He therefore requested that Pearey may be remanded to Police custody for three days with a view to obtain all the information the accused wished to give. The same day the Magistrate passed the following order:—

"For reasons recorded in my order dated the 1st of August 1930 I remand the accused Pearey in Police custody for a period of three days from to-day evening.

The same evening he was removed to the kotwali. Next morning the Superintendent of Police not being free to hear Pearey's statement, sent him to the Police Sub-Inspector to whom Pearey made a detailed confession (Ex. A-21). The Superintendent of Police met Pearey on the 15th of August when he made a statement to him also. The same day Pearey was produced before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the recording of his statement under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate did not record his statement that day but sent him to Jail lock up and recorded his confession in Jail on the following day. Thus it will appear that the Police obtained in the first instance a remand into their custody for seven days on the representation that Pearey had told Pandit Har Swaroop Sharma that he was ready to say the whole truth. The statement made by Pearey in the Sessions Court on this point is to the following effect:—

"On 2nd August I was sent to kotwali and kept there till the 9th August when I was again sent to Jail. Up to that time I had indicated no intention about making any confession. The Sub-Inspector Sandila and others asked me to state the truth. But I did not give any reply giving them satisfaction. I made no promise to confess nor gave any clue to the crime. I had not up to the time of seeing the Superintendent of Police spoken to any person including the Police Officers anything about the crime under consideration."

Thus either this statement of Pearey is false or the representation made by the Prosecuting Inspector to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 30th of July 1930 is untrue. Section 167, cl. (3) requires the Magistrate authorizing detention in the custody of the Police to record his reasons for so doing. The policy of the Legislature as disclosed by the provisions of this section clearly is that detention in Police custody should be allowed only in special cases and for such limited periods as the necessities of the case might require. Such remands are not to be granted without sufficient cause being shown for it. Assuming that the representation made by the Prosecuting Inspector was true and that the statement made by Pearey is false and unreliable, still we fail to see any sufficient reason for his being remanded to Police custody for a period of seven days. If Pearey was prepared to say the whole truth he could not take more than a few hours to tell it. If he refused to make any statement when he was brought to the kotwali on the 2nd of August it passes our comprehension why the Police detained him in their custody till the 9th August. Pearey has stated, and this statement is accepted by the prosecution, that he did not make any confession or give any clue to the crime during these seven days. But three days later he is suddenly seized with compunction and when the Civil Surgeon was inspecting the undertrials on the 12th of August he dramatically expressed to him the desire to see the Superintendent of Police and the Court Inspector. We cannot help expressing our disapproval of the light-hearted fashion in which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate granted the further remand of three days as if the Police were entitled to it as a matter of course. His order granting the remand shows a lack of appreciation of the responsibilities imposed on Magistrates in granting remands under s. 167.

The circumstances of Pearey having been detained in Police custody for so long, as stated above, lend considerable strength to the argument urged by Mr. Jackson that Pearey has been induced to make the statement which he did under the influence of the Police and that the application made by Pearey to see the Superintendent of Police and the Court Inspector was only a preconcerted device in order to make out that when he expressed his desire to make the confession, he had been free from Police influence for three days. The circumstances are no doubt open to the greatest suspicion. However, we are not prepared to reject the confession on this ground but it does make the necessity greater for requiring independent and reliable corroboration with regard to material particulars.

The only corroboration tending to identify the accused with the crime consists of a statement of Kirpal Kuar with regard to a conversation which it is said, she heard on the 20th of May 1928. She stated as follows:—

"It was afternoon. I had to use my roof as a latrine as the sweeper who worked at my place was stopped and the latrine was too dirty to be used. When I was easing myself I heard a conversation going on in front of the bhusari underneath the wall where I was sitting. Somebody had said that everything should be finished to-day (aj sab khatam kar do). I could not recognise the voice. I stood up to see as to who was talking. I saw Jai Singh, Mata Din, Anandi Din, Murli and Pearey standing inclined towards the eastern corner of the bhusauri and talking."

Reliance has been placed upon this statement in confirmation of the statement of Pearey about Jai Singh conspiring to kill Deo Kumari that night and about his being forced to join the conspiracy. We find ourselves unable to believe this statement of Kirpal Kuar. Admittedly she is on terms of bitter enmity with Jai Singh more particularly since Jai Singh's active opposition to the marriage of Bijai Bahadur with the daughter of Ohhota Singh of Ohachrapur. She is given the lie by her own son Bijai Bahadur P. W. No. 41 who admitted that the sweeper resumed work at his house four or five days after his marriage. The marriage took place on the 4th of May. Therefore there was no occasion for Musamat Kirpal Kuar to use the roof of her house as a latrine on the 20th of May 1928. Bijai Bahadur in his re-examination did try to change his statement by adding that the sweeper again ceased serving him but we are unable to place any reliance upon this statement which was made the next day after he had made the admission above referred to. The note made by the learned Sessions Judge on the 19th of March 1931 after he had made an inspection of the locality shows that the southern wall of Kirpal Kuar's zenana house behind which is the roof which she used as a latrine, is 14 feet high. Its height from the roof is 4½ feet. The distance from the land where Jai Singh, Pearey and others were carrying on the alleged conversation to this roof of Kirpal Kuar's house is over 35 feet. "Loud talk on this land can be heard upstairs. But ordinary talk in low tones cannot be heard" It is difficult to believe that these people should have been conspiring in such loud tones as to be overheard by Kirpal Kuar. It is significant that Kirpal Kuar did not hear any other part of that conversation excepting the pregnant sentence 'aj sab khatam kar do' which is sought to be used in corroboration of the approver's statement. It is also worthy of note that while she is familiar with the voice of Jai Singh she could not recognise the voice of the person who made this remark. She had therefore to stand up on the commode and was thus able to see the three accused as well as Pearey. It is the case of the prosecution that Kirpal Kuar's relations with Deo Kumari were quite cordial. If her story were true it was to be expected that she should at once speak to Deo Kumari of the conversation she had overheard and asked her to call upon her servant Pearey to give his explanation for it. She did not do it. If Jai Singh had any such designs in his mind it would be more natural for him to discuss the plans in the privacy of his own house where he accosted Pearey that afternoon instead of his doing so on the open land near the bhusauri below Kirpal Kuar's house.

Having given our careful consideration to all the circumstances we feel ourselves unable to place any reliance on this statement of Kirpal Kuar.

Reliance has been placed by the prosecution on the following other facts in corroboration of the statement of Pearey:—

1. That the window through which the assailants entered the house does not bear any marks of having been violently opened:

2. That the post mortem report shows that the throat of Deo Kumari had been cut as deposed to by the approver:

3. That the place at which Jai Singh was standing when there was an exchange of abuse between him and Musamat Deo Kumari at about midday on the 20th was within such distance of the place where Deo Kumari was sitting at the time that exchange of abuse between them was quite possible:

4. That P. W. No. 31 Babua son of Sofley has sworn that when he woke up and inquired from Pearey about his mother and Deo Kumari he was told that they had gone to Jai Singh's place and that he lay down again and slept:

5. That there is some evidence about Pearey meeting one Ram Charan and Narain Jamadar and being seen by P. W. No. 21 Sardar on the early morning of 21st of May 1928 when he was running away to the Jahani Khara Railway Station:

6. That Pearey purchased some articles of merchandise worth Rs. 37-8 at Calcutta on the 24th of May 1928.

Accepting all these facts to be correct, we are of opinion that at the very best they can bear out the presence of Pearey at the scene of occurrence but none of them can link up the appellants with the offence. As we have stated before there is no dispute about the commission of the crime which might well have been committed in the manner alleged by Pearey. All the facts stated above are fully consistent with the culprits being persons other than the appellants before us. We must therefore hold that there is no reliable corroboration about the appellants being connected with the commission of the offence.

The prosecution has also laid stress on the alleged strained relations between Jai Singh and Musammat Deo Kumari which make out a strong motive on the part of Jai Singh for being a party to the crime, and on his subsequent conduct which it is claimed is more consistent with his complicity in the crime than with his innocence. In proof of the strained relations, reliance has been placed on four letters written by Musammat Deo Kumari, Exs. 22, 23, 24 and 25. Exhibits 22 and 23 were addressed to her people in Powayan. They do not bear any date. In these letters she speaks of her hopes having been extinguished and her being very much in distress. The internal evidence afforded by the contents of these letters points to their having been written soon after the death of her husband. We do not think that they afford any proof of her relations with Jai Singh being strained. The other two letters are both addressed to Jai Singh. They are also without date. In these letters she complains of his taking away the ukhari which evidently refers to the standing crops which were allowed to her under the compromise and also of his unwillingness to give her the grain which he had promised. She appeals to him for help and money as she was badly in need of it. The defence has on the other hand relied on a letter, Ex A-2 written by Musammat Deo Kumari to one Rameshar Singh, her husband's sister's son. In this letter she speaks of the rupture between Jai Singh and the Sub-Inspector who had made a false complaint against Jai Singh resulting in an order for his licensee for firearms being cancelled and excuses herself for the delay in writing to him on that ground. This letter appears to have been written in November 1927 and shows that she was not without feelings of concern for Jai Singh.

Reference has also been made to the account books of Jai Singh and three receipts, Ex. 20, 21 and 26. The case for the prosecution is that Jai Singh paid maintenance to Deo Kumari only upto December, 1923, but stopped payment of it thereafter. The defence case on the other hand is that the maintenance was paid in full up to June, 1925. Thereafter the payment was discontinued as Jai Singh had to pay certain debts of Narbir Singh for which Musammat Deo Kumari was liable and was authorised by her to deduct these payments from her maintenance allowance. In spite of this it is claimed that certain small payments were made to her occasionally when she was in need of money. The prosecution admit the genuineness of two of the account books, namely, Exs. 19 and 39 which were recovered from the house of Jai Singh under a search warrant but have denied the genuineness of the other account books, Exs. A 45/1 to A 45/6 which were produced by Jai Singh in the course of his defence evidence. The main ground urged by the prosecution is that they had, before the production of these books by Jai Singh, applied for their being produced by the Pleader of Jai Singh who had been ordered by the Magistrate to produce them but did not comply with the order. There is nothing to show that the books were in the custody of the Pleader when this order was made. The more proper course for the prosecution would have been to summon the books from Jai Singh or from some person who had them in his custody. When we questioned the learned Government Advocate, he was unable to say whether the entire books were forgeries or only certain entries had been interpolated in them. We are unable to see anything suspicious in these books. They are big volumes of bound books similar to Ex. 19 and 21. One of these books contains entries in the handwriting of Mata Din who had been in the jail lock-up since his arrest in August 1930. If these books had been forged it was more likely that they should have tried to make out that the guzara had been regularly paid all along. We are therefore inclined to hold that Musammatt Deo Kumari received her guzara in full up to June 1925 as shown by the account books.

Court Witness No. 1 Kanhaiya Lal a practising Pleader at Hardoi was examined by the learned Additional Sessions Judge as a Court witness. His evidence shows that Jai Singh executed in his favour one pro-note (A43) for Rs. 4,800 on the 11th August 1924 and another pro-note for Rs. 2,500 on the 20th of October 1924. The consideration for the first pro-note included a sum of Rs. 2,800 due from Narbir Singh under a pro-note Ex. A42 executed by him on the 16th of July 1922. The other pro-note of Rs. 2,500 was entirely in lieu of a debt which had been borrowed by Narbir Singh on the 6th of September 1922. He also stated that both these pro-notes were paid up by Jai Singh before Deo Kumari's murder. There had been some litigation between Jai Singh and Kanhaiya Lal which resulted in a reference to arbitration. Jai Singh in his objections Ex. A-40 dated the 11th of August 1926 against the arbitrators' award pleaded that the cloth shop was the personal property of Narbir Singh and that Musammatt Deo Kumari was under the compromise liable for the debts of the firm. A 47 and A-48 are copies of a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore showing that a Cawnpore firm obtained a decree for over Rs. 1,500 on account of the price of cloth purchased by Narbir Singh. In this case also Jai Singh pleaded that he could not be held liable for the debts of the shop and that Deo Kumari was liable for them. The learned Government-Advocate placed great reliance upon Kanhaiya Lal's statement that Narbir Singh never purchased any cloth from him and has strongly contended that the debts borrowed by Narbir Singh from Kanhaiya Lal were not in respect of the cloth shop. It is not possible in this case to arrive at any definite finding as to how the money borrowed by Narbir Singh was applied by him but in the absence of any evidence of Narbir Singh having had any other necessity for borrowing the amount, it is by no means unlikely that the debts were incurred in connection with the cloth business. Be the matter as it may, the fact remains that as far back as 1925 and 1926, Jai Singh pleaded that these debts incurred by Narbir Singh were in respect of the cloth business and that. Musammatt Deo Kumari was liable for them. This makes it by no means improbable that some sort of understanding was arrived at between Jai Singh and Deo Kumari about the former paying up the said debts against her maintenance allowance.

The prosecution also attempted to prove the Deo Kumari was so very hard up that she had to pawn her ornaments from time to time. The only specific instance alleged was about the pawning of certain gold mohurs by Deo Kumari through one Barkao Dhoby to one Rewa Sah. The latter was examined as a Court witness. He also produced his account book. The entry in the account book and the statement of O. W. No. 2 Rewa Sah do not bear out the case of the prosecution. There is no mention of Musammatt Deo Kumari in the entry in the account book which only shows that a mohur with stones and Kunda of Barkao Dhoby was pledged to Rewa Sah for Rs. 100. In his deposition in Court Rewa Sah stated that he had seen Barkao Dhoby putting on gold mohurs usually which he pawned to him. The evidence of other witnesses is of a vague and general character on which we are unable to place any reliance. It is not denied that she was in possession of 200 bighas as sir. Prosecution Witness No. 27 Makhan stated that Deo Kumari was possessed of 8 buffaloes, 8 she-buffaloes and 8 cows and calves P. W. No. 36 Pearey, approver, also stated that a few days before the murder he and Sofley redeemed gold charas of Deo Kumari from a Bania. Thus even according to the prosecution evidence, it can hardly be said that Deo Kumari was very hard up at the time of her murder. Our reading, therefore, of the situation is that probably some differences had arisen between Jai Singh and Deo Kumari as regards the standing crops and grain which Jai Singh had promised to give her under the compromise. It is possible that there might have been some differences in regard to the payment of maintenance also. Such differences are by no means uncommon. We have no reason to suppose that the differences in the present case were so acute or of such a grave character as to constitute a motive for Jai Singh putting Deo Kumari to death. The most that can be said on this point is that the result of Deo Kumari and her daughter being killed was to absolve Jai Singh of the liability for payment of maintenance allowance and for the expenses of the marriage of Deo Kumari's daughter. It also entitled him to get possession of her sir lands and other property possessed by her. We do not think that the fact of the advantages just mentioned having accrued to Jai Singh from the commission of the crime can be regarded as any proof of his having committed it. In this connection it might be pointed out that according to the approver's evidence the culprits after committing the murder, piled up everything including valuable clothes on the corpses and set fire to the house. Nurul Hasan, the Sub-Inspector, deposed that valuable clothes which were destroyed by the fire were worth about Rs. 4,000 or Rs. 5,000. The extent of the valuable jewellery destroyed will appear from the fact that over half a seer of molten gold was taken out of the debris. It is difficult to believe that Jai Singh, if he committed the crime, would have so mercilessly destroyed valuable property, the securing of which is supposed to be one of his motives for the commission of the crime.

As regards the subsequent conduct of Jai Singh the learned Government-Advocate relied upon the fact deposed of by P. W. No. 18 Jiwan, P. W. No. 27 Makhan and P. W. No. 28 Lekha that when they asked Jai Singh to get the fire extinguished he said that he would not take any steps to extinguish it as long as the Sub-Inspector did not arrive. However, after some time when he found the fire to be increasing he did put on ten or twelve men to extinguish it. The Sub-Inspector found these men extinguishing the fire when he reached the place. The explanation given by Jai Singh in his statement is that he at first abstained from taking steps to get the fire extinguished before the arrival of the Sub-Inspector as the crime was very serious. It seems to us that the position of Jai Singh in this matter was not free from difficulty. If he had got the fire extinguished he might have been accused of making an intrusion on the scene of occurrence which had the effect of destroying possible clues as to the perpetrators of the offence. On the other hand when he tried to maintain the status qua until the arrival of the Sub-Inspector, he is charged with the intention of getting the corpses burnt beyond recognition so as to remove all traces of the crime. We do not think it would be possible to draw any inference of guilt from his conduct in this matter. Reference was also made to the statement of the Police Superintendent P. W. No. 37 who stated that he did not get any assistance from Jai Singh to unravel the mystery and that he did not offer any reward for the arrest of Pearey. He did not state any particular assistance which Jai Singh was in a position to give and was withheld by him. We wonder what assistance he could give when he himself was suspected by the Police for complicity in the crime. In answer to this the defence has drawn our attention to an application, Ex. A-23, made by Jai Singh in the course of proceedings under s. 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in which he made certain complaints against the District Police and asked that the investigation of the case may be entrusted to the C. I. D.,

"so that the real facts may be ascertained and the real culprits may be punished for their misdeeds."

As regards the reward, though Jai Singh did not make any official announcement of it, yet it appears that he had privately offered a reward of Rs. 500 for the arrest of Pearey. Soley P. W. No. 11 deposes that when he got Pearey arrested he sent a wire to the Collector of Hardoi and another to Jai Singh informing them about his arresting Pearey. He further stated that he sent the wire to Jai Singh as he had promised a reward to the person who arrested Pearey. So the evidence of subsequent conduct also seems to us altogether inconclusive.

The arguments on behalf of the prosecution on the question of motive and subsequent conduct relate to matters which are only subsidiary to the main question. We have given reasons for our inability to attach much importance to them. In our opinion it would be altogether unsafe to draw any inference as to the guilt of the appellants from the circumstances discussed above.

Lastly the defence has placed strong reliance upon the evidence of D. W. No. 3 Iqbal Bahadur, D. W. No. 4 Bakht Bahadur, D. W. No. 8 Balbahadur Singh and D. W. No. 9 Surendrapal Singh who depose to the presence of Jai Singh at Mohiuddinpur on the night of the occurrence, and his leaving Mohiuddinpur for Raigaon early in the morning of the 21st. This alibi evidence does gain some strength from the fact that it is admitted for the prosecution that Jai Singh did leave his village to join a marriage on the 15th of May 1928. The only difference between the case for the prosecution and for the defence is that according to the prosecution, Jai Singh returned on the 19th whereas according to the defence

he returned only on 21st morning. We do not consider it worth while to pursue this matter further because of the conclusion reached by us that the prosecution has failed to bring the guilt home to the appellants.

The learned Counsel for the defence also addressed lengthy arguments to us directed to show that the offence was more likely to have been committed by Bijai Bahadur Singh's servants and the Chachrapur people. He has no doubt pointed out some suspicious circumstances against these people but mere suspicions are not enough. We must leave the matter at that. It would not be proper for us to express any opinion against the conduct of these people behind their back.

The case for the prosecution rests upon the evidence of the approver. As there is no reliable corroboration of his statement, identifying the accused with the crime, the appeal must succeed on this ground.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the convictions of the three appellants, Jai Singh, Anandi Din and Mata Din and direct that they be set at liberty at once.

A. Appeal allowed.

U. P.—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66 (2)—Question of law—Exclusion of certain items from sales income—Point considered by Income Tax Authorities—Rate charged reasonable—Interference.

The assessee claimed that certain sums covering postage, railway freight and packing charges amounting to Rs. 31,305 should have been left out of account as in respect of such sums no profits accrued to them. These items simply represented money paid out by them on behalf of their clients and afterwards recovered from the latter. This point was brought to the notice of the Assistant Commissioner of Income Tax and the Commissioner of Income Tax and was considered by them. From what these officers stated it appeared that the flat rates which were applied for purposes of calculation of profits were framed on the understanding that the items mentioned above were to be included in the total sales income, otherwise a higher rate would have been charged:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case no question of law arose. [p. 332, col. 1.]

Application filed on behalf of the above named firm applicants under s. 66 (6) of Act XI of 1922, dated the 23rd May, 1931.

Mr. Mohammad Ayub, for the Applicants.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application purporting to be under s. 66 sub-s. 6 of the Indian Income-Tax Act (No. XI of 1922), in reality it falls under sub-s. 3 of that section.

The application is by Messrs. Asghar Ali Mohammad Ali, who appear to have a large business in Lucknow for the sale of scents, tobacco and oil. They were assessed to income-tax for the past year by an order of the Income-tax Officer, dated the 16th of December last, and they went in appeal against the assessment under s. 30 sub-s. 1 of the Act to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax at Cawnpore, who on the 26th of February last, made a small reduction in the amount to be assessed. Being still not satisfied, the applicants went under s. 66 sub-s. 2 to the Commissioner of Income-tax, who said that he was unable to discover that any question of law arose out of the grounds taken by the applicants, and accordingly rejected their application for the statement of a case to this Court.

We have heard the learned Counsel for the applicants at some length. The only point which he has pressed before us is that in the statement of total sales, which appears in the order of the Income-tax Officer, dated the 16th of December last, three items are included, namely—

(1) Packing charges	...	6,134
(2) Postage	...	25,037
(3) Railway freight	...	134

These items total the considerable sum of Rs. 31,305. The applicants' case is that this sum should have been left out of account, as in respect of it no profit accrued to the applicants, and it may be regarded as merely representing money paid out by them on behalf of their clients and afterwards recovered from the latter.

We might have been inclined to think that this amount ought, as an arithmetical matter, to be excluded from the total amount of the sales income, and we might have been inclined to take the view that its inclusion in that total amount might be said to raise a question of law. It is clear, however, both from the order of the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, and from order of the Commissioner of Income-tax that this point was brought to their notice and was considered by them. From what they say, it is clear that the flat rates which were applied for the purposes of calculation of profits were framed on the understanding that the items under the above three heads were to be included in the total sales income. Had they been excluded, it is clear from the orders of those two officers, that higher rates would have been applied for the purpose of calculating the profits unless the applicants were able to show from their books that lower rates were charged by them. In that connection we may point out that the Income-tax Officer states at the beginning of his order:—

"As usual, no profit and loss account has been prepared, and stocks have not been valued."

In these circumstances, we do not think that any question of law really arises, and we think that any method of computation employed as regards the applicants' assessment was reasonable and that no case whatever has been made out for any interference by us.

The result is that the application is dismissed. Under s. 66 sub-s. 6 of the Income Tax Act, we direct the applicants to pay a sum of Rs. 150 as costs.

Mortgage—Mortgage-deed providing for payment of interest to mortgagee from pocket of mortgagor till redemption from prior mortgagee—Interest, whether charge on property—Mortgagee entitled to mutation costs—Costs of possession, whether included.

Where a mortgage-deed provides that till redemption is made from the prior mortgagee and until the subsequent mortgagee does not take possession the mortgagor shall pay interest to him from his own pocket six monthly, the liability of the mortgagor to pay interest is personal and no charge on the mortgaged property is created so long as the property is not redeemed from the prior mortgagee and consequently possession is not delivered to the subsequent mortgagee. The charge becomes operative from the date when the mortgagor redeems the mortgaged property from the hands of the prior mortgagee but does not deliver possession of the same to the mortgagor. In other words the charge accrues from the time when the subsequent mortgagee becomes entitled to enter into possession.

When according to the mortgage-deed the mortgagee is entitled to the costs of the mutation proceedings, such costs must be decreed to include the costs of obtaining possession by aid of the Court previous to the mutation of names.

Appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 10th October, 1930.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ali Zaheer, Lakshman Prasad Srivastava and Radha Krishna Srivastava, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These are connected appeals by the plaintiffs from the decree of the Additional District Judge of Lucknow of even date, 10th October, 1930, and they arise out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage.

The questions involved in these appeals are only two.

(1) Is the mortgagee defendant entitled to costs of a suit which he had to bring against the mortgagors for possession of the mortgaged property and (2) is the interest due to the mortgagee for the period that he was out of possession a charge on the mortgaged property. The lower Appellate Court has answered both these questions in favour of the mortgagee defendant.

We agree with the lower Appellate Court on both points except in one respect. On the second question, there is no doubt that according to the nature of the mortgage, which is usufructuary, and the language of para 10 of the deed of mortgage the entire interest which the mortgagee was to realize out of the profits of the mortgaged property was a charge on that property, but in para. 9 it is provided "that till redemption is made from the prior mortgagee until the present mortgagee does not get possession we, the mortgagors, shall pay interest to him from our own pockets six monthly." Our construction of this paragraph is that during the time that the property was not redeemed from the hands of the prior mortgagee and possession consequently not delivered to the present mortgagee the liability for interest was personal and not a charge on the mortgaged property. The charge became operative from the date when the mortgagors redeemed the mortgaged property from the hands of the prior mortgagee but they did not deliver possession of the same to the present mortgagee, that is to say, the charge accrued from the time when the present mortgagee was entitled to enter into possession. It follows that the mortgagee's claim for interest between the date of the mortgage, that is the 30th of July, 1890, and the date of obtaining possession from the hands of the prior mortgagee that is the 28th January, 1892, is not tenable and must be disallowed.

On the first question, it is argued that according to para. 7 of the deed of mortgage the mortgagee is entitled only to the costs of the mutation proceedings. We agree with the learned Additional District Judge that the proper construction of that paragraph providing for costs of the mutation proceedings is that such costs also included the costs of obtaining possession by aid of the Court previous to the mutation of names.

We, therefore, dismiss Appeal No. 7 of 1931 altogether with costs and allow Appeal No. 6 of 1931 by striking out the interest allowed in favour of the mortgagee for the period from the 30th July, 1890, to the 28th of January, 1892. The order of costs of the lower Appellate Court will hold good but costs in this Court will be awarded to the appellants in proportion to their success and they will pay the costs of the respondent in proportion to their failure.

The combined effect of ss. 4 (1) and 52, Oudh Rent Act, is that an effectual ejectment of a tenant can only take place when the procedure with reference thereto as prescribed by the Act has been adopted and this will be so in spite of any agreement between the landlord and the tenant. Appeal against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh dated the 17th May, 1930, upholding that of the Munsif, Kunda, at Partabgarh, dated the 24th March, 1930.

Mr. Radha Krishna Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ali Zaheer, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh dated the 17th of May, 1930, affirming the decree of the Munsif of Kunda dated the 24th of March, 1930.

The appeal was in the first instance posted for hearing before our learned brother B N. Srivastava, J. He thought that it involved an important question of law which should be decided by a Bench of two Judges. He accordingly made reference to such a Bench under the provisions of s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act, 1925.

The plaintiff's case is that the plots of land Nos. 507, 548, 581 and 576, measuring in area 4 bighas 11 biswas and 10 biswansis, situate in the village of Kathbar Parwezpur, Pargana Patti, in the District of Partabgarh, were held of him by the defendants in the right of statutory tenants; that under a registered deed of relinquishment dated the 21st of October 1924 the defendants relinquished their tenancy rights in the plots in suit in favour of the plaintiff; that on such relinquishment the plaintiff entered into the possession of the plots and that in spite of the relinquishment and the delivery of possession the defendants continued in actual cultivation of the plots of land. Hence this suit with the relief of possession in respect of those plots. It is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to state in detail the line of defence adopted by the defendants.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the deed of relinquishment of the 21st of October 1924 was executed by the defendants and it has further found that the defendants never surrendered possession of the plots in suit in spite of the deed. The Court held that the relinquishment was ineffectual in law if there was no surrender of possession accompanying it and as there was no such surrender in the present case the plaintiff's suit failed.

In second appeal the only point for decision is as to whether the view of the law taken by the lower Appellate Court, that relinquishment in writing without surrender of possession on the part of a tenant does not constitute a sufficient right in the landlord to recover possession of the plots in question by means of a suit in ejectment, is correct.

So far as the decisions of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner and of the Chief Court are concerned they all seem to have gone one way in holding that a relinquishment by a tenant without surrender of possession is ineffectual—See Bibi Saidunnisa v. Faiyaz Hasan (1); Nand Ram v. Cheddi Lal (2) and Mindai v. Sajjad Ali (3). There is also decision of the Board of Revenue, Sristi v. Ramdeo Rai (4), which tends in the same direction. In a case decided by Mr. (afterwards Sir Edward) Ohamier, Binda Prasad v. Rajindra Prasad (5), there is a dictum that a tenant may relinquish his tenancy in favour of the landlord "in any manner and at any time by agreement with him." Mr. Radha Krishen, Counsel for the plaintiff, cites this dictum as an authority in support of the view that a bare agreement between the landlord and the tenant suffices to effectuate a valid relinquishment of tenancy.

We are of opinion that that dictum has not this effect. In that case no question arose of the nature which has arisen in the present case and it was found as a matter of fact that the tenant had surrendered possession of his agricultural holding.

It appears to us that it cannot be doubted that the policy of the Oudh Rent Act 1886, is to keep the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisting in spite of either or both of them and that it can be terminated only in the manner provided by that Act. Section 4 (1) of the Act is as follows:—

"Nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant before or after the passing of this Act shall entitle a landlord to eject a tenant or enhance his rent otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act as amended by the Oudh Rent (Amendment) Act, 1921."

Section 52 is as follows:—

"No tenant shall be ejected otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

These two sections clearly indicate that an effectual ejectment of a tenant can only take place when the procedure with reference thereto as prescribed by the Act has been adopted and this will be so in spite of any agreement between the landlord and the tenant to the contrary. Then the Act proceeds to provide remedies both to the tenant and to the landlord for determining the tenancy. Under s. 20

"a tenant shall continue liable for the rent of his holding unless on or before the fifteenth day of March in any year he gives to the landlord or to the recognised agent of the landlord notice of his desire to relinquish the land and relinquishes it accordingly."

This is the mode of relief granted to the tenant in case he desires to relinquish his holding. It may be emphasized that the section lays down two requisites for such a result to ensue: (1.) That the tenant shall give a notice in writing of his desire to relinquish and (2) that he relinquishes it accordingly. It follows that mere expression of the desire to relinquish is not enough even in working out the procedure of relinquishment under the Act. Corresponding to this relief provided in favour of the tenant s. 53 gives the landlord right to eject a tenant by notice or by suit as the case may be. If such a notice is served the tenant may either contest it by instituting a suit or may not contest it at all. In the latter case under the provisions of s. 59 his tenancy of the land in respect of which the notice has been served shall cease and s. 60 enables a landlord in cases falling under the preceding section to obtain the assistance of Court to eject a tenant. All the procedure which a landlord may adopt for the purposes of obtaining the ejectment of a tenant is summed up in cl. (4) of s. 108, which provides for a suit by a landlord for the ejectment of a tenant.

It was argued by Mr. Radha Krishen that a relinquishment by a tenant of his agricultural holding is a transfer of his interest in the land and may be enforced under the ordinary procedure of law. There are two answers to this argument. One is that such a transfer is prohibited by s.

6 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act. This was so held by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Jang Bahadur v. Rae Raja (6), and we think if we may say so, rightly. The second answer is that the interest of a tenant in the land is no more and no less than a possessory interest and if possession is not delivered it is difficult to characterise such a transfer as a transfer of that interest. We are therefore of opinion that the decision of the Court below is correct.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (c), O. XXI, r. 54—'Agriculturist', meaning of—Exemption when available—Proclamation of order—Proclamation not by beat of drum but only by loud voice, legality of.

There is sufficient compliance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 54, O.P.C., where owing to resistance offered on behalf of the judgment-debtor and holding out of threat to use force if the order is proclaimed by beat of drum, the process server does not make the proclamation by beat of drum and proclaims the order in a loud voice at the place adjacent to the property in dispute. [p. 335, col. 2.]

The term 'agriculturist' is used in s. 60 (c), Civil Procedure Code, to denote a person making his living by tilling the soil, in other words, whose sole means of livelihood is gained by cultivating land and does not necessarily mean a person who works with his hands. It includes a small holder of the land who tills the soil but not a large landed proprietor even though his sole income is derived from land. [ibid.]

The property of the agriculturist to be exempt under s. 60 (c) must be shown to have been occupied by him as such for purposes of agriculture, that is, in order to enable the owner or occupier to cultivate the land. [p. 336, col. 1.]

Application for revision from an order of the Sub-Judge, Bahraich

Messrs. Ghulam Hasan and Iftikhar Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hyder Husein, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a judgment-debtors' appeal from an order dismissing the objections filed by them in an execution case.

The facts of the case are sufficiently set out in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge and they need not be repeated in this judgment. The appellants' learned Counsel has pressed the appeal upon two grounds only:—

(1) The judgment-debtors' property was not attached in accordance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the order was not proclaimed by beat of drum.

(2) The property in dispute belongs to the judgment-debtors as agriculturists and so it is not liable to attachment and sale.

We think there is no substance in this appeal. It is true that the order was not proclaimed by beat of drum but the judgment debtors themselves are responsible for this as resistance was offered on their behalf and threat was held out to use force, if the order were proclaimed by beat of drum. When the process-servers could not thus get the order proclaimed by beat of drum they proclaimed it by loud voice. "Under O. XXI, r. 54 the order shall be proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to such property by beat of drum or other customary mode". We think the fact that the order was proclaimed in a loud voice at the place adjacent to the property in dispute must in the circumstances of this case, be regarded as sufficient compliance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 54 Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Subordinate Judge has examined the evidence on this point carefully. We think he came to a correct conclusion upon the evidence and his finding should be accepted.

The next question is whether the property in dispute is not liable to attachment and sale under s. 60 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the judgment-debtors (objectors) are not really agriculturists by profession and do not occupy the building in dispute in that capacity. As pointed out in the case of Muthuvenkatarama Reddiar v. The Official Receiver of South Arcot (1).

"The term is used 'agriculturist' in s. 60 (c) of the Code to denote a person making his living by tilling the soil, in other words once whose sole means of livelihood is gained by cultivating land and does not necessarily mean a person who works with his hands. It includes a small holder of the land who tills the soil; but not a large landed proprietor even though his sole income is derived from land. The property of an agriculturist to be exempt under cl. (c) of s. 60 of the Code must be shown to have been occupied by him as such for purposes of agriculture that is in order to enable the owner or occupier to cultivate the land."

We agree with the view taken in that case. The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

Hence we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—In these cases certificates for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decree of this Court were granted on the 15th of September 1931. Both the periods of time prescribed by r. 7 of O. XLV of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 have expired but the security required by cl. (1) of sub-r. (1) has not been furnished by the applicants. The applications before us have been made with a prayer that time may be extended to furnish the required security. The question which has arisen for decision is as to whether the Court has power to extend the time. In support of the applicants' contention reliance is placed on a Full Bench decision of the High Court at Bombay in Nilkanth Balwant Natu v. Shri Satchitanand Vidya Narsinha Bharat (1). The decision in that case is contrary to the uniform practice of this Court. The point was expressly decided so far back as 1922 by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Ashiq Ali v. Arjumun-unnessa (2), and the interpretation placed on r. 7 in that case has been accepted as correct and acted upon by the Chief Court also. The latest decision of our Court was given in the case of Tirbhawan Dutt v. Someshwar Dutt (Privy Council Appeal No. 1 of 1931, decided on the 26th of March 1931). The appellant who failed to obtain an extension of time in the case just now mentioned afterwards made an application before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal. The leave was granted but in granting the leave their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did not indicate that the interpretation which this Court had placed on the language of r. 7 (1), of O. XLV of the Code of Civil Procedure was incorrect. Indeed the whole of our order is quoted in the order in Council dated the 23rd day of July 1931.

The view which we now take and have taken on previous occasions is supported by the decisions of High Courts at Allahabad, Ram Dhan v. Prag Narain (3), at Madras Kachi Reddi v. Saki Reddi (4), at Rangoon J. N. Surty v. T. S. Chettyar Firm (5), and at Patna Sri Kamala Kanta Singh v. Bindhumukhi Dassi (6). Except the Bombay case to which reference has already been made, there is no reported case of any other High Court, so far as we are aware, in support of the interpretation sought to be placed by the applicants in these cases. Accordingly we hold that we have no jurisdiction to extend the time for giving security and dismiss these applications with costs. The certificates granted to these applicants will be cancelled.

Petition under s 25 of Act IX of 1857, praying the High Court to revise the judgment and order of the Court of the District Munsif of Tenkasi, dated the 25th of August, 1930, and made in I. A. No. 137 of 1930, in S. O. S. No. 509 of 1930.

Mr. K. V. Sessa Ayyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Nagaraja Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The question which arises in this case is whether a Court attaching a debt either before judgment or in execution can enquire into the truth or the existence of the debt. The attachment in the present instance was made before judgment on an application filed on the same day as the plaint. But I cannot find that it makes any difference whether such an attachment was made before judgment or in execution of the decree and it appears to me that rr. 7 and 8 of O. XXXVIII, Civil Procedure Code, show that the Court has the same powers in the one case as in the other. There is no authority arising in this Court upon this point. The Full Bench decision in Chidambara Patter v. Ramasamy Patter (1) related to a disputed title to a debt, which it was held could be investigated under the old section of the Code now corresponding to O. XXI, r. 53. This decision does not deal with the question of investigating the actual existence of the debt itself. There are however two cases upon this point decided by other High Courts: Ma Saw Yin v. Hockto (2) and Maharaja of Benares v.

Patraj Kunwar (3). Both the Rangoon and the Allahabad High Courts have held that it is not for the Court to determine whether the debt is actually due or not. It has to attach the alleged debt and thereafter there are only two courses open to it, either to sell the debt or to appoint a Receiver to realise it. In this state of the case law I propose to follow these decisions and to hold that there is no provision of law in force at present according to which the Court can investigate the existence of an alleged debt which it attaches. I am informed that the Allahabad and Rangoon High Courts have now framed rules relating to garnishee proceedings such as have been framed on the Original Side of this High Court but we have no such rules for the other Courts of this Presidency.

I was in some doubt whether I should interfere in the circumstances of the present case but it seems to me that the Court has clearly exercised a jurisdiction which it did not possess and that the decree-holder is entitled to have matters restored to the position in which they stood before the petition was dismissed on the 25th August, 1930.

I accordingly allow the petition, set aside the District Munsif's order and direct him to proceed with the application according to law. The petitioner will get his costs in this Court.

Judgment—I think on the merits that the learned District Munsif has come to a right decision. He has found that the defendant as mortgagee is liable on the terms of the document to pay the enhanced assessment. Several cases originating in this Court have been cited with regard to the effect of such provisions in mortgage documents, but I do not think I need go further than the Privy Council decision in Abid Huseain Khan v. Kaniz Fatima (1) which makes it clear that in the absence of a contract to the contrary it is the mortgagee who is liable to pay any enhanced assessment. This case is noticed by Phillips, J., in Vasteva Holla v. Mahabala Rao (2) together with two earlier cases, Krishnier v. Arappuli Iyer (3) and Panigatan Kanaran v. Raman Nair (4) which were in a somewhat contrary sense. That being so, we must read the provisions of the mortgage bond in the light of the general liability which the law would cast upon the mortgagee. The bond states that the mortgagee will pay the mortgagor "at the rate of Rs. 6 being the proportionate Government revenue for the land". Inasmuch as it defines specifically what the Rs. 6 is to signify it is distinguishable from the two cases: Mati Lal v. Darjeeling Municipality 18 Ind. Cas. 844] (5) and Kunchu Menon v. Narayanan Ezhutessan (6) which recited only a fixed sum. It may very well be taken, therefore, to mean that the mortgagee was to pay the proportionate Government Revenue for the land, which at that time was Rs. 6. However that may be, as I have said, I think the mortgagee must bear the burden of the doubt occasioned by any ambiguity in the mortgage document and I cannot therefore say that the learned District Munsif has come to a wrong conclusion that he and not the mortgagor is liable for this enhancement.

It is then urged that the decision in a previous suit O. S. No. 791 of 1916 renders the matter res judicata. It is true that the Court in that suit found, when the plaintiff sued the defendant for some earlier amounts, that the latter was liable for the assessment only at the old rates. The District Munsif has declined to hold the matter res judicata on several grounds, the only one which need be noticed being that the subject matter is not the same, the claim in the present suit arising subsequent in point of time to that in the prior one. For the respondent Broken Hill Proprietary Co. v. Broken Hill Municipal Council (7), a Privy Council decision originating in Australia and relating to the valuation of a mine in successive years for purposes of taxation has been cited. But I am not clear that that can fairly be regarded as a parallel case. While in that case the only provision common to the series of operations was a provision of law, here we have a document which has to be construed equally in the earlier case and in the later. On the other hand, I cannot find in the case relied on by the petitioner, Bader Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (8) any such principle enunciated as can be applied to the circumstances of this case. I should in any event be indisposed to disturb the finding of the learned District Munsif upon this ground, because it seems clear that the earlier decision is based upon an erroneous view of the law and, therefore, to substitute it for the present one is hardly the function of a Court sitting in revision. For these reasons I decline to interfere with the decree and dismiss the Civil Revision Petition with costs.

Section 52, Provincial Insolvency Act, as now amended contemplates the presentation of an application not as it used to be after adjudication but at an earlier stage that is to say after an insolvency petition has been admitted. At that stage the only Receiver that can be in existence for the purpose of applying is an interim Receiver. Mahasukh v. Valibhai (2), referred to and *Subramania Aiyar v. Judgment.—The appellant in this case is a person who took a lease of an insolvent's land from an Official Receiver. The respondent purchased the land in execution of a decree passed against the insolvent and his sons and he sued to recover the value of the crops removed from it by the appellant. The facts and dates are these. The land was attached in execution and proclaimed for sale, the sale being fixed for 30th September, 1920. On 23rd the insolvent applied to be adjudicated and on 28th the Official Receiver was appointed interim Receiver. Two days later he moved the Court under s 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to adjourn the sale. He did not, in terms, ask for possession of the land to be delivered to him, but, as he wanted the sale to be adjourned so that he himself might sell, such a request on his part may be implied. The Court refused the adjournment and the sale was conducted. On 23rd October the Receiver asked the Court not to confirm the sale, but his prayer was again refused. On 15th December the insolvent was adjudicated and the Official Receiver proceeded to lease his land to the appellant, after which the respondent obtained symbolical delivery from the Court. The Official Receiver subsequently applied to have the sale set aside. His application was rejected by the executing Court, but was allowed by the District Judge, whose order was, however, set aside by the High Court in a decision which is reported as Subramania Aiyar v. The Official Receiver, Tanjore (1). The Court held that the Receiver referred to in s. 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act was the Receiver appointed after adjudication and that no application under that section on the part of an interim Receiver would lie. With great respect, we must express our dissent from this view. Section 52, as now amended, contemplates the presentation of an application, not as it used to do after adjudication, but at an earlier stage—that is to say, after an insolvency petition has been admitted. At that stage, the only Receiver that can be in existence for the purpose of applying is an interim Receiver. In a case reported as Mahasukh v. Valibhai (2), an application had been presented under s. 52 by an interim Receiver and no one seems even to have argued that it was not maintainable for the reason that no interim Receiver could apply. The truth is that s 52, in its present form, is entirely out of place under the heading "Effect of insolvency (in other words, of adjudication) on antecedent transactions". Before amendment, it came properly under that heading. Now it is concerned with applications presented at an earlier stage. Mr. Sitarama Rao seeks to support the High Court's order on another ground that s 52 does not apply to immovable property, which cannot be said to be "in the possession of the Court". Were the matter res integra, we should be inclined to accept his argument. In India land is attached not by seizure, but by means of a prohibitory order and it is difficult to understand how, while it remains in the physical possession of the judgment-debtor or of a third party, it can be said also to be in the possession of the Court. There is, however, plenty of authority—for example, Haranchandra Chakravarti v. Jay Chand (3), for the view that the section applies to all kinds of property under attachment by a Court and we do not propose to dissent from it. The result, then, is that, on the application of the interim Receiver, the executing Court should at once have stayed the sale and directed delivery of possession to him, the section being peremptory in its terms. The sale, has, however, been confirmed by a Bench of this Court and, even if it could be set aside, no one is asking for it to be set aside. But it is important to define the true legal position, which has some bearing on the appellant's plea of bona fides. It is not disputed that he paid rent to the Official Receiver or that he deposited part of it in Court under O XXI, r. 46. Under the circumstances, we do not consider that he should be asked to pay twice over. His payments to the Official Receiver seem to have been made bona fide and to be valid under s. 50 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Official Receiver was quite justified in declining to recognise the title of the auction-purchaser under a sale that should not have taken place or been confirmed by a Court, which was required peremptorily by the Statute to stay its hand and to transfer the attached property to the Receiver. As regards the deposit under O. XXI, r. 46, the law allowed it and it can hardly be described as mala fide. The final argument is that the Receiver was not entitled to possession of the sons' shares and the plea of bona fides could not be sustained in regard to them. As to that, the law at that time was not settled and there was some doubt whether the sons' shares also did not vest in the Receiver. Apart from that, it is clear that the auction-purchaser himself was not entitled to anything but symbolical possession. If he has a legal grievance at all, it is against the Official Receiver, who has received payment from his lessee.

We allow the second appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

The Advocate General and Mr. Ramamurti Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by one Ramu Tevar to recover certain properties of which he had been appointed trustee by their owner Nilambal Achi who endowed them for pūja and other purposes of Sri Sundaramurthi Swami. Nilambal Achi died on the 28th of May, 1923. The plaintiff alleges that he was managing the properties on behalf of Nilambal Achi during her life-time and continued to be in possession after her death. He leased them to the 3rd defendant on the 9th of June, 1923. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 prevented the 3rd defendant from obtaining possession. They claimed to be reversioners to the estate of Nilambal Achi's father Appa Pillai, after Nilambal Achi's death. But the 2nd defendant sold his share of the property to the 1st defendant and has no further interest in this suit. The 1st defendant contended that on Appa Pillai's death his two widows, Thayyammuthu Achi and Kamalathachi, succeeded to his estate, that after their death the estate devolved upon their daughters, Nilambal Achi and Palanivelu Achi, and after the death of Palanivelu Achi, Nilambal Achi became the sole owner and that on her death on the 28th of May, 1923, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the reversioners, became entitled to the property. The plaintiff meets this case by relying upon a gift of the suit property by Appa Pillai to Nilambal Achi at the time of her marriage. Both the lower Courts have decreed the plaintiff's suit. The 1st defendant appeals.

The first point, therefore, that arises in this second appeal is whether the gift to Nilambal Achi by Appa Pillai was true. One important evidence of this gift is Ex. M-2 which is a deed executed by Thayyammuthu Achi on the 20th of September, 1879, in which she recites the gift by her husband and herself to Nilambal Achi as stridhanam at the time of the marriage and purports to execute a formal conveyance in pursuance of the oral directions of her husband. The learned Advocate-General who appears for the appellant contends that the recitals in Ex. M-2 are not admissible in evidence. He relies on the decisions in Brij Lal v. Indar Kunwar (1), Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Pershad Singh (2) and Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya Chowdhuri (3). These are all decisions of the Privy Council and it is laid down in these cases that where a widow effects an alienation for alleged necessity, recitals of existence of such necessity in the document itself are not evidence of the existence of the necessity. In Brij Lal v. Indar Kunwar (1), it is laid down:—

"Recitals in mortgages or deeds of sale with regard to the existence of necessity for the alienation have never been treated as evidence by themselves of the fact. And it has been repeatedly pointed out by this Board that to substantiate the allegation there must be some evidence aliunde."

The use of the words "by themselves" shows that the recitals are not inadmissible in evidence and the effect of the observation is merely that without other evidence they are not enough to prove the necessity. The judgment of the Privy Council makes no reference to s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. From the report of the case in Brij Lal v. Indar Kunwar (1), it appears that Sir E. Richards K. C., the learned Counsel for the appellant, relied on s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act, but none of the reports shows that there was any admission in the mortgage deed or sale deed which would be strictly covered by s. 32 of the Evidence Act. In Hari Kishen Bhagat v.

Kashi Pershad Singh (2) it is observed:

"To be valid as against the reversioners, or to affect their reversionary rights, a charge created by a Hindu widow or an alienation effected by her can be supported only by proof aliunde that such debt was contracted or such alienation was made for valid and legal necessity etc."

No reference was made to s. 32 of the Evidence Act either in the argument or in the judgment. It must be assumed that the recitals in the document concerned in that case were not covered by s. 32. The same remark applies to the decision in Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya Chowdhury (3) and to Marimuthu Pillai v. Velu Pillai (4). The decision in Ramachandrayya v. Janakiramayya (5) relates to an alienation by a guardian on behalf of a minor and does not help us in this case. But apart from all the above remarks the present case is not one of an alienation for necessity. Exhibit M-2 is more in the nature of an admission of a preceding gift rather than a case of a new alienation. I doubt if the principle of the above cases applies to a case like the one before me. In my opinion the recitals in Ex. M-2 are admissible in evidence. Vide also Sita Ram Singh v. Khub Lal Singh (6). There is also other evidence in the case from which a gift by Appa Pillai to his daughter can be inferred, for example Ex. U seems to furnish strong evidence in support of the plaintiff's case. The main part of the document is simply the report of the Revenue Inspector. To the report a statement made before the Revenue Inspector by the present 1st defendant is appended. Though this statement makes reference to the transfer by Neelambal Achi of her lands to Sri Sundaramurthi Swami, no dispute was raised as to her title to the lands or her capacity to grant them to the deity. The only claim made in that statement is that he was her heir after her death in respect of the trusteeship. It is open to the Court to infer from this document that he never meant to question her title. When it is remembered that Thayyammuthu Achi was the step-mother of Neelambal Achi and not her mother and thus there is no suspicion of collusion, it is open to the Court to infer that the gift by Appa Pillai to Neelambal Achi was proved. I am, therefore, bound in second appeal to accept the finding of the Courts below in this case that the gift to Neelambal at the time of her marriage was true.

The next question that arises in the case is whether even then the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit. Both the lower Courts find that the plaintiff was appointed trustee by Neelambal Achi, but it is contended for the appellant that this appointment is invalid: Neelambal Achi had previously executed a deed of settlement, Ex. A, dated 23rd November, 1899, under which she appointed one Kandaswami Thevar, her cousin and his sons and grandsons and so on for generations to continue to conduct the said charities after her life-time for ever, and it is contended that having appointed Kandaswami Thevar she had not, thereafter, power to appoint another trustee. Kandaswami Thevar died in 1914 during her life-time and probably because he showed no inclination to undertake the trust, Neelambal appointed the plaintiff as trustee in 1913 and though the appointment of the plaintiff might have been invalid and useless in the event of Kandaswami Thevar surviving Neelambal Achi and accepting the trust, I do not see why the appointment should be held to be invalid in the events that happened, namely, Kandaswami having predeceased Neelambal Achi and his two widows not accepting the trust. In the first place I doubt whether the words "sons, grandsons and so on for generations" in Ex. A should be construed as words of limitation and not as words of purchase. It is true that if an estate is granted to a person and his sons and grandsons for generations these words merely indicate the nature of the estate taken by the grantee, namely, an absolute estate. One may also assume that this rule applies even to trusteeship; but in the present case the document does not say that the trusteeship is conferred upon Kandaswami Thevar, his sons and grandsons and so on for generations but it simply says that the said *dharma*s ought to be conducted after her life-time and Kandaswami Thevar and his sons and grandsons and so on for generations should continue to conduct for ever the said charities. Even assuming that this sentence can be regarded as a sentence converting trusteeship to Kandaswami Thevar absolutely, seeing that Kandaswami has not accepted the trusteeship during the life-time of Neelambal Achi, though the trusteeship was to take effect only after her death and seeing that he did not survive Neelambal so as to have an opportunity of accepting it after her death, it seems to me that the trusteeship never vested in him at all and did not descend upon his heirs. The learned Advocate-General contended that even if Kandaswami Thevar did not accept the trusteeship during the life-time of Neelambal Achi it was open to his heirs to accept it after Neelambal's death, because he contends that the estate conferred by the document which is not a will but a deed of settlement is a vested estate in the trusteeship after Neelambal's death, that is a vested remainder in the trusteeship. This might have been so if Kandaswami had accepted the trusteeship during Neelambal's life-time, Krishna Pillai v. Arunachala Chettiar (7), but as he never accepted it I think the estate conferred by the settlement deed remained only a contingent estate and when he died there was nothing to be transmitted to his heirs. No authority has been cited on either side in support of the respective contentions on this part of the case and the matter is one of first impression and I hold that in such a case no estate descended upon the heirs. On this view the plaintiff is a validly appointed trustee, even though he was appointed without waiting for Kandaswami's refusal. But even assuming that the above view is incorrect and that some estate descended to the heirs of Kandaswami we have to see the conduct of Kandaswami's heirs. Kandaswami left two widows and these are defendants Nos 4 and 5 in the case. The 4th defendant is a sister of the 2nd defendant and half-sister of the 1st defendant. They filed a written statement which shows that they were not anxious to have the trusteeship and that they were anxious to support defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Their statement in para 6 of the written statement shows that their attitude is adverse to the trust. The mere fact that they proceed to state further, "If the Court holds that Neelambal Achi was legally entitled to endow the said properties for charities, we are prepared to manage the same" cannot conceal the fact that they were really in collusion with the 1st defendant who was acting adversely to the trust, and their primary contention being that Neelambal Achi had no power to endow the suit property for charities they must be taken not to have accepted the trust and their willingness to manage the trust on the happening of some contingency cannot be regarded as an acceptance. On this ground also, the appointment of the plaintiff as trustee becomes operative. But even if I am incorrect in the view I have taken about the construction of the written statement, still it is now clear that the plaintiff is the only trustee who is willing to act because after the decree of the lower Appellate Court the 5th defendant never filed an appeal to the High Court. The 4th defendant filed S. A. No. 1233 of 1927. She died and the appeal abated. So far as the 5th defendant is concerned, taking her written statement, with her subsequent conduct in not appealing, one must infer that she is not anxious to be a trustee. Once the finding that there is a trust is reached, it is the idol that is really entitled to the suit properties. Who exactly should be the trustee representing the idol is really a different matter. Any difficulty in deciding that question ought not to prejudice the rights of the idol. It has been held in several cases that a de facto trustee can maintain a suit to recover trust properties. See Mahomed Ibrahim v. Sundaram Chetti (8), Benarsi v. Altaf Hussain 63 Ind. Cas. 171(9), Kasi Chetty v. Srimathu Deva Sikamany Nataraja Dikshiter (10) and Moiddeen Bibi Ammal v. Rathnavelu Mudaliar (11). It is true that in the decision in Kasi Chetty v. Srimathu Deva Sikamany Nataraja Dikshiter (10) the plaintiff was in possession of the property in suit and it was held that he was entitled to maintain a suit to eject a tenant. But it is not clear from the other cases that the prior possession in the de facto trustee was an essential element in upholding his right to maintain the suit. It is clear from the cases mentioned above that the conclusion arrived at in those cases was not based upon the well-known principle that a person without title but who had possession can maintain a suit to recover possession from a trespasser who does not claim under leave and license of the lawful owner but on a different principle, namely, that a de facto manager of a trust should be allowed to maintain a suit which is for the benefit of the trust inspite of some defect in his title as trustee. This of course does not mean that any person can call himself a trustee and maintain a suit to recover trust properties from trespassers. It is not that a de facto trustee is like a next friend of a minor, but in the present case the plaintiff is a person appointed trustee by Neelambal Achi. He entered on the duties of the trustee. He leased out suit properties to the 3rd defendant. It is by reason of bona fide acts of this kind that he should be regarded as the de facto trustee and I think as such de facto trustee he is entitled to maintain the suit whether he actually had prior possession or not. But even if it were otherwise the right to possession in Neelambal Achi certainly passed to him for it is now found that he is the reversioner to Neelambal's estate. That would be enough to enable him to maintain the suit.

For all these reasons the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Under the Transfer of Property Act as amended by Act XXVII of 1926 a person who cannot sign his name is not qualified to attest a document. As the amendment is retrospective in effect the rule applies even to documents executed before 1926 and it is not open to the Court to refuse to act upon it merely because illiterate persons were formerly accepted as capable of attesting. [p. 344, cols. 1 & 2]

A person who signs on behalf of the executant of a document cannot also sign as an attester of it. Sristidhar Ghose v. Rakshakali Dasi (3) and Radhakrishna Mudaliar v. Subraya Mudaliar (4), referred to. [p. 345, col. 1.]

The Sub-Registrar who has signed the document cannot be accepted as an attester in the absence of evidence to show that he signed in the presence of the executant. Radha Mohun Dutta v. Naripendra Nath Nandy (5) and Ramanathan Chetty v. Delhi Batcha Tevar (6), relied on. [ibid]

Where a gift is made by a mother to minor children living with her unless the contrary is proved the acceptance of the gift should be inferred and the mere circumstance that the mother retained the custody of the deed and kept the house in her name in the Municipal accounts and paid the taxes does not show that she did not intend the gift to be acted upon. Judgment—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was to recover possession of a house under a gift deed executed by the mother (2nd defendant) of the plaintiff's late husband, Subbayya, jointly to Subbayya and herself. The claim was resisted upon various grounds, the first with which I propose to deal being the question of attestation of the deed. It purports to have been attested by five persons, two being signatories and three marksmen. If the plaintiff fails to establish two valid attestations amongst these, there are the further contentions that the writer of the document and the Sub-Registrar who registered it may be held to rank as attestors.

Of the two signatories one has not been traced and there is no evidence which would allow the Court to conclude that he validly attested the document. The other has been examined as P. W. No. 7 and although he himself has stated in evidence that he did not see the executant sign, the learned District Judge has accepted the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 9 and 10 who state that he attested the document. This assertion was not made the subject of cross-examination and I think that it must carry with it the implication that it was a valid attestation within the terms of the definition added to s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act by Act XXVII of 1926.

We turn then to the attestations by the three persons unable to sign their own names. On the same evidence, that of P. Ws. Nos. 9 and 10, the learned District Judge has found that the attestation of one of them, P. W. No. 8, is valid, but this attestation has been attacked upon the general ground that as the law now stands a person who cannot sign his name is not qualified to attest a document. Before the law was amended as stated above, there can be no doubt that a markaman could be accepted as an attestor. For purposes of non-testamentary documents there was no definition of "attest" and under s. 3 (52) of the General Clauses Act, it was permissible to hold that "sign" included "mark." I think however that the effect of Act XXVII of 1926 in introducing a definition has altered the law in this respect. It is true that there is no case law directly in point but the definition is in precisely similar terms to that contained in the Succession Act as applying to the execution of wills. It is reasonable, therefore, to hold that unless the contrary appears from the context in which each definition is to be found, words construed in a certain sense in the one must be construed in the same sense in the other. It has been held both in D. Fernandez v. R. Alves (1) and in Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter Mozumdar (2) that the direction contained in s. 50 (3) of the Indian Succession Act, 1865 (now s. 63 (c) of the present Succession Act) as to the signature of witnesses attesting a will is not satisfied by the witnesses affixing their marks. In the latter case it is pointed out that the Legislature while speaking of the action of the testator, uses expressions "shall sign or affix his mark" "signature or mark". In speaking of the witnesses the section does not use any alternative expression but simply says "the witnesses must sign". "That being the case", the learned Judges say, "we cannot help thinking that the Legislature advisedly drew a distinction between the action of the testator and that of the witnesses as regards the mode of their respective signatures." This construction of the language used has no reference to the fact that the document in question is a will and I cannot find any ground in this circumstance to distinguish these cases. It will be apparent that the reasoning used is derived purely from the wording of the definition, which is the same in both cases; and since I cannot suppose that the Legislature was unaware of these decisions when it extended the definition to the attestation of non-testamentary documents, I can only infer that the same construction was intended in the one case as in the other. Certainly insistence upon the attestation of such documents by persons who can sign their names would not lead to more hardship or inconvenience than in the case of wills which often have to be executed at very short notice. There is an undoubted hardship in applying the principle to such a case as the present, where the document was executed as far back as 1912, long before the law was amended. But inasmuch as that amendment has expressly been made retrospective in effect it is not open to me to refuse to act upon it merely because illiterate persons were formerly accepted as capable of attesting.

I must hold accordingly that none of the three so called attestations by marksmen is valid.

We come then to the writer. Two objections have been raised to accepting him as an attester. In the first place it is said not to have been shown that he intended to attest the execution. I should have been prepared to overrule this objection, because he signed after the attestors and the evidence I think allows the presumption that he signed in the presence of the executant. But the other objection appears to me fatal. The executant of the gift-deed was herself unable to sign her name and it is clear from the evidence and from an examination of the document that her name was affixed to it by the writer himself. It has been held both in Sristidhar Ghose v. Rakshakali Dasi (3) and in a case of this Court, Radhakrishna Mudaliar v. Subraya Mudaliar (4), that a person who signs on behalf of the executant of a document cannot also sign as an attester of it. The former case related to a mortgage-bond and the latter to a will but there seems to be no difference in principle. The document must have been attested by "two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument or has seen some other person sign the instrument in the presence and by the direction of the executant," which means that it must be attested by two persons other than the person who signed the instrument in the presence and by the direction of the executant. We have accordingly to exclude the writer upon this ground.

There remains the Sub-Registrar. The learned District Munsif was inclined to exclude him because he does not necessarily sign in the presence of the executant, as the rule requires, and no proof was adduced that he in fact did so sign. In the absence of a decision of this Court he felt himself bound however to follow Radha Mohun Dutta v. Nripendra Nath Nandy (5). There is now a case in point decided by this Court in Ramanathan Chetti v. Delhi Batcha Tevar (6). It was there held by the learned Chief Justice and myself that proof must be adduced that this term in the requirement was complied with. There being no evidence upon this point I must hold that the Sub-Registrar also cannot be accepted as an attester.

The result accordingly is that only one person can be declared to have validly attested the document, which being a gift deed must therefore fail for lack of due attestation. This conclusion no doubt involves some hardship to the plaintiff but unless my application of the law as it stands at present is at fault I do not see how a different decision can be arrived at.

The gift deed has been further attacked on the ground that the gift made was not accepted by the donees. It was made to a husband and wife while they were minors by the husbands' mother. The plaintiff has indeed contended that they were of age at the time, but this has been found against, although I do not think that the finding should bar the plea of acceptance if it may reasonably be inferred from the facts. The subject-matter was a house in which the parties continued to live with the husband's parents until the husband died some 11 years latter. Under these circumstances it is difficult to see by whom, if not by the parents, acceptance could have been made at the time of the gift. The issue throws the burden of disproving acceptance upon the defendants and I think that in such a case as this the English rule should be followed that unless the contrary is proved acceptance of the gift should be inferred. The mere circumstance that the mother retained custody of the deed and kept the house in her name in the Municipal accounts and paid the taxes does not show that she did not intend the gift to be acted upon. I do not agree that it was onerous in character. All that the donees had to do was to live together as husband and wife, with a provision for divestment should either fail to do this. No case has been cited to me in which it has been held that a gift made in such circumstances is invalid for failure to prove acceptance. The circumstances in Hariram Serowjee v. Madan Gopal Bagla (7) were quite different, the only evidence of an intention to make a gift being furnished by certain entries in an account. No doubt [66 Ind. Cas 480] Debi Singh v. Bansidhar (8) and Dhanna Malv. Parmeshari Das (9) cited to me on behalf of the plaintiff, raise the question rather of the completion of the gift by the donor than of its acceptance by the donee. But in 41 Ind. Cas. 389 Muhammad Abdul Nayeem v. Jhonti Mohton (10) an inference of acceptance was drawn from the circumstances of the case, which I think it would be equally reasonable to draw here. I am not therefore, disposed to interfere with the findings of the lower Court upon this issue.

The only other point is that the learned District Judge while finding that the plaintiff had not been guilty of immorality during her husband's life-time has not recorded a finding on the question whether she lived separately from him. It appears to me from the terms of Issue No. 4 that these two questions were aspects of the same matter and that the finding with regard to the plaintiff's chastity covers the other point.

In view of my finding on the question of attestation I must allow the second appeal and set aside the decrees of the lower Courts so far as they relate to this property. The decree will stand as regards the payment of Rs. 7-2-0. In the circumstances the parties will pay their own costs throughout.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), s. 80—Profession tax, levying of—Notification specifying rate, necessity of.

A Municipality has no jurisdiction to levy profession tax under s. 80, District Municipalities Act unless a notification specifying the rate at which the tax will be levied has been published before levying it.

Petition praying the High Court to revise the judgment and decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Conjeevaram, dated the 16th December, 1929, and passed in S. O. S No. 558 of 1929.

Mr V. S. Narasimhachar for Mr. P. Venkatramana Rao, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. Panchapakesa Sastri and K. R. Krishnaswamy Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—In this case we are of opinion that the Municipality had no jurisdiction to levy the tax in question since the notification contemplated by s. 80 of the District Municipalities Act has not been published by the Municipality. Under this section a notification specifying the rate at which the tax will be levied will have to be published before levying the tax. In the notification, Ex. II, in this case no specific rate leviable is mentioned. On the other hand it calls for objections. We therefore agree with the lower Court in holding that Ex II cannot be treated as the final notification contemplated by s. 80.

As the Municipality had no jurisdiction to levy the tax, the other question raised with reference to the correctness of the decision in Madura etc, Devasthanams v. Madura Municipal Council (1) does not arise for consideration.

Injunction—Equitable jurisdiction of High Court—Civil Procedure Code, whether exhaustive—Appeal from order refusing to set aside ex parte decree—Power to issue injunction restraining execution pending appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, rr. 1, 2.

The High Court has power to grant an injunction to restrain a person from executing an ex parte decree pending the disposal of an appeal preferred to the High Court from order refusing to set aside that ex parte decree. *Periakaruppan Chettiar v. with the High Court will be pleased to issue an injunction restraining the respondent herein from executing the decree in O. S. No. 84 of 1930 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Vellore, pending A. A. O. No. 283 of 1931, preferred to the High Court against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Vellore, dated the 14th July, 1931, and made in I. A. No. 262 of 1931 in the said O. S. No. 84 of 1930.

Messrs. V. C. Gopalaratnam and K. Subramanyam, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. T. D. Srinivasachariar and C. Vaidyanatha Rao, for the Respondent.

Order.—This application was filed for the stay of further proceedings in pursuance of an ex parte decree passed in O. S. No. 84 of 1930 on the file of the Sub-Court of Vellore pending disposal of an appeal against an order refusing to set that ex parte decree aside. When the stay application came up for the issue of ex parte orders, I understand that it was held by the learned Judge who disposed of it, following Bhagwat Rajkar v. Sheo Golam Sahu (1) and some cases of this Court, that this Court has no power in proceedings of this nature to stay execution of a decree under O. XLI, r. 5. Accordingly the application was converted into one for an injunction to restrain the respondent from executing the decree, and the question has been raised before me whether an application of this kind will lie. So far as a Court which is restricted to the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure is concerned, it has been held by Phillipe, J., in Varadocharyulu v. Narasimhacharyulu (2), which I had occasion to follow in Ayyaperumal Nadar v. Muthuswami Pillai (3), that if an injunction cannot be passed under the provisions of O XXXIX, r. 1 or 2, it is not permissible to seek power under s. 151 of the Code in order to justify such an order. It has, however, been argued now that a High Court is not restricted to the terms of the Code, but possesses an equitable power, otherwise derived, to control the proceedings in other Courts. There can be no doubt that in England a power of this character exists and a discussion of the nature of it will be found in Ellerman

Lines, Ltd. v. Read (4). In that case the question arose as to whether a British subject could be restrained from enforcing a foreign judgment in execution, and the Court of Appeal answered the question in the affirmative, the principle upon which the matter was decided being clearly explained in the judgment of Atkin, L. J., namely, that the Court in granting injunctions does not seek to assume jurisdiction over the foreign Court or arrogate to itself some superiority which entitles it to dictate to the foreign Court or that it seeks to criticise the foreign Court or its procedure; "the English Court has regard to the personal attitude of the person who has obtained the foreign judgment. If the English Court finds that a person subject to its jurisdiction has committed a breach of covenant, or has acted in breach of some fiduciary duty or has in any way violated the principles of equity and conscience, and that it would be inequitable on his part to seek to enforce a judgment obtained in breach of such obligations, it will restrain him, not by issuing an edict to the foreign Court, but by saying that he is in conscience bound not to enforce that judgment." I do not propose to go so far, as the learned Judges who decided Kumar Ganga Singh v. Pirthichand Lal (5) and who appear to have based their decision as to the power of a Court (not necessarily a High Court) to issue an injunction in certain circumstances purely upon English precedents and without any reference to the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure. But there is authority for the view that the High Courts, over and above the powers which they enjoy under that Code, possess an equitable jurisdiction derived from the old Supreme Court to issue an injunction in appropriate cases. This is the basis of the decision in Periakaruppan Chettiar v. Ramasami Chettiar (6) where Ramesam and Devadoss, JJ., held that the Chartered High Courts have such a power, following Rash Behary Dey v. Bhowani Churn Bhowe (7) and Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (8). In the former of these two decisions Woodroffe, J., who certainly is a high authority on questions of procedure, gave it as his opinion that a High Court had and has, independently of the Civil Procedure Code, power to make an order of the nature sought and he answered in the negative the question whether there was anything in the Civil Procedure Code, which took away that power. That case was decided under the Code, but I do not think that there is anything either in s. 151 or any other provision of the new Code which would deprive a High Court of powers derived independently of it. Another case Singaravelu Mudali v. Balasubramania Mudali (9), decided by Ramesam, J., has been cited to me as an authority in favour of the existence of the power, but I observe that he was able to bring the injunction within the terms of r. 2 of O. XXXIX so that the remaining observations in the learned Judge's judgment are, I think, merely obiter, though, as I understand them, he was of opinion that a power exists a part from the terms of that rule. It appears to me however that Periakaruppan Chettiar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (6), is sufficient authority for the general proposition that this Court is not bound by the terms of the Code in issuing injunctions in appropriate cases. It appears to me that a case of the present description is eminently appropriate for the exercise of such a power. We have two proceedings going on at the same time, one the execution of the decree and the other a proceeding which may eventuate in the decree being set aside. It is quite clear that these two proceedings, if allowed to go on independently, may lead to incompatible and perhaps unfortunate consequences. I think accordingly that, in general, there is justification for a Court exercising the power to restrain the holder of the decree against which such proceedings are pending from exercising it.

On the merits I have perused the order of the learned Subordinate Judge refusing to set aside the decree and it appears to me, without in any way expressing any definite opinion, that the appeal has some prospects of success. The decree is a large one for a sum of Rs. 12,000 and it is admitted that about Rs. 9,000 has been paid. The petitioner admits that he asks for a stay not because he distrusts the stability of the decree-holder but because he finds difficulty under the existing economic conditions in raising the balance. I think in the circumstances that there are sufficient grounds for granting his request on the basis of his furnishing security and I accordingly order that an injunction do issue to the decree-holder not to execute the decree until the disposal of the Civil Miscellaneous Appeal provided that the judgment-debtor gives security within six weeks from the date of the receipt of this order to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot for the outstanding amount of the decree and that he further undertakes to pay interest at the rate of 8 per cent. in the event of the money being found due, for the period during which the injunction is in force. Failing compliance with these directions the injunction will terminate and the petition will stand dismissed with costs.

The petitioner charged the respondent with having defamed him and the latter was convicted. Thereupon the petitioner brought a suit for damages for defamation against the respondent but the Civil Court dismissed the suit. The High Court ordered a re-trial setting aside the conviction, and the question arose whether a copy of the judgment of the Civil Court was admissible in the criminal proceedings:

Held, that the matter was governed by ss. 40 to 43, Evidence Act, and the judgment was not admissible under any of those sections; it was a judgment in personam and not in rem and was not conclusive proof, in the subsequent judicial proceedings of anything material. Where a civil suit and a criminal complaint raise the same issues between the same parties the judgment of neither Court is binding on the other and each must decide the case on the evidence before it. Order.—This case has had a somewhat remarkable history. The petitioner charged the respondent, his wife and others with the offences of robbery and defamation. Ultimately the respondent alone was convicted of the latter offence and his conviction was upheld by the Sessions Judge in appeal. The petitioner then filed a suit for damages for defamation against the respondent and another person. A copy of the judgment confirming the conviction was produced, but the District Munsif held, quite rightly, that he was not bound to follow it and that he had to arrive at a decision independently on the evidence before him. In the result, he dismissed the suit. The next thing that happened was that this Court, in revision, set aside the conviction and ordered a retrial. The case was retried and ended again in the conviction of the respondent. The latter tried to get admitted in evidence a copy of the judgment of the Civil Court, but the Magistrate rejected it, being of opinion that it was irrelevant for the purpose of the trial. An appeal was again preferred, which was on this occasion successful. The Sessions Judge set aside the conviction, holding that the Munsif's judgment was not merely relevant, but also conclusive proof of the respondent's innocence. To the material sections of the Evidence Act, which lay down the law as to the admissibility of judgments, he made no reference. It would be interesting to know how he would have dealt with the matter, if the judgment had been one awarding damages against the respondent. We venture to doubt whether he would have gone so far as to hold that it was conclusive proof of the respondent's guilt and that the Magistrate should at once have convicted him on it, without any further evidence. And yet, if a judgment one way might be conclusive proof of the respondent's innocence, it is not apparent why a judgment the other way, should not be conclusive proof of his guilt.

What the Sessions Judge relied on was a judgment of the Bombay High Court, reported as Markur, In re (1). Markur was prosecuted for breach of trust in regard to certain sums of money. He had already been sued civilly for the recovery of those sums, but the suit had been dismissed. A copy of the Civil Court's judgment was produced before the Magistrate, who declined to admit it in evidence, holding, with reference to ss. 40 to 43 of the Evidence Act, that it was irrelevant and inadmissible. The matter was taken up to the High Court, which decided, without any reference to those sections, that the judgment should have been admitted. The Judges did not actually say, in so many words, that it was conclusive proof of Markur's innocence; indeed, Heaton, J., conceded that it could not be used to prove or disprove the facts in dispute in the case. But it is impossible not to agree in the Sessions Judge's observation that the whole tenor of their argument indicates that, in their opinion, it ought to have been treated as conclusive proof and that, on it, Markur should, at once, have been discharged by the Magistrate. If, however, it was not to be used to prove or disprove the charge, it is difficult to see on what ground that Magistrate could have acted on it, as if it were conclusive. With great respect, we cannot follow this decision. The matter, it seems to us, is governed by ss. 40 to 43 of the Evidence Act and, if a judgment is not admissible under any of those sections, it must be left out of consideration altogether. The judgment in question was not one to which s. 40 applied for it was not a bar to the prosecution. Nor was it a judgment in rem under s. 41. It did not relate to a matter of a Public nature as required by s. 42. Nor was its existence a fact in issue in the prosecution or relevant under any other section of the Act—s. 43. Heaton, J., put his decision on a quite different ground—the ground of public policy. "We cannot," he said "have Criminal Courts trying over again matters which have been thoroughly dealt with and finally decided by a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction." It is not easy to see how such a rule is to be enforced, unless the judgment of the Civil Court is, in law, a bar to or conclusive against the prosecution. And what of cases in which the Criminal Court has decided the controversy first and convicted? Can we not have the Civil Court trying over again a matter which has been decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction and coming to a different conclusion? The truth is that although the civil suit and the prosecution may be based on exactly the same cause of action the parties are, strictly speaking, not the same, the burden of proof is differently placed and different considerations may come in. The result may therefore be a conflict in decision. For instance, A is tried for murdering B, but acquitted, because a confessional statement by him is, in a criminal trial, inadmissible in evidence. C, P's widow, sues him for damages for the murder and gets a decree, the confessional statement being admissible in a civil suit. In the matter of defamation, again, there is a good deal of difference between a suit for damages and a criminal prosecution. The prosecution is governed by the provisions of the Indian Penal Code, the suit by the English Law of slander and libel. A defence which is open to the accused in the prosecution is not open to him as the defendant in the suit. The question of special damage may arise in the suit, but cannot arise in the prosecution.

It has often been said in this Court that, where a civil suit and a criminal complaint have been filed, which raise the same issues between the same parties, the hearing of the complaint should be stayed until the suit has been decided. And this has been put on the ground that it will avoid a possible conflict in decision. Our brother Jackson has pointed out in a judgment, in which we entirely concur, Gnanasigamani Nadar v. Vedamuthu Nadar (2), that the risk of such a conflict is one that is inherent in the division of causes into criminal and civil. The judgment of neither Court is binding on the other and each must decide the cause on the evidence before it. If they arrive at different conclusions, it is regrettable, but unavoidable. The ruling in Markur, In re (1), was relied on in another case in this Court in 72 Ind. Cas. 172, P. S. Velayutham Chetty, In re (3). The head-note states that the Bombay ruling was followed. The fact however, remains that Krishnan, J., disposed of the Criminal Revision Petition on the merits and not on the decision in the civil proceeding. What he said was that, if he accepted the civil judgment as the basis of his judgment in the criminal case, he would have to find that the conviction was wrong. What he refrained from saying was that it could be accepted as the basis of his judgment. The head-note, therefore, seems to be inaccurate. If he had been satisfied that the Bombay ruling was unimpeachably correct he could and would have allowed the revision petition without considering the evidence in the criminal case.

It is not, we think, necessary to refer to any other rulings. We are satisfied that the judgment relied on by the Sessions Judge was not admissible in evidence under any of the relevant sections of the Evidence Act. It is a judgment in personam and not in rem and is not conclusive proof, in the subsequent judicial proceeding, of anything material. The order of the Sessions Judge must be set aside. He will dispose of the Criminal Appeal on its merits.

Malabar Law—Alienation—Family karar—Alienation by karnavan in excess of powers—Amount utilised for benefit of family—Alienee's right to refund of consideration—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 64, 65—Principle of restitution—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Minor—Compromise without sanction—Validity.

The karnavan of a Nambudiri illom executed a kanom in respect of the illom properties. It was found that the amount was borrowed to meet the expenses of the marriage expenses of a female member of the illom and that the sum was in fact utilised in connection with such expenses. A suit was instituted by a junior member to set aside the kanom on the ground that there was a karar to which the karnavan (who was then a junior member) was a party under which no debts could be incurred except with the consent of all the adult members of the illom for the time being:

Held, that, granting that the transaction as a kanom was not binding on the illom, as the money had been utilised for the benefit of the illom and every member of the illom including the plaintiff had the benefit of that money, the kanom could be set aside only on the condition that the illom or its karnavan for the time being should pay the kanomdar the amount borrowed from him with interest. [p. 352, col. 1.]

The principle on which ss. 64 and 65, Contract Act, rest is not confined to cases expressly included in either of the sections. [p. 351, col. 2.]

Appeal No 145 of 1928.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. A. Krishna Variar, for the Respondent.

S. A. No. 1927 of 1926.

Judgment.—The first question we have to decide is, whether this Second Appeal has been compromised as alleged by Vishnu Nambudri, the 1st respondent. The suit relates to a Nambudri Illom. Its karnavan was one Sankaran Nambudri, the 2nd respondent. Vishnu, abovenamed, is the cousin of that Sankaran. Vishnu filed the suit out of which this second appeal arises, namely O. S. No. 344 of 1923 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Quilandy. That suit was filed on the 5th of July 1923. Vishnu, the plaintiff, impeached in that suit a certain alienation made by the karnavan Sankaran in favour of the defendants Nos. 9 and 10. The 9th defendant is the appellant before us. The alienation took the form of a kanom dated 7th December, 1922. The District Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the transaction was binding on the tarwad. His judgment was delivered on the 17th of December 1924. From that, an appeal was taken on the District Judge who set aside the Munsif's judgment on 16th March, 1926. This second appeal was presented on the 6th of September 1926. We must now advert to another suit, namely, O. S. No. 8 of 1926, filed in the Sub-Court at Tellicherry on 18th August 1925. That was filed by one of the sons of Sankaran, for removing the latter from the office of karnavan and for setting aside certain various alienations. The scope of that suit was therefore much wider than that filed by Vishnu in the Munsif's Court. But it must be observed that in the Sub-Court suit, there was a prayer to set aside the alienation which formed the subject of the suit in the Munsif's Court. In the Sub-Court various charges were made against the karnavan Sankaran and charge Q related to the alienation in question. At this stage, we must mention that the 9th and the 10th defendants in the Munsif's Court suit, were the 21st and the 22nd defendants in the Sub Court suit. The 15th defendant in that suit was their brother and the 14th was their mother. In the light of these remarks, the following paragraph in the Subordinate Judge's judgment becomes intelligible.

Charge Q.—The alienation complained of under this charge has been decided against the alienees, viz, defendants Nos. 14 and 15 (vide Ex. S). They were about to prefer an appeal against that decision when a compromise was effected whereby charge E was conceded in their favour and they in turn gave up the idea of preferring the appeal. Thus the alienation under the charge "must be held to be invalid."

The judgment in which this passage occurs was delivered on 23rd March, 1927. The decision that is referred to in that passage, is that of the Appellate Court already referred to, dated 16th March, 1926, in the Munsif's Court suit "Defendants Nos. 14 and 15" in this extract is a mistake for defendants Nos. 21 and 22. That they were about to prefer an appeal is also a mistake, for the appeal had by then been presented on 6th September, 1926, as stated above. The reason for the Judge having made the observations in the above extract, is to be found in the following statement filed by the plaintiff in that suit on 28th January, 1927.

"The question of the validity of the transactions referred to in charges E and R is not pressed for the plaintiff except in so far as they have a bearing on the karnavastanom of the 1st defendant. As against the alienees these charges are not pressed."

In this statement, there is not a word said about charge Q: nor is there any reference to defendants Nos. 21 and 22. It is said that charge E, referring to the alienation in favour of the defendants Nos. 14 and 15, was not pressed because it was agreed, that the alienation in favour of defendants Nos. 21 and 22 forming the subject of charge Q, was to be treated as set aside. We have nothing to do with this, but what is clear is, that there is no trace of a compromise to which defendants Nos. 21 and 22 were parties. Apart from this, the 22nd defendant was a minor, and as it is common ground that the so-called compromise was not sanctioned on her behalf by the Court, it is a nullity so far as she is concerned.

The fact that the compromise (granting there was one) affected the interests of the minor defendant, was not brought to the notice of the Court and it cannot, therefore, be said that there was a judicial determination, that the so-called compromise was beneficial to the minor's interests. We must therefore negative the contention that there was a compromise and allow the second appeal to proceed.

Coming then to the merits, the question that has to be decided is whether the alienation in favour of the 9th and the 10th defendants is binding on the tarwad or not. The kanom in their favour was executed on 7th December, 1922, the consideration being Rs. 700. There is a concurrent finding that that amount was borrowed to meet the expenses of the marriage of one Devaki, a female member of the Illom and that the sum was in fact utilised in connection with the marriage expenses as well as the jewels and dowry which of necessity had to be given. It is also found that the marriage of Devaki could not have been postponed and that there was thus justifiable necessity for the loan. But the District Judge who set aside the alienation relied upon a karar in this Illom which had been executed in the year 1905. To that karar, all the then members of the Illom were parties including Sankaran, the present karnavan; he was, at the time a junior member of the Illom. That karar contains a clause, that no debts shall be incurred except with the consent of all the adult members for the time being and that if any charges are created without the concurrence of all such members, they shall not be valid. It is on this clause of the karar that the plaintiff relies. He did not join in executing the kanom in question though all the other adult members for the time being were parties to it. There was ill-feeling between him and the karnvan and he chose to live separately. There is a finding that the kanomdars took the kanom with notice of this restriction. The learned District Judge, following Rama Vadhyar v. Krishnan Nair (1) has held, that in such circumstances the kanom is not binding on the Illom. The appellant's Counsel says that 'he' is prepared to argue that although Sankaran as a junior member was a party to the karar, he ceased on his becoming karnvan, to be bound by its provisions. It is unnecessary to deal with this argument, for granting that the transaction as a kanom is not binding on the Illom, the question is, whether the alienees are not under s. 64 of the Indian Contract Act entitled to be restored the sum they paid; for the appellant's learned Counsel does not insist that the transaction should be upheld as a kanom, but says that his client is content to have the relief under s. 64. In this case, the money raised was utilised for the benefit of the Illom; in other words, every member of that Illom including the plaintiff had the benefit of that money. Granting that the karnavan acted in excess of his powers in borrowing the sum of which, on the findings, every member had the benefit, can the transaction be set aside unconditionally? The principle on which ss. 64 and 65 rest is not confined to cases expressly included in either of them and is thus stated in Clough v. London and North Western Railway Co. (2).

"No man can at once treat the contract as avoided by him, so as to resume the property which he parted with under it, and at the same time keep the money or other advantages which he has obtained under it." (See: Pollock and Mulla's Contract Act commentaries under s. 64).

This rule is applied as a rule of equity and good conscience. Even in Rama Vadhyar v. Krishnan Nair (1), on which the District Judge relies, there is a dietum recognising this principle.

It is common ground that the property did not pass into the possession of defendants Nos. 9 and 10 in pursuance of the kanom. The result is, that the kanom is set aside, on the condition, that the Illom or its karnavan for the time being shall pay the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 in six months from this date Rs. 683 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the 7th December, 1924. If the payment is not so made, the suit shall stand dismissed and there will be a declaration that the kanom is binding on the whole Illom.

As regards the costs, we make the following order. The appellant shall have her costs in the first Court and in the lower Appellate Court, but in this Court each side shall bear its own costs.

Judgment—The judgment which we have just delivered in S.A. No. 1927 of 1926 disposes of this appeal also. In accordance with that judgment, the decree of the lower Court, so far as it relates to the alienation, the subject of charge Q, is set aside. The Court-fee paid on the Memorandum of Appeal shall be refunded to the appellant; otherwise, we make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 13, 44—Foreign judgment—Non-resident foreigner—Validity—Execution in British India—Objection for want of jurisdiction—Maintainability—Scope of s. 44—Submission, what constitutes—Part payment and asking for time, whether operate as submission, res judicata or estoppel—Res judicata—Execution proceedings—Estoppel—Nature of plea—Essential conditions—Ignorance of law as explanation for late objection.

A decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court, to the jurisdiction of which the defendant has in no way submitted himself, is by international law an absolute nullity. He is under no obligation of any kind to obey it, and it must be regarded as a mere nullity by the Courts of every nation, except in the country of the forum by which it was pronounced. [p. 354, col. 2; p. 355, col. 1.]

Where a decree passed by a Court in a Native State against a British subject who did not reside in that State, is sought to be executed in British India, it is open to the defendant to object to its execution on the ground that the decree, being one against an absent foreigner who had not submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court, is a nullity. [p. 354, col. 1.]

Section 44, Civil Procedure Code, merely lays down the method of procedure for the execution of decrees passed by Courts in certain Native States as to which there is a Notification by the Governor-General in Council. There is nothing in the section which compels the British Indian Court to execute a decree transferred to it by a Native State Court even if it is satisfied that the decree was passed without jurisdiction. Veera Raghava Ayyar v. Muga Sait (1), Panchkari Majumdar v. Giridharimal Moheshri (2) and Gur Dyal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3), relied on. [p. 354, cols. 1 & 2.]

The submission to the jurisdiction must be to the foreign Court itself and probably before the judgment is pronounced; for if there was no such submission, the judgment is a nullity. But appearance in the British Court may amount to waiver independently of this rule. [p. 355, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where such a decree was sought to be executed in British India and the moveable properties of the debtor were attached and the latter paid a certain sum of money and took time:

Held, (i) that the mere fact that the amount was deposited in part payment of the decree or that time was taken for the payment of the balance would not amount to an adjudication of the rights of the parties by the Court so as to operate as res judicata against the judgment-debtor in all subsequent proceedings, even though they arise out of a fresh transfer of the execution and relate to an entirely different set of properties. [p. 355, col. 2.]

(ii), that the judgment-debtor was not estopped as the decree-holder had not in any way been prejudiced by any representation of the judgment-debtor [p. 356, col. 1.]

Although ignorance of law is no excuse it may explain why an objection was not raised at an early stage. [ibid.]

Section 11, Civil Procedure Code, does not in terms apply to execution proceedings as they are not proceedings in a separate suit. The principle underlying that section has no doubt been applied to execution proceedings, but the principle of constructive res judicata has not been applied unless the point was expressly raised and decided or must be deemed to have been decided by necessary implication. [p. 355, col. 2.]

The plea of estoppel ordinarily rests on a question of fact, namely, whether the persons sought to be estopped intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief and in general the person pleading estoppel has to establish that in consequence of the representation or conduct of the person against whom estoppel is pleaded he was induced to act in a particular manner. [p. 357, col. 2.]

Execution Second Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzaur, dated the 18th July, 1929.

Mr. Ambika Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr A P Bagchi, for the Respondent.

Sulaiman, J.—This is a decree-holder's appeal arising out of execution proceedings consequent upon the transfer of a decree by a Court of a Native State. The decree holder brought a suit in the Bhadohi Court within the Benares State against three defendants including Binaek Shukul the present respondent and his deceased father Persidh Narain. The summonses were served personally, but they did not appear to contest the claim. The plaintiff led some evidence and the suit was decreed on the merits on the 27th of July, 1916. The other execution records are not before us and the whole history of the execution for this long period is not quite clear. Certain facts, however, have been definitely found by the Court below and they are as follows:—The objector although served personally did not choose to appear in the Court of the Native State, the decree was passed on the merits, the decree-holder executed his decree within British India several times; apparently in 1926 the decree was transferred to the Mirzapur Court for execution, the decree holder got certain moveable properties of the judgment-debtor attached, the judgment debtor appeared in the Mirzapur Court, deposited Rs 100 in part payment and asked for three months more time so that he might pay the whole decretal amount, apparently time was given to him, though it is not clear whether the decree holder had expressly consented to this arrangement; but it is perfectly clear that up to that time the judgmentdebtor raised no objection as to want of jurisdiction; apparently execution was re-transferred to Benares.

On an application of the decree-holder the execution of the decree was transferred to the Mirzapur Court a second time. After the receipt of the record the decree-holder applied on the 13th of November, 1928, for the execution of the decree by the attachment and sale of fresh property. On the 11th of December, 1928, the judgment-debtor objected that the Bhadohi Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree against him when he was not a resident of the Native State and that the said decree is not capable of execution.

The first Court distinctly found that the decree of the foreign Court was pronounced against an absent foreigner and was, therefore, an absolute nullity unless it could be shown that the defendant had in any way submitted to the jurisdiction of the said Court. In the grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court the decree-holder did not question the finding that the decree was against an absent defendant but urged other pleas. The lower Appellate Court has agreed with the view of the trial Court and affirmed its decree.

It seems to me that it is open to a judgment debtor against whom a decree has been passed by a Native State Court to object to its validity on the ground of want of jurisdiction, in the Court to which the execution has been transferred. If the decree passed is without jurisdiction and therefore, a nullity he can certainly claim that he is not bound by it. It is not incumbent upon him to go to the Court of the Native State and ask that Court to review its order. By doing so he may be said in one sense to subject himself to the jurisdiction of that Court and bind himself by an adverse order, in case it is passed. His remedy obviously is to object to the execution in the Court to which the decree has been transferred and which is now executing it.

Section 44, Civil Procedure Code merely lays down the method of procedure for the execution of decrees passed by Courts in certain Native States as to which there is a Notification by the Governor-General in Council. It does not make a decree of such Court for all purposes a decree by a Court in British India. All that it provides is that the decree 'may' be executed as if it were a decree by such Court. There is nothing in the section which compels the British Indian Court to execute a decree transferred to it by a Native State Court even if it is satisfied that the decree was passed without jurisdiction. I am clearly of opinion that it has ample discretion to refuse to execute the decree.

It is doubtful whether the omission of the words 'or the jurisdiction of the Court' from the section corresponding to the present O. XXI, r. 7 necessarily implies that the Court to which the decree has been transferred cannot question the validity of the decree on the ground of want of jurisdiction. In any case such a contention cannot be urged with regard to a decree of a Native State Court, which is a foreign Court, transferred under s. 44, Civil Procedure Code.

The point is covered by the authority of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts in Veera Raghava Ayyar v. Muga Sait (1) and Panchkari Majumdar v. Giridharimal Moheshri (2). I fully agree with the opinions expressed therein on this point.

There can also be no doubt that s. 44 does not override s. 13, Civil Procedure Code. It only confers authority to execute a decree which is in any other way a valid and enforceable decree. In a suit on a foreign judgment objection as to the conclusiveness of the judgment can be raised on the ground mentioned in s. 13, Civil Procedure Code. If the decree is not binding on the judgment-debtor on any of those grounds it seems to me that the execution Court is entitled to take the fact into consideration.

It is now well settled by the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Gur Dayal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3), that the jurisdiction of a foreign Court is territorial and attaches upon all persons either permanently or temporarily resident within the territory while they are within it, but it does not follow them after they have withdrawn from it and that even territorial legislation cannot give jurisdiction to a foreign Court against persons not owing allegiance to the legislating authority. To quote the words of their Lordships:

"In a personal action to which none of these causes of jurisdiction apply, a decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court, to the jurisdiction of which the defendant has in no way submitted himself, is by international law an absolute nullity. He is under no obligation of any kind to obey it, and it must be regarded as a mere nullity by the Courts of every nation, except in the country of the forum by which it was pronounced."

It is not disputed that the defendants were not residents of Bhadohi and were not in the Native State when the suit was instituted. It follows that the Bhadohi Court had no jurisdiction to pass a decree against the defendants. Both the Courts below have found this point in favour of the judgment-debtor, and that finding is not challenged in the grounds of appeal.

The rule regarding jurisdiction in actions in personam has been clearly stated by Dicey in his Conflict of Laws, Chap. XIII, as follows:—

"In an action in personam in respect of any cause of action, the Courts of a foreign country have jurisdiction in the following cases:—

Case 1. Where at the time of the commencement of the action the defendant was resident (or present) in such country, so as to have the benefit, and be under the protection, of the laws thereof.

Case 2. Where the defendant is, at the time of the judgment in the action, a subject of the sovereign of such country.

Case 3. Where the party objecting to the jurisdiction of the Courts of such country has by his own conduct, submitted to such jurisdiction, i. e. has precluded himself from objecting thereto.—

(a) by appearing as plaintiff in the action, or (b) by voluntarily appearing as defendant in such action without protest, or (c) by having expressly or implicitly contracted to submit to the jurisdiction of such Court."

The rule is stated in the same way in Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. VI—Conflict of Laws—Part X.

The present case does not come under the first two heads. The only question for consideration is whether the defendant by his own conduct submitted to such jurisdiction and has, therefore, precluded himself from objecting.

While the suit was pending in the Bhadohi Court the defendant-respondent, in spite of personal service on him, did not appear. The mere fact that he allowed the suit to be heard ex parte and decreed against him would not amount to his submitting to the jurisdiction of the Bhadohi Court. Nor do I think that his subsequent conduct in depositing Rs. 100 in the Mirzapur Court some years afterwards and asking for further time would be any evidence to show that he had submitted to the jurisdiction of the Bhadohi Court before the decree was passed. I cannot give to his subsequent conduct such a retrospective significance.

As the rule has been stated by Dicey it would seem that the submission to the jurisdiction must be to the foreign Court itself and probably before the judgment is pronounced; for if there was no such submission the judgment is a nullity. The illustrations given by Dicey of submission to jurisdiction by voluntarily appearing as defendant in such action without protest all relate to appearance in the foreign Court itself.

I have accordingly grave doubts as to whether any appearance in a Court in British India to which the execution has been transferred can amount to a submission to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court within the meaning of the rule cited above. But of course there may possibly be a waiver amounting to an estoppel independently of that rule.

There is no doubt that when on the previous occasion the decree was transferred to the Mirzapur Court and his moveable properties were attached, the judgment-debtor appeared before the Mirzapur Court, deposited Rs. 100 and took three months' time. On that occasion he did not object to the validity of the decree.

The learned Advocate for the decree-holder contends that his omission to do so brings in the operation of the principles of both res judicata and estoppel. As to res judicata I am clearly of opinion that there is no such bar. Section 11, Civil Procedure Code does not in terms apply to execution proceedings as they are not in a separate suit. The principle underlying that section has no doubt been applied to execution proceedings, but the principle of constructive res judicata has not been applied unless the point was expressly raised and decided or must be deemed to have been decided by necessary implication. If any property had been sold and the sale had been confirmed by an order of the Court, one might have said that there was a decision on the question of the validity of the decree by necessary implication. But the mere fact that Rs. 100 were deposited in part payment of the decree or that three months' time was taken for the payment of the balance would not amount to an adjudication of the rights of the parties by the Court so as to operate as res judicata against the judgment-debtor in all subsequent proceedings, even though they arise out of a fresh transfer of the execution and relate to an entirely different set of properties. I accordingly overrule this plea.

The next question is as to estoppel. Had there been anything on the record to show that the extension of time was a result of an agreement between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, I might possibly have been inclined to hold that such an agreement was for consideration and was binding on the parties. The record, however, does not show any compromise with the decree-holder. In order to amount to an equitable estoppel, it must be shown that there was some representation made by the judgment-debtor which was acted upon by the decree-holder and by which his position has been compromised. If the decree-holder has not been prejudiced in any way the judgment-debtor cannot be estopped from raising the question of jurisdiction which goes to the very root of the matter.

The decree was of the year 1916. A fresh suit in a British Indian Court was already barred by time. Even a suit on the basis of the foreign judgment had become barred after the lapse of six years. If the payment of Rs. 100 on the 24th of August, 1926, gave a fresh start for the limitation then the decree-holder's remedy had not become barred by time when the judgment-debtor on the 11th of December, 1928, took the objection that there was want of jurisdiction. It is, therefore, obvious that the decree-holder did not suffer in any way by the fact that Rs. 100 were paid to him and the execution was postponed for three months. The decree being a nullity he was lucky in getting even this amount.

The plea that the decree passed against the objector was passed without jurisdiction is open to him under s. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act and can be raised at any stage of the proceedings unless there is a bar of res judicata or any rule of equitable estoppel against him. Mere delay in raising it cannot itself be a fatal objection when a fresh execution is sought and fresh properties are attempted to be seized and an additional amount by way of interest also is claimed. Although the ignorance of law is no excuse, yet it may explain the reason why the objection is taken at a belated stage. I am, therefore, of opinion that there is nothing to prevent the judgment-debtor from raising the objection much less is there anything to prevent the Courts below from going into that matter suo motu and refusing to execute the decree. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Niamat Ullah, J.—The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of my learned colleague, and I do not consider it necessary to recapitulate them. It is sufficient to say that the decree in question was passed by a Court in the Benares

State as far back as the 27th July, 1916, and several attempts were made to execute it by obtaining transfer certificates to the Courts in Mirzapur and Benares. On one occasion, in 1926, Rs. 100, part of the decretal amount, was paid by one of the judgment-debtors and time was obtained for payment of the rest. It does not appear quite clearly from the record as to whether the present objector made the payment. The Court of first instance mentions the fact as if it were he who did it, and so does the lower Appellate Court. It should, therefore, be accepted for the purpose of this case that the objector satisfied the decree in part some time in 1926. Subsequently, in 1928, when execution was taken out he took objection to attachment of his property on the ground that he was a British Indian subject residing in the Mirzapur District and the Court in the Benares State which had passed the decree had no jurisdiction to pass it. It should be mentioned that the suit which resulted in the aforesaid decree was based on a claim in personam against the defendant.

I agree with my learned colleague for the reasons given by him that the objection is not barred by res judicata.

The most important question is whether the decreesought to be executed was passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction. Section 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the Court shall presume, upon the production of any document purporting to be a certified copy of a foreign judgment, that such judgment was pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the record. Such presumption, however, can be displaced by proving want of jurisdiction. It was not disputed in the Courts below that the defendants were residents of the Mirzapur District. There is no suggestion, much less evidence, that they resided temporarily in the Benares State at the time the suit was brought. Therefore, the presumption raised by s. 14 is prima facie rebutted, and as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gur Dayal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3), the decree passed by the foreign Court should be considered to be a nullity, having been passed by a Court having no jurisdiction. In the leading judgment delivered by my learned colleague, copious reference has been made to the law bearing on the subject. It is clear that even a judgment of a foreign Court will be considered to be binding if the defendant submitted to the jurisdiction of such Court. What amounts to a submission to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court is a question of some nicety in many cases. Where in answer to a summons issued by a foreign Court the defendant appears and contests the suit, without raising any question as to jurisdiction, there is no doubt that he submits to the jurisdiction of that Court. Again, where he so appears and repudiates the jurisdiction of a Court without entering into his defence, it is clear that he does not submit to the jurisdiction of that Court. Between these two extremes is the case where on receipt of the summons he puts in no appearance and an ex parte decree, otherwise open to no objection, is passed against him. His conduct in such circumstances is accountable on two hypotheses: He might have refrained from putting in an appearance because he was sanguine that the decree, if passed, would be ineffective for want of jurisdiction of the Court passing it; or he might have submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court in the belief that the plaintiff's claim was a just one, and he did not object to the decree being passed by the foreign Court. I find nothing in law which makes it necessary that the submission to jurisdiction can only be by some overt act in Court. If his attitude as regards the jurisdiction of the Court in which a suit is brought against him can be established by evidence to have been one of submission to the jurisdiction of the Court, the decree will be binding. Subsequent payment towards part satisfaction of the decree is, in my opinion, an important circumstance from which submission on his part to the jurisdiction of the Court may be inferred. Much, however, will depend on the circumstances under which the payment of the decretal amount is made. In each case it is a piece of evidence entitled to more or less weight. I should not be understood as implying that payment of decretal amount in part is itself a submission and acts retrospectively.

If the decree when passed was a nullity for want of jurisdiction in the Court which passed it no subsequent act of the defendant can make it otherwise. Subsequent conduct of the defendant may, however, be an indication of his intention to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the suit was pending. As already stated, it is only a piece of evidence bearing on the question whether the defendant submitted to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court. The lower Appellate Court has categorically stated facts which it found established by evidence. The fact that the objector paid Rs. 100 in 1926 is one of them. The learned Subordinate Judge thereafter recorded a clear finding that the objector did not submit to the jurisdiction of the Court. This, in my opinion, is a finding of fact in arriving at which no error of law can be attributed to him. I would content myself with deciding that part of the case on that finding.

Another question which requires consideration is whether the objector having once made payment was estopped from questioning the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. No such question was raised in either of the two Courts below. The plea of estoppel ordinarily rests on a question of fact, namely, whether the persons sought to be estopped "intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief." In general the person pleading estoppel has to establish that in consequence of the representation or conduct of the person against whom estoppel is pleaded he was induced to act in a particular manner. In the absence of any plea and the evidence of the decree-holder it is not permissible to disallow the objection taken by the judgment-debtor to the jurisdiction of the Court passing the decree.

With the foregoing observations I concur with my learned colleague in dismissing the appeal.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revision No. 162 of 1930.

July 10, 1931.

BOYS, JJ.

BHAGWATI PANDE—DEFENDANT—

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 35—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24—Transfer of Munsif having Small Cause powers—Successor without small cause powers—Order by District Judge for trial of Small Cause by successor as regular suit—Decree, whether appealable—Existence of Subordinate Court with Small Cause powers in same local area, effect of—Civil Procedure Code, s. 24, scope and effect of.

While a small causesuit was pending before a Munsif who had small cause powers he was transferred and succeeded by a gentleman who was not invested with the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, at the date. The Additional District Judge thereupon made the following order: "The Small Cause Court cases pending in the Court of the Munsif of Basti will be tried by the present incumbent of the office as regular suits, as he has not got the Small Cause Court powers. The attention of the said learned Munsif be drawn to s. 35, Small Cause Courts Act, and these cases should be dealt with as provided by the Small Cause Courts Act." In pursuance of this order or direction, the successor took cognizance of the case and tried it as a regular suit. He decreed the claim of the plaintiffs, and the defendant filed an appeal which was rejected on the ground that no appeal lay.

Held, (i) that the order of the Additional District Judge was not an order of transfer within the meaning of s. 24, Civil Procedure Code, but was merely drawing the attention of the Munsif to the fact that there was a provision in the Small Cause Courts Act in s. 35 to the effect that the successor of the Judge, Small Cause Court, should try the suit. [p. 362, cols 1 & 2]

(ii) that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the case under s. 35 and his decree was appealable.

Held, further, when an officer who has no Small Cause Court jurisdiction hears a case which was pending before his predecessor-in-office who had Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and makes a decree, the decree is appealable. Chottey Lal v. Lakshmi Chand Magan Lal (8), approved. Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (1), overruled. [p. 361, col. 2]

Per Sulaiman, Actg. C. J.—Section 24 contemplates the transfer of a case from one existing Court to another existing Court. If, therefore, a Court of Small Causes has ceased to exist or the officer invested with Small Cause Court powers has been transferred from the district and there is no other officer possessing such powers, there would be no Court from which the District Court can under s. 24, transfer the case to an ordinary Civil Court. The contingency where no Court or officer invested with Small Cause Court powers exists is provided for in s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. [p. 362, col. 2]

Section 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, is subject to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and would not be applicable where there is any special provision in the Code. Prima facie s. 35 deals with a case where either a Court of Small Causes or a Court invested with such jurisdiction has ceased to have such jurisdiction and under this section if the Court of Small Causes has ceased to exist or the officer invested with such powers has been transferred, then the proceedings would be had in the new Court which would have jurisdiction to try the suit if it were filed on that date afresh. Accordingly if there is in the district any other Court or officer invested with power to try the Small Cause Court suits in that area, it is that Court or officer who would have jurisdiction to take cognizance of the suit and continue the proceeding. In such a case the successor of the officer recently transferred who himself does not possess the powers of a Small Cause Court, would not be entitled under s. 35, to take it up suo motu and can only act if the case were transferred to him under s. 24. On the other hand if no such Court or officer remains in the district then the suit if filed would have to be filed in the ordinary civil Court and the proceeding accordingly would be cognizable by such Court. [p. 359, col. 2.]

Where a Munsif has been transferred and there is in the district a Subordinate Judge invested with the powers of a Small Cause Court for the area within the jurisdiction of the Munsif, under s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, it would be such a Subordinate Judge who would have authority to entertain the proceeding. A new Munsif who comes to take the place of the Munsif transferred but who does not possess the Small Cause Court powers would have no jurisdiction himself to transfer the case from the Small Cause Court side of his predecessor to his own regular side. The case would go automatically to the Subordinate Judge who is invested with Small Cause Court powers. If there is such a Subordinate Judge, it would be open to the District Judge to transfer the case from the Court of the Subordinate Judge with Small Cause Court powers to that of the new Munsif without such powers. If there is no such Subordinate Judge with Small Cause Court powers the Munsif will under s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, have to try it on the original side, and the District Judge would have no power at all to act under s. 24 so as to transfer the case to the new Munsif and make him a Court of Small Causes. He can, of course, transfer the case from the Munsif's file to any other Court, but the suit would cease to be a Small Cause Court suit. An appeal in such cases would lie to the District Judge. [p. 363, col. 1.]

Revision against an order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Basti, dated the 6th February, 1930,

On 26th March, 1931, Sulaiman Actg. C. J. and Bajpai, J., made the following Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

This case has been referred to a Division Bench by a learned Judge of this Court in view of the importance of the subject and a certain amount of conflict of opinion.

The plaintiffs instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 182 principal and interest in the Court of the Munsif of Basti who was invested with Small Cause Court powers. After he was transferred from the District another Munsif took over charge who was not invested with such powers. There was an Additional Subordinate Judge at Basti at that time who was invested with Small Cause Court powers. The Additional District Judge on the 1st of July, 1928, directed the new Munsif to transfer all the cases pending on the Small Cause Court side of the Munsif's Court to the regular side. His order was in the following terms:—

"The Small Cause Court cases pending in the Court of the Munsif of Basti will be tried by the present incumbent of the office as regular suits as he has not got the Small Cause Court powers. The attention of the said learned Munsif b drawn to s. 35 of the Small Cause Courts Act and these cases should be dealt with as provided by the Small Cause Courts Act."

In pursuance of this order the Munsif transferred this particular case from the Small Cause Court side to the regular side and decreed the claim. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge by the defendants, but he transferred the appeal to the Subordinate Judge for disposal. The learned Subordinate Judge declined to entertain the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay to him.

The defendants have come up in revision and urge that an appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court and it has wrongly refused to exercise jurisdiction. If the appeal did lie then undoubtedly it would be a fit case for interference under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code.

A large number of cases of this High Court leaving aside cases of the other High Courts have been cited before us. It must be conceded that there is to some extent a conflict of opinion on the true interpretation of s. 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and s. 24, Civil Procedure Code. In the case of Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (1) the learned Judge seemed inclined to think no matter whether s. 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act applied or s. 24, Civil Procedure Code applied, there would be no appeal from the decree. This case was dissented from in the case of Sarju Prasad v. Mahadeo Pande (2), but appears to have been followed in the case of Sukha v. Reghunath Das (3).

Although the facts of each case are somewhat different it may be broadly stated that in the cases of Sarju Prasad v. Mahadeo Pande (2), Zamir ul-Hasan Khan v. Imdad Ali Khan (4), Allah Bakhsh v. Karim Bakhsh (5) and Fakir Ullah v. Hikmat Ullah (6), s. 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act was applied and it was considered that an appeal lay from the First Court's decree. On the other hand in the case of Udho Singh v. Mul Chand (7), Chhotey Lal v. Lakshmi Chand-Magan Lal

(8), Sukha v. Reghunath Das (3), Chaturi Singh v. Rania (9), Ram Charan Banwari Lal v. Kishore Lal-Ram Sarup (10) and Jai Narain Misra v. Sarda Pershad (11), s. 24, Civil Procedure Code was considered to be applicable and the trial Court's decree was considered to be final. Of course most of these cases are either reconcilable with or distinguishable from each other.

There is however one aspect of the question which does not appear to have been considered in these cases. No doubt ss. 4, 32 and 33 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act make it clear that the same officer if invested with Small Cause Court powers is to be deemed to be different Court viz, a Court of Small Causes and an ordinary civil Court.

Section 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and would not be applicable where there is any special provision in the Code. Prima facie s. 35 deals with a case where either a Court of Small Causes or a Court invested with such jurisdiction has ceased to have jurisdiction. It provides that any proceeding which would have been taken in the Court which has now ceased to have jurisdiction "may be had" in the Court in which if the suit out of which the proceeding has arisen were about to be instituted, would have jurisdiction to try it. It would seem to follow that if the Court of Small Causes has ceased to exist or the Officer invested with such powers has been transferred then the proceeding would be had in the new Court which would have jurisdiction to try the suit if it were filed on that date afresh. Accordingly if there is in the District any other Court or Officer invested with powers to try the Small Cause Court suits in that area, it is that Court or Officer who would have jurisdiction to continue the proceeding. On the other hand, if no such Court or Officer remains in the District then the suit if filed would have to be filed in the ordinary Civil Court and the proceeding accordingly would be cognizable by such Court.

The use of the word "may" might indicate that all the cases pending in the Court of Small Causes or Officer who has ceased to have jurisdiction need not automatically go over to the new Court, but that pending any order by a superior Court, a party may take any proceedings in the Court indicated by the section.

It would also seem that the new Court, unless it were a Court of Small Causes or a Court invested with such jurisdiction, would not necessarily be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes so as to make its decree non appealable under s. 27 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Section 24, Civil Procedure Code gives power to the High Court or the District Judge to transfer a case pending in one Subordinate Court from that Court itself or to another subordinate Court and sub-s. (4) provides that a Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes. It follows that the Court to which the suit has been transferred under s. 24, being a Court of Small Causes would dispose of the suit as such and no appeal would lie from its decree.

Section 150, Civil Procedure Code also lays down that the Court to which the business is transferred shall have the same powers and shall perform the same duties as those of the Court from which the business was so transferred. Section 17 of the Bengal, N. W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act confers jurisdiction on the Court to which the business has been transferred.

It may not necessarily follow that the Court to which such business has been transferred and which has the same powers and duties as the former Court necessarily itself becomes a Court of Small Causes so as to make its decree final.

One would be inclined to think that s. 24 contemplates the transfer of a case from one existing Court to another existing Court. But if a Court of Small Causes or an Officer invested with Small Cause Court powers does not exist in the District it would be difficult to imagine that there is any Court of Small Causes in existence from which a suit can be transferred to an ordinary Civil Court. When such a contingency arises s. 35 would empower the Court which for the time being would have entertained the suit, if freshly filed, to deal with the case. At the same time it would also appear that if a Court of Small Causes or another Officer invested with such powers is already available in the District who can take cognizance of the suit or proceeding, then the successor of the Officer recently transferred, who himself does not possess the powers of Small Cause Court, would not be entitled under s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to take it up suo motu. An order of the District Judge would be required to transfer the case to his file.

In many cases where a Munsif or Subordinate Judge has been transferred there is in the District some other Officer invested with the powers of Small Cause Court for the particular area concerned. Under s. 35 it would be such Officer who would have authority to entertain the proceeding. It would, therefore, seem to follow that in such a case the new Munsif cannot try the case by merely himself transferring it from the original side of his predecessor to his own regular side. In such cases an order by the District Judge under s. 24, Civil Procedure Code would be indispensable before the new Munsif can proceed with the suit.

The order of the District Judge quoted above, which affects numerous cases, is capable of two interpretations. If it was not an order under s. 24 then there is undoubtedly a conflict of opinion as to the legal position. Even if that interpretation be not accepted, there would be the question whether an order of his must be deemed to be an order under s. 24, Civil Procedure Code, although it expressly refers to s. 35 Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, when the latter section was not at all applicable. We think that this case raises substantial questions of law for reference to a Full Bench.

We accordingly direct that this case be laid before the Chief Justice for the constitution of a Full Bench.

OPINION.

Mukerji, J.—This is an application in revision by the defendant in a suit instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Basti exercising the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court.

While the suit was pending, the Munsif exercising the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, namely, Mr. Shyam Behari Lal, was transferred. He was succeeded by a gentleman who was not invested with the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court. This was Mr. Jamil Ahmad. At the date already mentioned, namely, 16th June, 1928, the Subordinate Judge of Basti sitting at Basti was invested with the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, up to the pecuniary jurisdiction of Rs. 500, and his local jurisdiction extended up to Bansi.

On the transfer of Mr. Shyam Behari Lal the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur sitting at Basti gave certain directions in respect of the cases pending in the Court of Mr. Shyam Behari Lal. So far as the Small Cause Court cases were concerned, his order was as follows:—

"The Small Cause Court cases pending in Court of the Munsif of Basti will be tried by the present incumbent of the office as regular suits as he has not got the Small Cause Court powers. The attention of the said learned Munsif be drawn to s. 35 of the Small Cause Courts Act, and these cases should be dealt with as provided by the Small Cause Courts Act."

In pursuance of this order or direction, the Munsif Mr. Jamil Ahmad, took cognizance of the case and tried it as a regular suit. He decreed the claim of the plaintiffs and the defendant filed an appeal before the Additional District Judge at Basti. He transferred it to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Basti, and that learned Subordinate Judge declined to entertain the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay.

The defendant has come up in revision, and several points of law have arisen out of this application.

The first question to be considered is whether the order of the Additional District Judge at Basti was an order of transfer within the meaning of s. 24 of the Civil Procedure Code. The reason for this enquiry is, that, where a Small Cause Court case is transferred from a Court exercising that jurisdiction to a Court not exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction, the Court trying the suit is to be treated as a Small Cause Court for purposes of that suit. It follows that no appeal is maintainable. On the other hand, if s. 24 does not apply, there is a difference of opinion as to whether an appeal is maintainable from the ultimate decree that may be passed in the suit.

We have already read the order that was passed by the learned Additional District Judge, and we are of opinion, that this order was not an order of transfer within the meaning of s. 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, but was merely drawing the attention of the Munsif to the fact that there was a provision in the Small Cause Courts Act in s. 35 to the effect that the successor of the Judge, Small Cause Court, should try the suit.

Such being our opinion, we need not consider the fact whether the Additional District Judge at Basti had or not jurisdiction to order a transfer of a case from one Court to another. Nor is it necessary to consider whether it is possible under the law to order the transfer of a case from a Court which no longer exists to another Court. These questions do not any longer arise for determination.

The next question that we have to consider is whether the decree of the learned Munsif, Mr. Jamil Ahmad, was appealable under the law.

We have already mentioned that at the date 16th June, 1928, the Subordinate Judge of Basti was exercising jurisdiction as a Judge, Small Cause Court, up to Rs. 500. That being so, under s. 35 of the Small Cause Courts Act, the suit under consideration should have gone to the file of the said Subordinate Judge exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction. In this view, the learned Munsif should not have tried the suit. The suit having been tried without jurisdiction, an appeal would lie, and therefore the learned Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that appeal was not competent.

The next question is whether, when an officer without possessing Small Cause Court jurisdiction hears a case which was pending before his predecessor-in-office exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and makes a decree, the decree is appealable? On this point there is some difference of opinion. In this Court in Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (1) the view was taken that the decree would be unappealable, being a decree of a Court of a Small Cause Court jurisdiction. This view was dissented from in Chhotey Lal v. Lakhmi Chand Magan Lal (8). It is necessary to consider this point, in view of the fact that the learned Munsif decided the case.

We are of opinion that the decision in Chhotey Lal v. Lakhmi Chand Magan Lal (8) laid down the better law. The fact that no appeal is permitted from a decree made by a Judge, Small Cause Court, is due to the provision of s. 27 of the Small Cause Courts Act. That rule does not apply when a case is decided by a successor of a Judge of a Court of Small Causes under s. 35 of the Act. Section 35 comes after s. 27, which reads as follows:—

"Save as provided by this Act, a decree or order made under the foregoing provisions of this Act by a Court of Small Causes shall be final."

Section 27 not being applicable, and the officer actually making the decree not being invested with the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, we fail to see why a finality should attach to a decree made by him. We accordingly hold that the case of Chhotey Lal v. Lakshmi Chand Magan Lal (8) lays down the better law.

We have ascertained that the present Munsif at Bansi exercises Small Cause Court jurisdiction up to the amount of Rs 100 only. The present suit, therefore, will not be cognizable by him. We have also ascertained that the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge at Basti exercising Small Cause Court powers has been limited to Basti Munsifi, and does not extend to Bansi Munsifi. We have now to decide where we should send the case back for retrial, for there must be retrial because the trial was by an officer who had no jurisdiction to hear the case.

Applying s. 35 of the Small Cause Courts Act, that Court should have jurisdiction to hear the case now, which would have jurisdiction to hear the suit in case it were now instituted. It should follow that the Munsif of Bansi should hear the case as a regular suit, the decree in which would be appealable.

As a matter of precaution, however, we, having set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge of Basti declining jurisdiction to hear the appeal, remand the case to the Court of the Additional District Judge at Basti. He will cause the suit to be transferred to the Court of the Munsif of Bansi or to such other Court as may have jurisdiction over the subject-matter, having regard to the principle laid down above.

We are not aware of the jurisdiction that the learned Additional District Judge at Basti has, in the matter of ordering transfers of suits and appeals. The jurisdiction that is vested under s. 24 is vested in the District Court, which, according to the definition given in the Civil Procedure Code, is the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction. There can be only one principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in a judgeship, and that must be the Court of the District Judge of Gorakhpur. If the learned Additional District Judge at Basti finds that having regard to the provisions of s. 24 he has no jurisdiction to transfer the case, he will obtain an order from the District Judge at Gorakhpur for the transfer of the case to the proper Court.

As none of the parties are to blame for what has happened, we direct that the costs here and hitherto shall abide the result.

Sulalman, Ag. C. J—I concur in the order proposed. Where s. 24, Civil Procedure Code, can apply, the District Court would have power to transfer a case pending in one Subordinate Court, to another Subordinate Court. If the case is transferred or withdrawn from a Court of Small Causes, then under sub s. (4) the Court to which it is transferred for trial shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes. It follows that the Court to which the suit has been transferred under s. 24 would dispose of the suit as a Court of Small Causes, and no appeal would lie from its decree. This result would not follow where there is no transfer under s. 24 Civil Procedure Code.

Obviously s. 24 contemplates the transfer of a case from one existing Court to another existing Court. If, therefore, a Court of Small Causes has ceased to exist or the officer invested with Small Cause Court powers has been transferred from the District and there is no other officer possessing such powers, there would be no Court from which the District Court can under s. 24 Civil Procedure Code transfer the case to an ordinary Civil Court. The contingency where no Court or officer invested with Small Cause Court powers exists is provided for in s. 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Section 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is subject to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and would not be applicable where there is any special provision in the Code. Prima facie s. 35 deals with a case where either a Court of Small Causes or a Court invested with such jurisdiction has ceased to have such jurisdiction. It provides that any proceeding which would have been taken in the Court which has now ceased to have jurisdiction "may be had" in the Court in which if the suit out of which the proceeding has arisen were about to be instituted, would have jurisdiction to try it. It follows that if the Court of Small Causes has ceased to exist or the officer invested with such powers has been transferred, then the proceeding would be had in the new Court which would have jurisdiction to try the suit if it were filed on that date afresh. Accordingly, if there is in the District any other, Court or officer invested with powers to try the Small Cause Court suits in that area, it is that Court or officer who would have jurisdiction to take cognizance of the suit and continue the proceeding. In such a case the successor of the officer recently transferred, who himself does not possess-the powers of a Small Cause Court, would not be entitled under s. 35 Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to take it up avo motu, and can only act if the case were transferred to him under s. 24. On the other hand, if no such Court or officer remains in the district then the suit if filed would have to be filed in the ordinary Civil Court and the proceeding accordingly would be cognizable by such Court.

In many cases where a Munsif has been transferred there is in the District a Subordinate Judge invested with the powers of a Small Cause Court for the area within the jurisdiction of the Munsif. Under s. 35 Provincial Small Cause Courts Act it would be such a Subordinate Judge who would have authority to entertain the proceedings. A new Munsif who comes to take place of the Munsif transferred but who does not possess the Small Cause Court powers would have no jurisdiction himself to transfer the case from the Small Cause Court side of his predecessor to his own regular side. The case would go automatically to the Subordinate Judge who is invested with Small Cause Court powers. If there is such a Subordinate Judge, it would be open to the District Judge to transfer the case from the Court of the Subordinate Judge with Small Cause Court powers to that of the new Munsif without such powers. If there is no such Subordinate Judge with Small Cause Court powers the Munsif will under s. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act have to try it on the original side, and the District Judge would have no power at all to act under s. 24 so as to transfer the case to the Munsif and make him a Court of Small Causes. He can, of course, transfer the case from the Munsif's file to any other Court, but the suit would cease to be a Small Cause Court suit. An appeal in such cases would lie to the District Judge.

Boys, J.—I concur in the judgment of and order proposed by Mr. Justice Mukerji.

By the Court—We set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge of Basti declining jurisdiction to hear the appeal, remand the case to the Court of the Additional District Judge at Basti. He will cause the suit to be transferred to the Court of the Munsif of Basti or such other Court as may have jurisdiction over the subject matter, having regard to the principle laid down in the above judgments. If the Additional District Judge finds that he has no jurisdiction to transfer the case he will obtain an order from the District Judge at Gorakhpur for the transfer of the case to the proper Court.

We direct that the costs here and hitherto shall abide the result.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 76 (h), 77—Mortgagee in possession—Liability to account for profits—Contract to the contrary, effect of—S. 77, applicability of.

Where the mortgage is governed by the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagee cannot contract himself out of the provisions of s. 76 (h) of the Act unless he can bring himself strictly within the exception provided by s. 77. [p. 367, col. 2.]

Section 77 cannot apply unless there is a contract between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money or in lieu of such interest and defined portion of the principal. Shafin-Nissa v. Fazal Rab (1) overruled. [ibid.]

Second Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 21st August 1928.

On 22nd June 1931 Mukerji and Allen, JJ made the following Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

This is a plaintiffs' appeal and arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage dated the 17th June 1867.

The plaintiffs are the transferees of the defendants second party who were the original mortgagors. The defendants first party represent the original mortgagees.

The plaintiffs' case was that owing to an increase in the income of the property mortgaged usufructually, the mortgage-money has paid itself and there is a surplus of Re. 410-5-2 in favour of the plaintiffs. They accordingly ask for possession and for the said amount of money as surplus due to them. The defence was that there was no increase in the income of the property mortgaged, on the other hand, there was a decrease in it and there was a document of further charge and the plaintiffs could not redeem without paying the amount due on that document also. In the mortgage-deed there was a stipulation that a part of the estimated income of the property would be taken towards a part of the interest and the balance of Rs. 7 a year would be paid by the mortgagors. As to this, the plaintiffs' allegation was that the sum of Rs. 7 a year was paid up to 1290, Fasli and, thereafter, it was not necessary to pay this sum because the income from the property increased by more than Rs. 7 a year. The lower Appellate Court has held that it is a fact that the mortgagors paid Rs. 7 a year up to 1290 Fasli.

The first Court found that there was a considerable increase from time to time in the profits of the mortgaged property and that after paying the stipulated interest there was a surplus which went to liquidate the principal amount and a large amount of surplus money was left in the hands of the mortgagees amounting to Rs. 3,943. On these findings, the learned Munsif decreed the suit for possession and for recovery of the surplus amount.

Before the learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal, it was contended that under the terms of the mortgage the mortgagees were not bound to render an account and that the subsequent deed did amount to a deed of further charge. On both these points the learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the defendants. The result was that he decreed the claim for redemption of the mortgage on condition of payment of the principal mortgage money and Rs. 7 a year the deficiency in the interest every year, from 1291 Fasli to the date fixed for payment and also on payment of the principal amount secured by the deed of further charge and the interest thereon.

The plaintiffs have come in second appeal and two points have been urged before us. The first is that the learned Judge of the Court below was wrong in holding that there could be no accounting, that the document for which a further charge is claimed creates no charge on the property and, therefore, the plaintiffs are not liable to pay the money due on it. By way of a side issue, it was contended on behalf of the respondents that the amount of Rs. 187 stated in the deed of mortgage as the total income per year, was taken by the parties as the income from the property mortgaged for all time. In reply to this it was argued on behalf of the appellants that such a stipulation would be void under the law.

The points that arise for decision in this case therefore are. —

1. Whether the parties are agreed that Rs. 187 was to be taken to be the annual income of the property for all time, irrespective of whether there was actually an increase or decrease in the income from the mortgaged property?

2. If the parties did so agree, whether the agreement is binding on them or whether the same is void and contrary to law?

3. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to claim an account of the income of the property?

4. Whether the deed dated Jait Sudi 15th, 1274 Fasli for the amount of Rs. 250 creates a charge on the property mortgaged?

It will be noticed that if the Issue No. 3 is decided in favour of the plaintiffs, an issue will have to be sent down, as to the account, in order that the Court below may find out what was the income from the property during the years of the mortgagees' possession and whether the plaintiffs have to pay anything or whether they are entitled to any surplus?

As to the first point, as a true construction of the document in suit, we are of opinion that the parties agreed that Rs. 187 was to be taken as the total annual income of the property. The term of the mortgage was 9 years and there is nothing in the document to show that it was contemplated that there might be an increase in the income within this term of the mortgage, or even thereafter.

Points Nos. 2 and 3 go together. These are the points which are most important in this appeal. The argument on behalf of the appellants is that, except in cases covered by s. 77 of the Transfer of Property Act, a mortgagee in possession is bound to render an account and if he really acquires from the property a larger amount than was contemplated by the mortgagor at the date of the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagee cannot keep the surplus to himself on the ground that the mortgagor and he had agreed that the income from the property would be a fixed amount. It is pointed out that s. 77 contemplates the cases where the whole of the interest is to be covered by the usufruct or where the usufruct covers the whole of the interest and a defined portion of the principal amount. Section 77 does not contemplate a case in which, by agreement, the usufruct of the mortgaged property is to be taken in lieu of a part only of the entire interest due to the mortgagee.

On the other hand, s. 76 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down the liabilities of the mortgagee in possession. In the case of cl. (c) and (d) of this section, the expression "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" appears. Thus, where those clauses apply it is open to the parties to contract themselves out of those rules and in that case the mortgagee will not be bound to act in the way he would be bound, in the absence of a contract to the contrary. In the cl. (a), (b), (e), (f), (g), (h), and (i) the words, "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" do not appear and therefore, the liability of the mortgagee would appear to be absolute and he is not entitled to contract out of those liabilities. For example in the case of cl. (a) which lays down that a mortgagee must manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own, a mortgagee cannot be permitted to agree with the mortgagor that he would manage the property in any way and as carelessly as he chose and that he would not account for the income of the property or would not be liable for any loss occasioned to the property of the mortgagor by the mortgagee's mismanagement. There can be no doubt that in the case of cl. (a) the liability of the mortgagee is absolute and he cannot contract himself out of it. Similarly, in the case of cl. (g) the mortgagee is required to keep clear, full and accurate accounts. This seems to be an absolute liability and the mortgagee cannot agree validly with the mortgagor that any account that he keeps, however, slipshod it may be, will have to be accepted by the mortgagor. Similarly in the case of cl. (h) the mortgagee is required to apply the receipts from the mortgaged property, after deducting the expenses and interest thereon, in a certain way. If his income from the property is large, it is contended on behalf of the appellants that it is not open to the mortgagee to agree with the mortgagor that he would keep anything over and above the interest due to him, for his own benefit and would not account for the same to the mortgagor.

The argument adduced on behalf of the appellants seems to have great force. The omission from s. 77 of the case in which only a part of the interest is to be paid out of the usufruct must have been intentional and not accidental. One can see the reason for it without much difficulty. Where the parties agree on a stipulated amount of interest to be paid by one party and to be received by the other, it is that amount alone to which the mortgagee is entitled and he is entitled to nothing more. The exception is where no interest is stipulated for specifically, and it is agreed that whatever be the interest and whatever be the usufruct, one will be set off against the other. There need be no accounting in such a case. But where such is not the case, there must be an accounting.

This view, which has been strongly urged on behalf of the appellants and which, as at present advised, seems to us to be the correct view, was not accepted in the case of Shafi-un-Nissa v. Fazal Rab (1), by two learned Judges of this Court. That case was similar to the present one. Karamat Husain, J., remarked that a usufructuary mortgagee would be liable to render account only by an express stipulation to that effect. He further held that the case before him was covered by s. 77 of the Transfer of Property Act, though the facts did not fall within the four corners of that section. His learned colleague Knox, J., contended himself with the remark that on the stipulation contained in the deed of mortgage, he agreed with his brother Karamat Husain, J.

This case of Shafi-un-Nissa v. Fazal Rab (1) was cited in a more recent case in this Court, namely Bihari Lal v. Shib Lal (2) but it was neither approved nor disapproved. In the Patna High Court the case of Shafi-un-Nissa v. Fazal Rab (1) was cited in the case of Kishen Lal v. Hira Lal (3) decided by Das and Kulwant Sahay, J.J., and the decision on the point of law was dissented from. The judgment however, contains a dictum to the effect that the judgment in the Allahabad case was correct, if it was to be based merely on the interpretation of the document. No doubt this dictum was obiter, but it shows, at any rate, that the learned Judges thought that it was open to the mortgagees to contract themselves out of the liabilities laid down by the law under s. 76 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act. This view is controverted before us by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, who has argued the case for the appellants.

Mr Kamla Kant Verma has drawn our attention on behalf of the respondents to another case decided by the Patna High Court, namely Raghubar Narain Choudhury v. Mohit Narain Jha (4) which quotes without disapproval the opinion of Karamat Hussain, J. in the case of Shafi-un-Nissa v. Fazal Rab (1) viz., in the absence of a contract to that effect a mortgagee with possession is not bound to account for the usufruct of property. If that is the view which the learned Judges took in the case of Raghubar Narain Choudhury v. Mohit Narain Jha (4) there is a conflict of views among the Judges of the Patna High Court.

We are of opinion that the case in Shafi un Nissa v. Fazal Rab (1) requires reconsideration and for this purpose we refer this case to a larger Bench. The point that has to be decided by the Full Bench, such as may be constituted by the learned Chief Justice, will be as follows:—

1. Whether it is open to a mortgagee who has agreed to accept the whole of the usufruct of the mortgaged property in lieu of a portion of the interest due to him to escape the operation of s. 76 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act and a rendition of account of the income of the property by an agreement to that effect with the mortgagor?

2. Whether, on a true construction of s. 77 of the Transfer of Property Act, a case where the whole of the usufruct of the mortgaged property is taken in lieu of a part of the interest due on the mortgage money is covered by it?

We have read the document dated Jait Sudi 15th 1274, Fasli for the sum Rs. 250 and we are of opinion that it creates a charge in clear terms over the property mortgaged by way of conditional sale with the mortgagees. The language does not call for a detailed examination. The document itself is called a hypothecation bond and the mortgagors agree that till the amount secured by the deed is paid off, they will not transfer any of the properties by way of conditional sale. Further they agree that in case the property mortgaged by way of conditional sale, is foreclosed, the amount for which the foreclosure would take place would include the amount due on the present deed.

We direct that the case be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for constitution of a Bench to decide the two points formulated by us above.

On return of findings from the Full Bench we shall consider whether a remand of the issue indicated above will be necessary or not.

[The case was heard by a Full Bench.]

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad (for whom Mr. Mansur Alam), for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Varma (for whom Mr. Bhargava), for the Respondents.

Opinion.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage of the 17th of June 1867, by way of conditional sale, for a sum of Rs. 1,333-5 4. The mortgagor promised to pay interest at the rate of Re. 7-6 per mensem which came to Rs. 75 per annum. These figures were expressly recited in the deed. It was further stated that the gross produce of the property was Rs. 187, out of which Rs. 108 had to be paid on account of Government Revenue and cesses, Rs. 63 6 on account of certain other charges, and Rs. 4-8 on account of expenses; in all Rs. 119 2-6. The mortgagee was to utilise the balance of Rs. 68 in lieu of interest, and the mortgagor promised to pay Rs. 7 from his pocket on account of deficiency in the interest. It was contemplated that the mortgage would be redeemed in about nine years' time, and there was the condition for foreclosure that if the mortgagee failed to pay the amount at the stipulated time, the mortgage would be foreclosed. It did not provide what was to happen if there was an increase or decrease in the income, nor did it expressly lay down any covenant as to the liability or otherwise of the mortgage to maintain accounts or to render them at the time of redemption. The deed was silent as to these matters.

It is an admitted fact that about 1291 Fasli there was a fresh settlement, and the income of the property was considerably increased. It is also an admitted fact that the mortgagors were paying Rs. 7 a year up to that year and then stopped paying any further. It is not disputed that the mortgagee did not insist on the payment of this extra amount, and on account of the default did not consider it necessary to sue for foreclosure.

The plaintiffs claimed that the mortgagee's representatives must give credit for the extra income which accrued after the mortgage; while the mortgagee's representatives disputed this and pleaded that the mortgagors' representatives were bound to make good the balance of Rs. 7 a year. The lower Appellate Court passed a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiffs on payment of the principal sum plus Rs. 7 a year from the time when they stopped payment. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, and the Division Bench has referred two questions to a Full Bench for answers.

The Division Bench interpreted the mortgage-deed in dispute as containing no contract as to what was to happen if there was an increase or decrease in the income. The learned Judges thought that the contingency that there might be an increase or decrease in the income never occurred to the parties, and they never thought about it, so they did not provide for this contingency, that is to say, it was purely a case of omission, and there was no contract against the liability of the mortgagee to account for any surplus income. We must accept this interpretation as the question of interpretation has not been referred to us.

The mortgage-deed in question was executed before the coming into force of the Transfer of Property Act, and at the time of its execution the parties were bound by the equitable principles governing mortgages and not by the strict language of any section of this enactment. Where the parties expressly agree that the entire income, whatever it be, should be set off against the whole of the interest on the amount advanced, there is, of course, no necessity for the mortgagee to keep any account. On the other hand, where the intention is that the mortgagee should get the interest at an agreed rate, the primary consideration is the payment of the mortgage-money with interest at that rate to the mortgagee, even though the income may fluctuate from year to year. It would follow on general equitable principles that where there is a fixed rate of interest there should be a liability on the mortgagee to maintain proper and regular accounts and give credit for all the receipts, and claim compensation for deficit or pay for the surplus. The liability of the mortgagee to render accounts was well recognized even before the coming into force of the Transfer of Property Act. Under s. 76 of the Act the liability of the mortgagee in possession to give credit for the receipts, after deducting the expenses and interest, in the account, is absolute. It is significant that although the words 'in the absence of a contract to the contrary', occur in cls (c) and (d), those words do not occur in the other clauses particularly in cl. (h), which requires that the receipt from the mortgaged property shall be debited against the mortgagee in reduction of the amount due to him and the surplus if any shall be paid to the mortgagor. It is therefore quite obvious that unless the case comes within the purview of s. 77 of the Act, which in express language excludes the operations of s. 76 (h), the liability of the mortgagee to give credit for the receipts in the account is absolute and the parties would not be at liberty to contract themselves out of the statutory liability.

Section 77, however, cannot apply unless there is a contract between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money or in lieu of such interest and defined portion of the principal. On the interpretation of the mortgage-deed made by the Division Bench there was no such contract in the case before us. Section 77 therefore has no application and the mortgage does not come within the purview of the exception. He was therefore liable under s. 76 (h) to render account and give credit for the surplus income if any.

In this view of the matter it is not necessary to answer the second question. If, however, the Division Bench are of opinion that they cannot decide the appeal without an answer to that question they may refer it again to us.

Our answer to the first question is that where the mortgage is governed by the Transfer of Property Act the mortgagee cannot contract himself out of the provisions of s. 76 (h) of the Act unless he can bring himself strictly within the exception provided by s. 77.

Under s. 104 (h), Civil Procedure Code, an appeal lies from an order directing the arrest or detention in the civil prison of any person otherwise than in execution of a decree.

An internal medical examination of a lady, if not voluntarily submitted to by her, would amount to assault and battery. [p. 369, col. 1.]

A Subordinate Judge directed defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to produce defendant No. 4 in Court for internal medical examination without ascertaining whether defendant No. 4 who was a pardanashin lady was willing to submit to such examination, and, on their failure to do so, directed the arrest of all the defendants and got them produced in Court under the supposed inherent powers of the Court and not professing to act on the assumption that they were in contempt : [p. 369, col. 2.]

First Appeal against an order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Ballia, dated the 21st January, 1931.

Mr. A. P. Pandey, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a most startling order for the arrest and detention in the civil prison of the defendants. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies from the order. In our opinion this objection has no force whatsoever. Under s. 104 (h), Civil Procedure Code an appeal is expressly provided from an order directing the arrest or detention in the civil prison of any person otherwise than in execution of a decree. Even if there had been no provision for an appeal, we would have felt compelled to interfere in revision because there has been a gross travesty of justice in this case. Even a cursory reference to the order-sheet would show that for some reason not easily intelligible the Subordinate Judge proceeded in a very high-handed manner which would in no way do credit to any judicial officer of experience.

The most astonishing thing is that the Subordinate Judge himself was fully conscious that there were no express provisions in the Civil Procedure Code which justified the course of action which he took upon himself to pursue. In order to usurp most sweeping powers of arresting the defendants and sending them to Jail he took shelter behind the remark:

"The Civil Procedure Code is not exhaustive and it cannot be said to lay down a procedure for every emergency on account of which the power of the Court has been left unfettered to chalk out a procedure not provided for in order to do justice".

If the learned Subordinate Judge imagines that the supposed inherent power makes him the absolute master of the situation so as to enable him to pass any arbitrary orders which he thinks fit against any party to the suit, the sooner he is disillusioned of this false notion the better for him. The provisions for the issue of the warrants of arrests are to be found in the four corners of the Civil Procedure Code. There is also power to get parties arrested or punished when proper proceedings for contempt of Court have been taken in an authorised manner. But it is preposterous to suggest that a Court has power to arrest any person or to send him to Jail forthwith without any proper trial in a legal proceeding.

In a civil suit for a declaration pending before the Court below it was in issue whether the plaintiff No. 1 was the daughter of defendant No. 1 born of defendant No. 4 but there was no specific issue that the defendant No. 4 had never given birth to any child at all. On an application of the plaintiffs filed on the 5th of January 1931, unsupported by any affidavit, the Court ordered that the Vakil for the defendant No. 2 should produce her on the 16th of January 1931, "so that she may be sent to doctor for medical examination as to whether any issue was born to her." The other defendants were asked to be present so that they 'might watch the examination by the doctor'. The learned Subordinate Judge up to that date had no materials before him to show that the defendant No. 4 was agreeable to submit herself to medical examination. He did not even take the trouble to ascertain this before passing the order. This order was repeated on the 15th of January, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 were ordered to produce her in Court on the 21st of January 'so that she may be required to undergo medical examination'. The learned Subordinate Judge even now did not pause to enquire whether she was herself willing to submit herself to medical examination. On the 21st of January the parties filed conflicting affidavits but there was yet no suggestion that the defendant No. 4 was herself willing to be internally examined. The learned Subordinate Judge concluded that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were responsible for her non-appearance and ordered that they 'be arrested and detained in the civil prison'. Defendant No. 3 was present in Court and he was ordered to be arrested 'at once'. No proceedings for any contempt of Court were drawn up against these defendants. Warrants for the arrest of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were issued on the same day and the process servers were ordered to bring defendant No. 4 to Court. The process-servers returned the warrants un-executed as they found the house of defendants Nos. 1 and 4 locked up.

Finding that his arbitrary orders proved futile, the learned Subordinate Judge ordered a Vakil to 'go as a Commissioner, break open the door or lock, if necessary, and let the pairokar of the plaintiffs and defendant No. 4 bring Musammatt Bhagjogna in his company to Court'. The order proceeded 'if the pairokar points her out to be in the house of any other person the Commissioner shall request the other person to let her into his custody and if that man refuses, the Commissioner shall, after due notice of keeping purdah enter his house and break open the door or lock if necessary in order to take her into his custody'. This is an instance of authority running riot. The learned Subordinate Judge should have realised that he would be making himself liable to damages for illegal arrest if a lady defendant was taken into custody and brought to Court against her will or by force.

The defendant lady was brought into Court by the Commissioner, 'after some trouble and opposition'. She was ordered 'to remain in Court pending order for medical examination'. The defendant No. 3 was ordered to be released in order to present himself before the Court 'so that the proceedings of the medical examination of the lady may take place in his seeing'. The other parties were also ordered to be present at the time of the medical examination of the lady. Up to the time of the passing of this order it did not strike the learned Subordinate Judge that the lady's wishes should be consulted. The poor lady appears to keep purdah and was brought to Court in a palki. The learned Subordinate Judge examined her later and noted that 'she is willing to submit herself to medical examination by a lady doctor'. As Indian pardanashin women are generally reluctant to undergo an internal examination, the peculiar circumstances in which she had been brought to Court and was detained there might justify the comment of the Counsel for the defendants that she must have been too frightened and nervous, and her consent was wrung out of her because of the fear under which she was placed. The Subordinate Judge should appreciate that an internal medical examination of a lady, if not voluntarily submitted to by her, would amount to assault and battery. The medical examination of the defendant lady took place at the Zenana Hospital. Subsequent proceedings were stayed by an order of the High Court passed on an application for transfer. When the application for transfer came up for final disposal the junior Counsel engaged stated that he had no instructions and the senior Counsel sent an illness slip praying that the case be postponed. Unfortunately for him the case was heard ex parte and the application was dismissed on the one-sided report of the Subordinate Judge. If all the facts had been brought to the notice of the learned Judge, he might have come to the conclusion that the learned Subordinate Judge was not in a fit judicial mood to try the civil suit.

It seems to us that the whole procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge was illegal from beginning to end, and it is regrettable that any experienced judicial officer should stoop to adopt such a course of action. Courts of Justice have not only to do justice but should also inspire confidence in the public mind as to their fairness. Such a high-handed conduct on the part of a judicial officer is bound to bring Courts into discredit and shake the confidence of the people in the purity of the administration of justice.

The learned Subordinate Judge did not profess to act on the assumption that they were in contempt nor did he take any proper legal proceedings against them for contempt. In the circumstance he had absolutely no jurisdiction to get the defendants arrested or sent to the civil prison. His order was utterly ultra vires and without authority. We accordingly allow this appeal and set aside the order of the 21st of January, 1931, and direct the plaintiffs, at whose instance the order was passed, should pay the costs of the defendants in both the Courts.

Second Appeal from a decision of the First Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 31st March, 1928.

Dr. M. H. Faruqi, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. Walliullah, for the Respondent.

Bennet, J.—This second appeal by the defendant has been referred to a Bench of two Judges by a learned single Judge because a difficult question of law is involved. The facts which have been found in the present case are that the defendants made a complaint in the Criminal Court against the plaintiff under ss. 449 and 506, Indian Penal Code and also asked for security to keep the peace to be taken under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not issue any summons or other process to the accused, but he called under s. 202, Criminal Procedure Code for a report from the Police, and the Sub-Inspector made an inquiry and sent a report and after receiving that report the Sub-Divisional Magistrate went to the village of the parties himself and went to the house of the accused and held an inquiry. He came to the conclusion that the complaint lodged by the defendant was false, and he dismissed this complaint under s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code. The accused then filed the present plaint. The question which has arisen in second appeal is whether a suit for damages for malicious prosecution will lie where no process has been issued by the Magistrate for the attendance of the person accused. On this point there are a number of conflicting rulings, but the weight of authority of the Courts in India is that no such suit for damages lies. This view has been taken in the following rulings:—

De Rozario v. Gulab Chand Anundjee (1),

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 877; 37 C. 358.

Golap Jan v. Bholanath Khetry (2), Sheik Meeran Sahib v. Ratnavelu Mudali (3) and Subhag Chamar v. Nand Lal Sahu (4).

On the other hand the plaintiff-respondent relied on the following rulings:—

Bishen Prasad Narain Singh v. Phulman Singh (5), 64 Ind. Cas. 741, Bishen Singh v. Ram Bahal Roy (6), Gursaran Das v. Israr Haider (7), Ahmabbhai v. Framji Edulji (8) and Imperatrix v. Lakshman Sakaram (9).

Now in some of the rulings on which the plaintiff relies the proposition enunciated by the plaintiff does not find full support. Thus in Bishen Prasad Narain Singh v. Phulman Singh (5), it is stated,

"The prosecution might be infructuous, if, for instance, no notice was served upon the accused. In such a contingency, the action for damages for malicious prosecution would fail, not because there was no prosecution commenced, but because there was no damage done to the plaintiff."

The view of damages taken by the Calcutta High Court in this case is that the damages should be material, that is that the plaintiff should show that he suffered damages by having to defend himself in the Criminal Courts. It is true that under English Law the case is apparently otherwise. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 19, para. 1443 it is stated:

"To succeed in an action for malicious prosecution a plaintiff must prove . . . (v) that the plaintiff has suffered damage; unless, indeed, the proceedings necessarily import damage to his fame or person."

And in para. 1470 it is stated,

"To support an action for malicious prosecution or other malicious legal proceedings, one of three heads of damage must be proved, if not implied by law;

(1) Damage to a man's fame, as where the matter of which he is accused is scandalous;

(2) Damage done to the person, as where his life, limb, or liberty is endangered; or

(3) Damage to his property, as where he is put to the expense of acquitting himself of the crime with which he is charged."

Now in India it is only damage under the second and third heads which has been considered sufficient to start an action for malicious prosecution. If damage to a man's reputation was concerned sufficient to start a suit for malicious prosecution, then the position would arise that damages to reputation could be the basis of a suit for malicious prosecution although such damages could not be the basis of a suit for defamation, it has been held in a Full Bench case of this High Court Chunni Lal v. Narsingh Das (10) that where a person presents a petition to a Criminal Court he is not liable in a civil suit for damages in respect of statements made therein which may be defamatory of the person complained against. The Full Bench case of this High Court has laid down that there is an absolute privilege for a complaint to a Criminal Court so far as a Civil Court is concerned, and that no suit will lie for damages for defamation. It would, therefore, be contrary to the spirit of this ruling if we were to hold that such damages could form the basis of a suit for malicious prosecution. We note that in the particular ruling on which the plaintiff relies on 64 Ind. Cas. 741, Bishen Singh v. Ram Bahal Roy (6), the accused was directed by a Sub-Inspector to appear before the Magistrate and in the case to which reference has been made in Bishen Prasad Narain Singh v. Phulman Singh (5) a notice was issued to the accused and he was present at the inquiry on the criminal complaint which was under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, although that was apparently a preliminary inquiry and not after a notice has been issued to the accused to show cause why he should not furnish the security demanded. After considering the various rulings produced in this case we are of opinion that the criminal prosecution does not take place so far as the accused is concerned until process issues for the accused to be present, and on that view we consider that in the present case a suit for damages for malicious prosecution will not lie. We further think that in the circumstances no damage can be said to have been suffered by the plaintiff. On both these grounds we consider that the present suit of the plaintiff will fail.

Some further argument was made by the learned Counsel for the appellant to the effect that the dismissal of a complaint under s. 20, Criminal Procedure Code is not a termination of the criminal proceedings in favour of the accused, because such a complaint might be revived by the Magistrate. If this doctrine were extended, then there could be no suit for damages for malicious prosecution, for even in the case of an acquittal the acquittal could be set aside by an appeal of the Local Government under s. 417, Criminal Procedure Code. But all that is required for the plaintiff to show on this point in a suit for malicious prosecution is that the criminal proceedings terminated in favour of the plaintiff, and we consider that if the plaintiff shows that the Magistrate passed an order in his favour and the defendant fails to show that the proceedings were revived, then the plaintiff has shown all that is necessary for the suit.

In this case the question was also argued in second appeal as to whether the plaintiff would be entitled to damages for defamation on account of the defamatory statements contained in the complaint made by the defendant to the Magistrate. But the Full Bench ruling of Chunni Lal v. Narsingh Das (10) has definitely held that the criminal complaint is absolutely privileged so far as the Civil Court is concerned.

I allow this appeal and dismiss the suit of the plaintiff with costs in all Courts.

Mukerji, J.—My learned brother has discussed all the cases that have been cited before us, and I entirely agree with him that the suit must fail. I wish to add just a few words as to the principle which must underlie a suit like this.

This is a suit for "malicious prosecution." There must be a prosecution before the plaintiff can succeed. The question, therefore, arises, what is "prosecution"? Is it synonymous with "institution of a criminal proceeding" as has been held indictable under s. 211 Indian Penal Code as an offence against justice or is it something beyond institution of a criminal proceeding? A mere institution of a criminal proceeding may not affect the plaintiff at all although it may affect a Court of Justice or the mode of dispensing justice and it may be punishable under the Criminal Law. The plaintiff to succeed must show, that he has a cause of action. Now what can be his cause of action, if he was never called upon by the Court before which the complaint was filed, to appear and answer a charge, or even to appear and attend the proceedings. A complaint may be filed and the accused person may not even hear of it, although behind his back, an inquiry may be ordered under s. 102, Criminal Procedure Code and some witnesses may be examined. The plaintiff in the civil suit is not at all hurt. He may not have, as I have said, heard of the fact that a complaint had, been filed against him. Can it be said that the plaintiff has a cause of action? The answer should be, in my opinion, in the negative.

A suit in the circumstances of the present case must, again, fail on the ground that no damage has occurred. Tort has been defined as "wrong independent of contract." A wrong, therefore, is essential in order that a suit based on tort may be maintained. Now if the plaintiff has not been asked to appear in the Court of Law, or if he appears as in the case of Subhag Chamar v. Nand Lal Sahu (4), of his own motion, it cannot be said that he has suffered any damage.

On principle, therefore, the suit cannot be maintained, if notice has not been issued to the plaintiff to appear and answer a criminal charge.

By the Court.—The appeal is allowed and the suit of the plaintiff is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

While it is correct to say that a transfer by a Hindu widow for legal necessity and for adequate price is binding on the reversioner it does not necessarily follow that a sale otherwise justified must under all circumstances be set aside if it can be shown that the price fetched was not adequate. Circumstances might make it absolutely necessary for the widow to sell her husband's property even for an inadequate price. Each case must depend on its own circumstances. If the necessity for the sale of the property was so great that the husband's property must be sold and if under circumstances then existing it was not possible for her to obtain the full value of the property which had to be sold and she could not get more than what is considered to be an inadequate price the sale would nevertheless be valid. Second Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 5th March, 1928.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. M. N. Kaul, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gadadhar Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit brought by the original plaintiff Musammât Mullo who died pending appeal and is now represented by her sons for recovery of possession of certain property left by her father Ganesh who has died sonless and subsequently transferred by her widow during the time she was in possession of his estate, to Mahabir Prasad who in turn transferred it to the appellant.

The property to which this appeal as argued before us, relates, consisted of a few plots in all measuring 3·70 acres. It had been leased for ten years by Ganesh to a certain thekadar at an annual rent of Rs. 6. The lease was to expire in 1913. On the 27th March, 1911, his widow sold it to Mahabir Prasad for Rs. 200. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that money was urgently required for the plaintiff's marriage which could not be celebrated otherwise than by selling this property. On the 4th of December, 1911, Mahabir Prasad, who it should be mentioned resided in the city and not in the village in which the land is situate, sold it for Rs. 400 to the appellant who is one of the zemindars of the village in which the plots in dispute lie. It is not disputed that after the death of the widow the plaintiff became entitled to the land in suit as the daughter of Ganesh. She instituted the suit which has given rise to the present appeal on the 28th of October, 1926, impugning the sale-deed dated the 27th of March, 1911 as invalid having been made without legal necessity. In defence it was pleaded by the present appellant that aforesaid sale was valid as the plaintiff's mother was justified by legal necessity to transfer the property now in dispute for the purpose of raising funds to marry the plaintiff. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that "there was valid necessity for executing the first sale-deed" (dated 27th March, 1911) "by Musammât Bindo." It proceeded to consider whether the price of of Rs. 200 obtained by the plaintiff's mother under the sale-deed dated the 27th of March, 1911, was adequate. Having considered the circumstances of the case, especially the fact that Mahabir Prasad was able to sell the property eight months later for Rs. 400, it arrived at the conclusion that the sale was for inadequate consideration. It should be noted that the lower Appellate Court has not definitely found that the market value of the property in 1911 was Rs. 400 or thereabout. On that finding the lower Appellate Court set aside the sale on condition of the plaintiff paying Rs. 200 which, according to the lower Appellate Court, had been obtained by the plaintiff's mother for a necessary purpose. The present second appeal has been preferred by the appellant.

The lower Appellate Court seems to be of opinion that a sale by a Hindu widow, otherwise justified by legal necessity, should be set aside if the price obtained by her was inadequate. We are unable to accept the broad proposition stated in these terms. While it is correct to say that a transfer by a Hindu widow for legal necessity and for an adequate price is binding on the reversioner, it does not necessarily follow that a sale otherwise justified must under all circumstances to be set aside if it can be shown that the price fetched was not adequate. Circumstances might exist which make it absolutely necessary for the widow to sell her husband's property even for an inadequate price. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances. If the necessity for the sale of the property was so great that the husband's property must be sold, and if under the circumstances then existing it was not possible for her to obtain the full value of the property which had to be sold and she could not get more than what is considered to be an inadequate price, the sale would nevertheless be valid. In the case before us there is evidence that the plaintiff's mother could not secure a purchaser willing to pay more than Rs. 200. The finding of the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff's marriage had to be celebrated and that the expenses thereof could not be defrayed except by sale of the property in dispute must be accepted. We must, therefore, take it that the plaintiff's mother was obliged by circumstances to sell the property within a limited time. She sold it at about twenty years' purchase. But for the circumstance that the vendee from her was able to sell it for double the price eight months later to a co-sharer in the village it would not have been reasonable to pronounce the opinion that the property was sold for an inadequate price. On the whole we think that there was not only legal necessity for the sale of the property but there was also legal necessity for selling it at the price at which it was sold to Mahabir Prasad.

For the foregoing reasons we are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed in part. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside so far as it relates to the sale-deed dated the 27th of March, 1911, as to which the plaintiff's suit shall stand dismissed.

As parties have succeeded in part the appellant shall have three-fourths of her costs in all Courts.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 109, 121—Forfeiture of bond—Sureties, time for proceeding against—Person found in suspicious circumstances—Forfeiture of bond.

Where a surety bond has been forfeited on account of any act of the accused person within the period for which the sureties had bound themselves, they would be liable whether the proceedings were started against them before or after the expiry of the period.

The mere fact that a person bound down under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, is again found in suspicious circumstances without any means of livelihood or is unable to give a satisfactory explanation of himself which may justify fresh proceedings against him under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, would not result in the forfeiture of first bond because that does not amount to the commission of or attempt to commit, or abetment of an offence punishable with imprisonment.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Dehra Dun recommending that proceedings may be ordered against the sureties for the accused. He was proceeded against under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. Two persons stood sureties for him for his good behaviour. Shortly before the expiry of the period, he was again found concealing himself under suspicious circumstances in a lonely and abandoned watermill without any ostensible means of livelihood and unable to give a satisfactory account of himself. He was accordingly sent up again under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate was not able to take any action against the sureties before the expiry of the period. He expressed the opinion that he was unable to take any action against the sureties. The District Magistrate considers that there was no objection to the proceedings being taken against the sureties even though there was some delay.

So far as this last matter is concerned, we agree with the District Magistrate that if the bond was forfeited on account of any act of the accused person within the period for which the sureties had bound themselves, they would be liable whether the proceedings were started against them before or after the expiry of the period.

We however think that in view of the provisions contained in s. 121, Criminal Procedure Code, there has been no forfeiture. A breach of the bond is committed when the accused commits or attempts to commit or abets any offence punishable with imprisonment. The mere fact that he is again found in suspicious circumstances without any means of livelihood or is unable to give a satisfactory explanation of himself, which may justify a fresh proceedings against him under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code would not result in the forfeiture of the first bond because that does not amount to the commission of or attempt to commit or abetment of an offence punishable with imprisonment. At most, it might be a preparation for the commission of an offence but short of an attempt. We accordingly direct that the record may be returned.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 36—Tout—Resolution of Bar Association based on repute—Admissibility—Evidentiary value—Revision—Powers of High Court.

If a resolution of a Bar Association declaring a person to be a tout is based on general repute the Court may attach less weight to it, but such a resolution is not legally inadmissible in evidence and can be taken into consideration by the Court.

The High Court, in the exercise of its powers of superintendence, can revise an order passed by a Subordinate Officer if the order is against natural justice.

Revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Basti, dated the 12th August, 1930.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and R. K. Malaviya, for the Applicant.

Mr. Sankar Saran, for the Crown!

Judgment.—This is an application in revision from an order of the District Magistrate of Basti declaring Ram Phal applicant to be a tout.

There are precedents for the exercise of the power of superintendence by this Court when an order passed by a Subordinate Officer is against natural justice.

The learned Advocate for the applicant urges before us that there is no legal evidence whatsoever on which the District Magistrate could have legally acted. It appears that apart from certain oral evidence which has not been relied upon by the District Magistrate there were two resolutions of the Bar Associations of Mukhtars and Vakils in the following terms:—

(1) "That the meeting is of opinion that Ram Phal stamp-vendor of the place is by general repute a tout."

(2) "It is resolved that Ram Phal stamp-vendor of Basti is a tout on the strength of general repute."

The District Magistrate had power to act upon the evidence of general repute under s. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, as amended. The explanation added to the section makes the passing of a resolution declaring a person to be a tout by a majority of the members present at a meeting specially convened for the purpose of an association of persons entitled to practise as legal practitioners as evidence of the general repute of such person for the purpose of that section. It cannot, therefore, be denied that if the resolution substantially is one declaring Ram Phal to be a tout then it was legally admissible as evidence of general repute, even though the basis of that resolution may be hearsay evidence. On the other hand, if there is no resolution declaring him to be a tout but there is a simple statement of fact that there was such evidence before the Association, then possibly it would not come under the explanation.

There seems to be nothing in the language of s. 36 of the explanation which would make a resolution based on general repute or hearsay evidence ineffective.

The language of the first resolution was somewhat ambiguous, but the second resolution undoubtedly shows that the members recorded their conclusion and declared that Ram Phal was a tout although they also indicated that their conclusion was based on the strength of general repute. We think that the words 'on the strength of general repute' merely indicate the basis of the resolution declaring him to be a tout and does not destroy its effectiveness.

If a resolution is based on general repute the Court may attach less weight to it, but it cannot be said that such a resolution is legally inadmissible in evidence and cannot be taken into consideration by the Court.

We are accordingly unable to interfere with the order passed in the case. The application is dismissed with costs.

Order XXXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, applies to proceedings in Revenue Courts and it is incumbent upon a party taking proceedings against a minor under s. 81, Agra Tenancy Act, to formally make an application for appointment of a guardian for the minor. But failure to do so is only an irregularity, and the minor who is not properly represented cannot have the decree or order set aside unless he shows that he was really prejudiced by that decree or order. *Walian v. Second Appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 24th January, 1929.

Mr. D. P. Malaviya, for the Appellants.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This case has been referred to a Bench of two Judges on the ground that the case involves a point of some difficulty.

The facts of the case briefly are these. There were two occupancy tenants of a holding, e.g., Madho Singh the defendant-appellant before us and Hoti Lal. The zemindar was Lala Keshab Deo. The rent of the occupancy holding being in arrear proceedings were taken by Lala Keshab Deo under s. 81 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1926. This rule of law laid down that it was open to a land-holder to apply to the tahsildar for issue of a notice to his tenants for payment of arrears of rent and for his ejectment, in case of default. A notice was issued to Hoti Lal, and also to Madho Singh under the guardianship of his uncle Hoti Lal. It has been found as a fact that Hoti Lal had no interest adverse to Madho Singh. The tenants did not appear. The arrears of rent being not made good, an order for ejectment was made on 11th April, 1927, and a formal delivery of possession was effected on 29th April, 1927.

The tenants, in spite of the order of ejectment and delivery of possession stuck to the land and the land-holder Keshab Deo had to bring the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, for ejectment of the tenants in the Civil Court and for damages.

Hoti Lal has not defended the suit but Madho Singh has and his sole ground of defence is that he was not properly represented in the previous proceedings.

There can be no doubt that the Civil Procedure Code applies to the proceedings in the Revenue Court under the provision of s. 264 of the Tenancy Act and it was incumbent on Keshab Deo to formally make an application for appointment of a guardian. The irregularity is there and the question is what is the result of that irregularity?

In a series of cases starting with Walian v. Banke Behari (1) followed in Ram Barechhu v. Tarak Tewari (2) and Chhattar Singh v. Tej Singh (3). It has been held that the minor who was not properly represented in the previous litigation cannot have the decree or order made against him set aside on the sole ground of irregularity, but must show that he was really prejudiced by that order. If, in spite of the irregularity, a decree or order could be made against the minor and if the minor had no possible defence to the proceedings taken against him in which the order or decree complained of was made, he cannot challenge the order or decree complained of simply on the ground of irregularity. The reason for this rule is obvious. Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code contains a rule of procedure and procedure is meant only for the purpose of justice. If there has been done substantial justice to the minor's case, the mere fact that there has been some defect in the procedure cannot matter.

In this particular case before us, the minor Madho Singh takes exception to the proceedings on the ground of irregularity in the appointment of a guardian and on that ground alone. He does not say that the arrears of rent had really been paid up when the proceedings were taken under s. 81 of the Tenancy Act. He does not say that if a proper guardian (other than Hoti Lal) had been appointed, the arrears of rent would have been paid off. He does not say that the arrears of rent have since been made good since the order of ejectment had been made on the 11th April, 1927. He does not even say that an offer to make good the arrears was made and was rejected. In these circumstances, we do not see how the minor can say that he has been prejudiced by the proceedings taken against him and Hoti Lal.

In the circumstances we think that the decrees of the Courts below are right and we dismiss this appeal with costs including Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal trial—Misjoinder of charges—Charges under ss. 302 and 201, Penal Code—Acquittal under s. 302 and conviction under s. 201—Legality of conviction.

Where the accused are charged together and tried for offences under ss. 302 and 201, Penal Code, and the evidence being insufficient to sustain a conviction under s. 302, are acquitted of the charge under that section but are convicted under s. 201, there is no misjoinder of charges and the conviction is legal. [p. 377, col. 1.]

Criminal Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 21st March, 1931.

Mr. K. D. Malaviya, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Judgment—This is an appeal from a conviction under s. 201, Indian Penal Code. According to the prosecution evidence there was enmity between the deceased Zalim, who was an occupancy tenant, and Moharman and others, zemindars, as well as Sawanta, a partner of Zalim in the tenancy. Zalim had complained to the Deputy Collector that the zemindar had realised rents but had not given the receipts for them, and a case under the Tenancy Act was registered against Moharman. It is alleged that there was some settlement, and receipts were given to Sawanta by the zemindars, but Sawanta colluded with them and returned the receipts, and then the crops of Zalim were again attached. A report was made by Sawanta against Zalim, who was arrested and kept in the thana for the night, and was let off the next morning. Zalim then filed a complaint in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against the zemindars, Sawanta, as well as the local Police. His allegation was a bribe had been demanded from him by the Sub-Inspector. Non-bailable warrants against the zemindars and Sawanta were issued by the Magistrate. Though the Sub-Inspector was in the village on 20th April, 1930, he did not arrest the accused before the 22nd. The accused were subsequently let off on bail.

Indarjit, son of Zalim, deposed that Moharman and others wanted to compromise the case and had come to his father's house, but he refused to do so; that next day when he returned, he was informed by his mother that Sawanta had taken his father to the zemindar's house, and when Indarjit went there he found the door closed. Zalim was not found during the day, although search was made for him. After sunset it is alleged that Narayan and Bhika were going along when they saw Sawanta and Narsinghbhan, the two appellants, carrying a heavy bundle with them. When questioned, Sawanta and Narsinghbhan threw down the bundle and ran away. An alarm was raised, and many people arrived on the scene, and when the bundle was opened, the dead body of Zalim was discovered in it. It had numerous marks of injuries on it. According to Indarjit, he went to Tikam Singh, the Mukhia, who is a relation of Moharman, and reported the matter to him, but no notice appears to have been taken by the Mukhia. Deojit was sent next day to the thana to make a report, which he did. The Police made an investigation, and the matter dragged on for a number of months and nothing was done. On 23rd August, 1930, a complaint was filed by Indarjit against Sawanta Narsinghbhan, as well as the three zemindars. Musammam Sundar, the wife of Zalim, stated that Sawanta and Narsinghbhan came on the next day and had taken her husband away with them, but he did not return. The evidence of Narayan and Bhikam was that they saw Sawanta and Narsinghbhan accused carrying a bundle on their shoulder by means of lathis, and when they were questioned they threw it down and ran away. Ramalal deposes that an alarm was raised by Narayan and Bhikam that the two accused had thrown down something, and when he, along with other villagers, went to the place they discovered the dead body of Zalim. The other three accused were discharged by the Committing Magistrate, but Sawanta and Narsinghbhan were committed to the Sessions Court. The learned Judge added a charge under s. 201, Indian Penal Code. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was not sufficient evidence to connect the two accused with the murder of Zalim, and has accordingly acquitted them of that charge. He has found them guilty under s. 201, and has sentenced them to three years' rigorous imprisonment each.

A legal objection is taken that there was a misjoinder of charges, and the accused should not have been tried both under ss. 302 and 201, Indian Penal Code. This contention, in my opinion, has no force. When the evidence was found to be insufficient to convict the accused of the murder of Zalim and they were acquitted, the presumption is that they were not guilty of the murder at all. There was, therefore, no difficulty in the way of convicting them under s. 201, if the evidence as to their being seen with the dead body of the deceased at night were to be believed. This point is covered by the authority of Emperor v. Har Piari (1). As a matter of fact in one case their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld a conviction under s. 201, although the charge against the accused was only under s. 302, Indian Penal Code Begu v. King Emperor (2).

The evidence for the prosecution was both definite and direct. There is no doubt that Zalim was murdered. There is also no doubt that there was enmity between Zalim and Sawanta as well as Moharman. There is also no doubt that Zalim had made a complaint against the local Police. It is also clear that his dead body was found after sunset when an alarm was raised. Witnesses prove that Narayan and Bhikam at that very time announced that they had seen Sawanta and Narsinghbhan throwing the bundle on the ground. Ramalal corroborates their evidence. The learned Sessions Judge has believed it, and I see no reason why this evidence should not be believed. It is not necessary to discuss the other evidence relating to the enticing away of Zalim in the morning by Sawanta and Narsinghbhan. That evidence had relation to the charge of murder, and although there seems to be no reason to disbelieve it, it is not necessary to emphasise that circumstance.

The only point that can be said in favour of the accused is that the full story was not disclosed in the information report which was made on the morning of the 20th April, and that there are some discrepancies between the statements made by the witnesses before the Sub-Inspector and the statements made in Court. The learned Sessions Judge, however, has come to the conclusion that the conduct of the Sub-Inspector who investigated the case has been very suspicious, and hardly any value could be placed on the entries in his diary or on the First Information Report.

There is no doubt that if the investigation had been conducted with care and in a proper manner and searches made promptly the murder would not have gone unavenged. The enmity between the deceased and certain persons was well known to the Police, and even in the First Information Report a suspicion had been thrown out against Sawanta and the Thakurs. Zalim had undoubtedly made a complaint against the Police and Sawanta, and there is reason to suspect that there was reluctance and hesitation on the part of the Police to proceed promptly against the persons suspected of the offence. As already mentioned, the Sub-Inspector had delayed the arrest of the Thakurs on 20th April. The Mukhia of the village also happened to be a relation of Moharman. It is improbable that if the Sub-Inspector had made a thorough investigation he would not have discovered that there was some evidence to suggest that the deceased had been taken to the house of the zemindar by Sawanta and Narsinghbhan. He admittedly made no efforts to search the houses of the Thakurs or to record their statements. The post mortem report showed that the stomach of the deceased was entirely empty, which corroborated the story that he had been enticed away and murdered before he had taken his breakfast. For months the matter remained pending and nothing was done by the Police. It was only after the deceased's son filed a complaint that the case was started and properly enquired into. So the conduct of the police in this case has been rightly held by the learned Sessions Judge to be highly suspicious. In the circumstances he was perfectly justified in not placing too much reliance on the brevity of the First Information Report or the discrepancies in the statement recorded in the Police diary. In my opinion the evidence is amply sufficient to bring home to the accused their guilt under s. 201, Indian Penal Code. I accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Let a copy of this judgment be forwarded to the Inspector-General of Police for information.

The accused must surrender to the bail.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (1) (b)—Offence committed not in Court but in relation to proceedings in Court—Jurisdiction to make complaint—Powers of Appellate Court—Jurisdiction of High Court apart from Criminal Procedure Code.

Section 159 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply merely to offences committed in "such Court" but applies also to offences "committed in relation to any proceeding in any Court."

An offence committed in relation to the proceeding in the trial Court is also committed in relation to the appeal from that Court.

The High Court had jurisdiction to order prosecution for offences committed in relation to a proceeding in a subordinate Court before the enactment of Act V of 1898 and s. 195 (1) (b) does not take away this jurisdiction of the High Court.

Messrs. Saila Nath Mukerji, A. Sanyal and N. C. Ganguli, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad, S. S. Shastry, K. D. Malaviya, Durga Charan Singh and P. M. L. Verma, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—Notices have been issued to Sheo Narain Jafa, a Pleader of Budaun, Ghasa Singh and Nathu Lal to show cause why a complaint should not be filed against them in a Criminal Court charging them with having committed offences under ss. 193, 120 (b) and 209, read with s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code. Notice was also issued to Makhan Singh to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for having committed offences punishable under ss. 120 (b) and 209, read with s. 109, of the Indian Penal Code.

These applications arose out of F. A. No. 147 of 1927, which was heard and decided by a Bench of this Court on the 22nd January, 1931. That Bench made very strong observations against all the four respondents. The Court found in the civil appeal that there had been a conspiracy by all of them to deprive one Manohar Singh of his property, and, in accordance with that finding avoided a deed of gift executed by Manohar Singh in favour of Nathu Lal and Makhan Singh, and also a sale-deed executed by the same parties. The Court also set aside the decree of the 12th November, 1923 in Suit No. 201 of 1923, which was a suit by Nathu Lal and Makhan Lal against Manohar Singh for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession of the property comprised in the said sale deed. The facts arising in this case are fully set out in the judgment of this High Court in F. A. No. 147 of 1927, and it is unnecessary for us to detail fully those facts again. We have to consider whether there is a prima facie case established against all or any of the respondents which would make it obligatory on us to order their prosecution under s. 476, coupled with s. 195, of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Counsel appearing on behalf of Sheo Narain Jafa did not take any preliminary objection; but Counsel on behalf of the others have objected that this Court has no jurisdiction to order the prosecution of their clients. The objection is based upon s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That section enacts that "no Court shall take cognizance, (sub cl. b), of any offence punishable under any of the following sections of the same Code, namely, ss. 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211 and 228, when such offence is alleged to have been committed in or in relation to, any proceedings in any Court except on the complaint in writing of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate." With the exception of s. 120 (b), the sections comprised in this notice are included in sub-cl. (b) of s. 195. Clause (4) also bring in the cl. (1) (b) the charge under s. 120 (b). It is clear that the alleged offences were not committed in this Court, and it is contended therefore that this Court has no jurisdiction to order the prosecution of the respondents. It is, however, to be noted that the sub-clause does not apply merely to offences committed in "such Court", but apply also to offences "committed in relation to any proceeding in any Court". It is obvious that the offences charged under s. 209, read with s. 109, was not committed even in the trial Court. It cannot be denied that that offence was committed in relation to the proceeding in the trial Court. It is, therefore, in our opinion also clear that the offence under those sections was also committed in relation to the appeal which was heard in this Court. There is no reason to construe narrowly the words "in relation to". Equally the offence of perjury, although it was undoubtedly committed in the trial Court, must, in our view be held to have been committed in relation to the appeal in this Court. A person committing perjury in a trial Court must be held to have intended that his perjury should not only influence the proceedings in the trial Court but also subsequent proceedings which might take place if either party to the case in the trial Court took the matter to appeal.

Further, on this point it is not denied that there was, before Act V of 1898 was passed, a jurisdiction in the High Court to order prosecutions in a matter like this. The equivalent section of Act X of 1882 undoubtedly gave jurisdiction to this Court to order prosecutions. The High Court has also directed similar prosecutions even prior to the specific enactment of Act X of 1882. There was, therefore, at the time of the passing of Act V of 1898 an existing jurisdiction in the High Court to order such prosecutions. Therefore, in construing the material section of Act V of 1898 the cardinal rule of construction as to jurisdiction must be taken into account, and that is, that no existing jurisdiction of a supreme Court can be taken away, unless the language used in the enactment which purports to take that jurisdiction away is in the clearest possible terms. There can have been no object in cutting down the jurisdiction of the High Court in such matters, and at any rate, it cannot possibly be said that s. 195 (b) takes away in clear terms the undoubted jurisdiction which existed in the High Court prior to the passing of that Act. We hold, therefore, that this Court has jurisdiction to make the orders.

We have very carefully and anxiously considered the case as ag. et Sheo Narain Jafa. He is an officer of this Court, and he has been charged in clear terms by a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, with conduct seriously reflecting upon him both in his capacity as a private individual an officer of this Court, and a member of the legal profession. We are of opinion that the observations not only of the Bench of this Court, but of the two lower Courts before whom this matter had come were entirely justified. His action, for example, in filing an application which he knew could not possibly succeed, unless material facts were hidden from the Court for the appointment of Manohar Singh as guardian of his infant children when those infant children had on entirely proper grounds brought an action against him for partition, was an action such as no honest lawyer could possibly have advised his client to take. The fact that in that action Mr. Sheo Narain Jafa was assisted by another practitioner of Budaun named Iqtidar Alam, does not make Mr. Jafa's conduct any the less serious. We have carefully examined all the facts of this case as regards Sheo Narain Jafa. We are satisfied that a consideration of those facts raises the very gravest suspicion against Sheo Narain Jafa of being guilty of the offences with which it is sought to charge him. But as he was not actually a party to the sale-deed itself, nor was he at any rate openly, a party to the declaratory Suit No. 201 of 1923 we feel that there is not enough evidence which would justify a Criminal Court in coming to a conclusion adverse to Sheo Narain Jafa. We, therefore, discharge the notice as regards him with respect to all these sections of the Indian Penal Code.

The matter, however, stands on a different footing with regard to the charges against the other three respondents. We do not wish to say anything in this matter to prejudice their trial in the criminal Court. We, therefore, confine ourselves to saying that, in our view, there does exist a prima facie case against them. We, therefore, record a finding under s. 471 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an enquiry should be made into the said offence, and direct the Registrar of this Court to take the necessary steps for the filing of a complaint against the three respondents charging them with the offences enumerated above with regard to each. With regard to the charges relating to s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code we direct the filing of a complaint against Ghasa Singh with respect to the following two statements:—(a) "Makhan Singh has purchased this property for himself." (page 180, line 5 of the paper book in F. A. No. 147 of 1927). (b) "Babu Sheo Narain and I are not the owners of the sale in dispute." (page 185, line 46 of paper book in F. A. No. 147 of 1929). With regard to Nathu Lal we direct a complaint to be made against him for the following statements:— (a) "Out of the money left with me at the time of this sale I spent Rs. 1,400 in the appeal." (page 51 line 17 of paper-book in F. A. No. 147 of 1927), (b) "I paid the money left with me for Sundar Lal, Sheonarain, Bhopal Rai and Natra Behari Lal to them. I subsequently took a clear receipt from Manohar." (page 51, line 20 of paper-book in F. A. No. 147 of 1927), (c) "Nathu Lal and Makhan Singh are the owners of the property." (Supplementary paper book page 44, line 3.)

The said complaints are to be sent to the District Magistrate of Budaun. Together with the complaints will be sent the original record of Suit No. 63 of 1926 the subject-matter of F. A. No. 147 of 1927, a copy of the printed paper book containing the evidence, a copy of the judgment of this Court and a copy of the notices issued to the three respondents.

With regard to costs, we allow no costs to Sheo Narain Jafa. The applicants were abundantly justified in making the application against him. The applicant will have her costs of the application against the other three respondents.

Where the defendant's negligence is such as invites, as it were, the plaintiff to be less circumspect, the defendant cannot put the blame on the plaintiff, if he happened to be less circumspect than he would otherwise have been.

While the plaintiff who was travelling in his motor-car at a speed of about 7 miles an hour arrived near a level crossing, the gates of which were open, a Railway-engine came and collided against the plaintiff's car and broke it:

Second Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 15th June 1928.

Messrs. S. N. Verma and G. S. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. P. Zutshi, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by one who was the plaintiff in the Court below. By this suit the plaintiff claimed against the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Co. a sum of Rs. 1,300 as damages. The Court of first instance allowed a sum of Rs. 1,200 as damages, but on appeal by the Railway Company the learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal dismissed the suit altogether.

The allegation in which the suit was founded and the facts which have been found established by the lower Appellate Court are these. There was a fair at Bithur in the district of Cawnpore. The plaintiff was coming from the fair and was going towards Cawnpore. At a short distance from the Bithur Railway Station the plaintiff had to cross the Railway line. There was a pair of gates which was open and permitted the plaintiff to cross the Railway line. As the plaintiff arrived on the rails, travelling at a moderate speed of about 7 miles an hour, a Railway engine coming from the direction of the Railway Station at Bithur collided against the plaintiff's car and broke it. On these facts, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, inasmuch as it was the duty of the plaintiff to be circumspect and, on arriving near the gate, to look on either side and to see if any train or engine was passing.

In this Court it has been contended that the learned Subordinate Judge drew a wrong inference from the facts found and that there was no contributory negligence.

There can be no doubt that the matter is concluded by English cases and there is at least one Indian case which is against the respondent. The Indian Case is Bengal Provincial Railway Co. v. Gopi Mohon Singh (1).

There can be no doubt that where the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence he is not entitled to lay the whole of the blame on the negligence of the defendant and recover damages. But there is another rule of law which says that where the defendant's negligence is such as invites, as it were, the plaintiff to be less circumspect, the defendant cannot put the blame on the plaintiff, if he happened to be less circumspect than he would otherwise have been. This is put very clearly in Sir Frederick Pollock's Law of Torts, 13th Edition at pp. 493 & 494. At page 493 the learned author puts the proposition like this :

"There are certain conditions under which the normal standard of a reasonable man's prudence is peculiarly difficult to apply, by reason of one party's choice of alternatives, or opportunities of judgment, being affected by the conduct of the other."

By way of illustration the learned author quotes the case of the Directors of North-East Railway Co. v. Wanless (2). The case decided is put in the following language by the author :

"A person who finds the gate of a level Railway crossing open, and is thereby misled into thinking the line safe for crossing, is not bound to minute circumspection, and if he is run over by a train, the company may be liable to him although he did use his faculties so clearly as he might have done under other circumstances."

The learned author further at page 494 puts the reason of the decision as follows :

"One might generalise the rule in some such form as this: not only a man cannot with impunity harm others by his negligence but his negligence cannot put them in a worse position with regard to the estimation of default. You shall not drive a man into a situation where there is loss or risk every way, and then say that he suffered by his own imprudence. Neither shall you complain that he did not foresee and provide against your negligence."

We are of opinion that the principle laid down in the cases decided and very clearly put by the learned author should be adopted as the basis of our decision, and we do adopt it.

In the result we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The plaintiff will have his entire costs throughout.

Where money is raised by mortgage by a member of the family, even if he be the head of the family, for a speculative litigation which is to benefit the family only in the case of its success, it cannot be said that the mortgage was created for family necessity. Where the benefit to be acquired is to accrue to an individual member and not to the whole family the mortgage cannot bind the family estate. [p. 383, cols. 1 & 2.]

First Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 4th September 1928.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Appellant

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and Harmandan Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the appellant Pateshwari Prasad Pal, minor, in the following circumstances.

One Mahadeo Prasad Pal had three brothers Banke, Harihar and Dan Bahadur. Dan Bahadur, who was a step-brother of Mahadeo Prasad Pal, succeeded to a Taulqa property which originally belonged to his father-in-law under a Will. Dan Bahadur died sometime in 1906. His widow was Musammatt Sukhpal Kunwar and his daughter was Musammatt Balraj Kunwar and Musammatt Balraj Kunwar's son was Adya Bakhsh. Mahadeo Prasad Pal, being the eldest of the brothers, believed that he had a substantial claim to the property of Dan Bahadur. The Taulqa was known as that of Dandikachh. The litigation for the Taulqa property was a costly affair, and Mahadeo Prasad Pal had not got money. He and his brothers Harihar and Bankey raised some money and fought out a case in the Mutation Department with Adya Bakhsh who claimed the property by virtue of a Will from his maternal grandfather Dan Bahadur. In the Mutation Department Adya Bakhsh was successful, then Mahadeo Prasad Pal thought of instituting a suit in the Civil Court at Partabgarh. To raise money for the litigation he executed the bond of 18th March 1911 in favour of the respondent Jai Karan's father Razawand Singh. By this document Mahadeo Prasad Pal mortgaged five properties in the District of Basti, which were a part of his ancestral property, and one village of the Taluqa property to which he was laying claim. At the date of the mortgage Mahadeo Prasad Pal's son Raj Bahadur was alive and was an adult. He was not made a party to the mortgage.

A suit was actually filed by Mahadeo Prasad Pal on 17th June 1912. Apparently he required more money, and one Seth Kanhaiya Lal of Jubbulpore advanced some money as a transferee of a part of the Taluqa property, and he was impleaded in the suit as a co-plaintiff with Mahadeo Prasad, by virtue of an order dated 15th October, 1913.

The suit succeeded in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on 2nd May, 1914, but it was lost on an appeal by Adya Bakhsh and on an appeal by his mother Musammatt Balraj Kunwar (there are two appeals). The learned Judicial Commissioners delivered judgment on 29th June 1917. An attempt was made by Mahadeo Prasad Pal to file an appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council, and an application was made to the Judicial Commissioners of Lucknow for leave to file an appeal. In the meanwhile the litigants came to terms and by an agreement dated the 10th of August 1922 it was agreed between on the one hand Mahadeo Prasad Pal and Kanhaiya Lal his transferee, and Adya Bakhsh and his mother Balraj Kunwar on the other, that Adya Bakhsh should have one of the properties in the Taluqa estate absolutely for himself, that he should have a life estate as regards the rest and that on his death, 10 annas share in the property should be taken by Kanhaiya Lal and 6 annas by Mahadeo Prasad Pal. The agreement was placed before the learned Judicial Commissioners, and by their order dated 21st August, 1922, the agreement was recorded and was made a part of the decree.

It has happened since that Adya Bakhsh died on 16th February 1928, and Kanhaiya Lal and Mahadeo Prasad Pal have taken possession of the property over which Adya Bakhsh had only a life interest.

Now we go back to what led to the present suit.

Razawand Singh having died his son Jai Karan, the respondent No. 1 filed a suit in 1923 for the sale of the mortgaged property. To this suit Mahadeo Prasad alone was party. It was decreed ex parte on 29th September 1924. The decree was taken for execution to the District of Basti because as we have already stated five villages in the District of Basti were among the properties mortgaged. Thereupon the plaintiff, who is a son of Raj Bahadur and a grandson of Mahadeo Prasad, instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to obtain a declaration that the properties in Basti ordered to be sold by the mortgage-deed of 1924 were not liable to be sold being an ancestral property in which the plaintiff had a share.

The defence to the suit was various. It was alleged that the property was the self-acquired property of Mahadeo Prasad Pal, and the plaintiff had no interest in it, that the plaintiff was born after the execution of the mortgage, that the mortgage had been executed for legal necessity, and the plaintiff was bound by the transaction. One of the points taken by the plaintiff was that the mortgage-deed had not been properly registered, and in answer to that the defendant No. 1 Jai Karan pleaded that there was a valid registration.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the property was joint family property, that it was not proved that the plaintiff was alive at the date of the mortgage, that the registration of the document was good, and that there was a legal necessity for the loan. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, held that the plaintiff had been benefited by the transaction of the mortgage, inasmuch as he would succeed as an heir to his grandfather, and therefore he was bound to pay the debt which the grandfather incurred in order to acquire the property in Partabgarh. The learned Judge accordingly dismissed the suit.

In the present appeal the question of registration has not been re-agitated, nor has the question as to when the plaintiff was born. For the respondent No. 1 it has not been urged that the property in suit is the self-acquired property of Mahadeo Prasad Pal. We, therefore, take it that the property in suit is the joint family property of the plaintiff and Mahadeo Prasad Pal. It being common ground that Raj Bahadur was alive in 1914, and if it not be proved that he was a consenting party to the mortgage, the plaintiff would be entitled to impeach it. The learned Subordinate Judge made a casual remark that the mortgage-deed had been executed with the consent of Raj Bahadur. The learned Counsel for the respondent No. 1 tried to support this finding, but he could not point out that he ever had raised the plea in the Court below that the mortgage had been executed with the consent of Raj

Bahadur. It was a question of fact, and as such had to be pleaded specifically. The plaintiff had no notice of such a plea and could not adduce any evidence. Besides, the evidence on which the lower Court expressed the opinion that Raj Bahadur was a consenting party to the mortgage does not support the lower Court. The statement of witness Mangal Prasad which will be found at page 15 of the record, that the brothers of Mahadeo Prasad "opined that some Mahajan should be searched and a bima should be written to him and civil suit should be fought", does not support a finding that Raj Bahadur was a consenting party to a mortgage on the ancestral property in the District of Basti. To start with among the brothers of Mahadeo Prasad was not his son Raj Bahadur. Then the suggestion was that money should be raised on the security (bima) of the property sought to be acquired, and there was no suggestion that money should be raised by mortgage of ancestral and joint family property. We have looked through other portions of the statement of Mangal Prasad and are of opinion that it has not been established that Raj Bahadur was a consenting party to the mortgage. Under the circumstances it is conceded that it is established law so far as this Court is concerned that it is open to the plaintiff to question the validity of the mortgage of 1911.

On the question of legal necessity it is obvious that there was none. We have already mentioned the fact that when the litigation between Mahadeo Prasad Pal and Adya Bakhsh was in the Revenue Court, Mahadeo Prasad Pal and his brothers Bankey and Harihar mortgaged their property to raise a loan to fight out the case. The mortgagee Bhagwandas Naik, brought a suit for sale and failed on the contest of the sons of one of the brothers of Mahadeo Prasad Pal. The judgment of this Court will be found reported as Bhagwan Das Naik v. Mahadeo Prasad Pal (1). Most of what was said in that judgment would apply with force to the facts of this case. This decision found the approval of the Full Bench case of Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2) (see remarks at page 845*). There can be no doubt, therefore that where as in this case money is raised by a member of the family even if he be the head of the family for a speculative litigation which is to benefit the family only in the case of its success, it cannot be said that the mortgage was created for family necessity. In this particular case, the benefit to be acquired as the result of this speculative litigation was to accrue not to the whole family namely Mahadeo Prasad Pal, his son and grandson but to Mahadeo Prasad individually. In the circumstances it is clear that the mortgage of 1911 was not binding on the family estate.

It has, however, been appointed that in the events that have happened a substantial property, being 6 annas of the Taluqa of Dandikachh, has been acquired by Mahadeo Prasad Pal, and according to the valuation of Mahadeo Prasad Pal's suit filed against Adya Bakhsh, the 6 annas property is worth nearly two lakhs of rupees. The plaintiff as the only heir-at-law of Mahadeo Prasad Pal has every chance of succeeding to the share of the Taluqa. In the circumstances it has been urged by the learned Counsel for the respondent No. 1 that the plaintiff is bound to pay the debt. It was only on this ground that the suit of the plaintiff appellant was dismissed by the Court below.

As against this argument it may be pointed out that the plaintiff may succeed (1) if he survives his grandfather, and (2) if the grandfather does not bequeath the property to any other person and (3) if the grandfather leaves the property unencumbered to the extent to be worth the amount due to the respondent No. 1 under the decree.

We have given all these arguments their proper weight, and have come to the conclusion that it would be highly unjust to allow the plaintiff to succeed unconditionally in this case and to escape payment of the debt which went substantially to help his grandfather to succeed in the litigation if ultimately the plaintiff succeeds to that property at Partabgarh. We accordingly have decided to grant the plaintiff only a conditional decree leaving it open to him, as it is open to his grandfather to pay up the decree at any time he likes.

In the result, we allow the appeal and grant the plaintiff the following declaration.

The decree No. 290 of 1923 dated the 29th September, 1924, passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh in favour of Jai Karan and against Mahadeo Prasad Pal will not be executable against the properties in the District of Basti unless and until the plaintiff succeeds to the property of the Taluqa Dandikachh or a portion of it as an heir to or donee or legatee or transferee of his grandfather the property to which the plaintiff succeeds being equal to or more in value than the amount of the decree then due. It will be open to the plaintiff to pay up the decree of the respondent No. 1 Jai Karan at any time he pleases. We may explain once more the decree which we grant. It is only in the case of the plaintiff obtaining a benefit which is equal to or exceeding in value the amount of the decree that he will be liable to pay the decretal amount due on the property mortgaged. It will be for the Court executing the mortgage-decree to decide whether the conditions laid down by us have been fulfilled or not. The plaintiff has substantially succeeded and will have his costs throughout. The temporary injunction issued against Mahadeo Prasad Pal that he is not to alienate his Partabgarh property till the disposal of the appeal is hereby dissolved. Mahadeo Prasad Pal will pay his own costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24—Transfer of case—Application for transfer—Notice to opposite party, necessity of—Court competent to try suit, meaning of.

It is open to a District Judge to proceed suo motu and transfer a case from one Court to another Court of competent jurisdiction. But where he is moved for transfer by a party to the suit, he is bound to issue notice to the other party and to hear him if he desires to be heard. Failure to do so, if not without jurisdiction, is at least a material irregularity.

A Court would not be competent to try and dispose of a suit if it does not possess both pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction to entertain it. Fatema Begum v. Imdad Ali (1), followed.

Revision against an order of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 15th of May, 1930.

Mr. Mansur Alam, for the Applicant.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision from an order, dated the 15th of May, 1930, transferring a case from the Court of the Additional Munsif of Benares to the Court of the Munsif of Haveli. The suit was for recovery of haq chaharum and was not cognisable by a Court of Small Causes. It was originally filed in the Court of the City Munsif of Benares who had territorial jurisdiction to try it. The District Judge suo motu transferred the case to the Court of the Additional Munsif who apparently had concurrent jurisdiction. Subsequently the plaintiffs made an application to the District Judge to transfer the case from that Court to the Munsif of Haveli, because there was no Presiding Officer for the Additional Munsif at the time. The learned Judge without issuing notice to the defendant ordered the transfer to the Court of the Munsif of Haveli.

Although it was open to the learned Judge to proceed suo motu and transfer the case from one Court to another Court competent to try it, yet when he was moved by the plaintiffs, he was bound to issue notice to the opposite party and to hear such party if it desired to be heard. The provisions of s. 24 sub-s. (1) were accordingly not complied with and the order of the learned Judge, even if not without jurisdiction, is certainly tainted with material irregularity vide Fatema Begum v. Imdad Ali (1).

It has been further contended before us that the District Judge in the exercise of his power under s. 24 can transfer a case to only such other Court as is competent to try or dispose of the suit. Section 24, sub-s. (1) sub-cl. (b) (ii) does provide that the Court to which the case is transferred should be competent to try or dispose of the same. That obviously means that, if there had been no order of transfer and the suit would have been originally filed in the Court to which it has been transferred, that Court would have been competent to try and dispose of it. It follows that a Court would not be competent to try and dispose of the suit, if it does not possess both pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction to entertain it. This was the view expressed in a Patna case Shaikh Jannat Husain v. Shaikh Gulam Kutubuddin Ahmad (2). As the words of the Statute are in no way limited, we agree with the view expressed therein.

The learned Judge should accordingly bear this view of the matter in mind.

We allow this revision and setting aside the order of the District Judge, direct him to dispose of the plaintiffs' application after issuing notice to the defendant and hearing him.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

Appeal from Oudh Chief Court.

LORD THANKERTON, SIR JOHN WALLIS AND

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES

OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 10, 32-A—Entry of name in lists, effect of—Incorporation of acquired property to property under Act—Will—Non-compliance with provisions of Act, effect of—Muhammadan Law—Succession—Custom governing ancestral estate—Presumption regarding self-acquisitions—Rebuttal—Gift—Husband's gift to wife or by father to son—Delivery of possession, necessity of—Dower—Payments as presents to wife, whether discharge of dower—Benami purchase—Presumption regarding benami—Practice—Privy Council—Concurrent findings of fact—Costs—Interference.

By s. 10 of the Oudh Estates Act the entry of the name of a person in the lists is conclusive evidence that he is a talukdar to whom the provisions of the Act apply. The effect of the inclusion of his name in the second list is a statutory declaration that the particular estate by family custom devolves upon a single heir. Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan (1), followed. [p. 386, col. 1.]

Apart from the provisions of s. 32-A, Oudh Estates Act, no incorporation of other property to property held under the Act is possible whether by purchase or accretion. Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (3), followed. [p. 388, col. 1.]

A Will by the taluqdar which does not comply with requirements of Oudh Estates Act is not valid in law. [p. 386, col. 1.]

In the case of a Muhammadan family if a custom governs the succession to the ancestral estate the presumption is that it attaches also to the personal acquisitions of the last owner left by him on his death and it is for the person who asserts that these properties follow a line of devolution different from that of the taluqa to establish it. But where a family custom in respect of succession to taluqdari estate is of recent origin and instances of succession to personal acquisitions by Muhammadan Law are established, such presumption is sufficiently rebutted. Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan (1) and Zarif-un-nisa v. Shafiq-uz-zaman Khan (2), referred to. [p. 387, col. 2.]

In the case of a gift by a husband to his wife Muhammadan Law does not require actual vacation by the husband and actual taking of separate possession by the wife of the property gifted. A declaration made by the husband followed by the handing over of the deed are amply sufficient to establish a transfer of possession. Shiekh Muhammad Mumtazahmad v. Zubaida Jan (4), Shaik Ibhrum v. Sheikh Suleman (5), Bibi Khaver Sultan v. Bibi Rukhia Sultan (6) and Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi (7), referred to. [p. 389, col. 2.]

In the case of a gift by a Muhammadan father to his infant child no transfer of possession is required; it is only necessary to establish a bona fide intention to give. Ameeroonissa Khatoon v. Abedoonissa Khatoon (8), referred to. [p. 390, col. 2.]

Payments made by a Muhammadan husband to his wife during his lifetime as presents cannot be regarded as payments made towards satisfaction of dower debt. The maxim 'debitor non presumitur donare' has no application between husband and wife.

Iftikar-un-nissa Begum v. Nawab Amjad Ali Khan (10), distinguished. [p. 390, col. 1.]

Though there is no presumption of advancement in benami transactions in India, very little evidence of intention would be sufficient to turn the scale. Where certain property is purchased by the father in the name of his minor daughter and the deed at the time of her marriage is produced for the inspection of her father-in-law and it is represented to him that the property belongs to the girl, it must be said that there is sufficient evidence to establish an intention on the part of the father to make a gift of the property to her daughter. [p. 391, col. 1.]

It is not the practice of the Privy Council to re-open concurrent findings of fact of the Court below. [p. 387, col. 2.]

It is very rarely that the Privy Council interferes in a matter merely of costs. [p. 392, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgments and decrees of the Chief Court of Oudh (Sir Louis Stuart, Kt., O. J. and Razza, J.)—one judgment reported in 112 Ind. Cas. 315.

Messrs W. H. Upjohn, K. C. and L. Jopling, for the Appellant.

Messrs L. De Gruyther, K. C., B. Dube, K. C. and W. Wallach, for the Respondent.

Sir George Lowndes.—The principal question of the many, involved in these appeals is as to the right of succession to an important taluqdari estate in Oudh, known as Kunwa Khers. The last holder was Nawab Baqar Ali Khan, who died intestate on the 17th January, 1921. He left him surviving two widows, four sons, of whom Nawab Mirza Mohammad Sadiq Ali Khan was the eldest, and one daughter. The pedigree of the family, so far as it is necessary for the determination of the appeals, is as below, the names of females being printed in italics:—

The appeals arise out of two separate suits, the first of which was instituted by the junior widow, Fakr Jahan Begum, and her two children, Taqi Ali and Abid Jahan, who will be referred to in this judgment as the plaintiffs. They claimed their shares according to the Shiah Muhammadan Law, to which the parties are subject, in the whole estate of Baqar Ali, including the Kunwa Khers property. To this suit the other widow and her three sons, and also Jafar Ali, the brother of Baqar Ali, were joined as defend.

ants. Jafar Ali died pending the suit, and his heirs were brought on the record in his place, but took no part in the proceedings. Naqi Ali also died, pendente lite, and is now represented by his widow, Jaddo Begum. Neither she nor her assignee, Dilawar Ali, have appeared before the Board.

The second suit was brought by Fakr Jahan alone, claiming the sum of Rs. 50,000 as due to her for dower out of the property left by Baqar Ali. To this suit all the other parties, with the exception of Jafar Ali, were defendants.

The first suit involved various questions as to Baqar Ali's estate, including the validity of a number of dispositions of property made by him during his lifetime, as to most of which there were concurrent findings of the Courts in India. There are now five appeals before the Board, which have been consolidated; four of them arise out of the first and principal suit and the remaining one out of the dower suit. The parties are ranged on different sides on the various questions involved, according to their individual interests. On the question as to the succession to the Kunwa Khera estate, with which their Lordships will first deal, Sadiq Ali, claiming as the eldest son by the right of primogeniture, is opposed by all the other parties. His claim succeeded in both the Indian Courts, but is disputed before the Board.

The estate was the subject of two sanads, dated respectively in 1858 and 1861, by each of which it was granted to Amjad Ali, the father of Baqar Ali, subject to descent by the rule of primogeniture. The reason for the two sanads is unexplained. They are to all intents in the same terms.

Upon the passing of the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, Amjad Ali's name was included in the first and second of the lists prepared under s. 8 of the Act. Against his name in the first list was entered the estate to Kunwa Khera. By s. 10 the entry of his name in the lists is conclusive evidence that he was a taluqdar to whom the provisions of the Act applied; the effect of the inclusion of his name in the second list was a statutory declaration that the Kunwa Khera estate by family custom ordinarily devolved upon a single heir: Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan (1). By s. 22 of the Act, upon the death of Amjad Ali intestate the estate would descend upon his eldest son, Baqar Ali, and from Baqar Ali to Sadiq Ali, and, if the section applied, the claim of the plaintiffs, so far as the estate was concerned, would necessarily fail. Amjad Ali in fact left a Will, dated the 16th March, 1874. By it he purported to provide for the division of his Sitapur property, which included at all events the greater part of Kunwa Khera, among his heirs according to Muhammadan Law. The Will however, did not comply with the requirements of the Act. It has been held by both Courts in India to be invalid on this account, and their finding is not disputed before the Board. It would seem to follow that the title of Sadiq Ali to the estate was prima facie unassailable, but it is attacked by the plaintiffs and the defendants who side with them on three grounds.

In the first place, it is contended that though Kunwa Khera appears in list No. 1 as the taluqdari estate of Amjad Ali, the Act did not in fact apply to it. It was said that the definition of 'estate' in the Act applies only to villages and lands named in the list attached to the kabuliyat executed by the taluqdar, and that the list in the case of Kunwa Khera was not executed by Amjad Ali, but by his slave Abdul, with whom the settlement was made on his behalf. Their Lordships think that there is no substance in this contention.

In the next place, it is contended that Baqar Ali did not take the estate under the Act, but by an independent title, and that, therefore, it devolved on his death by the ordinary Shiah Muhammadan Law. In support of their contention reliance is placed upon certain transactions which took place after Amjad Ali's death and were, no doubt, inspired by the provisions of his Will, to which reference has been made above. Amjad Ali died on the 7th March, 1875, and on different dates in April and June of the same year three deeds of compromise were executed between Baqar Ali, his brother Jafar Ali, and the other heirs of Amjad Ali, under which Baqar Ali's title to the Kunwa Khera estate was recognised, and that of Jafar Ali to another estate not concerned in these appeals, and provision was made for the other heirs. It is contended for the plaintiffs and their supporters that the effect of these compromises was that Baqar Ali took the estate by transfer from his brother and the other heirs and not by succession under the Act or under the sanads, and that it so became in his hands property which would be divisible on his death according to the ordinary rules of Muhammadan Law. This contention has been rejected by both Courts in India, and their Lordships have no hesitation in affirming their conclusion. They think that it is impossible to regard the compromises as being in any way the root of Baqar Ali's title, which, even if the original sanad could be disregarded, was clearly established by the Act. The compromises were, in their Lordships' opinion, only a recognition of his right to succeed to the estate.

The only remaining contention to which reference need be made on this part of the case is based upon a supposed deed or gift of the 1st June, 1857, by which Ahmad Ali, the father of Amjad Ali, is alleged to have transferred the estate to Baqar Ali, and it is said, therefore, that when the sanads were subsequently granted to Amjad Ali, and his name was entered in the lists provided for by the Act, he must be taken to have held the estate merely as a trustee, and that nothing in the Act applied to it in Baqar Ali's hands. Their Lordships think it sufficient to say, in answer to this contention, that the deed of gift has not been proved. Both the lower Courts have so held, and their Lordships see no reason to differ from the conclusion to which they have come.

In the result their Lordships are satisfied that the title of Sadiq Ali to the Kunwa Khera estate has been established; that it was not divisible according to the ordinary rules of Muhammadan Law among the heirs of Baqar Ali, and that the plaintiffs' suit so far as it sought to effectuate this claim has failed.

Their Lordships now turn to the subsidiary question raised by the various contending parties, which are many and diverse. It will be convenient to take up first the questions upon which Sadiq Ali is the appellant.

His main contention is that he is entitled to succeed not only to Kunwa Khera, as a taluqdari estate, but to all the property left by Baqar Ali to the exclusion of the other parties to these appeals. The ground of this claim is that the family custom of primogeniture succession being established in respect of the taluqdari property, it must be held to govern also what is non-taluqdari. The contention is based upon the decision of this Board in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali

Khan (1). In that case Mr. Ameer Ali, in delivering the judgment of the Board, draws a distinction between the position of a Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara and a Muhammadan family. In the former case, he points out, self-acquired property may go in a different line of succession to ancestral property, but the Muhammadan Law allows of no such differentiation. In the case of a Muhammadan family, therefore,

"If a custom governs the succession to the ancestral estate, the presumption is that it attaches also to the personal acquisitions of the last owner left by him on his death; and it is for the person who asserts that these properties follow a line of devolution different from that of the taluqa to establish it."

In the present case the Subordinate Judge by whom the suit was tried recognised the importance of this presumption, and held that it was for the plaintiffs to prove that in their family the succession to non-taluqdari property followed the ordinary Muhammadan Law by which the family was governed. This he held that they had satisfactorily established, and the Appellate Court accepted his finding. There being thus concurrent findings on what is obviously a question of fact, the matter could not, according to the ordinary practice of the Board, be re-opened here. But it was contended by Mr. Upjohn, who appeared for Sadiq Ali, that there was no evidence to support this finding. Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention. Without going into the evidence at length it is sufficient to state that in at least two cases of succession in the family non-taluqdari property has been divided according to Muhammadan Law, there being no trace of any claim in either case that it was not so divisible by reason of a family custom.

It is admitted that Kwaja Safi, the paternal grandfather of Ahmad Ali, migrated from Persia to India. There is no suggestion of a custom so directly at variance with the Muhammadan Law having been introduced from Persia, and their Lordships think that it can only have originated in India, and, therefore, at a comparatively recent date. It may well, they think, have been a special custom attached only to a special grant from the ruling authority in Oudh. That there may be such a custom affecting only the principal estate of a family is recognised by the judgment of Lord Phillimore in Zarif- un-Nisa v. Shafiq uz-zaman Khan (2), also a Muhammadan case. This view receives further confirmation from the terms of the sanads of 1858 and 1861. In any case, however, their Lordships think that where a family custom is, as here, of comparatively recent origin, two well-established instances of division according to the Muhammadan Law are not only material upon which the Courts in India might hold in favour of the plaintiffs upon this question, but are in themselves sufficient to rebut the presumption upon which Counsel for Sadiq Ali relies. In the opinion of their Lordships, therefore, it has been rightly held that the property left by Baqar Ali other than the Kunwa Khera estate is divisible among his heirs according to Shiah Muhammadan Law.

The next question to be considered is the claim by Sadiq Ali to a number of items as accretions to the taluqdari estate. They consist largely of subordinate interests in the estate which were owned by outsiders and had been bought up by Baqar Ali. Both Courts in India have rejected his claim to the alleged accretions. Sadiq Ali appeals against their decision and is opposed before the Board by all the other parties. Their Lordships think that the claim is clearly not maintainable. Both Courts have found that there was no intention on the part of Baqar Ali to incorporate any of these acquisitions in the taluqdari estate, and their Lordships would not be disposed to disagree with this finding. But the matter does not rest merely on the proof or disproof of such intention. Apart from the provisions of s. 32-A of the Act of 1869 as amended in 1910, which, it is admitted, do not apply in the present case, no incorporation of other property would be possible. This is clear on the judgment of the Board in Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (3), which has been rightly interpreted by the Chief Court.

Another item of immovable property which is affected by similar considerations is what is called the Kairabad House, but is really the estate office of the taluqa. It was not part of the Kunwa Khera estate at the dates either of the sanads or the statutory lists, but was purchased by Baqar Ali. Sadiq Ali claimed it as an "appurtenance" to the estate, and his claim was allowed both by the trial Judge and the Chief Court on appeal, who found that it had been so used for many years. In their Lordships' opinion, the principle affirmed in Rajindra Bahadur's case (3) cited above applies with as much force to this property as to the alleged accretions, and Baqar Ali, not having availed himself of the provisions of s. 32 A, could not by any form of user incorporate it in the taluqdari estate, or subject it to a rule of descent at variance with the Muhammadan Law. Mr. Upjohn for Sadiq Ali does not deny that the property was purchased by Baqar Ali, but, founding upon a passage in the judgment in Rajindra Bahadur's case (3) at pages 146 147*), contends that a sanad from the Government should be presumed granting the house to the taluqdar. Their Lordships can see no possible foundation for this contention. The house was the property of Baqar Ali and if he had desired to incorporate it in the taluqa he could have done so by the special procedure introduced in 1910. There was no necessity and no occasion for a sanad. The question of the Kaiser Bagh House in Rajindra Bahadur's case (3) was on a different footing altogether. It was the property of Government and had been allotted to the taluqdar.

Their Lordships, therefore, think that the Courts in India were wrong in allowing Sadiq Ali's claim to this property, and that it forms part of the divisible assets of Baqar Ali in which all the heirs are entitled to share.

It will be convenient here to take up another and possibly more difficult question affecting a portion of the Kairabad property known as the Mahal Serai. By a duly registered deed of gift dated the 28th February, 1916, Baqar Ali purported to make over this serai to his wife, Fakr Jahan. The deed recites the donor's desire to arrange for her residence at Kairabad when she wishes to live there; sets out in detail the particular portions of the property which she is to have, and continues:—

... "and I deliver possession over the gifted property to the aforesaid second wife of mine from this date, like myself. Now, the said wife has power to keep the gifted property in her proprietary possession, in whatsoever manner she desires and I or any heir of mine shall never have any occasion for raising any kind of objection. Now with effect from this date the gifted property has, with all the external and internal rights been transferred to the aforesaid Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam in the capacity of an absolute proprietor like myself."

The gift is attacked by Sadiq Ali and his branch of the family upon two grounds, viz., (1) that the deed was merely colourable, there being no intention on the part of Baqar Ali to transfer the property to the lady, and (2) that the gift was not completed by such a change of possession as is requisite under the Muhammadan Law to validate a gift of immovable property.

These two objections must be considered separately. The first is purely a question of fact; the second has been argued mainly as a question of law.

The trial Judge thought that the gift was fictitious, and held that nothing passed by it. The Chief Court disagreed with him, finding nothing suspicious in the transaction. It was not disputed, the learned Judges say, that after the deed was executed the lady frequently visited Kairabad and resided on the premises. They, therefore, held that she had taken possession, and that the gift was effective.

The first objection being against the tenor of the deed, the burden of proof is clearly upon those who disputed the gift. No possible reason is suggested why Baqar Ali should have desired to put a portion of this property in any one else's name except, possibly, an inherent propensity for benami or ism farzi transactions. On the other hand, the reason recited in the deed that he desired to provide his favourite wife with an alternative residence at Kairabad is, to say the least of it, understandable. The portion assigned to her contained the zenana quarters, where she ordinarily put up when accompanying her husband on his apparently not infrequent visits to the kothi, and it is clear from the evidence of his other gifts to her which are now established that he had a great desire to provide for her future comfort on a generous scale. Against this all that can be said is that during his lifetime she exercised no individual acts of proprietorship over any portion of the Kairabad establishment; that in her and her husband's absence the serai was occupied by the servants of the estate; that such repairs as were necessary were done at Baqar Ali's expenses, and that no mutation of names was made in the Government records. In their Lordships' opinion, these facts are not sufficient to establish that the transaction was merely colourable. The deed was handed over to the donee and remained in her possession, and their Lordships have no doubt that Baqar Ali intended to make a genuine gift of the property to her.

The second objection involves some consideration of the Muhammadan Law. It is not disputed that a gift of immovable property must ordinarily be completed by a transfer of possession, and there seems to be no difference on this point between Hanafi and Shiah Law. The Chief Court thought it was clear that Fakr Jahan had taken actual possession, but it is pointed out that this was only after her husband's death. So long as Baqar Ali was alive she merely resided there with him, and no change seems to have been made in the method of their joint occupation. But in the first place the deed contains the statement, "I deliver possession of the gifted property to my said wife," and this as a declaration of fact must be regarded as binding on the heirs of the donor: see Muhammad Mumtazahmad v. Zubaida Jan (4). In the second place, the deed of gift was handed over to the donee as soon as it was registered. In the case of a gift by a husband to his wife, their Lordships do not think that Muhammadan Law requires actual vacation by the husband and an actual taking of separate possession by the wife. In their opinion, the declaration made by the husband, followed by the handing over of the deed, are amply sufficient to establish a transfer of possession. In Ibhram v. Suleman (5), West, J., laid it down as a principle for the determination of questions of this nature that "when a person is present on the premises proposed to be delivered to him a declaration of the person previously possessed puts him into possession." This statement of the law was cited and followed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in 1905—Khaver Sultan v. Rukhia Sultan (6), a case between Shiahs, and also independently in the same year by the Allahabad Appellate Court—Humera Bibi v. Najim-un nissa Bibi (7). It has also been followed in two Madras cases, and is cited with approval in the late Mr. Ameer Ali's work on the Muhammadan Law 3rd Ed, p. 71. It is not necessary for their Lordships to decide in the present case whether this principle is of universal application between Muhammadan donors and donees, but they think that as between a husband and his wife who are living together it is undoubtedly a reasonable interpretation of the requirements of the law, and they adopt it as applicable to a case before them. In their opinion, therefore, the gift of this portion of the Kairabad property by Baqar Ali to Fakr Jahan was effective, and the conclusion come to by the Chief Court was correct.

Their Lordships must now turn to the long series of cases where purchases in the names of one or other of the plaintiffs are charged as benami. These have been examined with great care by the trial Judge, and in nearly every case where they were disputed on appeal his findings were confirmed by the Chief Court. No adequate reasons have been suggested why these concurrent findings of fact should not be accepted by the Board in accordance with the ordinary rule, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to burden this judgment with their details. Mr. Dube, for the second plaintiff, Taqi Ali, disputes concurrent findings in 25 different instances, but his contentions amount to no more than that upon the evidence the Courts should have come to the opposite conclusion. In many cases the material documents have not been printed, and he is unable to give even the dates of the transactions which he is instructed to support.

There are, however, two cases in which the Courts in India have come to different conclusions, in addition to the case of the Mahal Serai at Khairabad, which has already been dealt with, and these require consideration.

The first concerns the village of Jiamau, which was conveyed to Fakr Jahan by a deed dated the 12th January, 1920. The purchase price of the property was Rs. 51,000. Out of this two sums of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 600 for earnest money, and a small additional sum for stamp duty were admittedly advanced by Baqar Ali. Fakr Jahan has sworn that these sums were repaid by her and that the balance came from her own funds. The trial Judge was not prepared to accept her statement without further corroboration. The Appellate Court thought that there was no reason to disbelieve it. As the lady's evidence was taken on commission the Judges of the Chief Court were in at least as good a position to appreciate its credibility as the trial Judge, and their Lordships must naturally attach the greater weight to their estimate. They have perused the evidence in question, and see no reason to disagree with the conclusion to which the learned Chief Judge and his Indian colleague have come. It is not denied that Fakr Jahan was in possession of sufficient means to pay for the property; the purchase deed appears to have been all along in her possession and mutation was effected in her name. There is no affirmative proof that the balance of the purchase money was paid by Baqar Ali, nor does the admission as to the earnest money, even if it was not repaid, necessarily lead to this conclusion.

In their Lordships' opinion the prima facie title of Fakr Jahan has not been displaced by the oral evidence, and they think that the finding of the Chief Court with respect to this property should be affirmed.

The other case is that of a property known by the picturesque name of "Sher Darwaza." It was purchased on the 12th November, 1910, by Baqar Ali, but the conveyance was taken in the name of his daughter, Abid Jahan, the third plaintiff, then an infant of about five years old. The property was during her minority managed by Baqar Ali in her name, and though the income was apparently credited to a special account, and certain sums were paid out of it to her husband, it seems clear that it was in part appropriated to purposes with which Abid Jahan had no concern.

In the case of a gift by a Muhammadan father to his infant child, no transfer of possession is required, it is only necessary to establish a bona fide intention to give: see Ameeroonissa Khatoon v. Abedoonissa Khatoon (8).

There is no doubt that Baqar Ali did in many instances, which have been fully discussed by the trial Judge, purchase immoveable properties in the names of various members of his family without any intention, so far as the evidence adduced discloses, of benefiting the particular nominee, and the only question is whether there is sufficient in the case of the Sher Darwaza property to take it out of this category of benami purchases. The trial Judge thought there was not. The Chief Court came to the opposite conclusion. The deed, which was produced at the hearing by Fakr Jahan, was on the occasion of Abid's marriage in 1914 placed upon a tray and sent for the inspection of her father-in-law, and this was in the view of the learned Judges conclusive of Baqar Ali's intention.

The purchase of this property was a very natural provision by Baqar Ali for the daughter of his favourite wife, and though there may be no presumption of advancement in such cases in India, very little evidence of intention would be sufficient to turn the scale. The sending of the deed for the inspection of the lady's father-in-law, which the Chief Court held to be established was clearly a representation that the property was hers, and their Lordships agree with the learned Judges in the conclusion to which they came. They think, therefore, that the Sher Darwaza property should be excluded from the divisible estate of Baqar Ali.

An attempt has been made to press the same argument in the case of a mortgage upon certain property in Husain Ganj and Baragaon, which was taken in the name of Abid Jahan, but both the trial Judge and the Chief Court have held against the third plaintiff as to this, and their Lordships see no reason to re-examine the evidence upon which they have come to this conclusion.

The next matter over which the parties are at variance concerns a sum of about five and a half lakhs of rupees in Government Promissory Notes. This has been held by both Courts in India to belong to a charitable fund known as the Radd-i-Mazalim, which is said to mean "Atonement for Crimes of Violence." It has accordingly been treated as outside the estate. Sadiq Ali apparently claimed to be the trustee of it, and the trial Judge acceded to his claim. The Chief Court, while affirming the trust, held that the question of the trusteeship was not before them. Sadiq Ali does not contest this before the Board, but supports the trust; the other parties contend that the trust is bad under Muhammadan Law, and that the notes form part of the divisible estate.

The ground of this contention is that Government Promissory Notes, being interest-bearing securities, cannot be the subject of a dedication to God, which is an essential feature of every Muhammadan Wakf. On this question there has been a conflict of opinion in India. The authorities were discussed in the Chief Court, and the learned Judges came to the conclusion that taking modern ideas into account, the objection was unsustainable. They, therefore, agreed with the trial Judge that the notes did not form part of Baqar Ali's estate.

The origin of the fund is uncertain. The earliest reference to it to which their Lordships' attention has been drawn is in the Will of Ahmad Ali, the grandfather of Baqar Ali, dated the 2nd September, 1857. The notes in question were directed by his Will to be applied as part of the Radd-i-Mazalim fund. It is clear on the terms of the Will that the trust had been created in the previous generation. There is nothing to show of what it originally consisted, but the fund was evidently in the keeping of Ahmad Ali, and he seems to have allocated the notes in question to it either as representing its investment in his hands, or possibly only as the equivalent of a sum for which he regarded himself as accountable.

After Ahmad Ali's death a suit was instituted for the administration of his estate, to which Amjad Ali was a party. The suit eventually came up to this Board in 1867—Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mohundee Begum (9). The Radd-i-Mazalim fund figured in the proceedings as a "family religious and charitable fund." Trustees were appointed of it by the Court, and a scheme of management was directed, and these provisions were affirmed by the Order in Council.

Upon these facts, which have not been disputed on the present appeals, it seems difficult to see how the validity of the trust can now be questioned. It is not denied that the Wakf has been recognised by the members of the family for three-quarters of a century or more, and that the income of the fund has been applied, at all events in the main, consistently to charitable purposes. The notes clearly came into Baqar Ali's possession as representing the corpus of the fund, and even if they were an improper investment of it, as to which their Lordships express no opinion, this could not make them his property.

If the trust could be regarded, as having been created by Ahmad Ali, and as originally invalid for the reason now suggested, the fund might have been divisible among his heirs, but that is not a question which arises in the present proceedings. So far as Baqar Ali was concerned, he was bound by the result of the suit above referred to, and in his hand the notes were clearly trust property.

(9) 11 Moo. I. A. 517; 19 W. R. P. C. 25; 2 Suther 98; 2 Sar. 315 (P. C.).

Under the circumstances, their Lordships find it unnecessary to attempt a solution of the interesting problem of Muhammadan Law which was propounded to the Chief Court. The only material question in these appeals is whether the fund formed part of Baqar Ali's divisible estate, and for the reasons given their Lordships have no doubt that it did not.

A small question has been raised by Mr. Wallach, who appears for the first and third defendants, Sharaf Jahan and Kazim Ali, as to the order for costs made by the Chief Court. In their appeal, No. 24 of 1929, which failed, they were directed to pay the costs of "the other side," separate sets of costs being allowed to each party or group, with the result that they have had to pay the costs of Jaddo Begum, the widow of Naqi Ali, and her assignee, Dilawar Ali, who were, apparently, separately represented in the Chief Court, but have not appeared before the Board. This, it is contended, is manifestly unjust, as Naqi Ali had made a joint defence to the suit with Mr. Wallach's clients. Their Lordships think that if this was a slip, the attention of the Judges should have been called to it in India. If it was not, as appears more likely, it is manifest that this Board is not in a position to review the discretion of the Appellate Court in such a matter. It is very rarely that the Board interferes in a matter merely of costs, and there is no reason why an exception should be made in the present case.

Their Lordships have now dealt with all the matters which have been submitted for their consideration in the first suit, and it only remains for them to deal with the question of dower, which was the subject of the second suit in which Fakr Jahan is the sole plaintiff.

It is not disputed that the dower fixed on Fakr Jahan's marriage was the sum of Rs. 50,000, which she claimed from her husband's estate. The defence set up by Sadiq Ali and the other members of his branch of the family is that the debt was satisfied by payments made to her by Baqar Ali in his lifetime. It is admitted that she received sums of money from her husband which in the aggregate exceeded the Rs. 50,000, but these payments were made from time to time in varying amounts, the largest of which was only Rs. 3,000. There is no evidence that Baqar Ali allocated any of these payments to the dower debt, nor was there any attempt at the trial to show that the lady accepted them as such.

She referred in her deposition to "presents" received from her husband in addition to a liberal allowance, but it does not seem to have been suggested to her in cross-examination that any of these moneys were payments on account of dower. The dower deed was produced by her at the trial, and no payments are endorsed or noted upon it. There is in reality nothing in the evidence to rebut her claim. Reliance is placed upon the maxim, "Debitor non præsuntur donare," but their Lordships doubt if it has any application as between husband and wife—at all events when the relations between them are such as are established in the present case. It is certain that in many cases Baqar Ali did make presents to his wife quite irrespective of her dower, and it can hardly be presumed that a man in his position would desire to discharge such an obligation by dribblets.

A previous dower case in the same family is also cited in favour of the defence; Iftikar-un nissa Begum v. Amjad Ali Khan (10). Here the dower debt was held to have been discharged after the husband's death by the transfer of Government Paper of substantially the equivalent in value of the debt, but their Lordships are unable to see any resemblance between the facts of the two cases.

The trial Judge held that the debt was satisfied by the aggregate of the payments and dismissed the suit. The Chief Court took the opposite view and allowed the claim of the plaintiff. Their Lordships think that the decision of the Chief Court was clearly right.

Before closing their judgment their Lordships would desire to express their appreciation of the great care with which these cases have been tried by both Courts in India. They are also indebted to the learned Counsel who have appeared before them for their assistance in extracting the necessary material from a heavy record.

On the whole case, in their Lordships' opinion, the conclusions come to by the Chief Court were right and should be upheld, except in the matter of the Khairabad House, which was one of the subjects of Oudh Appeal, No. 20 of 1918, in the Chief Court. Their Lordships think that this question should have been decided in favour of the plaintiffs, and that the decree of the Chief Court on this appeal should be varied by declaring that the so-called Khairabad House, as apart from the Mahal serai, is not appurtenant to the taluka of (10) 7 Beng. L. R. 643.

Kunwa Khara, but forms part of the divisible estate of Baqar Ali. They think that in all other respects the decrees of the Chief Court in both the suits should be affirmed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. There will be no order as to the costs of these appeals.

Appeal from the Rangoon High Court

July 28, 1931.

MA HNIN HLAING—RESPONDENT.

Buddhist Law—Adoption—Keittima child, definition of—Essentials of adoption—Proof—Practice—Privy Council—Concurrent findings of fact—Interference.

A keittima child is a child adopted publicly with the intention that the child shall inherit. The existence of natural children is no bar to such an adoption. No formal ceremony is necessary to constitute adoption, but the adoption must be a matter of publicity and notoriety. It can either be proved by direct evidence of the taking as a keittima child on a specified occasion, or it may be inferred from a course of conduct inconsistent with any other supposition. Ma Ywet v. Ma Me (1) and Maung Thwe v. Maung Tun Pe (2), referred to. [p. 194, col. 1.]

The usual practice with the Privy Council is not to disturb concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Messrs. E. B. Raikes, K. C. and G. D. McNair, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. Mg. Kya Gaing of Burma and H. Williams, for the Respondent.

Sir Dinshah Mulla.—The sole question for the decision of their Lordships on this appeal is whether the respondent is the keittima daughter of U San Ywe, a Burmese Buddhist, and his wife, Daw Hnit. If she was, then she inherits Daw Hnit's estate; if not, the appellant U Po Lein, who is the brother of Daw Hnit, is entitled to succeed to it as her heir.

The litigation arose out of a petition for Letters of Administration to the estate of Daw Hnit presented by the appellant to the Court of the District Judge of Pegu on the 27th September, 1924. The respondent filed a caveat, and on the 3rd December, 1924, she made a counter petition for Letters of Administration against which a caveat was entered by the appellant.

The proceedings then took the form of a suit with the respondent as plaintiff and the appellant as defendant, and the case was by consent of parties heard as a regular suit for the determination of the question of succession to the estate of Daw Hnit. The District Judge found that the adoption was not proved, and directed Letters of Administration to be granted to the appellant. On appeal the High Court at Rangoon found that the respondent had proved the adoption, and they ordered Letters of Administration to issue to the respondent. From this decree of the High Court the present appeal has been brought.

U San Ywe and Daw Hnit were residents of Yitkangyi in the Pegu District, and they were well known as the richest persons in the place. They took into their family several poor children and maintained and helped them in life. At the date of the alleged adoption they had an only son named Tun Hmyin, who died about the year 1908. U San Ywe died in 1911, and Daw Hnit on the 29th April, 1924.

The respondent's natural father was a hawker, and during the rains of 1903, while he was crossing a river with his family, the boat was capsized, and his wife and one child were drowned. The respondent, who, with her father, survived, was then about six months old, and her case is that a few weeks after this incident she was adopted by U San Ywe and Daw Hnit as their keittima daughter, and was brought up by them and lived continuously with them until the death of Daw Hnit in 1924, except for a short interval in 1919, when, being then about 16 years old, she eloped with Maung Tun Pe, a disciple of U Wimala, the head of a monastery at Yitkangyi, and married him at Thaton. The couple after living there together for about four or six months were brought back to Daw Hnit by U Win, a village headman, and were received back by her in her house. While the respondent was living with Daw Hnit two children were born to her, and she, with her husband and children, lived with Daw Hnit in her house until her death. On the 4th September, 1924, Daw Hnit executed a deed confirming the adoption, and at the same time she executed a power of attorney in favour of Tun Pe, empowering him to manage her estate and affairs, which he did until her death.

The appellant denied the adoption, and alleged that neither the deed of adoption nor the power of attorney was executed by Daw Hnit, and that even if the deed of adoption was executed by her, it was not explained to her, and was obtained by misrepresentation and fraud. He admitted that the respondent lived continuously with Daw Hnit, but alleged that her position in the house was no better than that of other servant girls who were maintained in the house out of charity.

A keittima child is a child adopted publicly with the intention that the child shall inherit. The existence of natural children is no bar to such an adoption. No formal ceremony is necessary to constitute adoption, but the adoption must be a matter of publicity and notoriety. It can either be proved by direct evidence of the taking as a keittima child on a specified occasion, or it may be inferred from a course of conduct inconsistent with any other supposition: Ma Ywet v. Ma Me (1); Maung Thwe v. Maung Tun Pe (2)

The respondent herself gave evidence in the case, and called several witnesses who deposed to the giving and taking in adoption in the presence of some elders specially invited for the occasion. Though they could not fix the exact date of adoption, they all agreed that it was some time after the drowning incident. She also called a large number of witnesses who deposed that they were told by U San Ywe and Daw Hnit that the respondent was their adopted daughter, and that the respondent was treated by them as their own child. The respondent also produced in support of her case several documents amongst which were the deed of adoption, and the power of attorney, and she relied on the terms of certain inscriptions on six marble slabs presented by U San Ywe and Daw Hnit in 1909 to the Shwemawdaw Pagoda at Pegu. The respondent called 21 witnesses in all, and after she herself and 11 of her witnesses including those that had deposed to the adoption had been examined before the District Judge, he was transferred to another place, and the rest of the case was heard by his successor. The appellant also was examined in the case, and he called some evidence to show that the respondent was treated by U San Ywe and Daw Hnit not as their own child, but as a servant girl.

The deed of adoption and power of attorney were alleged to have been executed by Daw Hnit when she was at Natogyi in 1922 for treatment for paralysis. As to the deed of adoption the District Judge found that it was not prepared under the instructions of Daw Hnit, and that even if it was signed by her, as to which the Judge was doubtful, it was not explained to her, and her signature was obtained by fraud. As regards the power of attorney, however, he found that it was executed by her with full knowledge of its contents.

As regards the marble slabs, each slab is said to have inscribed on it at the top the names of U San Ywe, Daw Hnit, their son, Ko Tun Hmyin (who was then dead), and the respondent. As to these slabs there was a conflict of evidence. Maung Pe, a sculptor of Mandalay, gave evidence on behalf of the respondent that the slabs were inscribed by him in 1909 as they now stand on instructions from U San Ywe, and that four of them bore his name on the back and the other two the name of his deceased partner, Maung Po Ket. On the other hand, Maung Sein, a witness for the appellant, said that his father, U Gan, had in 1909 ordered 111 slabs for the pagoda, that he allowed several persons to subscribe for some of them, that 6 out of the 111 slabs were subscribed for by U San Ywe and Daw Hnit, and that the headings now on those 6 slabs were not the headings which were originally inscribed on them. It seems that photographs were taken of the inscriptions, but only one was produced. It showed that the letters of the heading were larger than those of the texts below and that the date of the heading was in letters slightly smaller than those of the rest of the heading. Upon this evidence the District Judge found that the headings were forgeries.

The District Judge did not discuss the oral testimony of the witnesses, and having found that the signature of Daw Hnit to the deed of adoption was obtained by fraud, and that the headings of the inscriptions were forgeries, he inferred that the evidence given by the respondent's witnesses was not worthy of credit, and disbelieved the respondent's case.

The learned Judges of the High Court, while agreeing substantially with the District Judge as to his finding on the deed of adoption, differed from him as to his finding on the inscriptions on the slabs. They found that the headings were not subsequent forgeries, but they held that the respondent had failed to prove that the headings were inscribed on the instructions of U San Ywe or Daw Hnit. They examined the other documentary evidence in the case, and accepted the oral testimony of the respondent's witness, and held that the adoption was proved.

Their Lordships think that neither the deed of adoption nor the headings on the tablets support the respondent's case. As to the deed of adoption, there are concurrent findings of both the Courts in India, and no case has been made out for departing from the general rule of this Board not to interfere with such findings. As regards the headings on the tablets, their Lordships have examined the evidence, and they see no reason to differ from the finding of the High Court. But though neither of these items is helpful to the respondent's case, there is, in their Lordships' opinion, other documentary evidence which lends support to her case.

First in order of date are certain entries in the assessment rolls. The respondent is described in those entries as Daw Hnit's daughter, and her name appears with that of Daw Hnit in the column of owners. The first entry appears in the assessment rolls for the year 1913-14, which would be about three years after the death of U San Ywe, and her name continues up to the year 1919-20, when it is said it was struck out on instructions from Daw Hnit, this being about the time when she eloped with Tun Pe. The respondent's name was again restored in 1922-23, and it remained on the rolls until the death of Daw Hnit in 1924.

It is the case of both sides that the first entry was made by the Revenue Officer on instructions from Maung Lu Swe, the head labourer and rent-collector of Daw Hnit, but it is urged for the appellant that there is no proof that Lu Swe had any authority from Daw Hnit to ask the Revenue Officer to enter the respondent's name on the rolls. Lu Swe was not examined as a witness, the explanation given by the respondent being that he was then on hostile terms with her. This leaves the position somewhat obscure, and it has been commented upon by both the Courts in India. Their Lordships, however, cannot overlook the fact that in 1913, when the first entry was made, the respondent was only ten years old, and she could not possibly have had any hand in having her name inserted in the records. Her natural father had long since severed all connection with her, and her husband, Tun Pe, had not yet appeared on the scene. There is nothing to suggest that Lu Swe had any interest in having her name entered on the rolls, and, above all in describing her as Daw Hnit's daughter. In these circumstances their Lordships think that the entry must have been authorized by Daw Hnit, and it must have been made with her knowledge and consent. The removal of the respondent's name in the year 1919-20 coincides with her elopement and the consequent change of feeling on the part of Daw Hnit, while the reinsertion of her name in the year 1922-23 marks the restoration of cordial and harmonious relations once again between the two ladies.

Next come the depositions of Daw Hnit in two suits in 1923. It seems that in the year 1922 Daw Hnit granted a lease of her lands to Maung Po Tok, a grand-nephew of U San Ywe, in the joint names of herself and the respondent. In the same year Po Tok borrowed Rs. 510 from Daw Hnit, and executed a promissory note in favour of Daw Hnit and the respondent. In 1923 Daw Hnit and the respondent brought a suit against Po Tok for rent and for money lent. Po Tok put in a defence that the lands had been let to him free of rent because he was a keittima son of Daw Hnit. This defence did not succeed, and a decree was passed against him. In that suit Daw Hnit was examined in Court, and in the course of her evidence she said: "Hnin Hlaing is my daughter. Tun Pe is my son-in-law and Po Tok is not related to me." This statement seems to their Lordships to be a clear recognition by Daw Hnit of the respondent's status as her adopted daughter.

This was followed by a suit, also in 1923, by Maung Po Kun, another grand-nephew of U San Ywe, against Daw Hnit, in which he claimed a fourth share of the estate on the allegation that he was a keittima son of U San Ywe and Daw Hnit, and was also the orasa son. The suit was dismissed on the ground that Po Kun had failed to prove the alleged adoption. In that suit Daw Hnit was examined on commission, and in her evidence she said: I did not adopt Maung Po Kun . . . have affection for Ma Hnin Hlaing. Ma Hnin Hlaing does not want (lit., like) me to give money to anybody, not only to Po Kun." This statement indicates, at the least, that Daw Hnit did not regard the respondent as a mere menial servant in her house.

Their Lordships are satisfied that there is sufficient evidence in this case not only of the giving and taking in adoption, but also of a course of conduct from which adoption may legitimately be inferred. As regards the appellant himself it appears from his evidence that he left Yitkangyi a few years after the death of U San Ywe, and that he took no interest whatever in the affairs of Daw Hnit. Though present at her funeral ceremonies, he made no claim to perform them which he was entitled to do had he been the heir to her estate. His conduct throughout lends support to the view that he regarded the respondent as the adopted daughter of Daw Hnit and the heir to her estate.

For the reasons stated above, their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal fails, and that it should be dismissed, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The appellants must pay the respondent's costs of this appeal.

GIOVANNI VINCENZO DEMARCO,

SINCE DECEASED—RESPONDENT

Partnership—Absence of partnership deed—Loss in business—Measure of individual liability—Co-partner joining sub-co-partner—Sub-co-partner's liability—Common Law.

Under the Common law of England where there is no partnership deed between the co-partners the loss in the business has to be borne by them in proportion to their contribution of capital. Where a co-partner takes with him a sub-co-partner not in any particular share but whose contribution towards capital is to be a particular sum, if such co-partner contributes further capital towards partnership, the liability of the sub-co-partner in the loss of the business is not thereby increased but will be in proportion to his contribution. Messrs. S. L. Porter and H. Atkins, for the Respondent.

Viscount Dunedin.—On or about the 8th January, 1920, the respondent Demarco was approached by one Dendrinis to embark on the venture of buying a yacht. Demarco and the appellant Bianco were well-known to each other and Demarco communicated Dendrinis' proposal to Bianco. He explained that it was proposed that the capital sum of £12,000 was to be contributed by three adventurers, himself, Dendrinis and another, whose name was not at that time known, but who ultimately turned out to be one Gasan, but the rest of the money necessary was to be raised by mortgage. He was himself contributing £4,000. He then asked Bianco if he would take a portion of his share, to which Bianco answered, "I will take £2,000," and on the 8th January he paid £2,000 to Demarco. Bianco says he added the words, "and not a penny more," but as that is not admitted by Demarco it can be left out of account. The rest of the money necessary to meet the purchase price was to be raised by mortgages and the idea was to pay off the mortgages out of freights which at the time were very remunerative. But the proposal as to the purchase of the yacht came to nothing as the yacht was bought by someone else. Dendrinis then turned his attentions to acquiring a ship called the "Ituna." Nothing was said as to £12,000. On the contrary the original contribution was to be £13,000, but the general idea was the same, namely, that the ship should be got by an initial contribution of capital by the same three, Dendrinis, Demarco and Gasan, and the necessary extra money raised by mortgage. This was so far done, but with this change, that before all the mortgages necessary had been raised (for the price of the ship was payable by instalments and, therefore, all the money was not needed at once) Gasan and Demarco had quarrelled with Dendrinis and the partnership or co-adventurership was dissolved, and two persons of the name of Jackson took the place of Dendrinis. All these arrangements were made without Bianco being consulted in any way, but the fact of the new venture in the "Ituna" was in its initiation communicated to him, and he undoubtedly agreed and acquiesced in the fact that the £2,000 which had been paid for the yacht should be applied to the "Ituna" venture.

The "Ituna" was, in fact, purchased on the 19th April, 1920, and the initial payment was made as follows:—Demarco paid £6,000, Dendrinis £3,000 and Gasan £4,000 Barclays Bank advanced £12,500 Bills for £12,500 were endorsed by Gasan, in whose name the ship was registered, payable in quarterly instalments on the days of 9th of July and 9th

October, 1920 and 9th January and 9th April 1921.

The "Ituna" made several voyages and earned remunerative freights, but not enough in themselves to pay off the mortgages. Then in 1921 the "Ituna" was lost by an explosion. An action was subsequently raised under an insurance policy against war risks and failed. The result was that as the mortgages and the bills had to be met and as the earnings of freight had not gone on long enough to make good the money due, there was a very considerable loss on the venture.

As there was no partnership deed between the co-adventurers the loss fell to be borne by them in terms of a section in the Maltese Code, which need not be quoted as it is just the same as the Common law of England, in proportion to their contribution of capital. The practical result to Demarco was that, as he puts it in this action, he had to pay out £11,931 2s. 11d. The action was raised by him against Bianco to obtain a declaration that Bianco had agreed to be a co-adventurer with him to the extent of one half of his, Demarco's, share, and to recover the half of the above sum under deduction of the £2,000 paid as aforesaid and a further sum of £700 which had been paid by Bianco to Demarco on 7th July, 1920. The defendant Bianco denied that he was associated with the plaintiff as a co-adventurer to the extent of one half of the plaintiff's share of the capital, but admitted that he "invested the sum of £2,000 in the purchase of the ship." The £700 he said was a simple loan. The Judge of the Commercial Court pronounced a judgment declaring:—

"That the defendant was not an associate of the plaintiff in one-half of the share which the latter had in the steamer 'Ituna,' but that the defendant had become an associate of the plaintiff to the extent of two thousand seven hundred pounds; (3) remitting the cause for judgment in connection with the other claim on a date to be fixed after the present judgment shall have become absolute; (4) in view of the difficulties the case has presented, ordering each party to bear his own costs."

On appeal to the Court of Appeal they reversed the judgment. Their reasons may be gathered from the following passage:—

"Whereas when the deed of partnership does not determine each partner's share of the profits and the losses, such share is in proportion to the amount contributed in the partnership estate (Art. 1426 Ordinance No. VII of 1868,) which provision is applicable to associations in participation. The parties interested having agreed to contribute at the formation of the association a capital of twelve thousand pounds £12,000 then considered necessary, in three equal parts, and Bianco having accepted to contribute one-half of the plaintiff's third, there can be no doubt that Bianco intended associating himself with Demarco in the proportion of one-half of the latter's share. The disbursements subsequently made by Demarco, rather than contributions, constitute advances or claims against the association which should have been repaid to him from the steamer's first freights; such advances or claims could not alter his share in the association. A partner cannot, at his pleasure, alter the partnership deed by increasing his contribution and thereby his share of the profits. As Vivante (Diritto Commerciale, Volume II, para 308) holds, no partner can contribute a larger share than that agreed upon, nor can he increase his contribution by withdrawing the profits accruing therefrom; these profits are not a contribution towards the partnership funds, but a deposit. Just as Demarco by disbursing during the association further amounts could not be obtained from third parties, could not alter his share of participation in the steamer 'Ituna' as originally established, so also Bianco, notwithstanding those disbursements, continued to be an associate in the proportion of 2,000/12,000, or one-half of Demarco's share of one-third. And as the said association was dissolved owing to the sinking of the steamer in March 1921, Bianco is responsible for the losses sustained by the association in the same proportion, although his share thereof exceeds two thousand pounds (£2,000)."

Against this judgment the present appeal has been taken to His Majesty in Council. Their Lordships are quite unable to agree with the views above expressed by the Court of Appeal. The objections to the reasoning are numerous. It must be kept steadily in view that the defendant was no partner in the partnership or co-adventure for the purchase of the yacht. He was only a sub-co-adventurer with the plaintiff, and the sum of the contribution was only fixed by the plaintiff saying that he was a member of a partnership where his capital contribution was to be £4,000, and the defendant saying, "I will take £2,000 of it." Now so long as matters remained exactly as they were it was true that £2,000 being one-half of £4,000, it might be said that the defendant was a co-adventurer to the extent of one-half of the plaintiff's share. But it is quite another affair to say that this fractional coefficient is a part of the bargain. Suppose it had been found necessary and expedient for the three partners Demarco, Dendinos and Gasan to contribute further capital, an operation which they could do without consulting the defendant, could it possibly be said that the defendant was then bound to be co-adventurer with the plaintiff in one-half of the extra capital which the plaintiff contributed? The argument that he was so bound, had as it stands in relation to the yacht, becomes little short of fantastic when transferred to an absolutely new adventure, i. e., the purchase of the "Ituna." There was no mention whatever made of a sum of £12,000 in regard to the "Ituna."

The Court of Appeal in the passage quoted spoke of the plaintiff's third share in the "Ituna." The plaintiff never had a third share in the sense of an equal third share. As a matter of fact the initial contribution of capital for the "Ituna" was not £12,000 but £13,000, of which £6,000 was contributed by the plaintiff, £4,000 by Gasan, and £3,000 by Dendrinco. Further advances of capital became necessary, and in the end the plaintiff contributed £9,500 of capital. All this is clear from the books kept by the plaintiff himself. He never consulted the defendant as to the additional advances which had to be made, and consequently the theory of the Court of Appeal that the capital remained £12,000 divided into three equal shares and that all other contributions were mere payments on loan, is, in the face of facts, purely imaginary. There is, therefore, no ground for holding the defendant a contributor in respect of half of the plaintiff's ultimate contribution. But from his acquiescence that the sum of £2,000 which he had paid for the acquisition of the yacht should be utilised for the purchase of the "Ituna," it results clearly that to the extent of the £2,000 he became a co-adventurer with the plaintiff. As to the sum of £700 there is more difficulty. This sum was undoubtedly paid by the defendant to the plaintiff on or about 7th July 1920, when the plaintiff being in want of money applied to the defendant. The plaintiff says that he asked the defendant whether he would enter the sum "to the ship account or the cattle account," and that the defendant replied, "Do as you like," and that it was entered to the ship account. The cattle account was an account referring to other transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant says that it was a mere loan and that view was taken by the Court of Appeal. Their view, however, was almost a necessary corollary to the view they had taken on the main question, but on consideration their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the Judge of the Commercial Court was right, and that the question meant, "Will you take this as an extra contribution to capital or as a payment to be placed to your credit in the cattle transactions?" that the answer being "Do as you like," the plaintiff was entitled to do what he did and add it to the initial of £2,000. As already mentioned, there are other transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant and another action depends in the Commercial Court as to these transactions.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty to reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeal and to restore the judgment of the Judge of first instance. The appellant must have his costs of this appeal, but as in the Court below he at first took up the position that the £700 was a mere loan, there must be no costs to either party in the Courts below. The petition for the admission of further evidence must be dismissed without any order as to the costs of it.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Tenant denying possession under lease—Onus of proof—Possession, nature of—Tenant's partial possession—Decree for proportionate rent—Point of proportionate rent raised for first time before Privy Council—Practice.

In a suit for rent where the tenant denies that he has ever got possession of the property leased, it is for the landlord to prove that he has discharged his obligation to put the tenant in possession before he can enforce the tenant to pay rent. But the onus would be primarily on the tenant where the tenant has already paid the rent under the lease or where the tenant claims that certain properties of which he had not got possession were within the properties let which the landlord denied. Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narayan Bagchi (1) and Kumar Arun Chandra Singha v. Bhagaban Chandra Roy Choudhury (2), referred to. [p. 400, col. 2.]

To succeed in a suit for rent the landlord must not only show that the tenant is in possession of the subject of the lease, but that such possession was attributable to the lease, or might be so. [p. 401, col. 1.]

Where it is proved that the tenant obtained possession of part of the properties under the lease the Court should give a decree for rent subject to an abatement in respect of properties of which the possession is not given. [ibid.]

Mr. Pringle, for the Appellant.

Messrs. W. Wallach and A. Pennell, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton.—These are two consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 12th June, 1928, which reversed a decree of the District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 27th June, 1925, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 14th June, 1924, and dismissed the suit, in which the appellant was plaintiff, with costs.

The appellant is the owner of a Noabad taluk in the District of Chittagong. At the time of the Cadastral Survey operations of 1895 Homar Ali, the father of the respondent, was recorded as holding the tenancy of two Jotes, Nos. 83 and 98, in the survey records. Homar Ali died in 1902, leaving a widow, a son (the respondent) and four daughters.

In the present suit, which was instituted on the 15th April, 1920, the appellant seeks to recover from the respondent rent for the year 1326 B.S. (1919-1920) under a kabuliyat dated the 11th October, 1917, which related to part of Jote No. 83, but it will be necessary to relate the events which led up to the execution of the kabuliyat by the respondent.

In 1910 the appellant instituted a suit for possession of Jote No. 83 against Homar Ali's widow and the respondent and obtained a decree in his favour in 1912. He executed this decree in 1913.

In 1916 he brought a similar suit for possession of Jote No. 98 against not only the widow and the present respondent, but also against Homar Ali's four daughters as well. In October, 1917, this suit was compromised as between the appellant and Homar Ali's widow and the respondent, the daughters being first excluded from the category of defendants on the petition of the appellant; a solehnama was then executed by the appellant, the widow and the respondent, under which, out of the 20 drones odd of which the holding consisted, the widow and the respondent were to hold 11 drones odd under the appellant at a rent thereby fixed and the appellant was to get khas possession of the balance of 8 drones odd. The respondent further agreed to pay a sum of Rs. 1,400 in respect of the appellant's costs and mesne profits by instalments and executed a mortgage therefor. In conformity with the compromise the appellant obtained a decree dated the 5th December, 1917. It was part of the settlement of that suit, which related to Jote No. 98, that the respondent should execute the kabuliyat relative to Jote No. 83, dated the 11th October, 1917, already referred to, which forms the basis of the present suit.

By this kabuliyat the respondent took a be kaemi (non-permanent) settlement as a yearly tenant of 10 drones odd out of the 14 drones 5 kanis odd, which made up Jote No. 83 and which were stated to be in the khas possession of the appellant, and agreed to pay an annual rent of Rs. 50 and 1,858 arhis $\frac{1}{2}$ seers of paddy or Rs. 1,239 1, the price thereof.

In January, 1920, the respondent's sisters brought a suit against the present appellant and respondent for a declaration of their right and confirmation of their possession to the extent of their share as co-heirs of Homar Ali in Jote No. 83.

The present suit was brought in April, 1920, and the relief claimed by the appellant is a decree for Rs. 2,048 14 0, made up of (1) the market price of 1,858 arhis $\frac{1}{2}$ seers of paddy, with damages thereon at 25 per cent., and (2) cash rent of Rs. 50, with damages at 25 per cent., and the further claims all other or further reliefs which the Court may think fit and proper. The leading defence was that the kabuliyat was obtained by the appellant from the respondent by fraud and undue influence; this defence was rejected by the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge and is no longer in issue.

The remaining defences were that the appellant had failed to put the respondent in possession of the subjects let and was therefore not entitled to rent, and that, in any event, the appellant was not entitled to the paddy rent at market price, but only at the price fixed by the kabuliyat, and was not entitled to damages.

The suit by the respondent's sisters and the present suit were before the same Courts. On the 13th June, 1924, the Subordinate Judge, gave decree in favour of the plaintiffs in the former suit, and on the 14th June he gave the appellant decree in the present suit for Rs. 50 cash rent and Rs. 1,589-4-0, the market price of the paddy with damages at the reduced rate of $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. He held that the respondent knew, when he executed the kabuliyat, that the whole 16 annas would not be available, and that he could not turn round and say that because the appellant could not put him in possession of the whole 16 annas he was not liable to pay rent or that the kabuliyat was not binding on him. The appellant appealed against the decree in the sister's suit, and both parties appealed against the decree in the present suit, to the District Judge.

The District Judge delivered judgment on the appeals in the present suit on the 27th June, 1925. The learned Judge held that the onus was on the respondent to prove that he did not get actual possession of any portion of the land and he declined to accept the respondent's evidence without corroboration; he, therefore, held that the respondent got possession of all the land of the kabuliyat. Differing from the Subordinate Judge he held that the paddy rent was fixed at the price in the kabuliyat, and he increased the rate of damages to 25 per cent. Subject to these modifications, he decreed in the same terms as the Subordinate Judge.

On the 19th August, 1925, the District Judge affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge in the sisters' suit against which decision the present appellant appealed to the High Court. In the present suit both parties appealed to the High Court. The appeals in both suits were heard together and one judgment dealing with both suits was delivered by the High Court on the 12th June, 1928. In the sisters' suit the judgments of both lower Courts were affirmed, but in the present suit the judgments of the lower Courts were reversed and the appellant's suit was dismissed on the ground that the onus was on the appellant as landlord to prove that he had put the tenant in possession—therein differing from the District Judge—and that, in view of the decision in the sisters' suit, it was not possible for the appellant to show that he had put the respondent in possession of the share in which the possession of the respondent's sisters had been confirmed, there being no suggestion anywhere that the latter had at any time been actually dispossessed in respect of that share.

The decree of the High Court in the sisters' suit has not been appealed from, and is now final, but the appellant has appealed against the decree of dismissal of the present suit.

The appellant maintained that the decision of the District Judge was right; he did not press his claim for the market price of the paddy rent. He contended that the District Judge rightly put the onus on the respondent of proving non-delivery of possession and claimed that the District Judge had found as a fact that the respondent was in actual possession, of all the land of kabuliyat, such finding being final and binding under s. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. The passage founded on in the judgment of the District Judge is as follows:—

"The question is whether the appellant" (i. e., the present respondent) "was given actual possession so as to enable him to cultivate it. Such possession is quite distinct from the constructive possession of a female co-sharer, which was all that was necessarily in issue in the other suit. The onus is on the appellant to show that he did not get actual possession of any portion of the land. On this point there is only defendant's uncorroborated evidence. He says: 'My father's heirs did not allow me to take possession of the lands covered by the patta. We went to Bharat Babu and Jogesh Babu and told them that I could not get possession of the land. The lands were in possession of myself and my father's other heirs. I got no possession of lands outside those which were already in my possession.' If he had stated that there had been partition among himself and his sisters and that they remained in possession of their shares, his case would have been at least intelligible, but he does not say so, and, if he had, I should not have believed him without corroboration. I hold that he got possession of all the land of the kabuliyat."

It is clear that the finding in the concluding sentence is based on the failure of the present respondent to discharge the onus of proof which the District Judge held to be incumbent on him, and is not a finding on positive evidence. Their Lordships are unable to agree that the onus was on the tenant in the present case. In their opinion, where there is no dispute as to the identity of the subjects let, but the tenant denies that he has ever got possession of the subjects, it is for the landlord to prove that he has discharged his obligation to put the tenant in possession before he can enforce the tenant's obligation to pay rent. The cases cited by Counsel for the appellant were either cases where the tenant had already paid rent under the lease or where the tenant claimed that certain subjects, of which he had not got possession, were within the subjects let, which the landlord denied. In these cases the onus would primarily be on the tenant. (Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narayan Bagchi (1), Kumar Arun Chandra Singha v. Bhagaban Chandra Roy Choudhury (2)) It was not proved in the present suit that the respondent had paid a previous year's rent.

But, further, their Lordships are of opinion that the District Judge erred in treating the constructive possession of a female co-sharer as irrelevant. The landlord must not only show that the tenant is in possession of the subjects of the lease, but that such possession was attributable to the lease, or might be so. But in the present case it is now certain that possession of the subjects must be attributed—to the extent of their 9 annas 4 pies share—to the sister's possession, for the decree in their favour declares their right and confirms their possession thereof, and, if they were not in possession and required an order for possession, a claim to a mere declaration would not be competent, in view of the proviso to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Even if they were not in actual possession, the sisters' right to such share in the subjects is established, and the appellant could not have given possession to the respondent of any part of the sisters' interest, which was an undivided share and affected the whole of the holding.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the respondent has not been given possession under the kabuliyat of the land thereby let, and that the appellant is not entitled to recover the rent as claimed. But the appellant maintained alternatively that he was entitled to the rent claimed, subject to an abatement in respect of the sisters' share, of which he was unable to give possession under the kabuliyat. Admittedly such a claim was made for the first time by the appellant at the hearing of this appeal. It is incidentally referred to by the respondent in ground No. 20 of his memorandum of appeal to the District Judge, and is nowhere else referred to, not even in the appellant's case.

Their Lordships agree with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on the evidence that the respondent got possession of that share of the land that was available for possession apart from the sisters' share; indeed, this admission is involved in the respondent's own evidence. While this case for an abated rent should have been raised and investigated along with the other questions in the case, their Lordships are of opinion that it would be an injustice, if the appellant is prepared to submit to the penalties of his failure to raise it earlier, that the respondent should escape from payment of rent in respect of the possession which he can alone attribute to the kabuliyat.

The position is somewhat unusual. Jote No. 83 consisted of 14 drones odd; of the 16 annas interest therein the respondent's sisters are entitled to a 9 annas 4 pies share under the decree of 1928, whereas under the decree of 1912 the respondent and the widow, though equally heirs of Homar Ali, have no share as such in the Jote, and the appellant has right to the balance of the 16 annas. The kabuliyat dealt with 10 drones odd out of the 14 drones odd, and one Asad-ali has obtained settlement of the remaining 4 drones odd from the appellant. Their Lordships are not satisfied that they have before them all the material on which to decide on the proper amount of the abatement. For instance, it may depend on the circumstances whether the rent under the kabuliyat should be apportioned as if the sisters had a 9 annas 4 pies interest in the land of the kabuliyat, or whether the 16 annas interest in the whole 14 drones of the Jote should be apportioned and the whole 4 drones, which were reserved by the appellant from the kabuliyat, should be treated as part of the appellant's share of the 16 annas interest in the whole Jote. If this were so, it might be that the sisters would be entitled to a larger share in the 10 drones. Accordingly¹ their Lordships are unable to dispose of the appellant's claim for an abated rent, and, in accordance with the appellant's request, if their Lordships should take that the view, the case will be remitted for the purpose of investigating and deciding what is the proper abatement to make on the rent under the kabuliyat for the year 1919-1920 in respect of the sisters' interest as heirs of Homar Ali in Jote No. 83, and for a decree for the rent after deduction of such abatement.

Accordingly the appeal should be allowed, but the appellant must pay the costs of the appeal, as he has failed in the issues raised in the case on appeal. The decrees of the Courts below should be set aside, and the case should be remitted to the High Court as above stated, leaving the costs already incurred below to be dealt with by that Court. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Mr. B. Dube for the Appellants.

Messrs. E. B. Raikes and H. R. Majid, for the Respondent.

Sir George Lowndes.—The dispute in this appeal is as to the appellants' right to pre-emption in respect of a 21/16 share in each of two villages known as Mouza Khurma and Jungle Khurma. On 27th July, 1921, the shares in question were sold by one Thakur Prasad to the respondent. It is admitted that at the date of the sale the vendor and all the appellants were co-sharers in the villages, and that the respondent was not.

Two suits were instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur on 15th and 26th July, 1922, respectively by the different appellants against the vendor and the respondent, in which the right of pre-emption by village custom was asserted.

On 2nd November, 1922, during the pendency of these suits the respondent acquired, ex facie by gift, from another co-sharer a small independent fractional share in the villages. If this transfer had been made before suit raised, and had admittedly been by gift, it could not have been suggested that the custom alleged by the appellants applied.

On the execution of the transfer last referred to, a third suit, No. 859 of 1922, was instituted by two of the appellants, alleging that the gift was merely colourable and that the transaction was in reality a sale to the respondent, and claiming the right of pre-emption in the fraction concerned, the value of which appears to have been in the neighbourhood of Rs. 20. This suit was accordingly instituted in the Munsifs Court, but was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and all the three suits were tried together.

Issues were raised as to the custom, the gift, the preferential right of the plaintiffs, and the sale price. The Subordinate Judge held the custom to be proved on the strength of entries in the wajib-ul-arz of each of the two villages. He was of opinion that the alleged gift was in reality a sale for Rs. 21-4-0; that the plaintiffs (the present appellants) had under the custom a preferential right over the respondent; and that the sale price in the case of the original transaction was that stated in the deed, viz., Rs. 12000. He accordingly, on 18th April, 1923, made decrees for pre-emption in all the three suits upon the usual terms.

The respondent appealed in each suit. His appeal in the two suits first instituted went in the ordinary course direct to the High Court, but that in the third suit (No. 859 of 1922), owing to the small value of the property, went to the District Judge, and was decided by him with commendable promptitude on 22nd October of the same year. He, for the reasons stated in his judgment, disbelieved the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses as to the payment for the fraction, and held that the transaction was a gift, and he accordingly dismissed the suit.

The appeals in the other two suits took more than three and a half years to reach a hearing in the High Court, which their Lordships cannot but regard as unfortunate. By that time a second appeal in the other suit which had been filed from the decree of the District Judge, was also ripe for hearing. All the three appeals came before the High Court on the same day, but that from the District Judge's decree (Suit No. 859 of 1922) was decided first. It met with but short shrift. The learned Judges held, no doubt quite correctly, that the finding of the lower Appellate Court as to the gift was a finding of fact which was binding upon them in second appeal, and that therefore the suit was rightly dismissed.

They then proceeded to consider the other two appeals, which they dealt with by one judgment. There was apparently no argument as to proof of the custom, the judgment being based upon the assumption that it was duly established. They were of opinion that the plaintiff

(the present appellants) had "entirely failed to prove that the deed of gift was in reality a deed of sale" and held, following a previous decision of their own High Court Baldeo Missir v. Ram Lagan Shukul (1) that the respondent had acquired by the gift and that this defeated the appellants' claim. They accordingly set aside the decrees passed by the trial Judge, and dismissed these suits also. A consolidated appeal in all the three suits now comes before the Board by special leave.

The limits within which effect should be given to a customary right of pre-emption, such as the appellants assert in the present case, have been the subject of constant discussion in the Courts of the Province of Agra. Such claims appear to be of great frequency, and a Special Bench of the High Court at Allahabad seems to have been constituted to deal with them in order to ensure uniformity of decision. In 1922 it was thought desirable to legislate, and the Agra Pre-emption Act XI of 1922 was passed ss. 19 and 20 of which dealt with question similar to those which have been debated in the present appeal, but it was held in several cases that no change had been made in the law as previously interpreted by the High Court, and in accordance with which the decision under appeal was given. The Act of 1922, was eventually amended by Act IX of 1929, s. 5 of which enacts that a right of pre-emption cannot be defeated by a gift subsequent to suit. The question in issue between the parties in these appeals therefore, can hardly arise in the case of future transactions. It is common ground that the present case falls to be decided upon the law as it stood before the passing of Act IX of 1922, and their Lordships think that if there was a current of decisions in the Allahabad High Court against the contention of the appellants, as the judgment of the Appellate Court would seem to indicate, it should not now be disturbed if not manifestly wrong.

When a sale has taken place to a stranger there are three possible views as to the rights of a co-sharer viz. (1) that an indefeasible right of pre-emption arises by the sale itself and that no change in the status or relations of the parties after the sale can affect the question between them; or (2) that the criterion must be the position of the parties when the right is formally asserted by the institution of a suit; or (3) that the validity of the claim must be judged on the facts existing on the date when a decree has to be passed.

The first view for which theoretically a good deal could be said, has been definitely discarded in the Allahabad Court. So it has been held in several cases that where between the dates of what may be called for convenience the pre-emption sale and the institution of the suit, the pre-emptor has lost his status as a co-sharer by the partition of the village: Janki Prasad v. Ishav Dar (2) or the stranger purchaser, has resold to another co-sharer Suresh Mal v. Hukam Singh (3) or has become himself a co-sharer by an undisputed purchase or by a gift: Ram Hit Singh v. Narain Rai (4) the right of pre-emption is lost.

Counsel for the appellants does not dispute the correctness of any of these decisions; his contention is that the second view is the right one in the judgment under appeal it was the third view that prevailed.

There are no doubt expressions here and there in the decided cases which suggest that the date of the institution of the suit is the crucial date, Saliq un Nissa v. Mati Ahmad (5) Rohan Singh v. Bhau Lal (6), and there is a definite body of authority that a re-sale by the stranger-purchaser after suit will not defeat the pre-emptor, Ghasitoy v. Gobind Das (7) and Kehar Singh v. Jahangir Singh (8) but these decisions may all, their Lordships think, be ascribed to the operation of the doctrine of lis pendens as embodied in s. 53, Transfer of Property Act 1882, and not to any special aspect of the law of pre-emption.

Apart from these cases the cursus curiae is, their Lordships think, clearly against the contention of the appellants. It was held as long ago as 1899 by Strachey, C. J., and Banerji, J., that a partition of the village effected after suit filed, but before decree, deprived the pre-emptor of his right Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal (9). Following this decision and quoting from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice at page 444* a case almost precisely similar to the one now before their Lordships was decided in January, 1920, by Tudball and Rafiq, JJ., who held that the vendee's acquisition by gift of a share in the village pending suit defeated the claim of the plaintiff co-sharer to pre-emption: Bihari Lal v. Mohan Singh (10). It is not suggested that either of these decisions has been dissented from in principle in the Allahabad Court; on the contrary the doctrine that the plaintiff's preferential right must be in existence at the date of the decree has been treated as the settled law of the Province: Baldeo Misir v. Ram Lagan Shukul (1) Qudrat-un-nissa v. Abdul Rashid (11), and Ram Saran Das v. Bhagwat Prasad (12).

This being the state of the authorities in the light of which the present appeals came before the Board, it only remains to consider whether the view taken by the Allahabad High Court, that the decisive date is that of the decree is one that can reasonably be supported.

The argument for the appellants which would make the filing of the suit the fact which crystallizes the rights of the parties is mainly based upon the maxim pendente lite nihil innovetur. So far as the principle of this maxim finds expression in s. 52, Transfer of Property Act, it undoubtedly applies, and due effect has been given to it in cases where the defence relied upon the resale to a co-sharer pending suit: see the instances cited above. But no authority has been brought to their Lordships' notice which would give a wider application to the maxim that this, or would suggest a general doctrine of the law that nothing occurring between the date of the institution of the suit and the decree could alter the relations existing between the parties. The maxim has been cited and the doctrine considered in many cases [Ravji Narayan v. Krishnaji Lakshman (13) and cases there cited Manual Fruval v. Sanagapalli (14), Krishappa v. Bahira (15); Brahannayaki v. Krishna (16) and Byramji

v. Chunilal (17) before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, but it has never, so far as their Lordships can discover, been applied except in cases which would now come under s. 52 of that Act. Its application in England is discussed in Storey's Equity Jurisprudence, ss. 405-6 where the cases are collected, but the learned author seems to regard the maxim applicable only to "a purchase made of property actually in litigation"; see also Bellamy v. Sabine (18).

It has also been brought to their Lordship's notice that the Courts of neighbouring Provinces have dissented from the Allahabad decisions on various points and various grounds but in the view their Lordships have taken of this appeal they think, that no useful purpose would be served by an examination of these cases. They are satisfied that the decision of the High Court now under appeal is in accordance with a consensus of judicial opinion in the Agra Province, which they think should not now be disturbed. It is stated by Sir John Edge in delivering the judgment of the Board in Digambar Singh v. Ahmad Said Khan (19) at page 18* that:—

"In all cases the object (of a custom of pre-emption) is as far as is possible to prevent strangers to a village from becoming sharers in the village."

If this object would not be attained by a decree in favour of the plaintiff-pre-emptor, it may not unreasonably be held that such a decree should not be passed. In the present case it is not now contested that the respondent was at the time when the appellants' suits stood for adjudication a co-sharer in the villages and no decree which might have been passed in their favour could deprive him of his status as such. If the acquisition by him of a share after the pre-emption sale but before the suit was instituted would be effective to defeat the appellants' claim, as it is admitted that it would, their Lordships think it difficult to see, why the same reasoning should not be applicable in the case of a share acquired at any time before the adjudication of the suit.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that these consolidated appeals fail and that the decrees passed by the High Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 14, 15, 16—Co-sharer agreeing to lease entire property believing other co-sharer had given consent—Other co-sharer refusing to join—Suit for specific performance—Maintainability—Construction of contract.

Where a co-sharer professed to grant a lease of the entire estate in a property of which he held a share only, in the belief that the lessee had already obtained the consent of the other co-sharer :

Held, that it could not be deemed that there was a concluded contract, whereby the co-sharer undertook a binding obligation on behalf of himself and the other co-sharer to obtain the lease of the property and no suit for specific performance to execute a kabuliyat and give possession can lie against the entire body of the proprietors. [p. 405, col. 2; p. 406, col. 1.]

Held, further, that even assuming that there was a concluded contract, specific performance of the agreement in part could not be decreed under s. 15, Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiff had not relinquished all claim to further performance and all right to compensation either for the deficiency or for the loss or damage sustained by him through the default of the defendants. [p. 407, col. 2.]

Messrs. A. M. Dunne and B. Dube, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Hyam, for the Respondents.

Lord Salvesen.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree dated 16th August, 1928, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which affirmed a judgment and decree dated 13th February, 1926, of the Additional District Judge of Alipore, who had reversed the judgment and decree dated 2nd August, 1924, of the Subordinate Judge of Alipore.

The facts of the case may be very shortly stated. The suit relates to three plots of land of the total area of 6 bighas, situated not far from Calcutta. The appellants, who are known as the Mittras of Shambazar, and are hereafter referred to as Mittras have a 12 annas undivided share in these lands. The defendants-respondents, hereinafter referred to as Boses own a 4 anna share. The appearing respondent, Gostha Behari Sen (hereinafter called the respondent), was desirous of obtaining a lease of the whole lands, and commenced negotiations for this purpose in the beginning of 1919 by sounding the appellants through their representative as to their willingness to lease their interests in the lands. Nothing came of these primary negotiations, but in January 1920, the appellant again called at the house of the Mittras. According to his own evidence, he was then informed that settlement could only be made with the consent of those who represented the Boses' four anna share. At the same time the Mittras indicated the terms upon which they for their part would be disposed to agree to such a lease. Within eight or ten days after this the respondent, according to his own evidence, saw the representatives of the Boses, who told him that they had given their consent to the proposed lease and had instructed the manager of the Mittras accordingly. He then called on the Mittras on 13th January, and the result of his interview with them was a document in the following terms :

"A be-meadi (without any fixed period) settlement with Gostha Behari Sen in respect of the jama (tenancy) at Bonehughli formerly held by Jogendra Nath Bagchi and at present in the khas possession of the estate is approved on the following terms: (1) A total sum of Rs. 300 should be paid as Selami (bonus) for this jama; (2) the annual rent is fixed at Rs. 60; (3) the lessee would not be entitled to alienate this jama at any time on any ground whatever; if he does, the jama would become khas; (4) if the land is acquired by Government the proprietors would get a moiety of the compensation money; (5) the lessee would not be authorized to make a permanent or Kaemi Settlement with, or to grant a long lease to, any person. 28th September 1926.

(Sd.) P. Mitra.

(Sd.) B. B. Mitra.

"13th January, 1920."

It will be observed that this document was not signed by the respondent and that it deals with the whole lands, of which it was known to the parties at the time that the Mittras only held a 12 annas undivided share. Yet, on the terms of this document alone and without reference to the evidence, which gives no support to his conclusion, the District Judge has held that it was a "final contract" and that the Mittras thereby undertook a binding obligation on behalf of themselves and of the other co-sharers that the respondent was to obtain a lease of the whole lands on the terms briefly set forth in the document itself. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that, looking to the state of mind of both parties at the time, such an obligation cannot be implied. On the one hand, the Mittras had clearly stated from the first that they would only grant a lease to the respondent if the consent of the other co-sharers was obtained and, on the other hand, the respondent was at the time under the belief that he had already secured the assent of these co-sharers to the proposed lease. It is incredible under these circumstances that the appellants should either have been asked or agreed to bind themselves to an unconditional contract of lease of lands which in part did not belong to them. On the other hand, the document is entirely consistent with the attitude of the appellants that they were adjusting the terms of the proposed lease on the footing that the other co-sharers in the lands had already consented, or at all events were prepared to consent, to a settlement on similar terms. Moreover, it was throughout admittedly in the contemplation of both parties that a formal kabuliyat would be drawn up as between the respondents and all the co-sharers in which the full terms of the proposed lease would be embodied. In fact, an oral agreement to this effect was entered into at the same interview. Thus it would be more proper to describe the document as heads of a proposed agreement than as a final contract, as it has been interpreted the District Judge.

Following on the signature of the Mittras to the document in question, the respondent paid Rs. 300, which was to be the selami in respect of the whole lands. This is easily explained on the footing that the respondent believed that he had already obtained the consent of the other owners and that the whole matter of the proposed lease had been substantially arranged with all the parties concerned.

In terms of the arrangement made as above set forth the respondent on 15th January had a draft kabuliyat prepared and sent to the appellants' representatives. This draft was revised by them and was subsequently registered by the respondent. This draft contains numerous additions to the heads of agreement of 13th January, and it is addressed not to the Mittras alone, but to the other co-sharers. So far as the Mittras were concerned, the plain inference from the terms of the kabuliyat is that no lease could be concluded without the signature of the other co-sharers to whom along with them it was addressed. On the other hand, the respondent had previously ascertained that his belief that the Boses would join in the proposed lease was unfounded. On 14th January, 1920, he called upon the Maharaja, who represented one of the co-sharers, and showed him a copy of the terms. He did not however obtain the signature of the Maharaja. Notwithstanding this, and apparently in the hope that he might yet induce the Maharaja to accept the terms provisionally arranged with the Mittras, he registered the kabuliyat on 24th January and thereafter again called on the Maharaja on 3rd February to induce him to accept the kabuliyat but failed to get him to agree to its terms. A third attempt had the same negative result. On 5th March, 1920, he caused his solicitor to write to the appellants to the effect that they and the other co-sharers had granted a permanent lease of the property in question and that the Mittras had undertaken to grant the usual amalnamah in his favour and undertook to get the same signed and executed by the Maharaja and Manmatha on behalf of the Boses. This was the first time, so far as the evidence discloses, that this attitude was taken up on his behalf, and it was not adhered to in the plaint of the suit which he raised two years later. This plaint proceeds on the footing that it had been agreed by all the owners of the property in the beginning of January 1920, that they should grant him a lease of the lands in question and the suit was accordingly directed against all the co-sharers. He accordingly prayed :

"(a) That the defendants be ordered to execute an amalnamah in favour of the plaintiff corresponding to the terms of the said kabuliyat executed by the plaintiff and annexed hereto; (b) that the defendants do make over possession to the plaintiff of the said lands and premises."

The leading issues of the case as adjusted by the Subordinate Judge were :

"2. Whether all the defendants agreed to the proposal of the plaintiff to take a lease of the land in suit? Had defendants Nos. 1 to 3 any power or authority to make settlement with the plaintiff or to act in that behalf? 4. Was there a valid agreement to lease between the parties? If so what are its terms and is it binding on all the defendants."

All these issues were found against the plaintiff by the learned Subordinate Judge, and 2 and 3, which are issues of fact have been found against the respondent by the District Judge, whose findings of fact are conclusive. On Issue No. 4, which their Lordships think was at all events in part an issue of law, they are in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge. The whole actings of the parties, and the conduct of the respondent in particular are wholly inconsistent with the view that is now put forward and was sustained by the District Judge and the High Court, that the appellants undertook a binding obligation to the respondent to lease their own 12 annas share in the lands to him irrespective of what action the other co-sharers might take. The point has never been raised in the pleadings of the parties and was only suggested in argument when the respondent's Pleader realized that the attitude taken up in the plaint was incapable of proof. The result is that there was no concluded contract of lease with respect to the land in question, the whole negotiations having proceeded on the footing that all the owners of the property would consent to the lease. As the consent of the Boses was never obtained the negotiations fell to the ground and the Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing the suit.

Even on the assumption that the interpretations put upon the document of 13th January were well founded, their Lordships would have been unable to sustain the view of the learned District Judge and of the High Court, that the respondent was entitled to the relief which has been given him. The suit as framed is obviously one for specific performance and not for a mere declaration of title. The plaintiff prays that the defendants be ordered to execute an amalnama in favour of the plaintiff, corresponding to the terms of the kabuliyat annexed to the plaint. That cannot be done as the kabuliyat is addressed not merely to the appellants, but to the other two defendants, who have never accepted it. They agree with the learned Judges of the High Court that ss. 14, 16 and 17, Specific Relief Act have no application to the present case. Section 15 however is in these terms:

"Where a party to a contract is unable to perform the whole of his part of it, and the part which must be left unperformed forms a considerable portion of the whole, or does not admit of compensation in money he is not entitled to obtain a decree for specific performance. But the Court may, at the suit of the other party, direct the party in default to perform specifically so much of his part of the contract as he can perform, provided that the plaintiff relinquishes all claim to further performance, and all right to compensation, either for the deficiency or for the loss or damage sustained by him through the default of the defendant."

And it is upon this that the learned Judges of the High Court proceeded. The proviso to the section however has been overlooked. The plaintiff has not relinquished all claim to further performance and all right to compensation either for the deficiency or for the loss or damage sustained by him through the default of the defendants. On the contrary, he claimed in his plaint Rs 600 as loss of profit already suffered and he has obtained a decree for the return of that share of the selami which enured to the 4 anna share. The learned Judges who allowed the appeal on the ground that an important question of law was involved stated this as one of the questions which they thought might properly be submitted to this Board, and their Lordships have thought it right, although in the view that they take of the case it is not necessary for their decision that their opinion should be recorded.

On the whole matter their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be sustained and the judgments of the High Court and the District Court re-called with costs, and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge affirmed. Respondent No. 1 must pay the appellant's costs of the appeal.

CARR LAZARUS PHILLIPS AND

OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Principal and surety—Deed of guarantee—Construction—Debt secured by mortgage—Surety, whether liable only for deficiency after realising mortgage securities—Right to securities.

The material clauses in a deed of guarantee ran as follows—(1) "In consideration of your having at our request agreed to obtain a loan of Rs. 40,00,000 bearing interest at six per cent per annum from the Imperial Bank of India for the sole benefit of John Carapiet Galstaun for the purpose of satisfying certain decrees and paying certain pressing debts such sum of Rs 40,00,000 to bear interest at the rate aforesaid and the repayment thereof to be secured by a mortgage to be executed by the said John Carapiet Galstaun in your favour of the properties..... We hereby guarantee to you the payment by the said John Carapiet Galstaun of the said sum of Rs 40,00,000 to the limit of our aggregate and individual liability hereinafter prescribed

(ii) This guarantee shall be a continuing guarantee, but our aggregate liability thereunder shall not under any circumstances exceed the sum of Rs. 18,00,000 and the liability of each of us individually in respect of the said sum shall not exceed the sum of Rs. 6,00,000.

(iii) Within the aforesaid limit of liability this guarantee shall extend to and be applicable to the whole debt that shall ultimately be due to you from the said John Carapiet Galstaun in respect of such advance as aforesaid and not merely to so much thereof as shall be co-extensive with our aforesaid maximum liability hereunder.

The High Court held that upon its true construction the guarantee only provided for a guarantee of the balance which should remain owing after the creditor had exhausted his remedies under the mortgage against the principal debtor. On appeal:

Held, (i) that the guarantee covered the whole debt of 40 lakhs to the limit of the aggregate and individual liability of the guarantors and not merely the deficiency remaining after realising the mortgage securities. [p. 409, col. 1.]

(ii) that cl. (iii) was a clause commonly employed in the case of a limited guarantee to enable the creditor at any rate up to a point to retain as against the guarantor dividends received in the bankruptcy of the principal debtor and it did not cut down but re-inforced the obligation imposed by cl. (i). [ibid.]

(iii) that this construction of the guarantee was not in any way affected by the practice of the Courts in India under O. XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, in relation to suits to enforce a mortgage. [p. 410, col. 1.]

Their Lordships further disapproved of the view that the sureties would not be entitled to the benefit of the securities until the whole of the 40 lakhs had been discharged. [p. 409, col. 2.]

Messrs. W. A. Greene and G. D. McNair, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther and A. T. Macmillan, for the Respondents.

Lord Tomlin.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the appellants as legal personal representatives of a deceased creditor are seeking to recover from the respondents as guarantors part of a debt due and owing from the principal debtor. Before the trial Judge the appellants succeeded but on appeal the High Court of Judicature in Bengal reversed the judgment of the trial Judge and dismissed the suit.

On 14th February 1927, one Galstaun mortgaged real estate in and near Calcutta and personal estate of various kinds to Arathoon Stephen the appellants' testator to secure a loan of Rs. 40,00,000 and interest. Stephen in fact borrowed the money from the Imperial Bank in order to lend it to Galstaun. On 9th February 1927, the respondents in connexion with the transaction had executed in favour of Stephen a guarantee in writing in the following form;

"(1.) In consideration of your having at our request agreed to obtain a loan of Rs. 40,00,000 bearing interest at six per cent. per annum from the Imperial Bank of India for the sole benefit of John Carapiet Galstaun for the purpose of satisfying certain decrees and paying certain pressing debts such sum of Rs. 40,00,000 to bear interest at the rate aforesaid and the repayment thereof to be secured by a mortgage to be executed by the said John Carapiet Galstaun in your favour of the properties included in the mortgages held by Framroz Edulji Dinshaw and a second mortgage of the properties included in the mortgage executed by the said John Carapiet Galstaun in favour of the Prudential Assurance Co., Ltd. We the undersigned Carr Lazarus Phillips of No. 33, Alipore Park Road, Alipore, Arathoon Mackertoom Arathoon of No. 3, Rowdon Street, in Calcutta, and Arathoon Theodore Oreet of Ghushick Colliery, in the District of Raneegunge hereby guarantee to you the payment by the said John Carapiet Galstaun of the said sum of Rs. 40,00,000 to the limit of our aggregate and individual liability hereinafter prescribed.

"(2.) This guarantee shall be a continuing guarantee, but our aggregate liability thereunder shall not under any circumstances exceed the sum of Rs. 18,00,000 and the liability of each of us individually in respect of the said sum shall not exceed the sum of Rs. 6,00,000, being the sum placed opposite our respective signatures at the foot hereof and should the common liability be less than the said maximum aggregate sum, the share due from each one of us in respect thereof shall be in strict proportion to his individual liability hereunder and not otherwise.

"(3.) Within the aforesaid limit of liability this guarantee shall extend to and be applicable to the whole debt that shall ultimately be due to you from the said John Carapiet Galstaun in respect of such advance as aforesaid and not merely to so much thereof as shall be co-extensive with our aforesaid maximum liability hereunder.

"(4.) You shall be at liberty without discharging us from liability hereunder to grant time or other indulgences to the said John Carapiet Galstaun and to accept payment from him in cash or by means of negotiable instruments or otherwise."

On 14th May 1927 Stephen died and on 12th October 1927 the appellants as his executors and trustees demanded from Galstaun immediate payment of the loan and interest and gave him notice that in default of payment within three months they would sell the mortgaged properties. On 15th October 1927 the respondents were notified of the appellant's demand against the principal-debtor. The principal-debtor failed to pay and on 8th June 1928 the appellants notified the respondents of this fact and demanded under the guarantee payment of six lakhs from each of them. On 12th July 1928 this suit was instituted by the appellants against the respondents who had failed to satisfy any part of the demand made upon them. On 8th April 1929 the appellants instituted a suit against Galstaun to enforce the mortgage. What has happened in that suit does not appear. On 26th April 1929 judgment in the present suit was given in favour of the appellants for six lakhs and interest against each of the respondents.

The respondents appealed and on 29th August, 1929, the judgment of a Division Bench of the High Court was given allowing the appeal and dismissing the suit. The Judges who heard the appeal appear to have taken the view (1) that upon its true construction the guarantee only provided for a guarantee of the balance which should remain owing after the creditor had exhausted his remedies under the mortgage against the principal debtor; and (2) that these remedies not having been exhausted the suit was premature and ought to be dismissed.

Ghose, J., who delivered the leading judgment was influenced by the fact that upon the construction for which the present appellants contend Galstaun might have been asked to repay immediately after the execution of the mortgage and that the guarantee would have then become immediately enforceable. He thought it must have been the intention of the parties that the security specified in the mortgage should be realized first and that the guarantee should only operate in respect of any deficiency remaining after such realizations. He further took the view that the word "ultimately" in cl. 3 of the guarantee indicated that the guarantee only covered the final deficiency.

The other Judge, Mr Page, came to the same conclusion but only after much consideration. He thought that all reference in the guarantee to the mortgage by Galstaun was unnecessary except upon the footing that the mortgage was to be realized first and as supporting the view which he adopted he laid stress upon the phrase "the whole debt that shall ultimately be due."

Their Lordships are unable to agree with the judgments of the appellate Judges. The language of cl. 1 is plain. By it the guarantors guarantee the payment by Galstaun of the sum of Rs 40 lakhs to the limit of their aggregate and individual liability thereafter prescribed.

Clause 3 is the clause commonly employed in the case of a limited guarantee to enable the creditor at any rate up to a point to retain as against the guarantor dividends received in the bankruptcy of the principal debtor.

The form of the guarantee appears to have been based upon a precedent appropriate to a continuing guarantee although the guarantee in question was not in fact a continuing guarantee, but one for a fixed sum. This may account for the presence of the word "ultimately." The word is not aptly employed, but in their Lordships' judgment the meaning of the clause in which it occurs is plain. A contrast is therein being drawn between (1) the whole of what may eventually become due from the principal debtor for principal and interest, and (2) a part of the total debt co-extensive with the guarantors' maximum liability and it is indicated that it is the whole debt and not a part which is guaranteed, although part only has to be paid under the guarantee. In other words it does not cut down but reinforces the obligation imposed by cl. 1.

Their Lordships are unable to appreciate the force of the criticism that the guarantors' liability might upon the construction of the guarantee contended for by the appellants become immediately enforceable.

The same criticism might be applied to every guarantee where there is a mortgage with a covenant by the principal debtor to repay on demand or at the expiration of some short period such as six months.

In transactions of this kind it is normal practice to make the liability to pay under the mortgage arise on demand or within a short period even though the anticipation of the parties may be that the loan will remain outstanding for a substantial time.

Nor do their Lordships understand how the reference to the mortgage in the guarantee can be treated as unnecessary. Having regard to the rights of a surety in respect of the securities taken by the creditor it is a matter of first importance to the surety to know what those securities are. Further, the fact that such a mortgage was to be taken may well have been the determining factor in inducing the guarantors to give their guarantee.

In this connexion their Lordships desire to point out that, while it is unnecessary for them in this appeal to express an opinion as to what will be the rights of the respondents in respect of the mortgage after their liability under the guarantee has been discharged, they must not be taken to approve the statement of Ghose, J., that

"not until the sureties in the present case have paid off the entirety of the mortgage debt due to Stephen would they be entitled to the securities which Stephen held, i.e., even if the sureties paid off a sum of Rs. 18 lakhs they would not be entitled to the said securities until the balance of 40 lakhs was realized. The sureties would in such a case be without any security whatsoever during the interval."

Lastly their Lordships do not think that the construction of the guarantee is in any way affected by the practice of the Courts in India under O XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, in relation to suits to enforce a mortgage.

In the result, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal should succeed and that the judgment of the Appellate Court should be reversed and that of the trial Judge restored. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The appellants will have their costs here and below.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), ss 2, 3, 13—Sale for arrears, when justified—Arrears, meaning of—Sale of share in respect of which separate account is kept—Necessary conditions—Sale before last date—Validity.

Before liability to sale under the Bengal Revenue Sales Act attaches there must be: (1) the whole or a portion of a kist or instalment unpaid; (2) the conversion of such unpaid amount into an arrear on the first of the following month, and (3) the passing of the latest date of payment of such arrear, as fixed under s. 3 and the official notice of the Board of Revenue [p. 411, col. 2]

In order to justify the sale of a share in an estate in respect of which a separate account is kept the estate must have become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, and an arrear of revenue must be due from that share according to the separate account. [p. 411, col. 1.]

By notice in the Calcutta Gazette the date for payment of instalments of revenue and the latest dates for payment of arrears were fixed as 28th June, 28th September, 12th January, and 28th March. The Collectorate account for the third kist of 12th January, 1924, showed a credit balance of seven annas four pias on the general account of Touzi No 10, and a debit balance of Rs. 55-2 in the separate account of No. 10-6, to the satisfaction of which the Collector appropriated sufficient of the money deposited with him in terms of s. 15 of the Act. In the accounts for the fourth kist of 28th March, the general account of Touzi No 10 showed an unpaid balance of six annas five pias, but the separate account of share No. 10-6 showed that the sum of Rs. 20-13, being the current demand of revenue in respect of the fourth kist, had been paid on 27th March, 1924. On the 26th June, share No. 10-6 was sold for arrears:

Held, that inasmuch as the only arrear of the revenue of the estate which could be said to justify the sale was the unpaid balance of six annas five pias of the fourth kist of 28th March, 1924, and this unpaid balance could not be considered an arrear until the first of the following month, i.e., 1st April, 1924, the latest day of payment was accordingly 28th June, 1924, two days after the sale took place—and the estate could "not become liable to sale for arrears of revenue" until after 28th June, 1924 and, therefore, the sale of share No. 10-6, was invalid on this ground alone. Krishna Chandra Bhowmik v. Pabna Dhana Bhandar, 117 Ind. Cas. 552 affirmed Saraswati Bahuria v. Suraj-narayan Chaudhuri (1), followed [p. 412, col. 1.]

Mr B Dube, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. R. Majid, for the Respondents.

Lord Thankerton.—This is an appeal against a judgment and decree, dated 23rd May, 1923, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated 22nd July, 1926, of the Subordinate Judge of Pabna, whereby a sale for arrears of revenue was set aside.

There is an estate which forms Touzi No. 10 of the Pabna Collectorate. Respondents Nos. 2 to 11, who were the original coproprietors of a share of this estate, opened a separate account for payment of their share of revenue, known as account Nos. 10-6, in terms of s. 10, Bengal Revenue Sales Act, XI of 1859. Thereafter they mortgaged their interest in the separate account along with other property to the respondent company No. 1, who, on 19th November, 1923, purchased the property along with others under a mortgage-decree of sale obtained by them in 1918. Respondents Nos. 2 to 11 then instituted suits to set aside the mortgage sales, and these suits were finally disposed of by compromise on 16th June 1924, under the compromise the sale in respect of No. 10-6 was set aside but respondent No. 1 retained their mortgage lien thereon.

On 16th June, 1924, share No. 10/6 was sold by the Collector of Pabna for arrears of revenue under the Act of 1859, and was bought by the present appellant. After an unsuccessful appeal to the Commissioner of revenue for the Division under s. 25 of the Act, respondent No. 1 brought the present suit on 10th July, 1925, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Pabna for annulment of the sale, or alternatively for a declaration that the purchase of the appellant is subject to the mortgage lien of respondent No. 1 and for possession on the basis of that lien. It is not disputed that the conditions precedent to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court prescribed by s. 33 of the Act have been complied with in the present suit.

Twelve issues were settled at the trial, but, for the purpose of disposal of this appeal, only two need be referred to, viz, "2. Was any arrear due justifying the sale by the Collector?" "10. Is the sale liable to be set aside on the ground alleged in the plaint?" The remaining issues related to various alleged irregularities in the proceedings leading up to the sale and the alternative relief asked for, and these have been dealt with in the Courts below, but their Lordships find it unnecessary to deal with them, as, in their opinion, issue No. 2 was rightly answered in the negative by both Courts below, though their Lordships have come to that conclusion on somewhat different grounds, following a recent decision of this Board, which is referred to later. The opinions of the Courts below proceeded on a construction of the Act which must now be held to be erroneous, in view of the more recent decision of this Board just referred to.

It will be convenient to refer in the first place to the relevant sections of the Act of 1859. The sale of the separate account No. 10-6 was instituted by the Collector under the authority of s. 13, which provides as follows:

"Whenever the Collector shall have ordered a separate account or accounts to be kept for one or more shares, if the estate shall become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, the Collector or other officer as aforesaid in the first place shall put up to sale only that share or those shares of the estate from which, according to the separate accounts, an arrear of revenue may be due. In all such cases notice of the intention of excluding the share or shares from which no arrear is due, shall be given in the advertisement of sale prescribed in s. 6 of this Act. The share or shares sold together with the share or shares excluded from the sale, shall continue to constitute one integral estate, the share or shares sold being charged with the separate portion or the aggregate of the several separate portions of jumma assigned thereto."

It is, therefore, clear that in order to justify the sale of No. 10-6: (a) the estate must have become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, and (b) an arrear of revenue must be due from No. 10-6 according to the separate account. What is an arrear of revenue is to be found in s. 2, which provides as follows:

"If the whole or a portion of a kist or instalment of any month of the era, according to which the settlement and kistlundi of any mahal have been regulated, be unpaid on the first of the following month of such era, the sum so remaining unpaid shall be considered an arrear of revenue."

The latest date for payment of arrears and the liability to sale are dealt with in s. 3 as follows:

"Upon the promulgation of this Act, the Board of Revenue at Calcutta shall determine upon what dates all arrears of revenue and all demands which by the Regulations and Acts in force are directed to be realized in the same manner as arrears of revenue, shall be paid up in each district under their jurisdiction, in default of which payment the estates in arrear in those districts, except as hereinafter provided, shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder. And the said Board shall give notice of the dates so fixed in the Official Gazette, and shall direct corresponding publication to be made as far as regards each district in the language of that district, in the office of the Collector or other officer."

The section goes on to provide for notice by the Board of the dates so fixed in the Official Gazette and otherwise. It is decided by the judgment of this Board in Saraswati Bahuria v. Surajnarayan Chaudhuri (1) that, before liability to sale attaches, there must be: (1) the whole or a portion of a kist or instalment unpaid, (2) the conversion of such unpaid amount into an arrear on the first of the following month, and (3) the passing of the latest date of payment of such arrear, as fixed under s. 3 and the official notice of the Board of Revenue.

As regards the present case it is agreed that, by notice in the Calcutta Gazette of 10th August, 1910, the dates of payment of instalments of revenue and the latest dates for payment of arrears were fixed as 28th June, 28th September, 12th January, and 28th March.

The admitted facts in the present case are, first, that the Collectorate account for the third kist of 12th January, 1924, showed a credit balance of seven annas four pies on the general account of Touzi No. 10, and a debit balance of Rs. 35-2, in the separate account of No. 10-6, to satisfaction of which the Collector appropriated sufficient of the money deposited with him in terms of s. 15 of the Act; secondly, that in the accounts for the fourth kist of 28th March, the general account of Touzi No. 10 showed an unpaid balance of six annas five pies, but the separate account of share No. 10-6 showed that the sum of Rs. 20-13, being the current demand of revenue in respect of the fourth kist, had been paid on 27th March, 1924, and there was thus no unpaid balance in the separate account in respect of that kist.

Reverting to the provisions of s. 13, the only arrear of revenue of the estate which is said to justify the sale is the unpaid balance of six annas five pies of the fourth kist of 28th March, 1924. But this unpaid balance could not be considered an arrear until the first of the following month, i. e., 1st April, 1924, and the latest day of payment was accordingly 28th June, 1924—two days after the sale took place—and the estate could not “become liable to sale for arrears of revenue” until after 28th June, 1924. It is, therefore, clear that the sale of share No. 10-6, was invalid on this ground alone and it is unnecessary to consider whether No. 10-6 was a share “from which, according to the separate accounts, an arrear of revenue may be due” within the meaning of s. 13; but it may be pointed out that the deficiency of Rs. 35-2, shown in the separate account of the January kist could not be considered an arrear until 1st February, 1924, and there could be no default in payment until 12th March, 1924—and that only on the doubtful assumption that, in a question with the Collector, it remained unpaid after the latter had appropriated part of the deposited moneys in satisfaction of it. But their Lordships find it unnecessary to consider this question.

Accordingly, their Lordships are of opinion that the sale should be annulled, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court of 23rd May, 1928, should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Viscount Dunedin.—This case is in a curiously unsatisfactory position.

The plaintiff is zemindar of the Parla kimeri in his capacity as trustee for two gods. The defendants are the occupying tenants of the village of Kosamala, 183 in number. The only relief asked in the plaint was as follows:

“(a) For a declaration that the settlement of the Mokhasa Amaniya village of Kosamala made in or about 1869 by the Court of Wards acting on behalf of the plaintiff's late grandfather, the then trustee of the gods Sri Ramaswami and Sri Jagannadhaswami of Parla kimeri, and continued since about 1869, by which the said village has been annually leased out at a money-rent determined according to fixed block rates, is beyond the powers of a trustee and is not binding on the plaintiff, who is the present trustee of the said gods;

(b) for a declaration that the plaintiff as the present trustee of the said gods is entitled to claim rent in kind from the defendants in respect of their holdings in the said Amaniya village of Kosamala;

(c) For an injunction directing defendants to pay rent in kind to plaintiff from Fasli 1326 in respect of their holdings in the said village of Kosamala.”

Now it is perfectly clear that the only real question raised by the above recited prayer is the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to have the rent in kind instead of money rent. But when the case got before the Temporary Subordinate Judge he framed issues which strayed far beyond that simple question and these issues were adopted by the District Judge before whom the case came to depend. Leaving out issues which were either irrelevant or redundant, the critical issues are as follows:

“(5) Are the defendants raiyyats of Kosamala with no permanent rights of occupancy?

(6) Was the melvaram (the Government or landlord's share of the crop) and kudivaram of the lands in Kosamala vested in the gods Sri Ramaswami and Sri Jagannadhaswami?

(7) Did the defendants ever pay varam rent, rent in kind according to sharing system, to the landlord?

(8) What was the system of tenure prevalent prior to 1869?

(11) Is the plaintiff entitled to claim rent in kind from the defendants for all or any of the reasons stated in plaint, paras 8 to 12?

Taking Nos. 7, 8 and 11 first, as the issues which the plaintiff justified, they raise pure questions of fact. Payment in money had even as the plaint admitted, being going on since 1863—that is, nearly 50 years—and it was proved to have been a rule since at least above the beginning of last century. The plaintiff's right to have a rent in kind depends on his being able to show that the rent in olden days used to be in kind. This he was quite unable to show, as found by the District Judge, and this finding was affirmed by the High Court when the appellant appealed against a dismissal of the suit. These are concurrent findings in fact, so that this point, the only point really raised by the plaint could not be argued before this Board. But, as has already been shown, the District Judge fixed issues which strayed into other matters, and evidence was led upon these points as raised by issues Nos. 5 and 6. The District Judge, notwithstanding that he dismissed the suit, held that the respondents had not proved occupancy rights. This finding was reversed by the High Court, who held that the respondents had occupancy rights, but that settlement by the Court of Wards of 1869 was not a permanent settlement. They therefore, dismissed the appeal and the suit was dismissed.

As their Lordships have pointed out, all this inquiry about occupancy rights and as to whether the settlement of 1869 was a permanent one, was not properly raised by the plaintiff but as both parties have without protest chosen to join issue upon these points, their Lordships see no reason why these matters in dispute should not be res judicata between them. On consideration of the evidence on these questions, which are questions of fact, their Lordships see no reason to differ from the result arrived at by the High Court viz., that the respondents have occupancy rights, but that the settlement of 1869 was not a permanent settlement.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal and find the appellant liable in costs to the respondents.

Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865), s. 1—'Belongs', meaning of—Riparian owner taking water from Government stream—Liability to pay cess—Rights of riparian owners.

A riparian owner is not liable to pay water-cess to Government for using water of a stream belonging to the Government, land on one side of which belongs to him, as he takes it in respect of a natural, or of an easement, right. Kandukuri Balasurya Row v. Secretary of State (4), referred to. [p. 415, col. 1.]

A river 'belongs' to the Government within the meaning s. 1, of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, 1865, when the solum of the stream belongs to the Government, which happens when the Government is the proprietor of lands abutting on the river on both sides or when the river is tidal and navigable. [p. 414, col. 2.]

ing on a stream and who as such has a certain right to take water from the stream. His right to the use of the stream does not depend upon the ownership of the soil of the stream and he can take water first of all for domestic use and then for other uses connected with the land of which irrigation of the lands which form the property is one. The right is a natural right and not in the strict sense of the term an easement, though in many cases it has been called an easement. In particular it is not capable of being lost non utendo and the maxim tantum prescriptum quantum possessum has no application. [p. 415, cols. 1 & 2.]

Messrs. A. M. Dunne and B. Dube, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther and K. L. Narasimham, for the Respondents.

Viscount Dunedin—The original plaintiff in this suit is dead and the suit is continued by his legal representatives. The plaintiff owned land abutting on a branch of the Godavari called the Chilapa Kalva. From that in exercise of what he considered his riparian rights, he took water. The Government, through the Collector of Godavari, charged a water-cess of Rs. 8-5-8 for his use of the water. He paid under protest and then raised the present suit against the Government to recover the money so paid. The sole question, therefore, is whether the water-cess was legally levied. The cess bore to be levied in virtue of the provisions of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, VII of 1865. The preamble of the Act is in these terms:

"Whereas, in several districts of the Madras Presidency, large expenditure out of Government funds has been, and is still being, incurred in the construction and improvement of works of irrigation and drainage, to the great advantage of the country and of proprietors and tenants of land and whereas it is right and proper that a fit return should, in all cases alike, be made to Government on account of the increased profits derivable from lands irrigated by such works:"

Then follow the words of the Act which, so far as material to the present case, are to be found in s. 1:

"1.—(a) Whenever water is supplied or used for purposes of irrigation from any river, stream, channel, tank or work belonging to, or constructed by Government. * * * * * it shall be lawful for the Government before the end of the revenue year succeeding that in which the irrigation takes place to levy at pleasure on the land so irrigated a separate cess for such water and the Government may prescribe the rules under which, and the rates at which such water-cess as aforesaid shall be levied; and alter or amend the same from time to time.

Provided that where a zemindar or inamdar or any other description of landholder not holding under raiyyatwari settlement is by virtue of engagements with the Government entitled to irrigation free of separate charge, no cess under this Act shall be imposed for water supplied to the extent of this right and no more."

Now the facts which have not been a matter of dispute may be thus stated:

(1) The plaintiff's land is bounded by the river. (2) At the place where he has taken the water there are Government lands on the opposite side of the stream. (3) He only uses the water he takes for the purpose of the irrigation of his own property. (4) The river at this place is tidal.

There are also two disputed facts: First, the plaintiff originally averred that he had taken the water at this place from time immemorial. The Government said he had only taken the water recently. The latter was found to be the case both by the Judges of the inferior Court and the Court of Appeal, and consequently it cannot be and has not been argued to the contrary by the respondents in this appeal. Secondly, the Government aver that the river at the place where the water is taken being tidal is also navigable. The District Munsif before whom the case depended found that the river was navigable by big boats for six or seven months and by fishing boats for the remainder of the year. He, therefore, found that it was navigable as well as tidal. Upon that ground and the ground that the Government owned land on the other side of the river, he held that the river belonged to the Government. Riparian rights to be good against the Government, he decided, must be customary immemorial rights, and as he had found the fact of long user against the plaintiff, he decided that the cess was duly levied and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge he confirmed the judgment of the Munsif on substantially the same grounds. Appeal being taken to the High Court in Madras, they reversed the judgment and decreed the suit.

As to the river being navigable, they were not satisfied that the evidence tendered was sufficient. They considered that navigability must extend during all the year and, as the character of the fishing boats had been left dubious, they would have been prepared to remit the case for further evidence on the point had it been necessary for them to do so, but, in their opinion, the case could be disposed of upon the assumption that the river did in terms of the section "belong" to the Government, and they accordingly proceeded on that assumption. The judgment of the Court was decided by Ramesam, J., and the deciding passage may be found expressed as follows:

"A riparian right is a natural right and is not acquired by immemorial user. It exists by law, it may be lost by the adverse enjoyment of another but it has not got to be enjoyed to be kept up. Whatever the enjoyment at the date of the grant may be, the measure of the right that passes is determined only by the configuration and the width of the river and stream. I, therefore, think in this case the plaintiff is entitled to draw water from the Addarapu kalva in exercise of his rights as a riparian owner and so long as he does not extend those rights he is not liable to water-cess. That in India rights of the riparian owner include also the right to take reasonable quantity of water for purposes of irrigation scarcely admits of any doubt.

There have been in the Madras Courts a considerable number of cases dealing with the Act of 1865. The judgments pronounced in them, and still more the dicta contained in the judgments, are exceedingly contradictory. In their Lordships' view, it would serve no good purpose to go through the cases and pick out the different dicta with which they do or do not agree. They prefer, therefore, to lay down quite shortly the various propositions in law which suffice for the determination of the present case.

The first question that presents itself is obviously whether the river in the phraseology of the Act "belongs" to the Government. Now the word "belongs," easily applicable to works, etc., is obviously ill suited to be applied to a river. Running water at common law, though many people may have the right to take and use it, belongs in a river to no one. It passes on and successive people have rights in regard to it. So that literally no "river" could belong to the Government unless it was a river which from the source to the sea was within Government lands, or tidal and navigable so that it was always Government property. But clearly the word "belongs" cannot be so restricted. The idea, therefore, must be that the river belongs to such person or persons as have the ownership of the water for the time being at the place at which it is taken. Belonging points to exclusive belonging. It, therefore, seems to follow that within the expanded meaning a river only belongs to the Government when the solum of the stream belongs to the Government. This will happen either when the Government is proprietor of the lands abutting on the river on both sides or when the river is tidal and navigable. So much for the expression as it was used in 1865. But then there is the Act of 1905. That Act with its general and sweeping enactments has certainly the effect that in future when there is a contest as to the right of water, the opponent of the Government will be put to prove his title. He will not be able, as he otherwise would have been when attacked by the Government, to put them to prove their title. But Counsel for the Government did not argue that the Act of 1905 made the river belong to the Government, and as the natural rights of persons are expressly excepted it can have no effect on the riparian rights of the parties in the present case.

The result is that in this case the river only belongs to the Government if the river is both tidal and navigable. Their Lordships, without deciding, will assume, as the High Court did, it is so; for if it is not, the right to levy cess is gone. They will, therefore, assume that it is. Now come the following considerations:

(1). A riparian owner is a person who owns land abutting on a stream and who as such has a certain right to take water from the stream. In ordinary cases the fact that his land abuts on the stream makes him the proprietor of the bed of the stream usque ad medium filum. But he may not be. He may be ousted by an actual grant to the person on the other side, or he may be and often is ousted by the Crown when the stream is tidal and navigable, because where the stream is tidal and navigable the solum of the bed belongs to the Crown. Yet in neither of these cases are his rights as a riparian owner to take water affected. He would have no right in the two cases put to erect an opus manufactum in the bed of the stream even if from the point of view of navigation or diversion of the direction of the flow it was unobjectionable, for the land is not his, but his right to take water remains. In Lyon v. Fishmanger's Company (1) in the judgments of Lord Chancellor Cairns, Lord Chelmsford and Lord Selborne will be found clearly laid down these two propositions; (a) a riparian owner has the same rights in a tidal and navigable river as he has in a river which is not tidal and navigable; (b) the right of a riparian owner to the use of the stream does not depend upon the ownership of the soil of the stream.

(2) The right of a riparian owner to take water is, first of all, for domestic use, and then for other uses connected with the land, of which irrigation of the lands which form the property is one. But there is a difference in degree between these primary and secondary rights. The whole matter was carefully explained by Lord Cairns in Swindon Waterworks Company v. Wills and Berks Canal Naviga- tion Company (2). At page 704* Lord Cairns says:

"Undoubtedly the lower riparian owner is entitled to the accustomed flow of the water for the ordinary purposes for which he can use the water, that is quite consistent with the right of the upper owner also to use the water for all ordinary purposes, namely, as has been said, ad lavandum et ad potandum, whatever portion of the water may be thereby exhausted, and may cease to come down by reason of that use. But, further, there are uses no doubt, to which the water may be put by the upper owner, namely, uses connected with the tenement of that upper owner. Under certain circumstances, and provided no material injury is done, the water may be used and may be diverted for a time by the upper owner for the purpose of irrigation. That may well be done; the exhaustion of the water which may thereby take place may be so inconsiderable as not to form a subject of complaint by the lower owner, and the water may be restored after the object of irrigation is answered, in a volume substantially equal to that in which it passed before."

The same views were expressed by Lord Macnaghten in the more recent case of McCartney v. Londonderry and Lough Swilly Railway Company (3). At page 317† he says:

"In the ordinary or primary use of flowing water a person dwelling on the banks of a stream is under no restriction. In the exercise of his ordinary rights he may exhaust the water altogether. No lower proprietor can complain of that. In the exercise of rights extraordinary, but permissible, the limit of which has never been accurately defined and probably is incapable of accurate definition, a riparian owner is under considerable restrictions. The use must be reasonable. The purposes for which the water is taken must be connected with his tenement, and he is bound to restore the water which he takes and uses for those purposes substantially undiminished in volume and unaltered in character."

Now, in speaking of the returning of the water it must be remembered that both Lord Cairns and Lord Macnaghten were speaking of a diversion of the whole stream. When only a part of the stream is taken, and that for purposes of irrigation, the only limitation is that the amount taken shall not be so much as to hurt the right of the inferior owner to have the stream passed on to him practically undiminished.

(3) Further, the right is a natural right and not in the strict sense of the word an easement, though in many cases it has been called an easement. In particular, it is not capable of being lost non utendo and the maxim tantum prescriptum quantum possessum has no application. It is not the only right of this class—analogueous to an easement and yet not strictly an easement. The right of support, that is to say, the natural right of support as distinguished from the easement of enhanced support, is another example. It is probably a confusion as to this that led the lower Courts in this case astray.

Applying these principles, it follows that the plaintiff had absolute right to take the water and use it for irrigation of his property, for there is no complaint at the instance of a lower proprietor that too much has been taken, and he uses it for his own property alone. But then comes the Act, and although the plaintiff is within his rights in taking, yet on the hypothesis that the water comes from a river belonging to the Government, he is liable in cess unless he can have resort to the proviso. In Kandukuri Balasurya Row v. Secretary of State (the Urlam case) (4), which has been so often cited and so often commented on, Lord Parker puts the point quite clearly at page 172*

"If, for example, a riparian owner irrigates his land with water derived from a river or stream of which it can be truly said that it is a river or stream belonging to the Government, a cess would appear to be leviable even though the Government had never spent a single rupee in improving the source of supply. If in order to avoid this result, reliance were placed on the first proviso, the question would arise whether it were possible to imply some engagement with the Government arising out of the natural or prescriptive right of the riparian owner."

The case that Lord Parker is here putting is where there is no more than the naked fact that the taker of the water takes it in respect of either a natural or of an easement right. Lord Parker did not go on to decide in terms the question he had raised. He did not do so because there was something more to be considered in the case before him, viz., the effect of the sanad arranged at the time of the Permanent Settlement. Nor does Kandukuri Balasurya Row v. Secretary of State (the Urlam case) (4) actually decide the present case, because the rights of the zemindar in question were easement rights. The actual decision necessarily shows this, because the enjoyment was limited by the size of the channels and cuts which brought the water. Nevertheless in the present case their Lordships think that what was clearly laid down in that case decided the point. It was obviously possible to argue that by engagement was meant an engagement which specially dealt with the supply claimed, but this argument was rejected.

On page 173* Lord Parker says:

"Their Lordships cannot accept the contention that the proviso applies only where there is an express contract that the supply to which the person claiming the protection of the proviso is entitled shall be free from anything in the nature of a future tax."

And then the judgment goes on, after a review of history as to the Permanent Settlement and an argument which need not be quoted, to find in terms that the Government sanad permanently fixing the jama for the property (which, it may be added, was accompanied by the zemindar's kabuliyat or counterpart engaging with Government for the payment of the permanently settled jama) may be such an engagement, though it makes no mention of water rights. In other words, if the water rights claimed are within the property which was, so to speak, enfranchised by the jama fixed at the Permanent Settlement, then the sanad which fixed the jama is an engagement within the meaning of the Act. Of course, the Permanent Settlement was dealing with the Government right to a payment which represented and replaced the mel a-ram of more ancient times, but the test is the same as the test which would be applied to a conveyance. In a conveyance you ask what passed. In the case of the Permanent Settlement you ask what was the extent of the property that was settled. In the Kandukuri Balasuri Row v. Secretary of State (Urlam case) (4) the water rights in question passed because they were existing water rights enjoyed by way of easement at the time of the settlement. Here what passed was the property, and the property, being riparian, had inherent in it without special mention the riparian rights. While it must be understood that their Lordships must not be held to concur in each and all of the expressions used in the judgment of the High Court, they are of opinion that the result arrived at by them was right.

An observation is not out of place that, although it is well settled that an enactment cannot be cut down in its meaning by the preamble, yet it is at least satisfactory to feel that the present judgment is in accordance with the express intention of the preamble when a judgment to the opposite effect would have been a flagrant overstepping of it. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal, with costs as between Solicitor and client, in accordance with the terms upon which the Government obtained special leave to appeal in this case.

First Civil Appeal No. 131 of 1928.

July 6, 1931.

KHWAJA MOHAMAD NOJR, and SCOROP & JJ.Syed SHAH MUHAMMAD KAZIM—*DEFENDANT—APPELLANT*versus*Syed ABISAGHIR AND OTHERS*—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadian Law—Wakf, essentials of—Constructions of grant—Valid objects—Some of objects invalid, effect of—Sajjadanashin—Ground for removal—Sajjadanashin and mutawalli, distinction between—Court's powers to separate offices of mutawalli and sajjadanashin—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 92—'Trust and trustees,' meaning of—'Public,' meaning of—Trust not admitted—Application of section—Necessary parties in suit under section—Suit for removal of trustees, maintainability of.

In determining whether or not a particular grant is a wakf it is not of much importance to see in whose name the grant is made. The crucial question is always for what purpose the grant is made.

In order to interpret a document and to determine whether or not the property granted to an individual by name is wakf it is necessary to refer to the customary use of the income of the property. [p. 420, col. 2.]

The term 'wakf' literally means detention or stoppage and the legal meaning of it according to the Hanafi School of Muhammadan Law is the extinction of the proprietor's ownership in the thing dedicated and its detention in the implied ownership of God in such a manner that the profits may revert to and be applied for the benefit of mankind. [p. 420, col. 1.]

The requirement of a valid wakf is a substantial dedication of the usufruct of the property to charitable, religious or good purposes within the meaning of Muhammadan Law, no particular form is necessary for creating a wakf. A wakf may be construed from Royal grants of property made in favour of individual persons as long as it is for a perpetual religious charitable or good purposes. The dedicator need not use the word wakf at all or may not formally transfer the property to the ownership of God and the appropriation of property to pious and charitable purposes would suffice to constitute a wakf. A grant to an individual heritable by his descendants may be a wakf. If there is a substantial dedication to a valid object it will not cease to be a wakf because some objects are mentioned which are not legal objects of wakf. The wakf will be valid and the whole income will be devoted to for the valid purposes. The expenses over the drum-beaters, casual visitors and maintenance of the sajjadanashin of a khankah and his heirs are objects of a valid trust. The essentials of a valid wakf are: (1) an appropriator must destine the ultimate application of the income to the objects not liable to become extinct; (2) the appropriation must be at once complete; (3) there must be no stipulation in the wakf for sale of property and expenditure of the price on the appropriator's necessities; (4) perpetuity must be a necessary condition. [p. 420, col. 2; p. 421, col. 2.]

A present to a dead man cannot by any stretch of imagination be construed to mean a personal grant to the successor of the saint. [p. 423, col. 1.]

A khankah is a monastery or religious institution where darveshes and seekers of truth congregate for religious instructions and devotional exercises.

professing esoteric belief, whose teachings and personal sanctity have attracted disciples whom he initiates into his doctrine. A khankah is usually under the governance of a sajjadanashin who not only acts as mutawalli or manager of the institution and of the adjoining mosques, but also as the spiritual preceptor of the adherents. The founder is generally the first sajjadanashin and after his death the spiritual line (sil silla) is extended by succession of sajjadanashins. Generally members of his family chosen by him or according to the directions given by him in his lifetime or selected by the faqirs and murids are formally installed. [p. 423, col. 2.]

An assignment of income does not always mean an assignment of corpus. All depends upon the terms of the grant and its construction. [p. 428, col. 1.]

Though the partition of the endowment itself is illegal, distribution of profits arising from it is legal. [p. 429, col. 1.]

The usage can be taken into consideration in deciding whether there is a trust. [p. 430, col. 2.]

The words 'trust' and 'trustees' in s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, have been used in their ordinary sense and not in any technical sense as used in English Law or in the technical sense in which the word wakf is used in Muhammadan Law. Section 92 contemplates that there is a property burdened with obligations for purposes of a charitable or religious nature. It will apply in all cases whether wakf or not where there is a clear indication that there is an obligation annexed to the property in favour of religious or charitable objects of a public nature. [p. 431, col. 1.]

A trust in the sense of an obligation attached to the ownership of property is known to and recognised by Muhammadan Law. [ibid.]

The distinction between an English trust for charitable and religious purposes and a wakf under Muhammadan Law is more historical than legal. Different systems of law have different explanations as to the legal ownership of a property dedicated for public, religious or charitable purposes. English law recognises two estates one legal and another equitable. Imam Abu Haneefa holds the ownership continuing in the appropriator, his two disciples hold the ownership to be in God, Shias in the beneficiaries and the Hindus in the idol. But whatever may be the difference in the conception of the legal ownership of the property there is no difference whatsoever that the beneficiaries have a right in the property which the Courts will enforce. The distinction of legal and equitable estate is of no consequence. The same Courts exercise both jurisdictions. The difference in the law of trust and wakf as to the transferability or otherwise of the property is also due to this difference in the conception of ownership of the property. As under English law the legal ownership is vested in a human being he can transfer it subject to the obligations placed upon it. Under the Muhammadan Law while the ownership is vested in God the mutawalli is His manager; he cannot transfer the corpus of the property. A wakf in the terms of English Law is a trust and the legal ownership is vested in God and the equitable ownership in the ceteris que trust, and as nobody can transfer the property vested in God the wakfs are not transferable. [p. 431, col. 1.]

A person who himself comes in possession of properties as trustee cannot take up the position that they are his private properties. [p. 434, col. 1.]

The word 'public' in s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, means a section of the public and it is beyond dis-nd for distribution of alms and charities etc. are objects of a public nature within the meaning of the section. [p. 434, col. 1.]

In a suit under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, only the trustee is a necessary party. [p. 434, col. 2.]

Section 92, Civil Procedure Code, applies even when the trust is not admitted and the very existence of the trust is in dispute. [ibid]

Where there is a breach of trust a suit for declaration that there is a trust and for the preparation of a scheme or removal of the trustees is maintainable only under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 434, col. 2.]

A sajjadanashin can be removed where a proper case is made out against him for such removal. Cases of mismanagement or in capacity will not ordinarily be sufficient to remove a sajjadanashin as distinct from the managership of the property. It must be shown that the man is not only incompetent to manage the property but that he is of such a low morality that his continuance as the superior head of the sacred shrines and institutions is repugnant and undesirable. [p. 435, cols. 1 & 2.]

Even if the office of the sajjadanashin and that of the manager have been held by one and the same person since the creation of the trust, if the Court finds that the present incumbent is unfit to continue as manager though quite worthy to be sajjadanashin it is not bound to follow either the terms of the grant, if any, or the usage which has been in force so far. [p. 437, col. 1.]

Courts will not apply the principle governing the case of a mutawalli to a sajjadanashin. By him the spiritual line of the founder is continued. People become his disciple mostly not so much on account of his personal qualifications but on account of the fact that by becoming his disciple they will connect themselves in a spiritual link with the founder saint. [p. 435, col. 1.]

A sajjadanashin is not a mutawalli and his powers of expenditure are wide and as long as he keeps up the institution in a fairly decent condition he is not accountable to anybody. [p. 437, col. 1.]

First Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 12th May, 1928.

Sir Abdul Rahim (with him Messrs. Hasan Jan, A. A. Syed, Syed Hasan, Gholam Muhammad and H. R. Kazmi), for the Appellant.

Mr. Khurshaid Husnain (with him Messrs. Muhammad Hafiz, Syed Ali Khan, A. H. Fakhruddin, Amir Ali Khan Warzi, Syed Naimul Haq, Ali Saghir and Ahmad Reza), for the Respondent.

Khawaja Mohamad Noor, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted with the previous sanction of the Legal Remembrancer under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and relates to the properties mentioned in schedules 1a and 1b of the plaint commonly known as the Maulanagar khankah estate, on the allegation that they are public trust properties and is for their declaration as such with a prayer that a scheme be prepared for their management and for the removal of the defendant from his office of sajjadanashin and manager and, finally, for a declaration that a substantial part of their income is to be spent upon public, religious and charitable objects.

Maulanagar estate has its origin from a Mughal macan Saint Shah Najimuddin alias Shah Maula who settled in the locality sometime in the latter part of the seventeenth or in the earlier part of the eighteenth century A. D. This saint seems to have attracted the attention of the ruler of Bengal and a grant of Pargana Abhaipur was made to him. This grant is not available nor its exact date is known, but its terms can fairly be gathered from a subsequent grant or sanad relating to this very pargana in favour of Shah Gholam Maula, the successor of Shah Najimuddin. By the sanad dated the 22nd Jama deusani 1161 A. H. (1748) Nawab Alivardi Khan, the Governor of Bengal, made or confirmed a grant of Abdaipur to Shah Gholam Maula who, it is said, was the wife's brother of Shah Najimuddin—a fact which has been accepted by the compiler of the Gazetteer of the District of Monghyr. Two copies (or copies of copies) of this sanad are on the record. A complete copy has been filed by the plaintiff (Ex. 10) and an incomplete one (Ex. V) by the defendant. They are in the form of an order to the Revenue Officer of the State (motasaddis etc.) Leaving aside the controversial words of the sanad for the present it recites that the entire pargana aforesaid (Pargana Abhaipur Sarkar Monghyr in the province of Bihar) had been from before granted revenue-free (i) for defraying the expenses of the drum-beaters appointed by Huzur (the Nawab himself) and for the casual visitors to the Moulanager khankah and as madadmash (maintenance) of the holy saint Hazrat Shah Najimuddin Ali deceased. It then proceeds that having regard to the rights (or claims) of the Great Divine Shah Gholam Maula sajjadanashin (successor) of the deceased saint the grant as per detail is confirmed in the name of the Great Sheikh Muhammad Bhek, a servant of the said Shah

"It is proper that you (meaning the Revenue Officer of the pargana) should consider that the entire pargana aforesaid is granted revenue-free for defraying the expenses of the casual visitors to the Moulanager khankah and the drum-beaters appointed by Huzur and madadmash (maintenance) to Shah Gholam Maula descendable to the children etc. etc."

Then comes the details of the properties and again the terms of the grant are practically repeated.

This grant was by a sanad dated the 11th of March 1791 (Ex. U) in favour of the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula confirmed by the East India Company when they took over the Diwani of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. It appears that (the exact date is not known) another grant consisting of Mustafanagar etc. was made in istamrari mukarrari settlement to Shah Gholam Moula by the Governor of Bengal under the seal of Raja Sitab Rai. This was also confirmed by the East India Company under a sanad dated the 7th of February 1787 granted to the aforesaid persons. This recites that Mustafanagar and Murtazanagar etc. were given in istamrari mukarrari to Shah Gholam Moula for defraying the expenses of the students, the faqirs (beggars) and the casual visitors of Moulanager khankah and confirms and enjoins that the said persons should make proper cultivation of the said villages and, after payment of the istamrari mukarrari jama, should utilize the entire jama in defraying the expenses of the casual visitors, students etc. The revenue free property of Pargana Abhaipur and the mukarrari istimrari of Mustafanagar etc., and their appurtenances are the subject-matter of the present litigation.

The suit was instituted by five plaintiffs, but subsequently nine Muhammadans of Moulanager with the sanction of the Legal Remembrancer were added as plaintiffs. Four of the latter subsequently withdrew from the suit and the remaining ten proceeded with it. The plaintiff's case is that the properties described above, namely, Pargana Abhaipur and villages Mustafanagar and Murtazanagar etc., are endowed properties and constitute a trust for public purposes of a religious and charitable nature and that a substantial part of their income should be spent towards such object. They allege that according to the custom prevailing in this trust the properties are managed by sajjadanashins and that on the death of a sajjadanashin his successor is elected by the maintenance-holders who are by courtesy called share-holders. The sajjadanashin is to spend suitable amounts on the religious and charitable objects of the trust and to distribute the balance among the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula called by courtesy share holders; and according to the same custom, the sajjadanashin on his installation is to execute an ekrarnama binding himself to carry out the objects of the trust and, as its counterpart, the electors execute a mahzarnama describing the duties of the sajjadanashin and the manner in which he is to carry them out. The plaint goes on to say that in pursuance of this custom the last sajjadanashin was Shah Sami Ahmad, that up to his time visitors were looked after and a madrassa was kept up and in short the trust was fairly well-managed. On his death in 1913, however, the defendant was elected sajjadanashin, though with some demur. He has avoided the execution of the customary ekrarnama and he committed various acts of malfeasance and misfeasance. Consequently in October 1922 with the previous sanction of the Legal Remembrancer a suit was instituted for his removal. In that suit the defendant denied the existence of wakf but later on the matter was compromised out of Court and on the petition of both the parties the suit was dismissed without costs on the 22nd of June 1923, the defendant having executed an ekrarnama on the 21st of June 1923. The terms of this ekrarnama are given in detail in the plaint. It is alleged now that subsequently the defendant started committing acts of mismanagement and breaches of trust and has even gone the length of cancelling the ekrarnama executed by him on the 21st of June 1923. On these grounds the plaintiffs seek the removal of the defendant from the sajjadanashinship of the khankah and estate and ask for preparation of a scheme for their management.

In the written statement the defendant controverts almost all the allegations of the plaint and on the pleadings the learned District Judge framed nine issues and decided all in favour of the plaintiff. He has passed a decree removing the defendant, directing the full discovery of the trust estate and the taking of its account from the defendant, declaring that the public, charitable and religious objects are a first charge on the estate and directing the preparation of a scheme for carrying out of the objects of the trust. He has appointed a Receiver to take charge of the properties pending preparation of the scheme and the appointment of a manager or sajjadanashin. The defendant has appealed.

Sir Abdur Rahim appearing on his behalf has confined himself to Issues Nos. 1, 5 and 6 as framed by the learned District Judge.

Issue No. 1.—Is the suit maintainable?

Issue No. 5.—Is the subject-matter of the suit a trust property as contemplated by s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code?

Issue No. 6.—Has the defendant been guilty of charges, set out in para. 22 of the plaint on any breach of trust or neglect of duties and is he or not a fit and proper person to hold charge of the trust properties?

The fifth issue is the main issue in the case and I take it up first. Sir Abdur Rahim contends that the property in suit is neither a wakf under Muhammadan Law nor a trust under the English law. The term 'wakf' literally means 'detention or stoppage' and the legal meaning of wakf according to accepted doctrine of the Hanafi School is the extinction of the proprietor's ownership in the thing dedicated and its detention in the implied ownership of God in such a manner that the profits may revert to and be applied for the benefit of mankind.

The earliest decision on the question is Kulb Ali Hussain v. Syf Ali (1). There the Court had to construe a Royal grant enjoining that Mauza Bishunpur should be exempted from the payment of revenue, that the profits arising from its land should be applied to the support of religious mendicants and students and the repairs of mosques and other public edifices, and that the general superintendence of its resources should be confided to one Darvesh Hussain and should remain vested in him, his heirs and successors. The Saddar Diwani Adawlut basing its decision upon the opinion of its law officers held this to be a wakf. The law officers declared that the appropriation of land or other property to pious and charitable purposes is sufficient to constitute a wakf without the express use of that term in the grant. The grant was again in issue in the case of Asheerooddeen v. Sreemutty Drobo Mayee (2) and was found to be a wakf. See also the Sasaram case, Quadira v. Shah Kabeer Oodden Ahmud (3). The second of the two grants which formed the subject-matter of that case is an order on the Revenue Officers (as in the present case, in the following terms.....

"granted as inam altumgha free from all charges to Shah Quamooddeen for the support of travellers Let the Imperial Officers constantly remembering this order leave the above grants in his and his children's possession from generation after generation."

In this case the grant was to Shah Quamuddin by name and not by virtue of his holding any office, to him and his children, heirs and successors for the support of travellers etc. The words used are "warid sadir" as in the grant which is the subject-matter of the present litigation. Thus the only difference between the grant in the Sasaram case and this grant is that there is a clear mention of a provision for the maintenance of the grantee and his descendants. The effect of this case is to lay down that a grant to an individual, heritable by his descendants, may be a wakf in spite of the fact that the word wakf is not mentioned and that there is no transfer of the property to God. The Muftis, while dealing with the firman which I have quoted above, expressed their views in the following terms.—

"We infer from the purport of the second firman that Sheikh Quamuddin is the grantee and the travellers are mentioned, because many such alight at a Sheikh's house and become a burden on his hospitality. Whereas then Sheikh Quamuddin is a determinate grantee, the intent of the grantor is the creation of a proprietary right in him by that permanent grant and not a wakf."

This is exactly the contention of Sir Abdur Rahim before us. He argues that as the travellers and others used to visit Shah Najimuddin and Shah Gholam Moula, the grantor made a grant to them personally in order to enable them to meet the expenses. When the case was referred to Kazi-ul-kazzat, he gave as his opinion that 'there were some expressions in particular firmans which might be considered as conveying a gift with certain stipulations for the repair of the khankah and support of the poor and others which supported the construction of their being a grant of wakf'. Then comes a very important passage: "In cases of such perplexity", he declared, "reference should be had to the custom of the country and the question should be decided by the sense attached by common usage to the expressions." In other words, the opinion was that in order to interpret a document and to decide whether the property granted to an individual by name is or is not wakf, it is necessary to refer to the customary use of the income of the property. The Sasaram wakf came up again for consideration before the Privy Council in Jewan Dass Sahoo v. Shah Kabirooddeen (4). Their Lordships construed the grant and held that the word 'altumgha' or 'altumgha inam' used in the Royal grant does not by itself convey an absolute proprietary right to the grantee where from the general tenor of the grant it is to be inferred that a wakf or endowment to religious and charitable uses was intended; and that it is not so necessary to consider the words used in the grant as to find out what the intention of the grantor was. When I come to consider the various documents produced in this case I shall show from the grants that the grantor intended that at least a substantial portion of the income of the property, if not the whole of it, should be devoted to public, charitable and religious purposes. Sir Abdur Rahim relies upon the decision in Kuneez Fatima v. Saheba Jan (5). In this case there was the sanad as usual addressed to the mut-saddis, chowdhuries and kanungoes of Pargana Bhagalpur. The grantee had a large family to support and had to defray the expenses of a khankah for travellers and benighted students etc., and in consideration of this the village was given to him at a fixed annual jama of Rs. 896. It was found as a fact that the property had never been considered as endowed by any of the descendants of the original grantee and was not wakf. In this case the grant was made in favour of an individual and recited that the grantee had to meet certain expenses and, therefore, the grant was being made; it was clearly a case in which the expenses incurred by the grantee were motives for making the grant and the treatment of the property as private was considered as a ground for holding the property not to be a wakf.

The next case to be considered is the decision in Muthu Kana Ana Ramanadhan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (6), which was modified by the Privy Council: Mutu K. A. Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (7). The High Court as well as the Privy Council held that the test whether a deed was or was not valid as wakf was to see if the effect of the deed was to give the property substantially to charitable uses. Then the Judicial Committee observed that in that case though the sum devoted to the charities was not large for the present, it was abundant for their need; and that the dominating purpose and the intention of the grantor in executing the deed was to provide for those charities. In the case of Abdul Rahim v. Narayan Das Aurora (8), their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider the question of a wakf in which there were severable provisions for substantial religious purposes and for the benefit of the settlor's family. The dedication was held to be a wakf in spite of the fact that there were some provisions for the maintenance of the family of the dedicator himself.

Another case is Balla Bai v. Ata Ullah Khan (9), where their Lordships held that the wakf is not necessarily bad because of auxiliary provisions made therein by the settlor for the maintenance of himself and his dependants. But it was held that if the bulk of the income is settled on the line of one's own descendants and need only go to charity on failure of any such line—an event which might be definitely postponed—and the settlor's real purpose is to make a family settlement, there can be no substantial dedication of the property to charity and the wakf would in consequence be invalid. In consequence of the passing of Act VI of 1913 and Act XXXII of 1930 the last view is no longer law, but this case is an authority for the proposition that a 'substantial dedication to charity is sufficient to validate a wakf.'

The following principles seem to me to emerge from the above cases: the requirement of a valid wakf is a substantial dedication of the usufruct of the property to charitable, religious or good purposes as understood in the Muhammadan law; no particular form is necessary; a wakf may be construed from Royal grants of properties made in favour of individual persons as long as it was for a perpetual, religious, charitable or good purposes. The dedicator need not use the word wakf at all or may not formally transfer the properties to the ownership of God. If there is a substantial dedication to a valid object, it will not cease to be a wakf because some objects are mentioned which are not legal objects of wakf.

This being the law let us examine whether the properties in question are wakf. The earliest document available is Ex. 50, a copy of a grant by Alivardi Khan to Ghulam Bhek, a servant of Shah Gholam Moola. At the top of this copy there are words the reading and meaning of which have been the subject-matter of controversy before us. The appellants would read them as 'naqul-Moula Karim' and contend that the first word 'naqul' means a copy. This according to the appellants is no part of the contents of the grant. They contend that the copyist started with this heading in order to indicate that it was a copy of a copy. They would take the subsequent two words 'Moula Karim' to indicate the name of the grantee. The respondents contend that the words are "Bafazal Moula Karim" meaning "by the grace of the Master, the benefactor" and that as the Governor of Bengal was creating a wakf, and dedicating the property to God, he invoked His blessings. In my opinion it is not at all necessary to decide this controversial question. The reading of the first word may be either "naqul" or "bafazal". Most probably it is "naqul" (copy) indicating that it is being copied from a copy and the next words "Moula Karim" may be the invoking of God. It has been the practice even up till recent times (though now rarely) in writing anything even private letters, to begin with the name of God. This does not indicate anything. Muhammadans call the deity by various names which are about one hundred in number. They are called isim safat (the names of the attributes of God) as distinguished from isim zat (the name of the person of God). The word Allah meaning God is the name of the person of God. All other names are the names of His attributes: as for instance Rahim merciful, Ghaffar forgiver and so on. The word "Moula Karim" literally means 'Master the benefactor.' Among other names the word "Moula" has particularly been used here having regard to the name of the man in whose favour the grant was being made. A similar thing will be found in Ex. 30. At the top of it is the word "Howal quadir" meaning 'He is the powerful' namely the Deity. But this particular attribute of God (that is, Quadir Powerful) has obviously been used in consideration of the name of the saint in whose spiritual line the writer of the document was i. e., Sheikh Abdur Qadir Jilani, the famous saint of Bagdad: (see the evidence of the defendant Shah Muhammad Kazim). This choosing of a particular attribute of God to indicate God Himself is sometimes done according to the occasion when that name is being used. I am, therefore, of opinion that the word "Moula Karim" at the top of the document refers to God but is merely formal, the epithet being chosen in consideration of the name of the man who was the ostensible grantee. This does not help either the plaintiff or the defendant. There are, however, later on the words, 'nazar Moula Karim' which mean offering or present to Moula Karim. The official translator has not translated the word 'Moula Karim' and their translation was again a subject-matter of controversy between the parties. The appellant contends that it is the name of the grantee in whose favour the grant was being made and according to the respondent it means God. Its literal meaning is "Master the benefactor." I shall discuss this later on. Leaving aside these controversial meanings of some words the grant says :—

"Whereas the entire pargana aforesaid (Pargana Abhaipur) has been from before granted revenue-free as nazar (present) (torn) for defraying the expenses of the drum-beaters appointed by the Huzur (i. e. the Governor himself) and of the casual visitors to the Moulanager khankah and madad mash (help for livelihood) to the only saint Hazrat Shah Najimuddin Ali deceased, now having regard to the rights (or claims) of the Great Divine Shah Gholam Moula Sajjadanashin (successor) of the deceased saint, the grant as per detail is confirmed in the name of the Great Sheikh Muhammad Bhek, a servant of the said Shah."

Having found the translation of this grant in the paper book to be unsatisfactory, we directed a re-translation by the Head translator. Copies of this were supplied to the parties and one is attached to this judgment and the case has been argued on its basis. The word torn was obviously "Moula Karim". This is clear from the use of this word later on in the description and in some subsequent rubkars. The grant is addressed to the Revenue Officers of the Pargana Abhaipur. It is obvious by reading the grant as a whole that before this grant this very pargana had been given in revenue-free grant to Shah Najimuddin Ali. It is immaterial whether the words used in the description 'nazar Moula Karim', refer to Shah Najimuddin, who was admittedly called Shah Moula also, or indicate a present to God. As I have said, to constitute a wakf it is not necessary that the property should specifically be made over to God. On the other hand a grant to a person may be wakf. The learned District Judge thought that an epithet applicable to the Deity could not have been applied to a human being however saintly he might be and that view is in accord with strict Islamic ideas, but the fact is that in course of time these exclusive attributes of God have come to be applied to human beings of high and saintly characters for instance Hazrat Ali, son-in law of the Prophet is called Moula Ali indicating that he is the master of all. In my opinion the words 'nazar Moula Karim' are not used in respect of the grant which was then being made by this document to Shah Gholam Moula. It says that the property was from before "nazar Moula Karim" i. e., a present to Moula Karim. The grant in question (Ex. 50) is a confirmation or renewal of a grant which had been made previously to the predecessor of Shah Gholam Moula, namely, to Shah Najimuddin. As I have said it is not of much importance as the case-law indicates in whose name the grant is made. The question always is, for what purpose the grant is made? This document shows that prior to this grant there was a khankah at Moulanager that drum-beaters were deputed by the Governor at that khankah and that the grant was made to Shah Najimuddin for the purposes of maintaining these drum-beaters who were deputed by the Governor and for the expenses of the casual visitors to the khankah and for the maintenance of the saint himself. The question arises, whether a grant like this is or is not a wakf?

The points for consideration are:

(1) Was this a grant to the institution namely, to the khankah of Moulanager, or was it a grant to Shah Gholam Moula personally?

(2) Is the expenditure mentioned in the grant simply a recital of the motive for making the grant or is it the object of the grant?

(3) Are the objects fit ones for a valid wakf under the Muhammadan Law?

(4) Does the grant fulfil the requirements of a valid wakf under the Muhammadan Law.

I have already mentioned that the grant starts with a recital that Pargana Abhaipur had been from before a revenue-free grant as nazar (torn) and I have held that the portion torn was certainly 'Moula Karim'. I have no doubt also that the property in question has been described as 'Nazar Moula Karim' that is, a present to Moula Karim. It is to be noted that the sanad recites that at the time of this grant Shah Najimuddin was dead. If the words refer to him, then it means that the property was being presented to the deceased saint. Now a present to a dead man cannot by any stretch of imagination be construed to mean a personal grant to the successor of the saint.

In the case of Sujjada Muhamad Yusuf v. Shaw Habit (10), there was a grant to a living saint Hazrat Khaja Rahamtulla as a present to the Prophet Muhammad for the purpose of feeding the poor and it was never contended that it was not a valid wakf or that it was a personal grant to the saint. Therefore in my opinion whether the words 'Moula Karim' refer to Shah Najimuddin who was then dead or to God, they in no way indicate a personal grant to Shah Gholam Moula. As to the nature of a khankah and the position of a sajjadanashin they have been referred to in various decisions: see Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Baluswami Aiyar (11), Piran Bibi v. Abdool Karim (12) and Mohiuddin v. Sayiauddin (13) and are fully described in Amir Ali's Muhammadan Law Vol. 1.

In Muhammad Hamid v. Mean Mahmud (14), Lord Cave, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, observed that the khankah is a monastery or religious institution where darveshes and seekers of truth congregate for religious instructions and devotional exercises. It has generally been founded by a darvesh or a sufi professing esoteric belief whose teachings and personal sanctity have attracted disciples whom he initiates into his doctrine. After his death he is often revered as a saint. A khankah is usually under the governance of a sajjadanashin (the one seated on the prayer mat) who not only acts as mutawalli or manager of the institution and of the adjoining mosques, but also as the spiritual preceptor of the adherents. The founder is generally the first sajjadanashin and after his death the spiritual line (sil silla) is extended by succession of sajjadanashins. Generally members of his family chosen by him or according to the directions given by him in his life-time or selected by the faqirs and murids are formally installed.

Now it will be noticed that the grant now in question was made to Shah Gholam Moula describing him as sajjadanashin of the deceased saint Shah Najimuddin. In fact it is a renewal of the grant which had already been made to Shah Najimuddin; the property is the same, the purposes of the grant are the same and the expenditures mentioned are the same. Under the circumstances on the grant itself it cannot but be held that the grant was being made to the institution and not the saint.

Then it should be noticed that though the grant being made to Shah Gholam Moula, the actual grant is in the name of his servant Sheikh Gholam Bhek. The compiler of the Gazetteer, basing his information on tradition says that Shah Gholam Moula did not like to take a grant for himself but agreed to take it if it was for charitable purposes. This tradition is certainly of some value and is admissible in evidence.

Now as to the expenses mentioned in the grant itself, the order in which they are mentioned are of no importance. The first is the item, drum-beaters deputed by Huzur i. e., the Governor himself. The translation of Naubatnawaz as drum-beaters is in a way correct but requires a little explanation. 'Naubat' literally means 'turn' and Nawaz means one who plays a musical instrument. In days when striking clocks were not in vogue Kings and other big men used to employ drum-beaters to beat drum to mark the time. There was also Naubat played on ceremonial and festive occasions; it was a paraphernalia of the King. Saints are treated as Kings of the spiritual world. The appellation 'Shah' (which means King) is almost invariably used before their names as is borne out from the sanad itself where the grantee and the deceased saint were described as Shah Najimuddin and Shah Gholam Moula. The khankahs of these saints were treated by their successors and by the devotees as if they were King's Courts and devotees provided for these institutions the paraphernalia of a King's Court. The "Ura" i. e., the anniversary of the death of the saints took the place of the ceremonials of a Royal Court. Accordingly in this sanad we find the Naubat Nawaz or drum-beaters were deputed by Nawab Aliverdi Khan himself and naturally the Nawab had to make provisions for their maintenance. It cannot, therefore, be said that this was an expenditure which Shah Najimuddin or Shah Gholam Moula were incurring themselves and it was with a view to relieve them of this burden that this grant was made.

The next item of expenditure is 'warid sadir'. Warid means incomer and sadir means outgoer. The two words taken together mean casual visitors or travellers. I have described a khankah. When a khankah is established and the reputation of the saint presiding at it spreads far and wide, large number of persons come to visit him and to receive from him religious and esoteric teachings. Apart from these the institution becomes a shelter for wayfarers and forlorn and indigent travellers. It is absolutely impossible for the saint to provide for their board and lodging. Ordinarily, unless there is a sufficient income attached to the institution such people have to make their own provisions or go away disappointed. Pious men with religious instincts have from time to time made provisions for these people. The word used in the sanad is "jehet" which means for the purpose of. It is the same word which has been used in the Sasaram grant which had been the subject-matter of various decisions referred to above. Clearly the grant was for the purpose of the expenditures on these casual visitors and travellers and not as a motive to relieve the grantee from the expenses which he had been incurring. The words are "warid sadir khankah Moulanager" (casual visitors to the khankah at Moulanager) and not casual visitors to the grantee.

The next item is "madad mash" to the grantee, namely, Shah Najimuddin or Shah Gholam Moula and his descendants. The question arises whether this was for the purpose of maintaining the grantee in his individual and private capacity or in his capacity as sajjadanashin. Provision for a sajjadanashin is not a provision for the man, but for the institution. A khankah cannot exist and continue without a sajjadanashin. In other systems the personal expenditure of the head of such an institution has been curtailed to almost nothing by enjoining celibacy as for instance in the case of Christian monasteries or Hindu maths and sangats. But Islam prohibits celibacy and a saint with a family is the rule rather than an exception. In these circumstances devotees and adherents of the khankah have always made provisions for the maintenance of the sajjadanashin and his family so that he may devote all his time to imparting religious and spiritual instructions to his disciples and be free from secular cares. A sajjada- nashin is an integral part of the institution and the central figure so to speak therein. Its existence depends on his personality. In him is supposed to continue the spiritual line. Therefore, I would hold that the provision for the maintenance of Shah Gholam Moula and his descendants was a provision for him as the head of the institution which he was then occupying as a sajjadanashin of Shah Najimuddin. It was a trust and not a personal grant. In the case of Mahomed Athar v. Ramjan Khan (15) the grant was described as madadmash (for the maintenance) of the mutawalli. The learned Judges held that it was a public endowment. Their Lordships observed as follows :

"The expression madadmash has been defined in Mitra's Tagore Law Lectures (1885) on the Land Law of Bengal as follows : madadmash grants are not uncommon in Bengal. They were made for religious purposes and as such are inalienable. The grants were in perpetuity. The distinction between madadmash and grants of similar nature known by other names is very little except as to the origin and use of the land."

The grant in the case of Kulb Ali Hussain v. Syf Ali (1) was also described in the firman as the madadmash grant to Mullah Faquiruddin but it was nevertheless held to be a public endowment. This interpretation was put on the firman in the case of Asheerooddeen v. Sreemutty Drobo Moyee (2). In the case of Abdullah Sahib v. Hyder Beg (16) a grant to an individual who was servant of a mosque for the mosque was held to be public trust. I have already said that the grant was originally made to Shah Najimuddin. It was renewed not in favour of his natural heir but in favour of his successor-in-office as sajjadanashin of the Moulanager khankah. Part of the expenditures (Naubat Nawaz) was imposed upon the khankah by the grantor himself and the grantee Shah Gholam Moula is being described not in his individual capacity but as a successor (sajjadanashin). There is nothing in the grant from which it can be inferred that the expenditure mentioned therein represents a mere pious wish. I therefore hold that the objects of expenditure mentioned are the objects for carrying out which this grant was made.

Sir Abdur Rahim has laid much stress

3. Are the objects upon the fact that a provision for naubat nawaz (drum-beaters) cannot be the subject-matter of a valid wakf. This is so if the drum-beaters are detached from the institution; such a provision by itself does not come within the scope of the Muhammadan Law. But I have shown that the drum-beaters in this case are the drum-beaters attached to the khankah, and I have shown the object of having them. They are the necessary paraphernalia of a khankah of some schools of sufis like an organ for a Christian Church. I have shown that according to the evidence of the defendant's witness himself the drum-beaters perform an important function. 'Naubat' is played four times a day and on important occasions. Admittedly, "warid sadir" and "madadmash" for the sajjadanashin are valid objects of waqf, as well as maintenance of a khankah.

In Jugatmoni Chowdrani v. Romjani Bibee (17) the Calcutta High Court held the essentials of a valid wakf to be these; an appropriator must destine the ultimate application of the income to the objects not liable to become extinct; secondly the appropriation must be at once complete; thirdly, there must be no stipulation in the wakf for sale of the property and expenditure of the price on the appropriator's necessities; and fourthly, perpetuity must be a necessary condition. In my opinion all the conditions are fulfilled in the present case. Sir Abdur Rahim attacked this grant on the following grounds. He contended that in the grant in question there is no ultimate reversion to charity; the property has not been tied down and as the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula may become extinct or the khankah itself disappear the object is not a perpetual one. True it is that perpetuity is a necessary condition; but according to the acknowledged and accepted view it is not necessary to mention it at the time of the dedication: In other words, though all the jurists insist that the property should be dedicated permanently and the right of the donor therein parted with for ever, according to Abu Yusuf it is not necessary that the word 'abad' (perpetual) should be mentioned or that the object in favour of which the dedication is primarily made should be of a continuing and permanent character. According to him when the dedicator has named a purpose liable to failure, even then the wakf is valid, and after failure of the object the property will be for the poor though they are not named. Now in this particular case it is obvious that the grant was perpetual. The grant itself uses the word 'ba farzandan' or 'generation after generation.' This being the law, I have no hesitation in overruling this contention raised on behalf of the appellants. I have already held that provisions for Shah Gholam Moula and his family are valid objects of wakf as they were provided for not as individuals but as persons connected with the khankah. But assuming that these provisions do not come within the purview of the legal objects of a wakf, even then such a wakf will not be invalid. I have referred to the case of Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das Aurora (8) where a mixed wakf was held to be valid; see also Bazlul Ghani Meah v. Adak Patari (18). In Muthu Kana Ana Ramanadhan Chettiar v. Vava Levvani Marakayar (6) the High Court of Madras held that a gift by way of wakf partly for valid charitable purposes and partly for the donor's heirs will not be void because the latter is not a legal purpose of a wakf. The wakf will be valid and the whole income will be devoted for the valid purposes. When this case went up to the Privy Council in Mutu K. A. Rama Nadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (1), the Lord Chancellor delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed:—"The paramount purpose of the grantor was evidently to provide for all the needs of those charities up to the limit of the trust funds the income received from the land. Those needs are the first burden upon that income. It is the residue, which may be a dwindling sum that is given to the family." I shall show later that in this case it is the residue which has been left for the family of Shah Gholam Moula. Sir Abdur Rahim, however, contends that no proportion between charity and non charity having been fixed either in the earlier grant of Aliverdi Khan or in the later confirmations of the East India Company, the wakf is void for uncertainty. I have said more than once that in my opinion the provisions for Shah Gholam Moula and his family are charitable and religious purposes; but assuming they are not, the fixing of a proportion is not necessary. It was considered in the two Madras cases above referred to, and both the High Court of Madras and the Privy Council decided that this did not militate against the property being a wakf. The Madras High Court held that the fact that the donor did not direct the proportion in which the income should be divided between charities and his heirs who were appointed trustees will not raise a presumption that he intended the heirs to take the whole. It must be presumed that charities and his heirs should benefit equally. The Privy Council did not go so far, but held that the trustees were bound within the limits of the funds to make reasonable and proper provision and if they failed to do so they would be set right by a proper tribunal. A wakf is not invalid if the proportion of appropriation between several objects is not specified; 35 Ind. Cas. 880 Makh-lachar Rahman v. Fazlur Rahman (19). This is exactly according to the English law on charities. The law is thus laid down: "When a testator gives funds partly for objects which are charitable and partly for objects which either are not charitable or do not specify the proportion in which the funds are to be applied for the different objects, the Court will make an apportionment". Again where a fund is given for several objects—some charitable and some non-charitable or illegal, there being a clear intention to devote some part to the charitable objects, if it can be ascertained what are the proportions to be attributed to the several objects, the Court directs an enquiry, but if from the nature of the gift it appears impracticable to fix the proportion or the proportion were to be in the discretion of the trustees, the Court divides the funds equally between the different objects (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 4 paras. 233, 237). I therefore hold that Ex. 30 creates a valid wakf.

Hitherto I have been dealing with the earliest grant that for Pargana Abhaipur. On the assumption of the Diwani by the East India Company this grant of Aliverdi Khan was confirmed by them under a sanad (Ex. U). This sanad also starts with the words 'Moula Karim' discussed above. While giving the details of the property, it describes them almost in the same manner as the sanad (Ex. 30). Great stress is laid on the wording in this sanad which as usual is an order on the Revenue Officer of the pargana: 'You should regard them (the heirs of Shah Gholam Moula) as mukhtar (malik of the said pargana)." The learned District Judge has rightly pointed out that the word used is mukhtar (one having power) and not malik. But apart from this for whatever purpose the grant is made, its holder for the time being is, for the purposes of the Revenue Officers, a malik. They must deal with him as such. At about the same time another grant of Mustafanagar and other villages was confirmed by Ex. W which shows that before this confirmation Mustafanagar etc., had also been granted by the Governor of Bengal to Shah Gholam Moula. The last few lines of this grant are important. They are :—

"The said persons—should make proper cultivation of the said villages and, after payment of the istamrari mukarrari jama, utilize the entire amount in defraying the expenses of the casual visitors and in meeting their own necessities and devote themselves to the prayer of God for the eternal welfare of the estate."

In the body of the sanad among the expenses mentioned are students, the faqirs (beggars), the casual visitors to the Moulana-nagar khankah. I do not propose to discuss these two confirmatory grants (Exts. U and W) in detail. What I have said above about Ex. 30 applies to these two grants with much more force and clearly indicates that the grants were wakf and not personal grants. In Ex. W the words 'devote themselves to the prayer of God' obviously refer to the necessity of relieving the sajjadanashin from secular burdens and thereby enabling him to devote himself to the works of a sajjadanashin which as head of the khankah he was expected to do. These three documents, namely, Exs. 50, U and W are the only grants relating to the property in question and they prove wakf.

Let us now examine the usage in respect of this property and contemporaneous expositions of the grants as established by evidence. Fortunately the parties are not at variance about the facts. The controversy is as to their effect. Shah Gholam Moula had obviously been in possession of Pargana Abhaipur in revenue free grant and Mustafanagar etc., as istamrari mukarrari. On the 18th Ramzan 1190 A. H. Hizri (7th November 1776) he executed what is described as a werastnama (Ex. 30). An old copy of this is before us and though damaged in places the operative clauses are clear. We found the original translation to be unsatisfactory and directed it to be retranslated. We have used it and a copy of it is attached to this judgment. The document describes the children and grand children the said Shah ha and then goes on to say that the balance (of his property) remaining after spending the produce thereof on sadabart (daily alms) at Maulanagar khankah and on casual visitors and drum-beaters etc., should after him be divided into eight shares and then it describes who the recipients of these eight shares were to be. It should be noted that what he willed to be distributed was not the corpus of the property but the income thereof left after meeting the religious and charitable expenses. This document is relied upon by both the parties. The appellant contends that Shah Gholam Moula treated this property as his personal one and distributed it among his descendants. They rely upon the words "which are owned and possessed by me at present," while Mr. Khurshaid Husnain on behalf of the respondent contends that if the property was not wakf from before, Shah Gholam Moula created a wakf by this instrument. In my opinion neither of these contentions can be accepted. Shah Gholam Moula neither treated the property as his own or dealt with it as such nor is there any indication in this document that he was thereby creating a wakf. Had it been so it would have been a mixed wakf which I have shown is valid. Even if it were a wakf for his family alone it would have been valid now, but it would not have been a public trust. In this document there is however no indication that he was creating a wakf. He called this document a werastnama. It is however clearly a trust and I shall deal with this aspect of the case later on. On the other hand the contention of the appellant that he was treating it as personal property is untenable. No doubt the words "owned and possessed" are mentioned, but they are loose expressions. It only means that the properties were in possession and control of Shah Gholam Moula. He was doing nothing more than ensuring that after his death the arrangement for the expenditure of the income of the property should be carried on as it was carried on in his life-time, namely, that the charitable expenses should be met first. It seems that he had two grandsons from a predeceased son and he was anxious that after him they might not be left out from the maintenance and the sajjadanashin for the time being may not appropriate the whole thing himself. He says :

"The balance of the income thereof (after meeting the expenditure on sadabarat (daily alms) at Moulana-nagar and on khankah and on casual visitors and on naubat players, establishment and Court (expenses) [will after me be divided into eight shares.]”

This is exactly what was indicated in the original grant (Ex 50) and the two confirmatory grants (Exs. U and W). Had the property been the private property of Shah Gholam Moula the property itself would have been divided and not the balance of the income which is left after meeting all the charges on religious and charitable heads. Sir Abdur Rahim contends that the assignment of the income is tantamount to an assignment of the corpus. He relies upon the case of Hemangini Dasi v. Nobin Chando Ghosh (20) for the proposition that the gift of share of rents and profits amounts to a gift of the share in the corpus of the estate; but in the case before us there is no gift or devise of a specific share of the rent or profit of the property. What is devised and distributed is what remains after meeting the expenses enumerated. This can in no sense be taken to be a distribution of a specific share of the rents or profits of the property. The balance may dwindle down to nothing as the expenses on charity may increase. The proposition that an assignment of the income means an assignment of the corpus is not of a universal application. It depends upon the terms of the grant and its construction: see Shookmoy Chundra Das v. Manohari Dassi (21), which was upheld in Shookmoy Chandra Das v. Manohari Dassi (22), and Rameshwar Narain Singh v. Riknath Koeri (23). It appears that after Shah Gholam Moula some trouble arose as to the manner in which the property was to be managed and as to the right of the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula in it. They executed an agreement dated the 9th of Ramzan, 1206 Fasli, corresponding to the 15th of February 1799; Shah Gholam Hussain son of Shah Moula, was at that time the sajjadanashin. He is described therein as mukhtarkar (manager) and not a sharer or proprietor (Ex. Z-44). This document is relied upon by the appellants, but there is nothing in it to indicate that the properties were dealt with as private properties, rather it shows that they were treated as endowed properties and an arrangement for their management was being arrived at by the various persons concerned. I have shown above that the two confirmatory grants of the East India Company were made one relating to Pargana Abhaipur in 1780 and the other relating to Mustafansagar in 1787 and this arrangement was arrived at shortly after the second one. The appellant's contention cannot be accepted. Gholam Hussain was a sharer to the extent of about a fourth because according to Ex. 30 he was to get two shares out of the eight shares in which Shah Gholam Moula divided the remainder of the income left after defraying all the charitable and religious expenses but still he is described as mukhtarkar.

Then there are various rubkars of the Collectorates of Bhagalpur and Monghyr. The learned District Judge has dealt with them in detail and I do not wish to traverse the same ground again. Suffice it to say that in none of these proceedings was there ever any claim made that the properties were the personal properties of the maintenance-holders or 'share holders.' I may mention that much stress has been laid upon the use of the word 'share-holders'. To my mind this does not show anything. They were in fact share holders of the residue and this will not make them proprietors. However the result of the examination of the various rubkars referred to by the learned District Judge in his judgment is that from the time of the death of Shah Gholam Moula up till now the admitted position has been that the property was managed by a sajjadanashin and manager who was elected by the persons interested in the distribution of the remainder; and he managed the property, met the expenses on religious observances and charities and distributed the remainder among the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula pro rata. Reliance has been placed upon the fact that these alleged rights to receive the maintenance or the remainder have been the subject-matter of some transfers. I have examined these documents. Apart from the question of validity of such a transfer in none of them has a share of the property itself or of the corpus been transferred, but only the right to receive a share of the surplus. Mr. Khurshaid Husnain contends that such a transfer is illegal. This is beside the point. The question is whether these transfers in any way militate against the property being a wakf. The distribution of the remainder among the descendants of the mutawalli is not illegal and is permissible.

Such cases have arisen in the past. In Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents of Muhammadan Law, Chap. IX, we find that though the partition of the endowment itself is illegal, a partition of the profits arising therefrom is allowable (case 3). The profits also of endowment being of right to the heirs and should be distributed amongst them; but the law of inheritance does not obtain in this species of distribution, the heirs taking per capita. Nor will the portion of one be greater than that of another supposing them to be of equal knowledge and piety. This doctrine is maintained in the Hedaya (case 7). The fact that in this case the division has been per stirpes and not per capita does not affect the question. This is a matter between them inter se and will not in any way prejudice the charitable and religious character of the endowment. As I have said before the rubkars show that the sajjadanashin and manager and the so-called share holders were before the Revenue Authorities several times and on every occasion they clearly admitted that the income of the properties was to be employed in the first instance in meeting the charitable and religious observances of the khankah and the balance to be utilized and enjoyed by them. Occasions have arisen in which outsiders, for instance, one Sham Singh, charged them with misappropriation and breaches of trust. The Collectors and other Revenue Authorities summoned them and investigated the matter and found that the charities were being properly looked after. In one of them (Ex. Z-3) it is clearly mentioned that the expenditure on charities was at that time found to be more than half of the net income.:

"From this it is (torn) clear that out of the entire proceeds of the said pargana after paying the village expenses and the salaries of the servants connected with the collection of rent (torn) which is one of the necessary expenses, more than half of it is applied towards meeting the expenses of the khankah as given in the sanads and the balance which is less than one-half according to the account is spent on meeting necessary expenses and madad mash of all the co-sharers whose number is very large."

The defendant's grand-father Shah Yasin was the sajjadanashin. When he died the defendant's father was an infant. So instead of him Shah Alay Ahmad was appointed sajjadanashin and manager. Shah Yasin's widow claimed that her infant son should be appointed the sajjadanashin. There was a civil suit which ultimately went up to the High Court; vide Bibee Sayeedan (on behalf of her infant son Shah Mahomed Wasien v. Syud Allah Ahmed (24); the case referred to the present khankha, Musammât Sayeedan admittedly being the grand-mother of the present defendant and Shah Alay Ahmed was the de facto sajjadanashin at that time. Bibee Sayeedan lost the case. The dispute there was a succession versus election. I am not using this judgment of the High Court as proof of any particular fact decided therein. But it is admissible in evidence to show that at that time the question of the private nature of the property could have been raised but was not raised. The dispute was about the office of the sajjadanashin and the managership of the property. The whole contention of Sir Abdur Rahim has been that the property is a private one liable to division among the heirs and the expenditure on charities is at the option and sweet will of the sharers; he contends that they may spend any amount they like or if they choose, they need not spend anything. It was, he explains, for the convenience of the management that they by a compromise (Ex. Z-44) mutually agreed to have a sajjadanashin or a manager appointed. This claim of the appellant is not supported by a word in the record. On no occasion has anybody barring the defendant ever thought fit to claim that the properties were private. All the documents show that the expenditure on charities was considered obligatory and that the keeping up of a sajjadanashin or manager did not depend upon the will of the share-holders.

Much stress has been laid upon the fact that the properties and the institution were not taken charge of under Regulation XIX of 1810. That Regulation was enacted with a view to the proper management of wakfs, debuttars etc. and the superintendence and control of the institution were vested in the Board of Revenue, the Collectors of the districts being appointed local agents. Sir Abdur Rahim has contended that the authorities did not bring this institution under their control, as contemplated in the Regulation, and that therefore it should be presumed that there was no trust for religious and charitable purposes. On the other hand the respondent contends, relying upon the various rubkars exhibited in the case, that as a matter of fact the institution was brought under the control of the Board of Revenue under that Regulation. The Regulation, as I have said, vested the Board of Revenue with the powers of control and the Collector of the district was appointed the local agent. The Regulation was passed in 1810 and ceased to be in force after the passing of Act XX of 1863. The rubkars (Exs 32 to 39) filed on behalf of the plaintiff and (Exs. X, Y, Z to Z 7) filed on behalf of the defendant refer to the intervening period. They show that the khankah and the properties were on many occasions the subject-matter of investigation and enquiries by the Collector and his subordinates and on some occasions reports were sent even to the Board of Revenue. Mr. Khurshaid Husnain contends that all these indicate that though the authorities did not formally and directly assume the control of the estate, they from time to time looked into the management and satisfied themselves that everything was all right.

First of all no authority has been placed before us to show that if an institution was not taken charge of under the Regulation, it is to be presumed that it was not a public endowment. Certainly if it was taken charge of, it will be almost conclusive proof of the fact that it was a public institution. But the converse is not correct. Secondly, as the learned District Judge has pointed out, the authorities were not very consistent in their interpretation of the Regulation. I find in the rubkar (Ex. X) that the Collector was of opinion that as the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula were receiving maintenance out of the surplus income of the properties, the Regulation did not apply. This rubkar shows that one Shyam Singh filed a petition informing the Collector that the income of the properties being misappropriated and on inquiry held, it was ascertained that the income was being applied to the expenditures provided for in the various sanads. The sajjadanashin was called upon to produce three years' account papers. The last portion of the rubkar runs thus:

"Accordingly on a perusal of the Council's sanads dated the 9th February, 1780, and the deposition of the said Shah it has been ascertained that the entire pargana aforesaid was granted for defraying the expenses of casual visitors, drum-beaters and meeting the necessary expenses, that is, the personal expenses of the aforesaid persons. In the circumstances I am of opinion that Regulation XIX of 1810 is not applicable to the said pargana and the allegations of Shyam Singh are quite false."

On the other hand I find from (Ex. Z-3) that the Deputy Collector of Monghyr was of opinion that the Regulation did apply to the estate in question. The report is in these terms:

"However, we are of opinion that the Regulation is applicable so far as the expenses of the khankah appertaining (torn) are concerned. But as the defendants are meeting the aforesaid expenses which fact has been proved as mentioned above, and as there is not the least doubt about it is not in any way liable for interference and reiterated inquiry on the part of the Government."

Thirdly it seems to me that on each occasion when the matter came up before the Collector who was a local agent under the Regulation and on inquiry it was found that the institution was being well managed and that there was no mismanagement or abuse, he did not like to interfere in the details of the management. But I fail to understand under what provisions of law these inquiries were being made if they were not under Regulation XIX of 1810. It also appears that on the occasion of the appointment of the sajjadanashins the Board of Revenue was informed and its orders were obtained. (Ex. 36) shows that under the orders of the Board of Revenue the Collector visited the institution, called for accounts and submitted a report to the Board. Exhibit. 39 shows that the Board of Revenue passed orders as to the sajjadanashinship of the estate. From all these my conclusions are that though the estate was not formally taken up under the Regulation some sort of control was being exercised, and that could only have been under the powers vested in the Board of Revenue and the local agent under that Regulation. I have said that the learned District Judge has pointed out and I agree with him, that from these proceedings it is quite clear that the action of the authorities was not very consistent. This will not in any way show that the property was not a public charitable institution at least so far as the expenses of the khankah were concerned. On the whole, therefore, I hold that the properties in dispute are wakf properties or, at any rate, they are properties burdened with obligation in favour of the public and, by usage, they have been treated and dealt with as such. The usage can be taken into consideration in deciding whether there is trust. A trust of public nature was decided on the basis of usage in the cases of Kumaraswamy Asary v. Lakshmana Goundan (20) and

Court of Wards v. Ilahi Bakhsh (26): see also the observations of Chamiar, J., in 11 Ind. Cas. 166 Puran Atal v. Darshan Das (27) which were upheld in Purna Atal v. Darshan Das (28).

Hitherto I have discussed whether the property is wakf under the Muhammadan Law and I have held that it is so; but for the purpose of the suit, however, it is only necessary to find whether the properties are trust for public, religious or charitable purpose and come within the purview of s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. The words 'trust' and 'trustee' have not been defined in the Code and, in my opinion, the words as used in s. 92 have not been used in any technical sense of the term as used in English Law or in the technical sense in which the word 'wakf' is used in Muhammadan Law. The words have been used in the ordinary sense "Trust" in the most enlarged sense in which that term is used in English jurisprudence may be defined to be an equitable right, title or interest in the property, real or personal, distinct from legal ownership thereof; and "trustee" is a person holding the legal title of property under an express or implied agreement to apply it and the income arising from it to the use and for the benefit of another person". (Story). Under the English conception of the term, trust conveys the idea of two estates and two parties: a legal estate vested in the trustee and an equitable estate vested in the cesti que trust or beneficiary. Obviously therefore had the word 'trust' been used in the Code in the technical sense of the English jurisprudence the section would have been inapplicable either to wakfs of the Muhammadan Law or to debuttars of the Hindu Law. But it has been held in a long series of decisions that this section does apply to Muhammadan wakfs and to Hindu debuttars where there is no conception of two estates and two ownerships. What is required for the purposes of s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code is to find whether or not there is a property burdened with obligations for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature. It will apply in all cases, whether wakf or not, where there is a clear indication that there is an obligation annexed to the property in favour of religious or charitable objects of a public nature. The word "trust" as used in Act XIV of 1920 was the subject-matter of judicial interpretation in Syed Ali Hussain v. Bibi Akhtari Begam (29) by Kulwant Sahay, and Macpherson, J.J. Their Lordships held that the word was not used in the technical sense of English jurisprudence and applies to wakfs. That Act is, if I may say so, a supplement to s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the procedure prescribed in the Act may be the foundation of a suit under this section of the Code. It has however, been contended that a trust apart from wakf is, unknown in Muhammadan Law, and that the grant in question having been made by a Muhammadan Ruler, if it is not wakf it cannot be held to be a trust. I am unable to uphold this contention. If this means that a trust in the technical sense of English Law (that is, a double estate: one legal and another equitable) is unknown in the Muhammadan Law, it is so. But a trust in the sense of being an obligation attached to the ownership of the property is known and recognized by the Muhammadan Law. Anglo-Muhammadan jurists have used the word 'trust' in respect of wakf. In his well-known treatise on Muhammadan Law, the Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali (latterly a member of the Judicial Committee) has freely applied the word 'trust' to a wakf. It is difficult of course for a technical term representing a very complex notion in one system of law to have an exactly equivalent connotation in another system of law. Muhammadan Law of course does not recognise the double ownership and the double estate; an equitable right enforceable by a particular Court is unknown in the Muhammadan Law. But devoid of this technicality, wakf is a trust in the wider meaning of the term. Trust, apart from wakf, is recognised by the Muhammadan Law and is known as 'amanat'. Reliance has been placed on the dictum of Karamat Hussain, J., in Puran Atal v. Darshan Das (21) for the proposition that trust apart from wakf is unknown in the Muhammadan Law. This view was however not accepted by his Lordship's colleague, Chamiar, J., (afterwards Chief Justice of this Court) and it was the view of the latter which ultimately prevailed in the Court of Appeal in Puran Atal v. Darshan Das (28). With my profoundest respect to the former learned Judge, I must point out that the view on the law of wakf as enunciated by him is opposed to a large number of judicial decisions of this country which I have referred to above. Reference has been made to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Baluswami Aiyar (11). In my opinion their Lordships did not lay down that a trust apart from wakf was not recognised by the Muhammadan Law. That was a case in which the applicability of Art. 134 of the Indian Limitation Act was under consideration and their Lordships held that in Muhammadan wakf and Hindu debottars the property is not transferred to a trustee and, therefore, the Article did not apply. No doubt their Lordships remarked that the charitable dispositions of Muhammadans and Hindus did not manifest themselves in creating trust but in creating wakfs and debottars. Their Lordships were in that case using the word 'trust' in the English sense of the term and that judgment is no authority for the proposition that a trust is unknown to Muhammadan Law. On the other hand trusts apart from wakf even for charitable and religious purposes, have been recognised by our Court: vide Futtoo Bibee v. Bhurru Lall Bhukut (30). In the case of Bishen Chand v. Nazir Hosain (31) their Lordships of the Privy Council applied the principles of wakf to a partial trust. There a property burdened with obligation in favour of religious and charitable objects was sought to be sold in execution of a decree. The High Court of Calcutta held that it could not be done. An argument was advanced from the Bar that the property could be sold subject to the obligation. The High Court observed as follows:—

"Nor is it essential to decide whether the property became what is known technically as wakf..... The Subordinate Judge finds, and we think rightly, that the deed created a trust for certain specific purposes. This implies the trustee for the time being entitled to hold the property subject to the performance of the duties charged upon it."

Their Lordships ultimately held that the property could not be sold. A trust for private purposes was upheld under the Muhammadan Law in the case of Umjad Ali Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (2). The distinction between an English trust for charitable and religious purposes and a Muhammadan wakf is more historical than legal. According to the accepted doctrine wakf signifies the extinction of the proprietor's ownership in the thing dedicated and the detention of the thing in the implied ownership of God in such manner that the profits may revert to and be applied for the benefit of mankind: (see Baillie and Grady's Hedaya). According to the English doctrine historically viewed a trust involves a double ownership and two estates. Practically it involves single ownership with an obligation annexed thereto. The English conception of trust is that while the legal ownership of the property vests in one person, the equitable ownership vests in the beneficiaries or what is called cesti que trust and this equitable right is enforced by the Courts of Equity. The conception of wakf according to the accepted doctrine that the property is vested in God is a later development. Right Honourable Mr. Ameer Ali in his Preface to the Second Edition of Muhammadan Law says as follows:—

"In some places I have rendered the term 'wakf' as trust, in others, as dedication or consecration..... Properly analysed, it will be found that the word wakf combines all the ideas conveyed by these different expressions. The Mussalman Law holds that there can be no milk (property) without a malik (proprietor); that all property owned by human beings is God's free gift to them; and that when a man creates a wakf, he transfers the milk (the ownership in the substance of the thing) to the Almighty on the condition that the usufruct should be applied for the benefit of His creatures whoever they may be. It will thus be seen that the word combines the elements of trust, dedication and consecration. From one point of view God is the owner of the substance, the recipient of the benefaction being His creature. In another sense, He is the trustee on his behalf, the mutawalli being a mere manager."

The conception of property being vested in God was evolved a century or so after the death of the Prophet. A full discourse will be found in Abdur Rahim's Muhammadan Jurisprudence page 304. The jurists differed as to the ownership of the property. According to Imam Abu Haneefa the ownership of the property even after dedication continues with the wakif or appropriator, and the devoting or appropriating of its profits or usufruct in the charity, on the poor, or other good objects is in the manner of 'areeut' or commodate loan but not so as to be obligatory on the appropriator and, therefore, according to him he may revoke the appropriation or sell the subject of it. There are two ways in which this may be made obligatory: one is by the words of bequest. According to Imam Muhammad the ownership remains with the dedicator till a trustee is appointed and then vests in God. According to Abou Yusuf it becomes vested in God as soon as a dedication is made. It is submitted that all this is nothing but a legal fiction. Ordinarily it looks rather strange that a mortal human being transfers a property to God. The legal fiction is brought into play in order to explain where the ownership of the property rests after once a dedication is made. However, the doctrine propounded by Aboo Yusuf is the Hanafi Law as is at present administered. The Hanafi jurists have not accepted the doctrine enunciated by Imam Abu Haneefa. The Shia lawyers hold that the corpus after dedication becomes vested in the beneficiaries themselves. It is again, I submit, a legal fiction; otherwise it cannot be said that the beneficiaries become the owners of the property in a sense in which the word ownership is used in law. A similar legal fiction has been introduced by the Hindu law-givers. According to them debutter becomes the property of the idol, who has been held to be a juristic person under perpetual tutelage of the shebait.

From what I have said above it is clear that different systems of law have different explanations as to the legal ownership of a property dedicated for public, religious or charitable purposes. English Law recognizes two estates one legal and another equitable; Imam Abu Haneefa holds the ownership continuing in the proprietor; his two disciples hold the ownership to be in God, the Shias in the beneficiaries, and the Hindus in the idol. But whatever may be the difference in the conception of the legal ownership of the property, there is no difference whatsoever that the beneficiaries have a right in the property which the Courts of Law or Equity will enforce. The distinction of legal and equitable estate is of no importance now. The same Courts exercise both jurisdictions. The difference in the law of trust and wakf as to the transferability or otherwise of the property is also due to this difference in the conception of the ownership of the property. As under the English Law the legal ownership is vested in a human being, he can transfer it subject to the obligation placed upon it. Under the Muhammadan Law while the ownership is vested in God the mutawalli is His manager, he cannot transfer the corpus of the property. A wakf in the terms of the English Law is a trust and, if I may be permitted to say so, the legal ownership is vested in God and the equitable ownership in the cesti que trust, and, as nobody can transfer the property vested in God the wakfs are not transferable. Be that as it may, there is no question on the authorities that the properties in suit are trust properties in the wider sense of the term. Even if we assume that the grants of the rulers of Bengal did not create a wakf and that the properties were the personal properties of Shah Gholam Moula the wasiatnama (Ex. 30) obviously creates a trust in favour of charities. I have already shown that a transfer burdened with trust is recognised in the Muhammadan Law. It has been contended that at the most the property can be taken as a private property burdened with certain obligations. Reliance has been placed upon the case of Dalrymple v. Khoondkar Azeezul Islam (33). In that case the only question decided was that if the office of the mutawalli is hereditary, the mutawalli has power of granting even a perpetual lease. In this case we are not concerned with the power of the mutawalli or whether the office of the sajjadanashin is hereditary. In the case of Shah Mahmud Wasien v. Syed Allah Ahmed (24) it was held that the office was not hereditary but was based upon election; and it is not the defendant's case that the office is hereditary. Had it been, so, he would have been nowhere. Nor are we concerned in this case with the right or powers of the sajjadanashin. That case in no way affects the question of this property being a wakf or a public trust.

It was further contended that it was a conditional grant to Shah Gholam Moula and whether the condition of the grant is being fulfilled or not is a matter between the grantor and the grantee and the plaintiffs as representing the public have no right to interfere or claim the preparation of a scheme. Mr. Hasan Jan, who gave the final reply on behalf of the appellant, contended that there was no privity of contract between the grantee and the public. The contract was between the grantor and the grantee and the public did not come in at all. In my opinion this argument is not entitled to any serious consideration. If this is to prevail, no public trust can come in within the purview of s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. In any trust for the benefit of the public there is no privity of contract between the grantor and the grantee on the one hand and the beneficiaries on the other: the beneficiaries come in because they are beneficiaries.

It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that the defendant having himself come in possession of the property as a trustee, cannot now take up the position that they are his private properties. Reliance has been placed upon the cases of Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Aiyangar (34) and Vaidyanatha Ayyar v. Swaminatha Ayyar (35). I agree that the plaintiff is estopped from taking up the position which he has taken in the present suit. The khewat of the Record of Rights and the Register D maintained under the Land Registration Act show the properties to be trust. The Record of Rights has a presumptive value and has not been rebutted.

I now take up the question of the maintainability of the suit. Sir Abdur Rahim's contentions are that (1) even if the property is wakf or trust, it is of a private nature and s. 92 does not apply; and (2) if it is private property burdened with obligations in favour of the public, s. 92 has no application. After what I have said above, I do not think it is necessary to consider this point. It is settled law that the word 'public' means a section of the public, and it cannot be disputed that provisions for maintenance of khankahs and for distribution of alms and charities etc., are objects of a public nature, and s. 92 has full application in such cases. Most of the cases referred to above are cases of khankahs and shrines and no question was raised that they were not trusts of a public nature. Reliance has been placed upon the case of Delrus Banoo Begam v. Asghar Ali Khan (36) and the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council on appeal reported as Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begum (37). But there the Imambara in question was of a private character and the case has been distinguished in the case of Ram Charan Lal v. Fatima Begam (38). Reliance has also been placed upon the case of 25 Ind. Cas. 661 Abul Hasan v. Saiyed Aziz Ahmad (39). There their Lordships expressly refrained from deciding whether the property was or was not a wakf, but they held it was not a public trust. There is nothing in the report to show that any section of the public was in any way to be benefited by that institution. On these grounds I hold it is a wakf of a public nature and s. 92 is applicable.

Sir Abdur Rahim has further argued that the suit is bad for defect of parties. He contends that all the maintenance-holders (commonly known as share-holders) ought to have been impleaded in the suit. I see no force in this. First of all it is a suit of a representative character and on the findings which I have arrived at the share-holders are no more than beneficiaries under the trust, the plaintiff having instituted the suit on behalf of all the beneficiaries. But Sir Abdur Rahim contends that the decision of the question whether it is a trust of a public nature cannot be arrived at in the absence of the share-holders who claim the property to be a private one. In the first place there is nothing to show that any descendant of Shah Gholam Moula except the defendant has ever claimed the property to be a private one: rather, whenever any one of them appeared before any public authority the obligation of the trust was freely and ungrudgingly admitted. Apart from this in a suit under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code only the trustee is a necessary party and not those who may be in possession of trust properties even adverse to the trust. Makhlachar Rahman v. Faizur Raman (19). At any rate the plaintiff was not bound to implead those persons who do not put forward any claim adverse to the trust. The property is in possession of the defendant and the case in my opinion can proceed against him. I, therefore, hold that the suit is maintainable. Then it is contended that as there is a prayer for the declaration of the disputed properties to be a trust, s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply. It is argued that the section only applies when the trust is admitted and not when the very existence of the trust is in dispute. There is no force in this contention either. When there is a breach of trust a suit for a declaration that there is a trust and for the preparation of a scheme or the removal of the trustee can only be instituted under s. 92 the Code. Such a suit will not be entertainable if instituted as an ordinary civil suit. The learned District Judge has rightly held that the suit is maintainable and I entirely agree with him.

I now take up the question of the removal of the sajjadanashin. It has been contended that the sajjadanashin as the spiritual head of the institution is not removable. Reliance has been placed upon the case of Ishtiaq Ahmad v. Massood Ahmad (40) and the observations of the learned Judge in the case of Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (13), Secretary of State for India v. Mohiuddin Ahmad (41), and Piran Bibi v. Abdoor Karim (12). Except in the case of Ishtiaq Ahmad v. Massood Ahmad (40) it has nowhere been laid down that a sajjadanashin is not liable to be removed however wicked and undesirable he may be. With my profoundest respect to the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court who decided that case, I am unable to agree with this view. Cases may be conceived in which a sajjadanashin or a spiritual head of a Hindu institution, say for instance, a mohunt of a sangat, may so behave himself that his very connection with the institution may be repulsive to the general public and may amount to desecration of the sacred places; I see no reason why the Courts cannot interfere in such cases. On the other hand I entirely agree (if I may say so) with the observation of Abdur Rahim, J. in the case of Sujjada Mahamad Yusuf v. Shaw Habit (10) that a sajjadanashin is removable if a proper case be made out. Cases of the removal of the mohunts are very numerous: see Subbaroya Chetti v. Subramania Iyer (42), Zemindar of Kalahasti v. Ganapathi Iyer (43) and Raja Peary Mohan Mookerji v. Monohar Mukerji (44). No doubt the Courts have not to apply the principle of a mutawalli to a sajjadanashin. By him the spiritual line of the founder is continued. People become his disciple mostly not so much on account of his personal qualifications but on account of the fact that by becoming his disciple they are connecting themselves in a spiritual link with the founder saint. Cases of mismanagement or incapacity will not ordinarily be sufficient to remove a sajjadanashin as distinct from the managership of the property. It must be shown that the man is not only incompetent to manage the property; but that he is of such a low morality that his continuance as the superior of the sacred shrines and institutions is repugnant and undesirable. I do not wish, however, to discuss this matter in detail as I propose to allow the defendant to continue as sajjadanashin of the institution and to deprive him only of the management of the property. I shall take up this matter later on.

Coming to the facts justifying the removal of the defendant I entirely agree with the findings of the learned District Judge. The alleged acts of mismanagement, immorality and dishonesty of the defendant have been enumerated in para. 22 of the plaint. They are eighteen in number. The learned District Judge has found some of them proved and some not proved. The acts of malfeasance and misfeasance which have been proved against the defendant and which have not been properly explained by the appellant's Advocates before us mostly, if not entirely, relate to the management of the property. There have been one or two instances of neglect of duty if not of positive dishonesty (as for instance, not contesting the suit instituted by his father against the khankah in connection with certain gardens) There are some acts of want of uprightness in maintaining accounts. Apart from this the defendant has adopted an attitude of obstruction. He put forward a claim that the property is a private one which none of his predecessors ever thought of doing. He himself in the former suit did not go the length of claiming the property to be a purely private one. He has withheld accounts from the Courts and the learned District Judge has rightly declined to accept his reasons for doing so. On all these grounds I think that he has rendered himself unfit to be allowed to continue as a manager of the institution. On the other hand charges of immorality have not been proved and taking into consideration the circumstances of the case I do not think a case has been made out for his removal from the office of the sajjadanashin. It has not been proved that he is leading a wicked life. I do not for a moment wish to belittle the misdeeds of the defendant, but at the same time I must note that he was to some extent tempted to adopt the untenable position which he took in the trial of the suit and in this Court. He was elected a sajjadanashin in 1913. Nothing was alleged against him till 1922. In that year a suit under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code was instituted against him. His defence was that Shah Abdul Rasheed the son of the late sajjadanashin Shah Sami Ahmad, who was a minor in 1913 and could not be elected as sajjadanashin on his father's death, having come to age wanted to regain the position which his father held. Whatever might have been the misdeeds of the defendant, I have reason to believe that the suit of 1922 was instituted more in the interest of Shah Rasheed than in the interest of the public. The suit was withdrawn as soon as the defendant came into terms with him and executed the ekrarnama (Ex. I in the case). Paragraphs 5 and 14 of this ekrarnama have not been printed in the paper book. We got them translated and a copy is attached to this judgment. The term on which the case was allowed to be dismissed was in effect that Shah Abdul Rasheed would get Rs. 200 per month: Rs. 100 for the expenditure of maintaining the madrassa of which he would be placed in charge and another Rs. 100 by way of allowance and it was also stipulated that though Shah Abdul Rasheed would get these allowances, he would not be required to stay at Maulanagar. In fact the provision was that Rs. 200 per month would be handed over to Shah Abdul Rasheed to do whatever he liked with it. On the defendant agreeing to these terms the suit was dismissed. It is obvious that had the defendant been such a bad lot as he is painted now, the suit would not have been withdrawn on his executing the ekrarnama the main object of which was to benefit Shah Abdul Rasheed. The defendant's case is that as this ekrarnama contained new terms contrary to the usage prevailing in the institution he had to cancel it. I have no hesitation in holding that the defendant was justified in cancelling this ekrarnama, which in a way allowed Rs. 200 a month to a man holding no definite office in the institution. It seems to me that the sajjadanashinship of this khankah has been an apple of discord practically throughout the whole history of this institution. Disputes and fights are apparent from some of the rubkars which have been filed in the suit. I have said that Shah Yasim, the grandfather of the defendant was the sajjadanashin. On his death his son Shah Wasim, the plaintiff's father being an infant, one Shah Ally Ahmad was elected a sajjadanashin. There was a litigation up to the High Court. Shah Ally Ahmad was succeeded by his grandson Shah Sami. His term of office seems to have been rather peaceful. On his death the family of Shah Wasim again managed to capture the office and the defendant was elected. As soon as Shah Rasheed Ahmad, son of Shah Sami Ahmad, became of age, he wanted to get something out of the office which was formerly held by his father and managed to secure Rs 200 a month by the ekrarnama (Ex. 1). During the litigation it is apparent that some of the account-books of the defendant were stolen and then produced in Court to contradict the account filed by the defendant himself. In this litigation unfortunately there have been intrigues and counter-intrigues. The respondents have laid much stress upon the falsity of the accounts. No doubt there are contradictions between the two sets of accounts, Exs. 3, 3a and 4 on the one hand and Ex. 5 on the other. But these account papers exhibited on behalf of the plaintiff have a history behind them. They were stolen from the office of the defendant by some of the disloyal servants and then produced in the previous suit to contradict the accounts filed therein by the defendant. After the dismissal of the suit they were taken back and have again been filed in this suit. One of the sets bears the initial of the defendant (S. M. K.). It is difficult to find out how far the defendant is responsible for it. The manner of this production makes one suspicious. The defendant is obviously an incompetent person so far as management of zemindari is concerned and knows very little of accounts. These papers may be the outcome of a deep planned design, as when one's subordinates are disloyal anything may happen. The clerks might have intentionally kept two sets of accounts to be used against the defendant. All this, however, can in no way be used as an excuse for the defendant for adopting the attitude which he has taken in this case for which I have held that he is unfit to continue as the manager of the property. But it has not been shown that he is a man of such a wicked character or loose morals as to necessitate his removal from the sajjadanashinship also. After all, the office is based to some extent on the belief of the people and I am of opinion that so far as the order of the removal of the defendant from the office of the sajjadanashin is concerned, it should be reversed. He was elected by the descendant of Shah Gholam Moula and there is nothing on the record to show that the majority wanted his removal. No doubt three of them have been examined as witnesses in the case, but in an institution like this there shall always be dissentient voices: all cannot agree to one man. In the documents the head of the institution has been described as sajjadanashin and manager and I see no objection in making provisions for separation of the offices. No doubt up till now both the offices were held by one and the same incumbent, but in preparing a scheme the Court is not bound to follow either the terms of the grant, if any, or even the usage which has been in force so far: see Prayag Dass v. Tirumala Sri-rangacharlavaru (45) and Mohamad Ismail Arif v. Ahmed Moolla Dawood (46). In the case of Sujjada Muhamad Yusuf v. Shaw Habit (10) cited above the Madras High Court did separate the office of the sajjadanashin from that of the manager. Therefore, while upholding the order of the learned District Judge so far as removing the defendant from the managership of the property is concerned, I am of opinion that it is neither necessary nor desirable to remove him from the office of the sajjadanashin. This will, however, in no way affect the rights of the share-holders to remove him if they choose to do so in conformity with the scheme to be prepared, nor will it in any way interfere with the powers of the learned District Judge if he for any future act of the defendant on a proper application made to him decide to remove him.

There is another matter in which the decree of the learned District Judge requires some modification. This is in respect of the order about the taking of the accounts from the defendant. As sajjadanashin by election the powers of the defendant were more than that of a mutawalli or trustee. The decisions which I have referred to above show that a sajjadanashin is not a mutawalli and his powers of expenditures are wide and as long as he keeps up the institutions in a fairly decent condition he is not accountable to anybody. No doubt those decisions do not apply to the present case where the surplus after meeting the necessary expenses is to be distributed among the maintenance-holders; but nevertheless directing him to render accounts for the previous year without some limit will be a very complicated affair especially when there are indications on the record to show that at the time of the previous suit the account papers of the defendants were stolen and there is reason to believe that the plaintiffs in that case were to some extent privy to it. This being the state of affairs it will not be in the interest of justice if the defendant be now called upon to render accounts without some limit being imposed upon it. On the other hand I do not want in any way to jeopardise the interests of the maintenance-holders who have been depending upon the allowances for the last one hundred and fifty years or more. The decree of the learned District Judge should in my opinion be modified in such a way as would confine the rendering of accounts only to ensuring that a reasonable amount has been distributed among the maintenance-holders. If it is found that about half of the net income of the estate has been distributed among the maintenance holders no account of the remainder shall be taken from the defendant. This is the proportion roughly speaking which was being distributed among them. If on the other hand much less than that has been distributed, the District Judge will proceed to take accounts from the defendant for a period of three years prior to the institution of the suit and for the period of the pendency of the suit. The descendants of Shah Gholam Moula commonly called share-holders have been receiving the surplus of the income. I agree with the learned District Judge that these maintenance-holders should not be deprived of what they have been getting for the last 150 years. A provision to this effect fixing a proportion between the two classes of expenditure should be embodied in the scheme. I am not unmindful of the fact that a time may come when the amount to be received by a particular individual is so small and insignificant that it will be of no use to the recipient to receive it and it will be contrary to the intention of the grantor to pay it; in other words it will be too small to be called a maintenance. In that case the recipient may himself refuse to take it or the Court on a proper application made modify the scheme and apply the doctrine of cypres to such an amount. It is also necessary that the broad principles of the scheme should be embodied in the decree.

In view of the remarks I have made it is necessary that in lieu of the decree of the learned District Judge a fresh decree be prepared in this Court in the following terms:

(1) That it be declared that the Maula-nagar khankah is a public, religious and charitable institution and that the properties appertaining to it mentioned in schedules I-A and I-B to the plaint are public trust properties primarily intended for the maintenance of the said khankah and for the maintenance of the charitable, religious and educational institutions attached to it and a full discovery of the trust properties shall be made

(2) That a scheme be prepared for the management of the said khankah and the properties attached thereto; that it be declared that the religious, charitable and educational expenditures on the scale provided in the scheme are the first charge on the income of the said properties, and the balance left is to be distributed among the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula in the same manner in which it is being distributed up till now.

(3) That the defendant be removed from the office of the manager of the properties attached to the institution, but will continue as sajjadanashin of the khankah till he is removed either in the manner provided in the scheme aforesaid or by the District Judge for any act of misconduct committed by him subsequent to this date.

(4) That till such time as the defendant continues to be sajjadanashin of the khankah a manager or mutawalli shall be appointed in the manner provided in the scheme aforesaid.

(5) That if on account of death, resignation or otherwise the defendant ceases to be the sajjadanashin, the manager to be appointed under cl. (3) shall also vacate office and a joint sajjadanashin and manager or a separate sajjadanashin and a separate manager shall be appointed in the manner provided in the scheme aforesaid.

(6) That an enquiry shall be made in such manner as the learned District Judge directs as to the proportion of the net income of the estate that has been distributed by the defendant among the maintenance-holders during the period commencing from three years before the institution of the suit till the assumption of charge by the Receiver appointed by the Court. If on such enquiry the District Judge finds that the defendant has not distributed among the maintenance-holders one-half of the net income of the property or such lesser sum as the learned District Judge considers reasonable, an account of income and expenditure of the trust properties for the period aforesaid shall be taken from the defendant and a decree for a sum to exceeding the difference of the amount so distributed and half of the net income of the property shall be passed against the defendant. The court-fee required for the preparation of the decree shall be paid by the trust estate. The decretal amount realized shall be paid into the Court and distributed among the maintenance-holders in such proportion as the District Judge directs.

(7) The scheme shall provide for, among others, the following:

(a) Provision for a sajjadanashin and a manager, the posts being held either by one or by two different persons, and the manner of their election, appointment and removal.

(b) Provision for allowances to be paid to the sajjadanashin and the manager if the offices are held by one person and also when they are held by different persons.

(c) Proportion of income to be spent on the religious, educational and charitable objects and the proportion to be distributed among maintenance holders with due regard to the past usage.

(d) Distribution of duties between the sajjadanashin and manager when the offices are held by different persons so that the sajjadanashin may remain in charge of the religious duties and maintain them out of the funds provided by the manager.

(e) Provision for the appointment of a committee of supervision for the preparation of the budget and supervising the works of the sajjadanashin and the manager.

(f) Provision that the sajjadanashin and manager shall as far as practicable be from among the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula.

(g) Provision for practical audit of accounts and their inspection.

(8) The scheme prepared shall be liable to be modified or altered as occasion arises on a proper application made to the District Judge.

The District Judge will now proceed to prepare a scheme for the management of the trust properties. At the time of the preparation fullest opportunity will be given to the descendants of Shah Gholam Moula to appear and represent their case before him. He will also consult and take the views of such persons interested in the institution as he thinks fit. Till the scheme is prepared and given effect to the Receiver appointed by the Court will remain in office. He will pay to the sajjadanashin such sum for the performance of the religious ceremonies and his allowance as the District Judge directs.

The decree of the lower Court is varied but the appeal has in the main failed and with the modifications above indicated is dismissed with costs. The defendant-appellant shall personally pay the costs of the plaintiffs both of the Court below and this Court. The hearing-fee in this Court shall be calculated at the rate of Rs. 75 for each day of the hearing. A fresh decree will be drawn up in this Court.

Scroope, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother and I agree with his findings and the decree he proposes to pass in this case.

In the written statement the defendant took the plea that the reference to religious and charitable purposes in the original grant was really not a condition attaching thereto and was not the operative part of the grant but was rather by way of recommendation and as expressing a pious wish of the grantor. We have in this case a number of documents in which the property is referred to, covering a period of almost two centuries from the original Moghal grant in 1748 down to the present time—I refer in particular to the original sanad, the Warasatnama, the confirmatory sanads of the East India Company, the rubakaris of the Collectors of Monghyr and Bhagalpur, the different land registration proceedings, the plaints and written statements in suits relating to this property and the finally published Record of Rights. In every one of them there is a reference either direct, incidental or inferential to the trusts attached to this property. Here and there from the different documents isolated words and sentences have been extracted by the appellants as indicating complete proprietary right in the property free from all trusts; but the documents must be read as a whole, and in my opinion applying the test of contemporaneous exposition no other conclusion whatsoever is possible than that the suit property is burdened with a public trust of a charitable or religious nature. Questions relating in one way or the other to this property had been frequently before the Courts both Revenue and Judicial; before the former in the early days of the last century when apparently one Shyam Singh called into question the nature of the grant, again with reference to the desirability of its being taken charge of under Regulation XI of 1810; and later still in proceedings under the Land Registration Act; before the latter in the form of suits for the disputed sajjadanashinship, suits for accounts, suits for rents and so on; in truth until in the present case the defendant has done so, nobody ever set up a claim of complete proprietorship unburdened by any obligation of a public or private nature. As to defendant himself, in 1913 he applied for registration of his name in his capacity as sajjadanashin and he was registered as mutawalli in respect of the property connected with the khunkah. In 1914 he defended a suit in respect of this property and stated that it was a wakf property and that nobody had any proprietary rights in it, vide Ex. 20. In 1916 he filed a suit for accounts on the footing that certain villages including the property now in suit were wakf property of the Moulanager khankah of which he was in possession; as sajjadanashin; in the previous wakf suit in 1922 he pleaded that the properties were burdened with the discharge of certain charitable and religious functions having been granted originally as "madad mash" to Shah Gholam Maula. There are abundant other instances on the record where litigation proceeded on the footing that these were trust properties.

Again ever since its creation, this estate has spent quite a considerable portion of its income in the charitable purposes enumerated in the original grants. I refer to defendant's own document Z (3) a rubakari of resumption proceedings in 1836 in the Court of the Deputy Collector of Monghyr, for settlement of the pergana under Regulation II of 1819 and III of 1828. The Deputy Collector found that the then holders of the estate had in the seven years from 1233 to 1239 Fasli spent more than half the income on the purposes of the khankah. Again in Ex. 42 a written statement by sajjadanashin Aley Ahmad runs as follows:

"the defendant admits the plaintiff's allegation in his plaint that the annual expenditure in connection with the khankah is Rs. 20,000".

Again the defendant himself in his evidence pleads annual expenditure of Rs. 8,600 to Rs. 9,000 on the upkeep of the khankah and the objects connected with it. Indeed he has never challenged the actual practice in this respect and he could not do so on the facts. Sir William Hunter in his Statistical Account of Bengal describing the revenue-free tenures of the Monghyr District writes in 1876 as follows:—

"The largest revenue-free tenure in the District is the entire Abhaipur Pergana held by the khankah or monastery at Maulanagar, which was confirmed by sanad of Council, dated 9th February, 1786. The proceeds of the estate are expended in feeding travellers and beggars, in keeping a school and a mosque, and also in the personal expenses of the endowed family".

In face of this long course of contemporary exposition and usage and apart from there being a very clear case of estoppel against him it is in my opinion entirely idle for the defendant now for the first time to set up a claim to full proprietorship. As Lord Turner said in the Attorney-General v. Rochester (Corporation of) (47),

"Undoubtedly, if an instrument be doubtful in its terms, contemporaneous usage may be referred to; and if there has been a long usage in the application of funds to purposes which may be warranted upon one construction of the instrument, but which may not be warranted upon another construction of the instrument, the Court will lean to that construction of the instrument (provided it be doubtful) which will best correspond with the mode in which the funds have been for so long a period applied".

Applying the test laid down by this learned Judge the plaintiffs are in my opinion on practically unassailable ground in fact sufficient to conclude this part of the case; and my learned brother has shown the original sanad indicates very strongly that the grant to Shah Gholam Maula was not a personal grant but was a grant for the maintenance of the khankah founded by Shah Nizumuddin.

The really substantial contention in the appeal was that the property is not legally wakf and that if it is wakf the position of the defendant is not that of the trustee in respect of it and that therefore s. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application. There is a very great similarity between this case and the two grants referred to in Kulb Ali Hussain v. Syf Ali (1) and Quadira v. Shah Kabeer Ooddeen Ahmed (3); two grants were in question in the latter case and it is to the second grant commonly known as the Alamshahi grant that the grant in suit bears a very strong resemblance. Those two cases entirely dispose of the contention advanced for the appellant that the grants lack the essentials of wakf as no charitable intention is expressed in the document and as the characteristic of perpetuity is wanting. Wakfs in connection with khankahs are a very well-known feature of Islamic institutions and have been recognised in numerous decisions of which the two mentioned above bear the closest resemblance to the present case.

(47) (1854) 5 D. M. & G. 797; 104 R. R. 287.

I would also refer to the decision of the Privy Council in Jewan Das Sahoo v. Shah Kabirootdeen (4) which follows these two decisions. I can see no substance at all in the contention that the objects in the sanad namely, meeting the expenses of the drumbeaters, travellers, the madadmash of sajjadanashin and the upkeep of the khankah are not valid objects of wakf. They seem to me when taken together to fulfil the requirements completely as indicated in the leading text-books on Muhammadan Law.

Indeed Sir Abdur Rahim has taken all what I may call the stock objections that can be taken against a claim of wakf: for instance another contention was that the original sanad constituted a family settlement in favour of Shah Gholam Maula and that the distribution on religious objects was left entirely to the holder's discretion and that these incidents negative a valid wakf. Apart from the Wakf Validating Acts of 1913 and 1923 with which admittedly we are not concerned here, whatever uncertainty there might have been at one time regarding the legality of family settlements in the form of wakf, the law is more or less crystallised by reason of the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, for instance in Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhury v. Amarchand (43) and Mutu K. A. Ramadan Chettiar v. Vana Levvai Marakayar (7). As a result of these and other decisions an endowment is not vitiated as wakf by the fact of its containing provisions in favour of the founders of the family or in favour of a particular family and their descendants provided that the primary object appears to be a permanent application of the property to some public and unfailing purpose. As my learned brother has shown such permanent application is the result of the deed in question (Ex. 50) and, as I said above, it has not been disputed that ever since its foundation a considerable portion of the income has always been devoted to charitable purposes. Nor do I think can it be seriously contended that it is an illusory wakf; obviously the grantor could have had no object in creating a fictitious wakf in favour of the descendants of Shah Gholam Maula. His purpose undoubtedly was a charitable one, namely to provide for the up-keep of the khankah.

Sir Abdur Rahim relies very strongly on the case of Kaneez Fatima v. Saheba

Jan (5) as meeting the cases which I have followed. It is true that the sanad in that case is not at all unlike the sanad in the present case; but there the decision was very much influenced by the fact that the former proprietors had dealt with the estate in a manner wholly inconsistent with its being an endowment and the alleged endowment there had never come under the superintendence of the Board or the local agents established by Regulation XIX of 1810. As my learned brother has pointed out though the right to receive the maintenance from the residue after the necessary provision has been made for charity has been the subject-matter of transfer, there is no instance of any transfer of the corpus of this property and, as I said, there has been for well nigh two centuries consistent disposal of quite a considerable part of the funds on charitable purposes.

As regards the application of Regulation XIX of 1810, as has been shown in the judgment of my learned brother and of the first Court, the action of the Revenue Authorities at the time was seemingly inconsistent and the position is undoubtedly obscure. It must, however, be borne in mind that the object of this Regulation was to provide that all endowments for the support of mosques, temples etc., should be applied according to the real will and intention of the grantor, to use the words of the preamble. Government did not, under this Regulation, actually assume the management of these endowments; they only made themselves responsible for their due application; local agents were to be appointed for the discharge of these duties by the Board of Revenue and the Commissioners and they were to ascertain the necessary particulars regarding all endowments and report them to the Board of Revenue; my reading of the various rubakaris on this point is that as Government was satisfied as a result of their enquiries undertaken under this Act that the public trusts connected with the property were being duly provided for, they considered it unnecessary to interfere any further with the management of the property, more especially as it was a rent-free grant to Shah Golam Maula. Whatever doubt there may have been in the minds of the officers dealing with the question as to the applicability of the Regulation, they had no doubt at all, as far as I can see, that the property was burdened with a public trust of a charitable nature. Some cases of Government interference with the Trust must however be emphasized. In 1856 the Collector of Monghyr under instructions from the Board of Revenue made a personal investigation into charges against Shah Muhammad Yasin for "mismanagement of the Abhaypur trust". After investigation by calling for statement of five years receipts and expenditure, nothing was found to justify the allegation of mismanagement. In February, 1858, the Commissioner asks the Collector to report the name of an individual duly qualified to be sajjadanashin in place of the late Shah Muhammad Yasin and in May, 1858, he informs the Collector he has rejected objections against the nomination of Aley Ahmad. A letter of the Board of Revenue in September, 1858, confirms these proceedings of the Collector and Commissioner vide Exs. 36, 37, 38 and 39 where the property is referred to indifferently as the "Abhaipur Trust", "Abhaipur Endowment" "Abhaipur Institution".

This interference is irreconcilable on any other explanation than that it was a public trust of a charitable or religious nature. In my view of the matter, so far as the applicability of this Regulation goes, the history of the matter is decidedly against rather than for the defendant. Besides, another consideration which must be borne in mind is that we are here considering whether the property is a trust for a religious or charitable purpose as contemplated under s. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the learned District Judge rightly took the view that even if the wakf theory should fail for any reason we are not only entitled to presume but ought to presume the existence of a charitable and religious trust, as is said in Purnan Atal v. Darshan Das (28). Sir Abdur Rahim argues that a public trust other than wakf is unknown to Muhammadan Law. The sole authority for this proposition seems to be the dictum of Karamat Husain, J., in Purnan Atal v. Darshan Das (27) but as my learned brother has shown the view taken in that particular case by that learned Judge was not accepted in the Court of Appeal in Purnan Atal v. Darshan Das (27). There were some old decisions to the effect that heritable property might under Muhammadan Law be burdened with a trust of a religious nature such as maintaining the tomb of a saint without becoming wakf and that it might then be alienated subject to that trust, see Kuneez Fatima v. Sahiba Jan (5) and Futtoo Bibee

v. Bhurrut Lall Bhukut (30). But these cases were overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (49) in which a property burdened with a trust of this nature was held not to be attachable by personal creditors of the trustee as of course it would have been if he could have alienated it subject to the trust. This latter case does not go the length of saying that there cannot be a public trust without its being wakf but what it does say is that a property burdened with such a trust is inalienable which of course is the main characteristic of wakf. Similarly here the question is whether the property is trust property within the purview of s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and very clearly it is, and has that characteristic of wakf. As to whether it has all the other characteristics of wakf the question is really academic once the above finding is arrived at. What I wish to lay stress on is that assuming the correctness of Sir Abdur Rahim's proposition, he has not been able to show that there is any incident in this property foreign to a wakf. The learned Advocate in this connection also relied on the decision of their Lordships in the Privy Council in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (11) for his contention that s. 92 had no application to the head and manager of a religious institution like a wakf. The short answer to this argument is that to accept it would mean holding that the provisions of s. 92 have been consistently misapplied by the Courts in India. Decisions after decisions can be cited where s. 92 has been applied to cases of wakfs and Hindu Endowments.

It was substantially on these lines that the finding of the learned District Judge as to the trust character of the property was challenged at very great length, but the argument left me entirely unconvinced. Whatever difficulties there might be in the interpretation of the original sanad, after that the way is clear, and for its time a plainer case of a public trust for religious purposes so far as the practice of nearly two centuries goes it would be difficult to find in this country. Indeed I think that the defendant in view of his own previous admissions was very ill-advised to deny his public obligations in respect of this Estate.

As to his removal from the managership, that is inevitable on the findings of the learned District Judge, which passed unchallenged in Sir Abdur Rahim's argument. In his final reply to the respondents (49) 15 I. A. 1; 15 C. 329; 5 Sar. 113 (P. C.).

Mr. Hassan Jan for the appellant challenged them all, and thus took the respondents and ourselves rather unawares by this unusual procedure. It is perfectly clear that the trust property is being grossly mismanaged; proper accounts are not kept, Government demands are not paid in time, with the result that penalties are incurred; and the defendant has been treating the trust money as his own. Another very serious act of misbehavior is a nominal lease of 24 bighas of kasht land to his brother-in-law, which the learned District Judge has really found to be a conversion to his own use. It is clear that he cannot be allowed to continue in the management. As regards personal misbehaviour rendering him unfit to hold the sajjadanashinship I agree with my learned brother that the charges are not so well established as to justify his removal from his spiritual duties.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 167—Service of notice—Onus of proof—Certificate in Collector's order sheet, effect of.

A certificate in the order sheet of the Collector in a proceeding under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that a notice has been properly served is prima facie evidence that such a notice has been served, though it is not conclusive and it is open to the opposite party to challenge it and show that the notice was not served in time. Kuldip Narain Tewari v. Ram Lal Mandal (2), Nandkishore Chowdhury v. Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur (3) and Ram Protap Marwari v. Jhoomak Jha (4), followed. Hitnarayan Singh v. Rambarai Rai (1), dissented from. [p. 444, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Purnea, dated the 20th September, 1928.

Mr. P. C. Manuk (with him Messrs. S. C. Bose and K. M. Moitra), for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Saran and C. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Muhammad Noor, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted on 14th November, 1927, to enforce a simple mortgage executed on 17th June, 1921, by defendant No. 1 in favour of the plaintiff-respondents for a sum of Rs. 1,000, the due date being Kartick, 1329, corresponding to 15th November, 1921. The mortgaged property is 59 bighas and 5 cottahs of land forming part of the occupancy holding of defendant first party. It appears that on 17th April, 1923, subsequent to this mortgage, the occupancy holding was sold in execution of a rent decree of the landlord and purchased by the appellant, the defendant No. 3. After the institution of the present suit that defendant (defendant 2nd party) proceeded under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to annul the encumbrances of the plaintiffs and contested the suit so far as the passing of the mortgage-decree was concerned. The mortgagor-defendant did not enter appearance either in the suit or in the appeal before us. The question to be decided by the Court below was (1) whether the application before the Collector filed by defendant No. 3 for the issue of notices under s. 167 was within one year of his having come to know of the encumbrances and (2) whether the said notices were properly served upon the plaintiffs. The lower Court has decided both these points against the defendant No. 3 and has passed a decree for sale in the usual terms. He has held that the defendant No. 3 came to know of the mortgage at the time of the sale or soon after it and that the notices were not properly served. The defendant No. 3 has appealed.

On his behalf it has been contended by Mr. Manuk that the notices were properly served and the view of the law taken by the Court below about the onus of proof, effect of the order of Collector and the sufficiency of service is wrong and that it has not been proved that defendant No. 3 came to know of the encumbrances prior to the date of knowledge alleged by him. In my opinion these contentions are well founded and must prevail.

I take up the question of knowledge. The plaintiffs' first contention is that defendant No. 3 came to know of the mortgage at the time of the sale itself. The only evidence on this point is that of Puran Lal Dutt, witness No. 3 for the plaintiffs. This witness says that he was one of the bidders at the sale and having been informed by defendant No. 3 that the property was encumbered he did not bid high. This story is obviously unreliable. In a sale held in execution of a rent decree the question of encumbrances is not a factor which a bidder takes into his consideration. A holding is sold with a right to the purchaser to annul the encumbrances by taking steps under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Then looking at the bid-sheet (Ex. 2) it appears that this witness did bid up to Rs. 1,025. The bids were as follows:—

	Rs.
Puran Lal Dutt	700
Decree-holder	800
Defendant No. 3	1,000
Decree-holder...	1,020
Defendant No. 3	1,041

From this it is clear that Puran Lal Dutt did bid up to Rs. 1,025 and the property was knocked down to the defendant No. 3 at Rs. 1,041. Therefore, the story that he refrained from bidding high on the ground of there being an encumbrance on the property cannot be believed. His bid was almost as high as that of the defendant No. 3. Then again it is strange that having seen the defendant No. 3 outbidding him he still acted upon his information. The story is obviously a got-up one and I do not believe it.

The next contention of the plaintiffs is that at any rate the defendant No. 3 came to know of the mortgage soon after the sale.

I, therefore, hold that it has not been proved that the defendant No. 3 came to know of the mortgage prior to the date of knowledge alleged by him.

Coming to the question of the service of notices upon the plaintiffs, it appears that the notices were taken to them on two occasions, once on the 3rd January, 1928, and then again on the 24th January, 1928. On both the occasions the plaintiffs were not found and there were, what is called, substituted services. Afterwards defendant No. 3 sent a notice by registered post which was returned unserved and the postal peon, Prayagdat Missir (witness No. 2) swears that he took the notice to the plaintiffs and they refused to take it. I see no reason to disbelieve this witness. Though this postal notice is not a legal notice, it proves that the plaintiffs were avoiding the services of the notices on them. The story put forward by the plaintiff is that Nandkishore Lal, one of the plaintiffs, had been during this period ill at Bhagalpur and it is argued that no step was taken to have the notice served upon him there; but on this point the evidence of the witnesses is contradictory. Plaintiffs' Witness No. 2 (Sundar Lal) deposed that Nandkishore the plaintiff was ill at home while the plaintiffs' Witness No. 4 (Mukti Narain Prasad) deposed as follows: "My uncle Nandkishore is ill at Bhagalpur. He is there from December last."

It is impossible to believe these contradictory statements of the plaintiffs' witnesses. It is clear from the record that defendant No. 3 was anxious to have the notice served upon the plaintiffs; he took all possible steps which he could. When on the first occasion the notice was returned after a substituted service the Collector directed their re-issue and to have them served again. Defendant No. 3 took steps to do so and to be on the safe side sent a notice by post and this also the plaintiffs refused to accept. The peon who went to serve the first notice has been examined but the one who took out the notices on the second occasion was not available. The Collector was, however, satisfied as to the proper serving of this notice and there is a note to this effect in his order-sheet.

The learned Advocate for the respondents has, however, relied upon the case of Hitnarayan Singh v. Rambarai Rai (1) and argued that an entry in an order-sheet of the Collector in a proceeding under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to the effect that notice has been served is no proof of the service of the notice. In this case referring to the order-sheet of the Collector, Das, J. observed as follows:—

"The order-sheet in this case merely records an opinion of the Collector that the notices were served but the opinion of the Collector is in no way binding upon the Civil Court and the Civil Court has a right to determine for itself the question whether the notices were in fact served or not." No doubt the observation is on somewhat wide terms; but this view of the law is contrary to what has been laid down in various decisions of the Division Bench of this Court. In Kuldip Narain Tewari v. Ram Lal Mandal (2), Das, J. himself, relying upon the decision of Nandkishore Chowdhury v. Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur (3), held that once the notice was issued the onus is upon the person questioning the validity of the notice to establish that the notice under s. 167 was not served in accordance with law, and held that it was for the plaintiff to establish that notice was not served upon him within the period of limitation. It will thus appear that one of the learned Judges who was a party to the decision of Hitnarayan Singh v. Rambarai Rai (1) held otherwise in an earlier case and Kulwant Sahay, J., agreed with this view which is supported by the decision of Sir Dawson Miller, O. J. and Mullick, J., in the case of Nandkishore Chowdhury v. Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur (3) referred to above and the case of Ram Protap Marwari v. Jhoomak Jha (4) decided by Roe and Jwala Prasad, JJ. Mr. Shambhu Saran has relied upon some Calcutta cases; they have been referred to in Hitnarayan Singh's case (1). I do not, however, propose to discuss them in detail. In my opinion the weight of the judicial decisions of this Court is in favour of the view that a certificate in the order-sheet of the Collector that the notice has properly been served is prima facie evidence that such a notice has been served but it is not conclusive. It is open to the other party to challenge it and show that the notices were not served in time, but in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, such a service must be presumed. As I have said the case of Hitnarayan Singh v. Rambarai Rai (1) seems to lay down otherwise but the weight of authority is against this view.

I am satisfied on the evidence adduced that the notices were properly served. Under the rules of the Government of Bengal the notices under s. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act is to be served in a manner provided for the service of summons under the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Sambhu Saran has relied upon a number of decisions as to the sufficiency or otherwise of a substituted service. I do not propose to deal with them. I am satisfied that the plaintiffs were avoiding the service of notices upon them.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed; the decree of the lower Court for the sale of the mortgaged properties should be set aside and the plaintiffs' suit as against defendant No. 3 must be dismissed; but under the circumstances the said defendant should bear his own cost throughout. Plaintiffs are, however, entitled to a simple money decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Simple mortgage prima facie carries with it a stipulation to pay the debt. In the bond in suit there is a clear promise of payment. The bond is a registered one and the suit is within six years of the due date. There is a cross-objection on behalf of the plaintiffs as to the amount of interest. I see no reason to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Court and would dismiss it. There will, therefore, be a simple money decree in favour of the plaintiffs against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with costs and interest at the rate ordered by the Court below till the institution of the suit and thereafter at 6 per cent. per annum. The plaintiffs will bear their own costs of this appeal. The suit as against defendant No. 3 is dismissed but without costs.

Scroope, J.—I agree. The weight of judicial decisions in this Court is in favour of the view that once there has been a proceeding before a Collector under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act with a view to annulling an encumbrance and the Collector had certified the due services of notice in such a proceeding the onus of establishing non-service is on the person who alleges it: I refer to the decision in Kuldip Narain Tewari v. Ram Lal Mandal (2) which followed two previous decisions of this Court, Dhunmun Singh v. Lachmilal (5) and Nandkishore Chowdhury v. Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur (3). It is difficult to reconcile the decision in Hitnarayan Singh v. Rambarai Rai (1) relied on for the respondents in which it was held in effect that the Collector's certificate in such a proceeding was merely a record of his opinion and left the matter completely open for the Civil Court with the decision in Kuldip Narain Tewari v. Ram Lal Mandal (2) to which one of the learned Judges who decided Hinarayan Singh v. Rambarai Rai (1) was a party. In Kuldip Narain Singh v. Ram Lal Mandal (2) that learned Judge in dealing with this question observed: "The decisions of this Court are perfectly clear. It was held by this Court in Nandkishore Chowdhury v. Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur (3) that the onus is upon the person questioning the validity of notice to establish that the notice under s. 167 was not served in accordance with law." The only dissenting decision of this Court is the subsequent decision of the same learned Judge in the later Patna case.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 152—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 2, 3—Arbitration between Companies—Applicability of Arbitration Act—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80—Notice to Secretary of State—Waiver by Secretary of State, effect of.

Section 152, Companies Act, is not restricted by s. 2 of the Arbitration Act which limits the application of the latter Act to cases where the subject-matter could be the subject of a suit in a Presidency Town. [p. 446, col. 2.]

Arbitrations between companies in Bihar and Orissa under s. 152, Companies Act, are therefore governed by the Arbitration Act and not by Sch. II, of the Civil Procedure Code; Sundar Mal Lakhu Mal v. Paris Business Corporation Ltd. (2), dissented from. Attock Oil Co. Ltd. v. Abdul Majid (3), followed. [p. 447, col. 1.]

Application against an order of the District Judge, Manbhum-Sambalpur, dated the 4th June, 1931, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad, dated the 27th November, 1930.

Messrs. A. B. Mukharji and U. N. Banerji for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, S. C. Mazumdar and Nitai Chandra Ghosh for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This application under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure is against the order of the District Judge of Manbhum-Sambalpur dismissing an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad directing under para. 20, Sch. II, of the Code of Civil Procedure that an award be filed.

The Dhansar Coal Company and the East Indian Railway Company had a difference of opinion regarding the rates to be levied from the petitioner Mr. Ruplal Agarwala, who is a colliery proprietor, for the use of the assisted siding, constructed at the expense of the Dhansar Coal Company. The terms and conditions relating to the siding are to be found in the memorandum of agreement usually known as the Assisted Sidings Agreement between the Dhansar Coal Company, and the Railway Company. It would appear that the Railway Company under cl. 14 of this agreement fixed the rate of tollage for the use of the siding payable by Mr. Ruplal Agarwala, petitioner, at two annas per ton; but the Dhansar Coal Company were not agreeable to this rate and in accordance with cl. 22 of the agreement both parties agreed to submit the dispute to arbitration. The question referred was what would be chargeable by the Railway Company to Mr. Ruplal Agarwala for using the siding, and there was also another matter about loading space which does not concern us here. The arbitration proceeded and an award was made to the effect that the tollage should be at the rate of 3 annas 6 pies per ton of coal subject to a minimum tollage of Rs. 1,800 per year. Then the Coal Company made an application in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Dhanbad, for filing the award under para. 20 of Sch. II of the Code of Civil Procedure making the East Indian Railway Company only a party; but Mr. Ruplal Agarwala intervened and was made a party by the order of the High Court. The Subordinate Judge allowed the application and directed the award to be filed. Mr. Ruplal Agarwala appealed to the District Judge and his appeal was dismissed and now he has come to this Court under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As regards the first two contentions pressed on his behalf, there is no substance in them and they can be disposed of without any difficulty. The first was that the arbitrators had no right to fix a minimum tollage and went outside the scope of the reference in doing so. Clearly as found by both the Courts below there is nothing in this point. The arbitrators struck a mean rate between the proposals of Dhansar Coal Company and the East Indian Railway Company and it is perfectly natural that they should further fix a minimum flat rate, as the learned Subordinate Judge has shown, this is a customary method of fixing tollage for the use of an assisted siding.

As regards the absence of notice under s. 80 on the Secretary of State, the defect on this score has been waived by the Secretary of State. The Railway have no objection to urge on the score of waiver when the case went on appeal to the District Judge though they had taken it before the Subordinate Judge, nor do they raise the objection now in this Court and a third party is not competent to raise the question of notice when the Secretary of State has waived it, vide Bhola Nath Ray v. The Secretary of State for India (1).

The substantial contention was that the Court of Subordinate Judge acted without jurisdiction in entertaining the application to file the award under para. 20 of Sch. II of the Code of Civil Procedure, because the agreement embodied in para. 22 of the Assisted Sidings Agreement being one under s. 152 of the Indian Companies Act of 1899 in accordance with the Indian Arbitration Act, under s. 3 of this latter Act, para. 20 of Sch. II of the Code of Civil Procedure can have no application. There can be no doubt that the agreement in question to submit future differences to arbitration was made under s. 152 of the Companies Act "in accordance with the Indian Arbitration Act", the award itself is described as an award "in the matter of the Indian Arbitration Act." The learned Advocates for the opposite parties, the Railway Company and the Dhansar Coal Company, contend however that the Indian Arbitration Act has not been extended by the Local Government under the proviso of s. 2 of the Act to this province at all and that, therefore, the Act has no application. But according to s. 1 this Act extends to the whole of British India though its application is limited by s. 2 to cases where the suits relating to the subject matter of the arbitration could be instituted in a Presidency Town or in local areas declared by the Local Government to be deemed to be a Presidency Town; and the answer to the contention is to be found in cl. (3) of s. 152 of the Companies Act which runs as follows:—

"The provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, other than those restricting the application of the Act in respect of the subject-matter of the arbitration, shall apply to all arbitrations between companies and persons in pursuance of this Act."

In other words the facilities in the matter of arbitration which the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882 gave to Companies so that the reference may be the act of the corporate body are not to be restricted by s. 2 of the Arbitration Act which limits its application to cases where the subject-matter could be the subject of a suit in a Presidency Town. In 1899 the Indian Arbitration Act was passed and the second proviso to s. 3, as it then stood, expressly exempted arbitrations under the Indian Companies Act from its operation; the position has not been altered by the passing of the new Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913) because the third sub-section of s. 152 has rendered unnecessary the second proviso to s. 3 of the Indian Arbitration Act which has accordingly been repealed by s. 290 of Act VII of 1913.

The learned Advocates for the opposite parties also relied on a Punjab case, Sundar Mal Lakhu Mal v. Paris Business Corporation Ltd. (2) which lays down that s. 152 of the Companies Act is subject to the applicability of the Arbitration Act to the local area in which the suit has been instituted. For the reasons given above I cannot agree with this decision. In my view the award ought to have been filed in "the Court" as defined in s. 4 of the Arbitration Act. The Court of a Sub-Judge is not such a Court. Examination of ss. 96 123 of the Companies Act of 1882, which was passed before there was an Indian Arbitration Act at all, makes the position clear still. Section 119 of the old Act laid down that:

"full effect shall be given by the Courts according to their respective jurisdictions to all agreements, references, arbitrations and awards in accordance with this Act; and the performance thereof may, where the Courts think fit, be compelled by any process against the companies respectively or their respective property that the Courts or any Judge thereof shall direct and, where requisite, frame for the purpose."

I cannot, therefore, agree with the view of Jai Lal, J., in the above case [Sunder Mal-Lakhu Mal v. Paris Business Corporation, Ltd.] (2) when he states that the last clause of s. 152 appears to be intended to extend the operation of the Arbitration Act even to cases where the subject-matter of dispute could not be the subject of an arbitration under that Act. I have shown that the object of the relevant sections of the Companies Act of 1882 was to give facilities to companies for arbitration so as to bind the corporate body and it was never one of the purposes of the Arbitration Act to restrict these facilities to Presidency Towns or local areas notified as such. In my view the law has been correctly stated in Attock Oil Co., Ltd. v. Abdul Majid (3). The Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad not being a "Court" as defined in the Arbitration Act, the reference to him was without jurisdiction and this vitiates the whole proceeding. His decree, therefore, must be quashed and the application must be allowed with costs. Hearing fee 2 gold mohurs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182—Giving false information to Police about missing of animal, whether an offence.

Where the accused reported to the Police that his buffalo was missing, and the Police directed a case in the matter and it was subsequently established that he had sold the animal to a person against whom the accused wanted to get up a case:

Held, that the report, not being the report of a cognizable or non-cognizable offence, did not in itself call for any action on the part of the Police Officer to whom it was made, and hence fell short of fulfilling the conditions necessary to justify a conviction under s. 182 of the Penal Code. Algoo Lal v. Emperor (1), followed.

Application against a decision of the Magistrate, Gaya, exercising appellate powers, dated the 15th September, 1931, affirming an order of the Magistrate of the Second Class, Jehanabad, dated the 24th August, 1931.

Mr. Sajdar Imam, for the Petitioner.

Judgment.—This Rule is directed against the conviction of the petitioner under s. 182 of the Indian Penal Code. He appears to have gone to the thana and informed the Police that a bull buffalo was missing. This was quite false because it was subsequently established that he had already sold the animal to one Shiba Dusadh for a sum of Rs. 30. The Police, however, suspecting that an offence had been committed proceeded to inquire into the matter and the Inspector of Police directed a case under s. 379 of the Indian Penal Code.

From the judgments of the Courts below it would appear that what was suspected in the case was that the petitioner had a mind to eventually get up a case against Shiba Dusadh for some reason or other and that his visit to the thana, stating the fact of the missing buffalo, was the first link in the chain of his scheme. However the facts which were stated to the Police disclosed no offence either cognizable or non-cognizable and, therefore, it did not come within the mischief of s. 182 of the Indian Penal Code. Reliance is placed upon the case of Algoo Lal v. Emperor (1) decided by Mr. Justice Piggott. There the learned Judge states:—

"The report alleging the disappearance of a bullock not being the report of a cognizable offence and not in itself calling for any action on the part of the Police Officer to whom it was made, falls short of fulfilling the conditions necessary to justify a conviction under s. 182 of the Indian Penal Code."

I feel constrained in the circumstances of this case to follow the decision given in the case just cited, and that being so the conviction must be set aside and the Rule made absolute.

Hindu Law—Debts—Debt incurred by father for contract business—Decree against father and sons - Whether can be executed against sons personally

Where the father of a Hindu family for himself and as the guardian of his minor sons executed a mortgage for a debt incurred in carrying on a contract business of the family and the mortgagees obtained a simple money decree against the father and the sons :

Held, that the decree could be executed personally against the sons in the absence of evidence to show that the debt was not a family debt and did not go to benefit the sons. Nathuni Sahu v. Baijnath Prasad (1), distinguished.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 2nd February, 1931, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 5th August, 1930.

Messrs. S. M. Naimatullah and Roy B. B. Saran, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. B. Ganguly and M. K. Mukharji, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Monghyr who in disagreement with the view of the Subordinate Judge allowed the objection of the judgment-debtor under s. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure with the consequence that the decree-holder is limited in the execution of his decree to proceed against the family property of the judgment-debtors and not against their person and property.

Defendant No. 1 for self and as guardian of his minor sons defendants Nos. 2 to 4 executed a mortgage bond on the 7th March, 1928. The plaintiff sued on the bond but claimed only a simple money decree giving up his lien over the mortgaged property. Defendant No. 1 is the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. Defendant No. 2 is his major son and defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are minors. Defendant No. 1 did not contest the suit. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4, the sons of defendant No. 1, only contested the suit and they denied the genuineness of the bond and the passing of consideration and pleaded that they were not liable to pay, as the loan was not contracted for the benefit of the joint family. The plaintiff's case was that the bond was executed for carrying on a contract business of the family and by the loan all the members of the family were benefited including the defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The Court held that the bond was genuine and for consideration and that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, the sons of defendant No. 1, were liable inasmuch as they were benefited by it. The Court observed:

"At present it is enough to hold that the debt in suit is also binding on defendants Nos. 2 to 4 not only because they are the sons of the defendant No. 1 living jointly with him but also because the debt was contracted for the conduct of the contractor's business which the family carried on for its living.

Upon this finding the Court passed a decree against all the defendants. It, however, did not decide whether the defendants were liable personally or only their interest in the joint family property was liable. The Court said:—

"This is not the time for the consideration of this question."

Obviously the Court was wrong for it ought to have decided that point at that stage and in fact by its finding that the debt was contracted for the benefit of the family the Court practically held that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were also personally liable for the debt. Upon this judgment a decree was passed making all the defendants liable for the debt.

An Executing Court is bound to execute the decree as it stands and cannot go behind it. As such all the defendants including defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are personally liable to pay up the decretal amount. Defendant No. 2 whose salary was sought to be attached in execution of the decree raised the contention that he was not personally liable but that the family property should have been proceeded against. His contention is that the Court which passed the decree left the question open. At best he is entitled to show that he is not personally liable. He has not shown that. On the other hand the judgment shows that he was liable to pay the debt not only upon the ground that as a son it was his pious duty to pay the debt of his father but as a matter of fact he was benefited by the loan. He does not show that the debt was not a family debt and did not go to benefit him. The decision relied upon in the case of Nathuni Sahu v. Baijnath Prasad (1) does not help defendant No. 2 inasmuch as in that case it was found as a fact that the debt was not incurred for the benefit of the sons and they were made liable only upon the ground of their pious duty to pay the father's debt unless they could show that it was immoral or illegal. In that very case a distinction was drawn between the case where the debt is proved to be actually for the benefit of the sons and a debt which is shown not to be for their benefit but that they are made liable only under the doctrine of pious duty.

We, therefore, set aside the decision of the Court below and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. The appeal is decreed with costs.

THE COLLECTOR OF AGRA—

RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 11—Award—Duty of Collector to decide matter of apportionment—Separate awards in respect of same land—Legality—Land acquisition appeals—Privy Council—Interference on question of valuation.

In appeals from land acquisition cases the Judicial Committee will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon questions of valuation of property, unless the judgment is vitiated by wrong application of principle or some important point in evidence has been overlooked or misapplied. Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1), followed. [p. 450, col. 2.]

Under s. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act it is the duty of the Collector to make an award in regard to three matters, viz., (1) the area of the land included in the award; (2) the total compensation to be allowed for that land, and (3) the apportionment of that compensation among all the persons interested in that land. Any one piece of land forming part of a whole in which more than one person has an interest for which he can claim compensation, ought not to be made the subject of more than one award. Each award should contain within its four corners the fixing of the value of the land with which it deals, and the apportionment of that value between the various persons interested in that land. [p. 450, col. 2; p. 451, col. 1.]

But under proper circumstances, if there are two awards in respect of the same piece of land, they may be read together and treated as one. [p. 451, col. 1.]

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., and K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Jardine, for the Respondent.

Lord Russell of Killowen.—This appeal is brought from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad relating to the compensation payable to the appellant under or by virtue of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), which will be referred to as the Act.

The facts require to be stated in some detail for the proper appreciation of the points which are involved.

On the 9th July, 1923, the land acquisition officer of Agra (called hereafter the officer) issued a general notice under the Act for the acquisition of a block of land in the city for the purposes of a new Police station. The block measured just over 1 acre, and included certain land and houses belonging to the appellant, which were known by the name Katra Nandram, and which amounted in area to some 4,103 sq. yards.

There were 18 claimants to compensation in respect of the entire block of lands, including the appellant and one Dau Dayal. The appellant's claim (as finally amended) was for Rs. 3,34,598 made up of Rs. 2,48,780 for the land (i.e., at the rate of Rs. 60 per sq. yard) and Rs. 87,818 for the buildings.

The officer considered the cases of the 18 claimants and heard evidence, the hearing of which ended on the 23rd December, 1923. As to the 16 claimants other than the appellant and Dau Dayal, an agreement was come to as to the amount of compensation payable to each for his interest; but for the purpose of acquiring a title under the Act the officer seems to have drawn up a formal award (dated the 31st December, 1923,) relating to the compensation payable to those 16 applicants.

On the 10th January, 1924, he made his award, dealing with the claims of the appellant and Dau Dayal. In it he states that agreement had since the hearing been reached with the other claimants, that an award statement regarding them had been drawn up and the amounts paid, and that the present award related to the cases of the appellant and Dau Dayal only. By that award he divided the appellant's land into three zones, to which he attributed different figures, as follows:—1°. Four hundred square yards of land with a street frontage of 120 feet he put at Rs. 13 per square yard. 2°. Four hundred and ninety-five square yards, "spotted over with the houses of permanent tenure holders" he put at Rs. 6 per square yard; and 3°. the remaining 3,214 square yards, which consisted of the non-frontage land upon which there were no permanent tenure-holders, he put at Rs. 8 per square yard. These figures worked out at Rs. 33,882 for land. For buildings he fixed a figure of Rs. 34,537, making a total figure of Rs. 68,419. To this sum had to be added the 15 per cent. provided for by s. 23 (2) of the Act so that the total compensation awarded by the officer to the appellant for his interest was Rs. 78,682.

It would appear that, so far as concerned the 495 square yards, the sum to be paid to the appellant was reduced from Rs. 8 per square yard (the full value of the non-frontage land) to Rs. 6 per square yard owing to the interest therein of the permanent tenure-holders.

Both the appellant and Dau Dayal were dissatisfied with the award and applied for a reference to the District Judge under s. 18 of the Act. In the case of the appellant the District Judge affirmed the award of the officer as to the buildings and allowed Rs. 34,537. In regard to the land he allowed Rs. 20 per square yard for all except the 495 square yards over which the permanent tenure-holders and rights had rights, making a further sum of Rs. 72,280. As regards the 495 square yards, he only allowed Rs. 220 as the capitalised value of the rents (Rs. 5 or thereabouts) of which the appellant was in receipt. In addition he allowed a sum of Rs. 1,200 in respect of a claim for loss of rents, making a total sum of Rs. 1,08,237 in respect of buildings and land, which with the 15 per cent. above mentioned, resulted in a total sum of Rs. 1,24,292 fixed as compensation for the appellant.

From that decision the appellant appealed to the High Court at Allahabad, asking that the full amount of compensation claimed by him be allowed. The High Court allowed the appeal in part and modified the decree of the District Judge to the extent now to be mentioned. As regards the valuation of the land at Rs. 20 per square yard, they agreed with the District Judge. As to his valuation of the buildings they increased the rate per 100 cubic feet allowed by him. As regards the 495 square yards, the High Court considered that the District Judge was not justified in assuming that the appellant's rights in this land were limited to the receipt of Rs. 5 per annum. The learned Judges considered that since the appeal to the District Judge only related to amount and not to apportionment, he ought to have accepted the officer's rates of apportionment, viz., one-fourth to the tenants and three-fourths to the appellant. Applying these proportions to the 495 square yards, the result would be that the appellant would be entitled to Rs. 15 per square yard in respect thereof. The appellant in the High Court claimed to be entitled to the whole Rs. 20 less only the sums which by agreement had been paid to the tenants and accepted by them, but this contention was disallowed by the High Court. As a result it appeared that the judgment of the High Court involved an addition of Rs. 11,231-15 to the amount allowed by the decree of the District Judge.

Encouraged no doubt by the knowledge that each of his previous applications has resulted in an increase in his compensation, the appellant has now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

In his case lodged here the only point taken was that the compensation awarded was too low, the valuations placed upon the land and buildings respectively being insufficient in amount. An appeal confined to these contentions had obviously small hope of success. It is well settled that this Board will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon questions of value; and in this connection it will be sufficient to cite the words used by Lord Buckmaster in delivering the judgment of the Board in the case of Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1):

".....it has been repeatedly laid down by the Board that in such cases they will not interfere with judgments of the courts in India as to matters involving valuation of property and similar questions where knowledge of the circumstances and of the district may have an important bearing on the conclusion reached, unless there is something to show, not merely that, on the balance of evidence, it would be possible to reach a different conclusion, but that the judgment cannot be supported as it stands, either by reason of a wrong application of principle or because some important point in the evidence has been overlooked or misapplied."

Counsel for the appellant concentrated upon a different point. He contended that since the High Court had valued the 495 square yards at Rs. 20 per square yard, the whole of the resultant sum of Rs. 9,900 belonged to the appellant subject only to the payment thereof of what might be necessary to satisfy the claims of the tenants; and that since the tenants had by agreement accepted a sum amounting to Rs. 980 (or Rs. 2 per square yard), the appellant was entitled to the whole difference between these two sums (viz., Rs. 8,910), and not merely to three-quarters of Rs. 9,900.

Their Lordships are unable to take this view. Indeed, it appears to them that the possibility of raising such a contention has only arisen from a failure to observe strictly the provisions of the Act.

As their Lordships read the Act, the duty of the Collector under s. 11 of the Act is to make an award in regard to three matters, viz., (1) the area of the land included in the award; (2) the total compensation to be allowed for that land, and (3) the apportionment of that compensation among all the persons interested in that land.

The Act does not appear to contemplate that where more than one person is interested in a parcel of land there should be more than one award relating thereto.

Their Lordships do not by this mean that the whole of the land at any one time to be acquired under the Act must necessarily be dealt with in one award; but only that any one piece of land (forming part of the whole) in which more than one person has an interest for which he can claim compensation, ought not to be made the subject of more than one award. Each award should contain within its four corners the fixing of the value of the land with which it deals, and the apportionment of that value between the various persons interested in that land.

In the present case the difficulty has arisen from the fact that the officer has dealt with the land by two documents, and, so far as the 495 square yards are concerned, that particular parcel of land figures in both. Their Lordships, however, think that the two documents (the later of which specifically refers to the earlier) must be read together as constituting one award in relation to that parcel of land, by which the officer awards the compensation to be allowed for that land at a figure of Rs. 8 per square yard and awards the apportionment of that compensation in the proportion of one-fourth to the appellant and three-fourths to the tenants.

The only objection ever taken by the appellant was to the amount awarded as compensation. No objection was ever made to the award as to apportionment; the apportionment accordingly stands and the appellant must be held bound thereby. There can, therefore, be no foundation for the appellant's claim to be entitled to the extra amount which the tenants might have received if they had not by agreement accepted three-quarters of a lower valuation. All that the appellant can claim is his awarded proportion of the Rs. 20 per square yard. The gain is a gain of the Municipality which acquired the land, as it was held to be in the case of Rohan Lal v. The Collector of Etah (2).

The appellant further contended that he had been hardly dealt with in the courts below as to costs, but their Lordships see no reason for suggesting any alteration of the decrees in this regard.

In the result this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

A litigant cannot be allowed to avail himself in support of his case, his opponent's evidence directed to a different story which has not been believed by the court. [p. 454, col. 1.]

Mr. H. I. P. Hallett, for the Respondent.

Lord Macmillan.—Their Lordships on this occasion find themselves in the unusual position of being the first Court of Appeal from the trial tribunal. Any disadvantage, however, which might otherwise have arisen from the absence of any intermediate review is compensated by the fact that the court of first instance was composed of three Judges of the Supreme Court of Mauritius, at whose hands the case has manifestly received prolonged and careful consideration.

The action is one of damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff in a motor accident, such as is commonly tried in this country by a Judge and jury, and resulted in a unanimous judgment for the defendant. Inasmuch as the appeal is not from the verdict of a jury, their Lordships have conceived it to be their duty to review the whole case on its merits and not merely to consider whether there was evidence before the court below on which the judgment pronounced could proceed. At the same time, in a case such as this, in which the issues are entirely confined to questions of fact and credibility, their Lordships recognise that the Judges in Mauritius, who not only saw and heard the witnesses, but also twice viewed the locus of the accident, possessed advantages in weighing the evidence which are denied to their Lordships.

The accident occurred about 5.30 in the afternoon of the 25th December, 1928, in broad daylight, in the Rue Royale, an important thoroughfare in Port Louis, at a spot close to the entrance to the house and grounds of a Mr. d'Unienville. The road is here on a rising gradient from the direction of L'Eau Coulee towards the Curepipe Road Station, and is about $27\frac{1}{2}$ feet broad, with a ditch on each side, and apparently no regular footpath on either side. The entrance to Mr. d'Unienville's house and grounds is by a drive leading off at right angles from the road on the left side as it ascends, and the ditch is at this point covered over in order to give access for foot passengers and vehicles to his premises. The church of Ste. Helene is on the same side of the road as Mr. d'Unienville's property, about fifty or sixty yards away in the downhill direction.

On the occasion of the accident the plaintiff was proceeding up the road on a motor-bicycle towards Curepipe Road Station on his own, the left-hand, side of the road. The defendant's motor-car was being driven by the defendant's chauffeur, who was its sole occupant, in the opposite direction and was on its way to Mr. d'Unienville's house.

The plaintiff alleges that the defendant's chauffeur so negligently managed and drove his motor-car that it collided with the plaintiff's motor-bicycle, with the result that the plaintiff and his motor-bicycle were thrown into the ditch and the plaintiff so seriously injured that his right leg had to be amputated. He avers in his statement of claim that "the negligence of the defendant's chauffeur consisted in driving the said motor-car at a speed and in a manner dangerous to the public, having regard to the nature, condition and use of the highway, and in turning the said motor-car without warning and suddenly across the said highway towards the entrance to the drive of an adjoining house, when the said motor-car collided with the said motorcycle." The defendant denies that the accident was due to the negligence of her chauffeur and avers that the collision was the direct result of the plaintiff's reckless driving of his motorcycle at an excessive speed, that her chauffeur did all he could to avoid the accident and that the plaintiff was alone to blame.

The plaintiff gave evidence which conformed generally with the allegations in his statement of claim. He said that he was proceeding up the Rue Royale at a normal speed on the extreme left of the roadway and was near the church of Ste. Helene when he observed the defendant's motor-car approaching from the opposite direction. It was then abreast of the entrance to Mr. d'Unienville's house. As he had, he said, a perfectly clear course in front of him he continued on his way till he had got almost past Mr. d'Unienville's entrance, when the defendant's motor-car turned "brusquement et rapidement" across the road, with the result that the plaintiff's motor-cycle collided with it about four feet from the ditch. Up to the moment when the motor-car suddenly turned upon him he had no warning and saw no indication that it was going to cross over to Mr. d'Unienville's entrance. When he saw it, it was parallel with the direction of the road, and if it had started across the road before he came up he would have noticed it. If he had seen it slanting across to enter Mr. d'Unienville's drive he could probably have passed behind it if it had not suddenly turned upon him. The plaintiff is not able to say whether before the collision the motor-car had stopped on the other side of the road before turning across. It may be added that the plaintiff in his evidence made a point of the clearness and accuracy of his recollection of the events immediately preceding the collision. He had also, as the Acting Chief Judge Nairac points out, the unusual advantage, owing to the course which the proceedings took, of being afforded an opportunity of adding to or correcting his evidence after it was first given.

Such being the account of the facts put forward by the plaintiff in the court below and adhered to by him in his printed case to this Board, it is manifest that were it accepted he would be well on the way to establishing his claim. Unfortunately for him, the Judges in Mauritius unanimously rejected his story, and when the appeal was opened at their Lordships' bar the plaintiff's Counsel candidly admitted that he could not rely on his client's account of the matter. This circumstance of itself would in the ordinary case be enough to justify the dismissal of the appeal, for, the burden of proof being upon the plaintiff, if he is unsuccessful in proving the case which both in averment and in evidence he sets out to make, he must inevitably fail. Mr. Doughty, however, submitted on his client's behalf that, accepting in almost all material respects the very different account of the facts which the Judges below found proved and praying in aid portions of the evidence of the defendant's chauffeur, he was still entitled to succeed, as on this different presentment of the facts he was still able to show that the defendant's chauffeur had been guilty of negligence. Their Lordships heard Counsel's argument in full, but they must observe that they cannot lend any countenance to the view that a plaintiff is entitled to throw over the case of negligence which he has alleged and spoken to in evidence and then ask their Lordships to find negligence established on a quite different species facti. To permit this might work grave injustice to a defendant who had properly directed his evidence to the case which he had been told he had to meet. This is illustrated in the present instance by the fact that neither in the evidence nor in the judgments below was attention directed to the elucidation of the case as now presented at their Lordships' bar, and matters are left uncertain which would doubtless have been cleared up had the case now sought to be made been advanced below. It is true that the story told by the defendant's chauffeur also failed to find acceptance at the hands of the Judges, and their Lordships had the remarkable experience of hearing Counsel on each side declining to rely upon the testimony of his leading witness. But the circumstance that the evidence of the two participants in the accident, the plaintiff and the defendant's chauffeur, has not been accepted by the Judges who heard the case, and is not put forward by either side before their Lordships as reliable, certainly does not advance the appellant's case or entitle him to avail himself of coincidences in their inaccuracies.

Fortunately, in the interests of truth, the court in Mauritius had the advantage of hearing the testimony of two independent eye witnesses of the accident, whose evidence the court accepted and whose account of the matter their Lordships are satisfied is accurate.

One of these witnesses is Mr. Houdet, who with his wife and two daughters was on his way up the road from the church. He says that a little before he reached Mr. d'Unienville's entrance he saw a motor-car coming in the opposite direction and heard the chauffeur sound his horn and saw him make a signal by holding out his arm. As he saw that the car was about to enter Mr. d'Unienville's drive he and his family stopped, and the chauffeur observing them brought his car to a stand to allow them to pass. "I am certain," he says, "that when I crossed Mr. d'Unienville's entrance the car had already slanted across and had stopped in an oblique position relatively to Mr. d'Unienville's entrance. The distance between the outer edge of the culvert at Mr. d'Unienville's and the place where the car was standing was about five to seven feet; the distance could not have been more as we had to pass in Indian file."

The other independent eye-witness was Mr. Le Meme, who at the time of the accident was walking up the road on the opposite side; that is, on the side on which the defendant's car approached. His evidence is not so precise as that of Mr. Houdet, but he speaks to seeing the defendant's motor-car turning slowly to its right to enter Mr. d'Unienville's drive before the accident occurred. He is not sure, but is "under the impression that the car had practically stopped to let some people go by." "The car," he says, "looked stationary at the moment when it was making the curve; it was going so slowly that I thought it had stopped". The only other witness who actually saw the accident was a cake-seller, Dawood Bheekhoo, who was coming down the road on Mr. d'Unienville's side, and who stopped, on a signal from the defendant's chauffeur, to let the car enter the drive, but as he is characterised by one of the Judges as a "downright liar" and no one believes him his contribution may be disregarded.

It will have been observed that in Mr. Houdet's testimony there is an item of what may be termed real evidence, namely, that he and his family had to fall into Indian file in order to pass between the defendant's car and the edge of the culvert covering the ditch at Mr. d'Unienville's entrance. The plaintiff himself seems to admit that the Houdets passed in single file in front of the car, for, when asked if he did not think that they and two other persons occupied a space of four feet from the ditch, his answer was, "Non. Il me semble que ces personnes etaient a la file indienne, l'une derriere l'autre; je n'ai pas vu que ces personnes occupaient la largeur du chemin." Now the fact that the Houdet family had to go in Indian file in order to pass between the defendant's car and the side of the road is conclusive of two things: first, that the car must have been, as Mr. Houdet said, stationary at the time, and, second, that the front of the car must have been only a short distance from the edge of the road.

Accepting the fact, contrary to the appellant's evidence, that the car had pulled upon the slant at a distance of from five to seven feet from the ditch to allow the Houdets to pass, and admitting that up to this point there was no negligence on the part of the defendant's chauffeur, the appellant's Counsel submitted that it was negligent on the part of the defendant's chauffeur to set his car in motion after the Houdets had passed and to proceed towards Mr. d'Unienville's drive without looking round to see if any other traffic was coming up on his left between him and the ditch; if he had looked, it was urged, he must have seen the plaintiff approaching and about to pass through the space between the car and the culvert. But it is not proved that the defendant's chauffeur did in fact restart before the collision. On this point the appellant's Counsel sought to avail himself of the evidence of the defendant's chauffeur but the appellant cannot legitimately invoke for this purpose evidence directed to another and quite different story which has not been believed. This belated attempt to establish a new ground of negligence against the defendant's chauffeur on the reconstituted facts as found by the court below and accepted by their Lordships demonstrates the danger of allowing a new case to be put forward at this late stage, for what is now sought to be made the crisis of the case is a point to which neither the evidence nor the attention of the Judges below was directed. Their Lordships are in consequence unable to ascertain whether or not the Judges below were of opinion that this defendant's car was restarted after the Houdets passed in front of it, while the evidence on the subject is left quite inconclusive. In such a state of matters it would be out of the question for their Lordships to find that negligence on the part of the defendant's chauffeur had been proved.

As the plaintiff's evidence was that his side of the road was clear ahead and that the defendant's car was on the other side of the road until it suddenly turned in upon him, he has, of course, given no explanation of how he did not see the defendant's car standing at rest aslant across the road, and of why he came on in these circumstances without slackening his speed—which was certainly not less than 15 miles an hour, and may well have been more, for after the collision his cycle went on for some 42 feet before it collapsed into the ditch, incidentally striking Mr. Houdet and the cake-seller on its way. The plaintiff himself says that if he had seen the car in such a position as that in which it is now found to have been he could have passed behind it. If it is necessary to reach any conclusion as to what really happened, it is most probable either that the plaintiff never observed the car standing athwart the road at all or if he did that he thought he could pass between the standing car and the culvert, and by an unhappy miscalculation just hit the side of the defendant's car.

As their Lordships have indicated, the complete failure of the appellant to establish the case of negligence averred in his pleadings and spoken to in his evidence would have justified the dismissal of the appeal on this ground alone, but their Lordships, recognising the seriousness of the matter to the appellant, have re-examined the whole case on its merits and, having done so, they find themselves in complete agreement with the result reached by the court below.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed. The defendant will have her costs of the appeal.

A will made by a Muhammadan in favour of one of his heirs is invalid unless consented to by the other heirs after the testator's death. If the other heirs happen to be minors at the time of the testator's death, consent must be given by them after attaining majority. No validity attaches to a consent given by their guardian during minority, in which case they are free to dispute the validity of the will and to claim their shares according to Muhammadan Law.

Where the widow and daughters of a deceased Muhammadan have surrendered their rights to a certain property in exchange for certain annuities charged upon the whole property, their interests in the whole property enure for the benefit of the other heirs irrespective of their rights inter se, and the whole property, subject to the annuities and the debts, become divisible between the remaining heirs. [p. 459, col. 1.]

Article 123, Limitation Act, only applies to a suit brought against an executor or administrator or some person legally charged with the duty of distributing the estate. *Issur Chunder Doss v. Sir George Lowndes.—One Khadim Husain, a Muhammadan governed by the law of the Hanafi School, died on August 21, 1901. Two days before his death he made a will in the following terms:

I, Shaikh Khadim Husain, son of Munshi Aman Ullah, deceased resident, jagirdar and taluqadar of Ganeshpur, District Basit, declare as follows:—

I own and possess movable and immovable property of every description (such as) houses, groves, etc., in the district of Basti, Gorakhpur and Fyzabad, and it is in my possession and enjoyment as a proprietor without the participation of anyone else. The immovable property consists of three kinds of property: One is that which is meant for maintenance of disciples and female slaves (under a will, dated November 2, 1866, my father Maulvi Shaikh Aman Ullah, deceased, gave (this property) to me alone. This property which he had, under a will, dated June 13, 1837, got from his father for maintenance of the disciples and the female slaves as proprietor, is the panchmi share in the entire taaluqa of Ganeshpur. My father, having no other share in his self-acquired property to that property, conferred it on me as proprietor under the said will. Accordingly, after the death of my father, I, the executant, entered in possession and occupation thereof under the said will. The second kind of the immovable property is that which has devolved upon me from my deceased father and the other persons; the third is that which I, the executant, myself have acquired. I have two sons, Shaikh Ghulam Husain and Shaikh Ghulam Muhammad, minors, three daughters Musammât Roshanur-nisa, Musammât Khair-un-nisa and Musammât Mumtaz-un-nisa, and one wife, Musammât Anna Bibi who is now alive. As there is no certainty of life, I, the executant, also think it proper to make a will in conformity with the custom of my family in order that no dispute may arise in future among my heirs. My elder son, Ghulam Husain, minor, shall remain in proprietary possession of the panchmi share in taaluqa Ganeshpur, together with panchmi property acquired by my deceased father given to me under the will, dated November 25, 1866, for maintenance of the disciples and the female slaves in accordance with the conditions laid down in the will made by my father and a one-fifth share acquired by me, the executant. Shaikh Ghulam Husain aforesaid, should, from the income thereof, maintain the disciples and the female slaves, who are alive now, or in future those who may be increased in their generations. (Paper torn). The disciples and the female slaves have no proprietary right in the said property. They are entitled to food and clothing only. If any of them disobey or refuse to render service or take up service at another place, then Shaikh Ghulam Husain aforesaid is empowered to discontinue his maintenance. Both my sons, Shaikh Ghulam Husain aforesaid and Shaikh Ghulam Muhammad aforesaid, who is born now, shall after me be the owners in possession of all the property which I have, by right of inheritance, received from my deceased father, Maulvi Shaikh Aman Ullah, and the other persons, and which I have myself acquired and out of which property four fifth share has been saved. So long as they live jointly, they shall appropriate the profits jointly, and after separation they should divide the profits of the said property in half and half. Both the sons should, out of the profits of the same property, pay Rs. 600 a year to their mother, Musammât Anna Bibi, and Rs. 300 a year to each of my daughters, namely, Musammât Roshan-un-nisa, Khair-un-nisa and Mumtaz-un-nissa, after their marriage, generation after generation. The said Musammats have no proprietary power in the property. If Shaikh Ghulam Hussain and Shaikh Ghulam Muhammad fail to pay the fixed amount to the said Musammats, the latter are empowered to recover their annual amount by bringing a suit. When both the brothers become separate, they should, out of the profits of the property in their respective possession, continue to make payment to my wife and daughters. Both my sons are still minors. God forbid, if I die before they attain majority, their mother, Musammata Amna Bibi, shall be their guardian during their minority. After attaining majority my both sons shall themselves be the owners in possession and abide by the conditions of the will and make management. This will shall come into force after me, the executant. As long as I am alive, no one has power to cause interference. Both the sons shall be the owners of the movable property and the houses in half and half.

In line 15 the word milkiatan written above the line is correct.

Hence I have executed these few presents by way of a will in order that it may serve as evidence. Dated August 19, 1901.

Signature of Shaikh Khadim Husain.

(The will executed by me is correct, in autograph).

The principal question in this appeal is as to the construction of the will so far as regards what is referred to therein as the "panchmi" property. The appellant, the younger of the two sons of the testator, sued to establish his right, under the events which had happened since his father's death, to a moiety of this property. The first respondent denied his brother's right to any share at all, though it is not clear how far he claimed the property for himself. The trial Judge decided in favour of the appellant, but gave him a quarter share only. Both parties appealed to the High Court (their appeals being numbered respectively 132 and 164 of 1925), with the result that the suit was dismissed. These appeals were heard jointly with two other appeals in suits instituted by one of the daughters of Khadim Husain, but in which no appeal has been taken to His Majesty in Council, and with which, therefore, the Board are not concerned. The other respondents are alienees from the first respondent and have taken no part in the proceedings.

It is not disputed that under the Hanafi law, if the effect of the will was to confer a beneficial interest in the panchmi property upon the first respondent, it was invalid unless consented to by the other heirs after the testator's death. The first question, therefore, is whether this was the true effect of the will. The Trial Judge held that it was; the High Court, on the other hand, took the view that the first respondent was a mere trustee with no beneficial interest in the property.

The decision no doubt concerns directly only the will of Khadim Husain, but the references by the testator to the will of his father Aman Ullah, and the trend of the arguments in the case, make it necessary to consider the terms of his will also, and this in turn brings in the will of Kadir Baksh, the grandfather of Khadim Husain, under which the panchmi property originated.

The will of Kadir Baksh is dated June 13, 1837. He in effect divided his estate into five shares, bequeathing one fifth to each of his four sons, and setting aside the remaining fifth "for the expenses of the male and female slaves and the other dependants, etc., who are at present in addition to the sons and who may survive hereafter." This share he made over to his youngest son, Aman Ullah. The slaves and dependants were to remain in his control; they were to get from him their necessary expenses for food and clothing, but were not to be in possession of the land, and if they were disobedient they were to get nothing. It is admitted by Counsel for the first respondent that this bequest was, as, indeed, the terms of the will show, confined to slaves and dependants living at the testator's death. It is also clear, their Lordships think, that they took no interest in the corpus of the share, and that the will made no express disposition of it as such.

The will of Aman Ullah followed much the same lines. It is dated September 25, 1866. It recites the will of Kadir Baksh, and after referring to the one-fifth made over to him (Aman Ullah) for the maintenance of the slaves and dependants, continues, "Under the terms of the will executed by the ancestor and admitted by his heirs, two-fifths of the whole of the taaluga (meaning evidently the one-fifth) for the slaves and his own personal one-fifth was settled to be my own share and property, of which I am in possession and occupation by virtue of private partition." He goes on to state that he also has four sons who are "heirs and owners of my estate and property," and that following the ways of his ancestor, he has made "a will regarding and division of, my estate." He then makes over to Khadim Husain, his eldest son, "the one-fifth share which my ancestor has given to me for the maintenance of the dependent slave boys and girls, as well as one-fifth of all my self-acquired villages (subject to all the conditions laid down in the will of my ancestor, dated June 13, 1837), together with the slave boys and girls that are alive at present and that may be born hereafter." He repeats that the slaves are to be entitled to maintenance only; that they are to have "no concern with the possession of the lands"; and that if disobedient they will forfeit their rights. The balance of his estate he divides equally among his sons.

It appears that some years before the date of this will there had been litigation between the brothers, Miran Baksh the second son of Kadir Baksh, suing for partition, and claiming that the panchmi share was divisible with the rest of the property left by his father. The principal Sadar Amir of Gorakhpur, by a judgment dated 28th August, 1860, held against the plaintiff's claim in respect of the panchmi villages, and gave him a decree for partition of his share only in the other property. The issues raised the question directly whether Kadir Baksh's will established that the panchmi villages "solely belonged to the contesting defendant," i. e., Aman Ullah and their Lordships think that the decision must be regarded as having answered this question in the affirmative. They have very little doubt that Aman Ullah's will was based upon this decision, and that he regarded himself as the owner of the panchmi villages, subject only to the obligation of maintaining the slaves.

The construction of Kadir Baksh's will was again raised in 1898, after the death of the last of the slaves, the claimant on this second occasion being Karamat Bibi, a daughter of Zahur Uddin, the eldest son of Kadir Baksh. Aman Ullah was then dead, and Khadim Baksh was the principal defendant to the suit. The case went up to the High Court on second appeal, the sole question for decision being the construction of the will with reference to the panchmi share. The learned Judges, by their judgment dated 8th August, 1901, held that there was a gift of this share to Aman Ullah, "but a gift burdened for the time being with the necessity of making provision, suitable and lifelong, for the slaves and slave-girls who might survive the testator." They thought that the assignment of the share "was as regards time unconditional" and they accordingly affirmed the dismissal of the suit which the District Judge had decreed. It will be observed that this decision was in substantial accord with that of the Sadar Amir in 1860.

Turning now to the will of Khadim Husain, with which the present appeal is more directly concerned, their Lordships note that it was made very shortly after the decision of the High Court above referred to, and they think that its terms must have been influenced by that decision. The testator begins by stating that he is "in possession and enjoyment as a proprietor without the participation of anyone else," of immoveable properties which include both the original and increased panchmi shares. He affirms that these shares were conferred upon him "as proprietor" under his father's will and that he had been in possession and occupation of them since his father's death. He then proceeds to declare that the first respondent "shall remain in proprietary possession of the panchmi share in the taluqa, Ganeshpur together with the panchmi property acquired by my deceased father given to me under his will."

Apart from any question of a wakf which has been put forward for the first time on the argument of this appeal, and with which their Lordships will presently deal, they think that Aman Ullah took under the will of his father Kadir Baksh a beneficial interest in the original panchmi share, subject to the maintenance of the slaves during their lives. The slaves clearly took no interest in the corpus of the share, or in the surplus income as the life interests dropped out, and the only reasonable construction of the will would seem to be that arrived at by the High Court in 1901, which as between the parties to that suit was clearly res judicata.

Whether Khadim Husain took a similar interest under Aman Ullah's will may be more doubtful, but reading the will as a whole in the light of the surrounding circumstances, their Lordships think that the intention of Aman Ullah was to pass on to his son the same quality of interest in the now increased panchmi share as that which he himself had taken under his father's will. The exact date of Aman Ullah's death seems to be uncertain. It was probably not long after the date of his will, and must in any event have occurred before July, 1871, as is shown by the proceedings in a suit which went up to the High Court in 1872. Khadim Husain was therefore in possession of the villages for at least 30 years, and their Lordships have no doubt that he regarded himself as the owner, subject only to the maintenance, at his discretion, of the slaves. The only persons interested to deny his proprietorship would be the other heirs of Aman Ullah, who seem to have taken no steps to assert a claim, and they are not parties to or in any way represented in the present litigation.

Khadim Husain's will, in their Lordships' opinion, clearly purported to pass on to the first respondent a proprietary interest in the panchmi property, now again increased by the addition of one-fifth of the other estate of the testator, subject to similar obligations. The learned Judges of the High Court would attach little, if any, weight to the references in the will to "proprietorship" and "proprietary" rights. Their Lordships are unable to take this view of the expressions employed by the testator. They regard them as used in their ordinary acceptance, and as intended to make it clear that the first respondent was to be the owner of the villages, subject to provision for the slaves. The latter were to be maintained out of the income only and were to have no proprietary interest in the property: whatever surplus income there might be and the reversionary interest in the corpus was to go to the first respondent.

Their Lordships take no exception to the view of the High Court that there was a trust for the slaves. They think that this is probably a more correct way of looking at the bequest than to refer to it as an onerous gift: it would, they think, clearly come within the definition of a trust under the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, by which the will of Khadim Husain would be governed. But in the view their Lordships take, the learned Judges were wrong in thinking that the proprietorship conferred upon the first respondent by the will was a bare trusteeship accompanied by no interest of a beneficial nature.

In their Lordships' opinion, therefore, the will of Khadim Husain did purport to confer a beneficial interest in a part of his estate upon the first respondent; who was one of his heirs, and it would seem to follow that (apart from any question of consent by the appellant) the will was invalid under the Muhammadan Law.

But it has been contended before the Board that the setting apart of the panchmi share under each of the three wills, to which reference has been made, was in reality the creation of a wakf, and that so considered it must be presumed that there was a dedication of the whole interest of the testator in each case to charitable purposes, leaving nothing to which the devisee could be beneficially entitled, his position being that merely of the mutawalli or manager of the charity.

No case of wakf was made by the first respondent in his defence to the suit, nor was it suggested in his memorandum of appeal to the High Court, and there is no trace of such a contention having been raised in the judgments. No one of the three wills purports to create a wakf, nor is there in any of them anything that could be regarded as a gift of the ultimate residue to charitable purposes, and no suggestion of wakf was made in any of the previous suits. It is admitted that a trust for slaves and dependants is not within the terms of the Wakf Validating Act, VI of 1913, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the effect of Act XXXII of 1930, which purports to give retrospective effect to the Act of 1913. The argument which has been addressed to their Lordships on this point is in reality only an attempt to reopen the controversy which was finally settled by decision of this Board nearly forty years ago: see Mohamad [Ahsanulla v. Amarchand Kundu] (1), Abdul Gufur v. Nizam-ud Din (2), Abdul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Russumoy Dhur Chowdhry (3). Under these circumstances their Lordships think it sufficient to say that the contentions of the first respondent on this part of the case must necessarily fail.

Unless, therefore, the appellant can be shown to have consented to the terms of his father's will it cannot be binding upon him.

At the time of Khadim Husain's death both the first respondent and the appellant were minors. The former attained his majority in 1915 and the latter in 1919. Before the trial Judge an attempt was made to prove that the appellant upon attaining majority consented to the terms of the will. It was held that his consent was not proved. The High Court makes no reference to this contention, and before their Lordships no serious attempt has been made to support it.

(1) 17 I. A. 28; 17 O. 498; 5 Sar. 476 (P. C.).

(2) 19 I. A. 170; 17 B. 1; 6 Sar. 238 (P. C.).

(3) 22 I. A. 78; 22 O. 619; 6 Sar. 572 (P. C.).

In the High Court, however, it was contended for the first respondent that the appellant was in effect bound to the terms of the will by what was said to be a "family arrangement" embodied in a registered instrument dated March 11, 1910. The learned Judges accepted this contention, and their finding has been supported before the Board, if it is correct, the appellant necessarily fails.

The document in question was executed, during the minority of the contesting parties to this appeal, by their mother on her own behalf and purporting to act as guardian of her sons. The other parties were their sisters, the three daughters of Khadim Husain, who disputed the validity of his will. Shortly put, the effect of this arrangement was that the mother gave up, in favour of her sons, a claim to dower amounting to about a lakh of rupees, taking for herself only a life annuity of Rs. 600, out of the estate, while the sisters accepted perpetual annuities of Rs. 400, each charged upon specified immovable properties. Elaborate schedules of the various properties were annexed to the document, the first of which, referring to the panchmi properties, was headed "List of property which belongs exclusively to Shaikh Ghulam Hussein (i.e., the first respondent), and with the income of which the slaves and slave girls will be maintained according to the conditions and restrictions laid down in the wills of the ancestors."

The learned Judges of the High Court thought that this should be read as an agreement made by the mother, acting on behalf of the younger son, with herself, acting on behalf of the elder son, that the latter should be the owner of the panchmi properties, and that it was binding upon the appellant. But quite apart from the question whether the mother could legally bind the appellant by such an agreement, their Lordships are unable to hold that this was either the intention or the effect of the document. The only object of the arrangement was, they think, to get rid of the daughter's claims, leaving the landed estates for the sons. Apart from the heading to the schedule of the panchmi properties, there is nothing to suggest that the rights of the sons inter se were considered. There was, and indeed could be, no dispute between them at their then ages, and the mother was evidently upon the terms of the document acting for them both jointly. Their Lordships must accordingly hold that the appellant was, when he came of age, free to dispute the validity of Khadim Husain's will, and to claim his share according to the Muhammadan Law in the panchmi properties.

The last line of the first respondent's defence was limitation; it was contended first that the deed of March, 1910, should be read as having effected a transfer of the panchmi properties by the mother, acting on behalf of the appellant, to the first respondent, and that therefore the suit fell under Art. 44 of Sch. I, of the Limitation Act, which runs as follows:—

Description of Suit.	Period of Limitation.	Time from which period began to run.
44.—By a ward who has attained majority, to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian.	Three years.	When the ward attains majority

The trial Judge held that this article had no application on the ground that there was no transfer by the deed: the High Court took the opposite view. It is manifest, on the construction which their Lordships have put upon the deed, that the trial Judge was right.

Alternatively, it was argued that the suit was barred by twelve years' adverse possession under Art. 144. Both the courts in India have negatived this contention, and their Lordships have no doubt that they were right. The first respondent only attained majority in 1911, and the suit was instituted in July, 1924. Until 1915 the mother was in possession of all the immovable properties of the estate on behalf of both her sons, and it would be impossible to hold that her possession was adverse to the appellant.

Before the Board it was for the first time suggested that the suit in reality falls under Art. 123, which applies to a suit "for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for a distributive share of the property of a intestate." The period of limitation in such a case is twelve years from the date "when the legacy or share became payable or deliverable." It is said that on the contentions of the appellant, Khadim Husain must be deemed to have died intestate, and that what the appellant is claiming is a distributive share in his estate. There is, however, a long series of decisions in India dating at least from 1882, that this article only applies where the suit is brought against an executor or administrator or some person legally charged with the duty of distributing the estate: Issur Chunder Doss v. Juggut Chunder Saha (), Keshav Jagannath v. Narayan Sakham (5), Umar-draz Ali Khan v. Wilayat Ali Khan (6), Khandersa Hajee Bappu v. Puthen Veettil Ayissa (7) and Mahomed Riasat v. Hasin Banu (8).

Counsel for the first respondent drew their Lordships' attention to a decision of this Board reported as Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (9), where Art. 123 was apparently applied in a suit by a Burmese-Buddhist son for his share in the paternal estate. No reference was made to the Indian case law on the subject, and the main question debated was as to whether the son was bound under the Burmese Law to elect within a reasonable time after his father's death.

Their Lordships have referred to the record of this case, and they find that in the Courts of Burma no issue was raised as to limitation, and that there was no discussion as to the article of the Act which should be applied. There had been at least one previous decision in the Lower Burma Court that Art. 123 was applicable to such a case, and it seems to have been assumed on all hands that it must equally apply in the case then under consideration. After the decision in Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (9), it appears to have been considered in one case in the Bombay High Court that the Indian authorities had been overruled Shrinbai v. Ratrabai (10), but in two later cases the same High Court refused to apply Art. 123 to claims by Muhammadan heirs: see Nuridin Najbudin v. Umrao Bu (11). The specific question was considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 1928, Rustam Khan v. Janki (12), another case between Muhammadan heirs, when the same conclusion was come to as in Nuridin Najbudin v. Umrao Bu (11), the article applicable being held to be Art. 144 and not 123.

Their Lordships have no doubt that it was not intended by the judgment in Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (9), to overrule the decisions to which they have referred, and they think, that at all events in cases from the Indian Courts, these authorities should be followed. They are therefore of opinion that the present case does not fall within Art. 123, and that the appellant's suit was not barred by limitation.

It only remains to consider whether the trial Judge was right in holding that the appellant was entitled to recover a quarter share only, and not a half of the panchmi property, and it is to be noted that upon this point the learned Judges of the High Court were in agreement with him.

The appellant's share in his father's estate under the Muhammadan Law would be one-quarter only, but he contends that the widow and daughters having surrendered their rights in exchange for annuities which were charged upon the whole estate he was entitled to share equally with his brother in all the residue.

The view taken by the Indian Courts was that the allocation of the panchmi property to the first respondent was an integral term of the arrangement under which the surrenders were made, and that if the appellant refused to be bound by this allocation he could claim no benefit from the surrenders.

In their Lordships' opinion, this view is based upon a misinterpretation of the deed of March, 1910. They think that the rights of the widow and daughters, being in effect bought out by payments from the general estate, their interests enured for the benefit of the other heirs irrespective of their rights inter se, and that the whole subject to the annuities so charged and the debts (which were considerable), became divisible equally between the two sons. If the annuities and the debts had been made payable out of the first respondent's share only, and in consideration of this the pinchmi property had been allotted to him, the position would have been different but this was not the effect of the deed.

Their Lordships are therefore, of opinion that the appellant is entitled to share equally with the first respondent in the panchmi properties, and that a decree should have been entered in his favour for possession of a moiety thereof. This would of course be without prejudice to the rights of any persons claiming as slaves or disciples under the will of Khadim Husain. They are not parties to the present litigation, and such rights as they may be entitled to assert are not affected by it.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decrees of the High Court in Appeals No. 132 and No. 164 of 1925 should be set aside and that in lieu thereof a decree should be made in favour of the appellant for the shares in the several panchmi villages claimed by him in his plaint. The first respondent must pay the costs of the appellant in the High Court and before this Board, but having regard to the order for costs made by the trial Judge, and to the fact that the appellant had raised issues on which he failed, their Lordships think that justice will be met by ordering the first respondent to pay only half of the appellant's costs in the Court of first instance.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 92, 93—
Suit under s. 92 with sanction of Legal Remembrancer—
Sanction of Local Government not obtained—Maintainability of suit—Scope of s. 93*

Section 93, Civil Procedure Code, provides for two distinct matters, the appointment of an officer to exercise the powers conferred by ss. 91 and 92 on the Advocate-General, and the 'previous sanction' of the Local Government to the exercise of such powers. In each case both the appointment and the previous sanction of the Local Government to the exercise of the powers are necessary before the provisions of s. 93 can be utilised. [p. 463, col. 2; p. 464, col. 1.]

A suit under s. 92 brought with the consent of the Legal Remembrancer but without the previous sanction of the Local Government as required by s. 93, is not maintainable. Gulzari Lal v. The Collector of Etah (1), distinguished. [p. 463, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, dated the 12th April, 1927, varying that of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 15th March, 1924.

Messrs. F. B. Raikes, K. C. and W. Wal-lach, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and S. Hyam, for the Respondents.

Sir Lancelot Sanderson.—This is an appeal, by special leave, by Prem Narain, a minor, through his mother, Musammat Chameli, against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, dated the 12th of April, 1927, which varied a decree of the District Judge of Aligarh dated the 15th of March, 1924, and decreed the major part of the plaintiffs' claim.

The suit was brought in pursuance of the provisions of s. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by five persons, who were alleged to have an interest in certain property which was specified in the plaint, and which was stated to be endowed property and the subject-matter of a trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature.

Prem Narain, the appellant, was the first of five defendants.

The reliefs asked for in the plaint were as follows: a declaration that the property was an endowed property; that the defendants should be dismissed from the management and trusteeship thereof; that a scheme for the management of the property should be drawn up by the court; and that an order for the rendering of accounts by the defendants should be made.

The learned District Judge who tried the suit, dismissed it on the ground that there was no public trust.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court which allowed the appeal. The learned Judges held that the property, with the exception of a specified portion, was the subject of a public trust within the meaning of s. 92, and they made a decree that the defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 should be removed from the possession of such property. A direction was made that the case should be sent back to the District Judge for the framing of a scheme of management of the property.

The claim for accounts was disallowed. The appellant, Prem Narain, was directed to pay the plaintiffs' costs in the Appeal Court and in the lower Court.

From this decree the appellant, Prem Narain has appealed.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant, in the first instance relied upon the grounds, referred to in the first and second reasons of the appellant's case, which relate to the competence of the suit, and which are as follows :

(1) Because the plaintiffs were not entitled to bring a suit under s. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(2) Because the previous sanction of the local Government had not been obtained authorizing the Legal Remembrancer to exercise the powers of an Advocate-General in respect to this suit as provided by s. 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

This part of the case, therefore, was argued by learned Counsel on both sides, since it was obvious that if the appellant were to succeed on the above-mentioned point, it would not be necessary to consider the other questions which arose in the appeal.

It may be stated at once, that the above-mentioned point was not taken by the appellant-defendant until the presentation of his case in this appeal.

It is true that the appellant-defendant had pleaded that the plaintiff had no right to maintain the suit under s. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for certain reasons specified in the written statement.

But there is no doubt that, as already stated, the point on which reliance is now placed, was not taken in the written statement or in either of the courts in India. It was alleged by the learned Counsel for the appellant defendant that it was in consequence of the decision of this Board in Gulzari Lal v. The Collector of Etah (1), which was given on the 9th March, 1931 that the appellant-defendant has raised the above-mentioned contention.

The matter is vital to the question whether the plaintiffs had the right to bring the suit, and therefore, the Board must consider and decide the point, even though it was not raised in the Courts in India.

The facts which are relevant to this part of the appeal are as follows :

The property, which is the subject-matter of the suit, is situated in the District of Etah, in the United Provinces.

In these provinces there is no Advocate-General who could act under s. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It appears, however, that on the 6th December, 1912, the Government of the United Provinces appointed the Legal Remembrancer to exercise the powers conferred on the Advocate-General by ss. 91 and 92 of the Code.

The appointment was in the following terms:—

No. 1622. VII-447.

"In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and in supersession of Notification No. 1307—V. 11-25—21. VI, dated 9th December, 1884, the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to appoint the Legal Remembrancer to Government, United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, to exercise within the limits of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh the powers conferred on the Advocate-General by ss. 91 and 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"By Order of the Hon'ble the Lieutenant-Governor United Provinces.

"S. P. O'Donnell,
"Secretary to Government, United Provinces,
"6th December, 1912."

On the 2nd February, 1923, the Legal Remembrancer, acting in pursuance of the above-mentioned order of the Government granted sanction to the plaintiffs to institute the suit, in which this appeal arises.

The terms of the sanction are as follows:—

"With reference to their application, dated the 13th November, 1922, and acting under the powers conferred on the undersigned by s. 1-93, Code of Civil Procedure and Government order No. 1622, VII-447, dated the 6th December, 1912, he accords sanction to the institution by them of a suit with respect to the alleged trust specified in the margin against such persons and for such relief as the nature of the case may require.

"(Sd.) O. M. KING,
LOCAL REMEMBRANCER,
"United Provinces."

Section 93 is as follows:—

"The powers conferred by ss. 91 and 92 on the Advocate-General may, outside the Presidency towns, be, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, exercised also by the Collector or by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf."

The argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant-defendant was to the effect that the above mentioned sanction of the Legal Remembrancer was not sufficient by itself to comply with the provisions of s. 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure: that the order of the 6th December, 1912, was no more than an appointment of the Legal Remembrancer to exercise the powers conferred upon the Advocate General by ss. 91 and 92 of the Code, and that on the true construction of s. 93 the previous sanction of the Government was necessary in every suit before the Legal Remembrancer could exercise such powers: that no such sanction was obtained in this case, and, therefore, the suit was not maintainable by the plaintiffs. He relied upon the decision in the above-mentioned case of Gulzari Lal v. Collector of Etah (1).

The learned Counsel for the respondents contended that the previous sanction of the Government was not necessary in every suit, and that if it was, such sanction was sufficiently shown by the terms of the Government's order of the 6th December, 1912.

In their Lordships' opinion, the actual decision in Gulzari Lal v. The Collector of Etah (1), does not govern this appeal.

For, in the cited case, the suit was brought by the Collector, and there was express authority given by the Government of the United Provinces to the Collector of Etah to institute the suit under s. 92 of the Code.

This fact is not stated in the judgment in the cited case, although having regard to the terms of the judgment it was obviously assumed. Their Lordships have referred to the record in the cited case, and the fact was as already stated.

That part of the decision in the cited case, which dealt with the question relating to s. 93 of the Code, was to the effect that the fact that the Government had, by the order of the 6th December, 1912, appointed in general terms the Legal Remembrancer to exercise the powers conferred on the Advocate General by ss. 92 and 93 of the Code, did not prevent the Government from giving an express sanction to the Collector to institute the suit in that case, that the Legal Remembrancer was not the only official who could maintain the suit, that the sanction, in fact, given to the Collector was a valid sanction, and that the suit was competent.

It is clear, therefore, that the point which now arises was not decided in that case. There are, however, passages in the judgment which support the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant-defendant.

Lord Blanesburgh delivered the judgment of the Board, and when dealing with the construction of s. 93 of the Code, he said as follows:

"The effect of that section as it seems to the Board is that no suit like the present, being one outside the Presidency towns, may be brought without the previous sanction of the Local Government, whether by the Collector or by any officer whom that Government may appoint for the purpose: so that the fact that the Legal Remembrancer is in the United Provinces invested as a rule with the duties elsewhere discharged by the Advocate General in this behalf is no reason why for the purposes of a particular suit the Local Government may not appoint the Collector or any other officer to prosecute it. The fact that there must be a previous sanction by the Local Government to every suit makes it impossible that two suits by separate officials will ever be concurrently instituted. Accordingly no inconvenience results from this construction of the section."

Their Lordships agree with and adopt the construction put upon s. 93 in the above-mentioned case. In their Lordships' opinion s. 93 provides for two distinct matters, the appointment of an officer to exercise the powers conferred by ss. 91 and 92 on the Advocate General, and the "previous sanction" of the Local Government to the exercise of such powers in each case both the appointment and the previous sanction of the Local Government to the exercise of the powers are necessary before the provisions of s. 93 can be utilised. The Legislature, no doubt, considered that there were good reasons for imposing more stringent provisions when the powers conferred upon the Advocate General, by ss. 91 and 92 of the Code were to be exercised outside the Presidency towns, not by an Advocate General, but by a Collector or by some other officer to be appointed by the Local Government.

Section 92 provides for a suit being instituted by the Advocate General or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General.

In the above-mentioned cited case the suit was instituted by the Collector with the sanction of the Local Government. In the present case the suit was instituted by the plaintiffs having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Legal Remembrancer.

It is clear, however, that, having regard to the terms of s. 93, the previous sanction of the Local Government is necessary, whether the suit is instituted by a Collector or by an officer appointed by the Local Government, or whether the suit is instituted by two or more persons with the consent in writing of such Collector or officer.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the point relied upon by the appellant defendant is a good one, and that, inasmuch as the previous sanction of the Local Government to the suit had not been obtained, the objection to the competence of the suit must be upheld.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed on the above-mentioned grounds, and it is not necessary to consider the other reasons in the appellant's case which have not been argued.

The point on which the appeal has been decided could have been and ought to have been raised in the courts in India, and the failure to raise it may have given rise to unnecessary proceedings and costs.

The proper order, therefore, in their Lordships' opinion, is that the appeal be allowed that the decree of the High Court dated the 12th April, 1927, be set aside and the decree of the District Judge dated the 15th March, 1924, be restored in so far as it dismissed the suit.

The direction of the District Judge as to costs must be set aside, and the plaintiffs and the defendants must pay their own costs in both the Courts in India.

The plaintiffs must pay the appellant-defendant his costs of this appeal. Any costs which may have been paid in accordance with the orders of the courts in India must be returned.

For the above reasons, their Lordships have humbly advised His Majesty accordingly.

Where a theatre has been leased by its owner, the lessee is the person who 'keeps it open' and who is, therefore, liable to take out a license under s. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act.

Unders. 498 (2) of the said Act the Corporation may charge a fee for such license, though s. 391 is silent about fees.

Where a person is convicted under s. 391, it is open to the Court to impose a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine under the provisions of s. 64, Penal Code, and s. 26, Bengal General Clauses Act.

Messrs. Bipin Chandra Mallik, Gobinda Chandra Dutta and Debendra Nath Bhat-tacharya, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Pashupati Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment—In these four cases one U. K. MITRA who is the lessee of the building known as the Minerva Theatre has been prosecuted and convicted under s. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act, for keeping open a theatre without a license.

The first point which has been argued by the petitioner is that it is the owner of the theatre and not the lessee who is obliged to take out the license under s. 391.

The decision on this point depends entirely on who can be said to keep the theatre open. As to the meaning of the expression certain English decisions have been cited to me. They are of no assistance whatever. In the first place the wording of the English Act is different for the expression in the English Act is "keep" and obviously "keep" and "keep open" are entirely different things. Secondly, they are in no way binding on me and so have no more value than any other opinion as to the meaning of an expression.

The practice of citing English decisions to interpret Indian Statutes is seldom a profitable one. The expression used is "keep open". Who keeps the theatre open?

Obviously the lessee. Once leased to him the building is in his control and it is he who keeps it open or shuts it. Whether any theatrical performances take place in the building is a matter decided by the lessee. If the Legislature had intended that it was to be the owner who should take out a license nothing would be easier than to have said plainly that the owner should take out the license. The section uses more general terms and makes the person keeping it open liable. The lessee is obviously a person who keeps the theatre open.

He is, therefore, liable under s. 391 to take out a license.

The next point urged is that though he may be made to take out a license he cannot be ordered to pay any fee for the license. Section 391 is silent about fees. So no fee can be charged.

Section 498 (2), Calcutta Municipal Act, makes it quite clear that the corporation may charge a fee. Then it has been argued that it is illegal to impose any sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine. Section 64, Indian Penal Code, read with s. 26, General Clauses Act, make it quite clear that such imprisonment in default is legal. The next point urged is that the corporation cannot levy an annual license-fee. They can only levy a license fee once and for all and that the section does not contemplate an annual license-fee.

I do not think that the point arises at present. The petitioner has not taken out any license at all. The point may arise after the petitioner has taken out a license and he is asked to renew it at the end of some period.

The result is, therefore, that the rules must be discharged.

There is in these cases the same complaint that I have had to make in Rule 1261* and other connected Rules. The records are untidy and slovenly and the proceedings have been allowed to drag on indefinitely.

No attempt is made to comply with the provisions of s. 370, Civil Procedure Code.

The Magistrate apparently has no control over the proceedings in his Court but the parties appear or not as it suits their convenience. I would invite the attention of Government and the Chief Presidency Magistrate to the way business is apparently conducted in this Court.

Execution—Executing Court's power to question validity of decree—Award under Arbitration Act—Judgment and decree based on award—Legality—Execution of award—Application for execution of decree treated as one for execution of award—Decree in excess of jurisdiction.

Where an award is made under the Arbitration Act, the Court after satisfying itself as to its validity will order it to be filed and execution can be taken on it as though it were a decree but the Court can pronounce no judgment on it and make no decree. But if a judgment is pronounced and a decree is made, it is merely a superimposition, unnecessary and void. But the award being executable, an application for execution of decree may be treated as application for execution of award. Jnanendra Mohan Bhaduri v. Annopurna Devi (1), and Ganindra Mohan Bhaduri v. Bhavani Charan Chakravarti (6), followed. [p 467, col 2.]

Where a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had no jurisdiction, whether pecuniary or territorial or in respect of the judgment-debtor's person, to make the decree the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction and it is only within these narrow limits that the executing Court is authorised to question the validity of the decree. Gora Chand Halder v. Profulla Kumar Roy (2), followed. [p 466, col 2; p. 167, col. 1.]

A decree passed in excess of the limits prescribed may also be regarded as void on the ground of lack of inherent jurisdiction. [p 467, col 1.]

Once a cause is converted into a matter under the Arbitration Act, the inherent jurisdiction which the Court of general jurisdiction possessed over it, is curtailed, and the Court retains a limited jurisdiction only for the purposes and control over the proceedings of arbitration. It has no jurisdiction to treat the cause as a suit pending before it as one on which it can pass a judgment or make a decree. If it does so the decree passed is in excess of the limits and as such void. [p. 467, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against original order of the Sub-Judge, Third Court, Hooghly, dated the 29th June, 1929.

Messrs. Rupendra Kumar Mitter and Manilal Bhattacharjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Bijan Kumar Mukerji and Apurba Dhan Mookerjee, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by a decree-holder from an order upholding the judgment-debtors' objection under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, and dismissing the application for execution. The Court below has held that the decree sought to be executed was passed without jurisdiction and was, therefore, a nullity.

Disputes having arisen over the provisions of a will left by one Rajendra Lal Goswami, which was proved on 19th December, 1917, there was an arbitration held by the late Mr. B. Chakravarti under the Arbitration Act, and Mr. Chakravarti made his award on 29th July, 1918. On the award being filed there were two petitions filed by the parties before the Court, the original side of the High Court, containing certain terms of settlement amongst themselves, in accordance with which the parties wanted the award to be varied. The learned Judge sitting on the original side thereupon made a decree in which it was declared that,

"the said award as modified by the terms of settlement ought to be carried into effect," and he "ordered and decreed accordingly."

This is the decree which forms the subject matter of the present execution.

The decree holder is one Rabindra Nath Chakravarti who at the date of the decree was an infant under the age of 18 years but has now attained majority. The contesting judgment-debtors are Jnanendra Mohan Bhaduri and Grindra Mohan Bhaduri who were executors to the Will and beneficiaries under it, and also parties to the award and the decree. In the case of Jnanendra Mohan Bhaduri v. Annopurna Devi (1), which also arose from the same decree, it has been pointed out that when an award is made under the Arbitration Act, the Court after satisfying itself as to its validity, will order it to be filed and execution can be taken on it as though it were a decree, but the Court can pronounce no judgment on it and make no decree. The question, therefore, which arises at the outset is whether the executing Court is competent to go behind the decree and question its validity. Connected with this question is the question as to what is the true character of the decree; in other words, is the decree a nullity?

In the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Gora Chand Halder v. Profulla Kumar Roy (2), it was pointed out that the correct view to take of the aforesaid question was to hold that where a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had not jurisdiction, whether pecuniary or territorial or in respect of the judgment-debtor's person, to make the decree, the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction; and that within these narrow limits, the executing Court is authorized to question the validity of the decree. In laying down the limits as aforesaid the learned Judges were emphasizing the distinction between the absolute lack of what may be said to be the inherent jurisdiction of a Court and the irregular or illegal exercise of that jurisdiction. This distinction has been clearly pointed out in several decisions of this Court, amongst which may be referred the cases of Ashutosh Sikdar v. Bihare Lal Kirtania (3), Hirnay Nath Dey v. Ram Chandra (4), and Ishan Chandra Banikya v. Moomraj Khan (5). The limits prescribed in Gorachand's case (2) would, in the case of a Court of general jurisdiction, exclude all but cases of absolute lack of inherent jurisdiction. There may, however, be cases where the Court is not a Court of general jurisdiction or where being a Court of general jurisdiction is limited to special purposes only.

In those cases also it may be rightly said that the Court has no inherent jurisdiction over a particular cause though it has jurisdiction, pecuniary, territorial as well as over the parties, or that the jurisdiction of the Court is limited in a particular way. A decree passed in excess of the limits prescribed may also be regarded as void on the ground of lack of inherent jurisdiction. If a decree for money is passed against an infant in a guardianship matter, or if a foreclosure decree is made on an application for probate—though such things will hardly ever come to pass—it would be an instance of the former kind of lack of inherent jurisdiction. Similarly once a cause is converted into a matter under the Arbitration Act, the inherent jurisdiction which the Court of general jurisdiction possessed over it is curtailed and the Court retains only a limited jurisdiction only for the purposes of supervision and control over the proceedings of the arbitration, e. g., of appointing an arbitrator, umpire or third arbitrator; of enlarging the line for an award; of remitting the award or of setting it aside, and so on; and it is this limited jurisdiction only that it exercises so long as the matter remains as one under the said Act. It has no jurisdiction to treat the cause as a suit pending before it, as one on which it can pass a judgment or make a decree. In this view it may not unreasonably be held that the decree under execution was not the result of a mere irregular or illegal exercise of the Court's jurisdiction in the shape of the adoption of a wrong procedure, but was one made in excess of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. The executing Court, in our judgment was competent to treat the decree as a nullity, and in doing so was well within the spirit of the Full Bench decision in Gora Chand's case (2) referred to above.

Treating the decree as a nullity, the question arises as to whether the decree-holder is entitled to proceed with the execution as on the award. It appears that in the case of another decree-holder against the same executors, execution as upon the award has been permitted by this Court: see Ganendra Mohan Bhaduri v. Bhavani Charan Chakravati (6). The decree being merely a superimposition, unnecessary and void, and the award being under s 15 of the Act enforceable as a decree, and having been referred to in the petition for execution itself, the application may, in substance, be regarded as an application for execution of the award. The facts have to be investigated a little further in order to decide whether this should be permitted.

The provisions in respect of which execution has been applied for are said in the application for execution to be contained in paras. 6 and 10 of the award. Connected therewith is a further provision contained in cl. (5) of the terms of settlement which are annexure, schedule B, to the decree. The decree being void the said provision cannot be executed as a provision contained in a decree, but on the other hand may be pleaded as an agreement in bar of the execution. The prayers in the execution petition were for delivery of possession of certain immovable properties and a life policy and documents relating to the said properties, for adjustment of accounts by appointment of a Commissioner and for enforcement of such delivery and rendering of accounts by arrest of the judgment debtors if necessary. It was also prayed that leave might be reserved to the decree-holder for fresh execution for the purpose of realization of the money which would be found due on the taking of accounts.

(6) 127 Ind. Cas. 60; A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 468, 34 O. W. N. 268; Ind. Rul. (1930) Cal. 812.

Now, para. 6 of the award directed the executors and executrix to make over to Bhawani Charan Chakravarti the father and natural guardian of Rabindra Nath Chakravarti who was then a minor, or such other guardian as might be appointed for him by the Court the properties in schedule Ga attached to the award together with all accounts from the date of the testator's death until the date when the accounts are rendered, and also the documents and papers relating to the said properties, subject to certain reservation. Similar directions were also given in that paragraph with regard to the life policy. There are directions in that paragraph as well as in para. 10 of the award as to how the accounts were to be adjusted and the liabilities of the executors were to be ascertained. In para. 6 it was further provided that Bhawani Charan Chakravarti or any other guardian whom the Court might appoint would make over the properties with proper accounts to Rabindra Nath Chakravarti on the latter attaining majority. The directions, therefore, were substantially for delivery of the said properties and accounts to Rabindra Nath Chakravarti and such delivery was to be taken on his behalf, because of his minority, by his father and natural guardian Bhawani Charan Chakravarti or by the person, if any who might be appointed as his guardian by the Court. We did not see why, on attaining majority, Rabindra Nath Chakravarti should not be entitled to have what the award directed for his benefit, provided of course that the directions have not been already carried out. As regards the provision contained in cl. (5), of the Terms of Settlement mentioned above that the properties in schedule Ga as directed in para. 6 of the award were to be made over to Bhawani Charan Chakravarti, the father and natural guardian of Rabindra Nath Chakravarti on his giving security for Rs. 12,000, we do not see how this agreement can stand in the way of the decree-holder if in point of fact the properties have not been so made over.

The result is that, in our opinion the view taken by the Court below is not correct. We accordingly allow the appeal, and setting aside the order appealed from direct that the execution petition be entertained as an application for execution of the award and that the proceedings be allowed to be carried on and be dealt with on their merits. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in the appeal, hearing fee being assessed at five gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 66 (2) (e)—Proclamation of sale—Duty of Court to ascertain value and state it.

If the Court does not consider that the value of the property should be mentioned in the proclamation, on account of the peculiar nature of the property, it may not do it. But if on the other hand it considers that the value is a material piece of information for an intending purchaser it should be put "as fairly and accurately as possible." Except in exceptional cases where it is not possible to ascertain the value or where it may be found that in the circumstances of the case the value need not be ascertained, the Court is bound to put a fair and accurate value in the proclamation. The enquiry by Court should be a summary one and need not be elaborate. [p. 469, col. 2]

Civil Revision against an order of the Sub-Judge, Burdwan, dated the 31st January, 1931.

Mr. Shyamadas Bhattacharji, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Upendranarayan Bagchi and Amarendranarayan Bagchi for the Opposite Party.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, by which he has directed that in the sale proclamation to be issued for sale of the property in dispute, valuations given by the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor be both inserted. The judgment-debtor objects that the Court should have inquired into the value of the property and should have given it in the sale proclamation. The property, we are told, consists of 3 bighas of land with a bungalow standing on it near the Burdwan Railway Station. The decree-holder valued it at Rs. 2,000, whereas the judgment-debtor said that it was worth Rs. 40,000. The learned Subordinate Judge has directed both the valuations to be inserted in the sale proclamation on the ground that an elaborate investigation should be necessary in order to ascertain its value roughly by an engineer, and the evidence on both sides should be taken as to the price of the land. We think that in the circumstances of the case the order of the Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained.

On the question as to whether in the sale proclamation valuations given by the parties should be inserted without an enquiry by the Court, I have expressed myself at some length in our judgment in Lachira v. Rameswar Singh in Civil Rule No. 370 of 1928, decided on 4th April, 1928, which is to be found reported as Lachira v. Rameswar Singh (1). The matter has again been placed before us and I like to say a few more words in support of the view I am inclined to take in this connexion.

No doubt the law does not make it obligatory upon the Court to put in the value of the property to be sold under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil Procedure Code, and if the Court does not consider it necessary to ascertain the value of the property and does not put it in the sale proclamation, it may be said that the omission does not amount to material irregularity; Daulat Bhuiya v. Rahisa Banu (2). On the other hand, we have the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in Saddatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar (3) that value of the property to be sold is a very material fact, and if the Court in cases where it ought to be mentioned fails to mention it, it may be argued that the omission amounts to irregularity.

Under O. XXI, r. 66 (2) (e) sale proclamation

"shall specify as fairly and accurately as possible every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property."

If under this head, the Court considers that information about the value of the property is material in order to enable the purchaser to judge of its nature and value, it should in terms of that rule specify "as fairly and accurately as possible" what such value is; and that is what their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid stress upon in Saddatmand Khan's case (3), where they observed :

"whatever material fact is stated in the proclamation (and the value of the property is a very material fact) must be considered as one of those things "which the Court considers material for the purchaser to know," and it is enacted in terms (though express enactment is hardly necessary for such an object) that those things shall be stated as fairly and accurately as possible."

The position, therefore, is this : if the Court does not consider that the value of the property should be mentioned in the proclamation, on account of the peculiar nature of the property, it may not do it. But if on the other hand it considers that the value is a material piece of information for an intending purchaser it should be put "as fairly and accurately as possible". Except in exceptional cases where it is not possible to ascertain the value or where it may be found that in the circumstances of the case the value need not be ascertained, the Court is bound to put a fair and accurate value in the proclamation. We have expressed this view in the case above referred to and it has since been accepted in Debendra Nath Sadhu Khan v. Radhikissen Chamarla (4). In Bejoy Chand Mahatab v. Ashutosh Chakravarty (5) the nature of the property was not mentioned, but it is said there that it was difficult to ascertain the value of the property. Reference has been made to a decision of the Madras High Court in Thiruvengadaswamy Ayyangar v. Govindaswamy Udayar (6). The facts of that case are quite different. There the Court had inserted the valuation put by the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor and it had also inserted the valuation arrived at by the commissioner, and their Lordships observed :

"Having regard to the fact that in this case the commissioner's calculation has also been set out in the proclamation, the criticism based on the ground of possible confusion is not open."

I am however unable to agree with the general observation made in that case that their Lordships are "unable to see why it should be necessary for the Court to fix the valuation more especially when the reserve price is also generally fixed by the Court and the price fetched at a sale often depends upon not on what may be called the intrinsic value of the property but on the demand for the property at the time of the sale".

In the circumstances of this case we may adopt the remark made by the Judicial Committee in Saddatmand Khan's case (3) above referred to;

"It must have been possible to state the value of this property with very much greater approach to fairness and accuracy than was done in the proclamation."

The property is situated near the Burdwan Railway Station. It can safely be said that the valuation put by the decree-holder of Rs 2,000 of a property, 3 bighas in area with a building on it is grossly inadequate. It is also possible, on the other hand, that the valuation put by the judgment-debtor in a fanciful price. But it should not be very difficult for the Court to come to an approximate value. The inquiry must be a summary one and need not be very elaborate. In order to ascertain the exact value of the property, as for the purpose of land acquisition, it may be necessary to engage an engineer to hold a local investigation. But in order to form a rough opinion as to the approximate value of the property, it may be done in a much simpler way.

We accordingly make the Rule absolute, set aside the order of the lower Court dated 24th January, 1931, and remit the matter to that Court for proceeding according to law.

The petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Court hearing-fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

Graham, J.—I agree. The question involved in the Rule is whether we should hold that this is one of those exceptional cases in which it was open to the Court to specify in the sale proclamation the value given both by the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder respectively, or whether the Court should have made an inquiry and formed its own independent conclusion on the point. The authorities go to show that it is not an infallible rule that such an enquiry should be made especially where it appears that such an inquiry will involve considerable delay or expense, or again where the value may for some reason or other be difficult to ascertain. The learned Subordinate Judge has given some reasons for not making any enquiry. But those reasons do not appear to be very pertinent. Such an enquiry need not necessarily be a long and expensive proceeding. What is contemplated is a summary inquiry and that the Court should upon the materials placed before it form its own estimate of the approximate value of the property to be sold. This duty ought not to be shirked as was held by my learned brother and myself in the case of Lachira v. Rameswar Prosad Singh (1). There may be exceptional cases where such an inquiry may be dispensed with and where the value set upon the property by the parties may be properly inserted in the sale proclamation. This however does not seem to be a case of that description. A fact which has influenced me in taking this view of the present case is that the decree-holder has fixed what appears prima facie to be a manifestly inadequate price as the value of the property, namely Rs. 2,000 only. The judgment-debtor on the other hand has estimated the value of the property at Rs. 40,000. So that there is a very great divergence in the two estimates. Having regard to the description of the property involved, Rs 2,000 seems manifestly to be an under-valuation and when such a low value is stated in the sale proclamation it is not unlikely that prospective purchasers may be misled thereby and the result may be prejudicial to the interest of judgment debtor.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 26-C, 26-F, 174—Rent sale—Landlord consenting to setting aside after transfer—Application to pre-empt—Sustainability—Slight discrepancies in description, effect of

Where the landlord obtained a rent decree and purchased the holding and subsequently the defaulting tenant conveyed the holding and certain other lands to a third party and the tenant and the transferee deposited the decree amount under s 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, and the landlord withdrew the amount and the sale was set aside:

Held, that the landlord was not precluded from claiming pre-emption under s 26-F by reason of his agreeing to have the rent sale set aside, even though he had received notice of transfer under s. 26-C before the sale was set aside.

Slight discrepancies regarding the description of property in the application for pre-emption under s. 26-F as compared with the notice under s. 26-C cannot invalidate the application.

Civil Revision against an order of the Munsif Fourth Court, Tamluk (Midnapore), dated the 17th March, 1930.

Messrs. N. C. Sen Gupta and Akram, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Peary Mohan Chatterjee, Benoy Krishna Mukherjee and Bankim Chandra Roy, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this Rule is a transferee of an occupancy holding and he moves against the order of the lower Court granting the application of the landlords under s. 26 F, Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears that the landlords who are opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2, obtained a rent decree on 18th December, 1928, against their tenant, opposite party No. 3, for arrears of rent of the period of 1924-1927. In execution of that decree the landlords purchased the disputed holding on 18th May, 1929. On 14th July, 1929, the petitioner purchased the disputed holding along with other lands by a private transfer from the defaulting tenant-opposite party No. 3. On 2nd September, 1929, opposite party No. 3 along with the petitioner deposited the decretal amount under s. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act. Opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2, the decree-holders did not oppose the application for setting aside the sale and they withdrew the amount deposited and the sale was set aside on 18th January, 1930. In the meanwhile on 12th December, 1929, opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2 were served with notice of the transfer to the petitioner under s. 26-C, Bengal Tenancy Act. Thereupon opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2 filed an application for pre-emption under s. 26-F.

It is contended in support of this rule that as the landlords had agreed to have the rent sale set aside and accepted the deposit of decretal amount from the petitioner, they were estopped from applying for pre-emption as against the petitioner. It is however not correct that the deposit under s. 174 of the Act was made by the petitioner alone. As mentioned already the judgment-debtor was also a party and sub-s. (4), s. 170, expressly provides that the withdrawal by the decree-holder-landlord of the amount deposited shall not operate as an admission of the transferability of the tenancy. Further from the terms of s. 26-F, it is clear that the landlord is not debarred from filing an application for pre-emption by reason of the fact that he had accepted rent from the transferee. Sub-Section (3), s. 26-F, expressly provides that the Court shall give notice to the transferee to appear within a certain time and state "what other sums" besides the consideration money "he has paid in respect of the rent for the period after the date of transfer." Sub section (6) provides that from the date of the making of the order under sub s (5) the liability of the transferee for the rent due on account of the holding shall cease. Suppose for instance, when one purchases a holding from a tenant, there are already rents due, the transferee may pay all those arrears and may also proceed to pay rents as they become due after his purchase. Because the landlord has the right of pre-emption under s. 26 F, it does not follow that he must refuse to accept rent from the transferee and go without any rent until his application under s. 26 F was filed and decided. On the contrary the terms of that section expressly provide for the contingency of rent being paid by the transferee after his purchase.

The next point urged in support of the rule is this: it appears that in the application under s. 26 F the landlords gave a description of the property and that subsequently they filed another application on 15th March, 1930, in which it was stated that in the original application there were certain mistakes in the description of the property which should be corrected. From the order dated 15th March, 1930 on the order sheet of the lower Court it appears that the petition for amendment was not actually moved. It is contended that on the landlords' own showing the application for pre-emption does not contain a correct description of the property and, therefore, the application should not be allowed on the principle that this being a special privilege granted to the landlord, the provision must be construed strictly. The question however is not whether the description of the property as given in the application under s. 26-F is in all respects the same as that given in the notice under s. 26-C. The question really is whether the two properties are identical. In this case it appears that there are certain differences, but they are not material. Dag No. 630 is wrongly described as Dag No. 670 in the application under s. 26 F. In other respects the Dag numbers given in the application are correct. The description of the mauzas is also the same, and so are the names of the district, perganna thana, sub-registration office The only difference is that the name of the mauza is given in the kobala as "Mauza Amalhara in Danan Settlement" and in the petition as "Mauza Tola Danan appertaining to Amalhara." The discrepancy as to area is also insignificant, as in the petition the area is 1 acre 43 decimal and in the kobala it is 1 acre 44 decimal: vide paras. 10 and 11 of the counter-affidavit filed by the opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2. The lower Court has distinctly found that the discrepancies are right and that they cannot defeat application for pre-emption.

In these circumstances it cannot be said that it was not open to the lower Court to decide the matter in the way it has done. The petition must fail. The Rule is discharged with costs the hearing-fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

Patni Regulation (VIII of 1819), s. 14—Auction of patni rights—Auction-purchaser paying rent to zemindar—Patni sale set aside on suit by patnidar—Subsequent suit for refund of rent by auction-purchaser, maintainability of—Expression of opinion by previous Court, effect of A patnidar on 3rd June, 1922, brought a suit both against the zemindar and the auction-purchaser for setting aside a sale effected under the Patni Regulation on 15th May, 1922. On 9th June symbolical possession was obtained by the auction-purchaser. In December, 1922, and in April and May, 1923, he paid certain sums of rent to the zemindar. The suit of the patnidar succeeded and the sale was set aside by the first Court. At the time the first Court set aside the sale it provided that the patnidar should recover possession and it directed the zemindar to pay the plaintiff's costs and also to refund the purchase-money to the auction-purchaser with interest, to return him certain security and to bear his costs in the suit. The auction-purchaser as well as the zemindar filed appeals. The auction-purchaser's appeal proceeded on the ground that he should have been refunded the rent which he had paid to the zemindar. The Appellate Court dismissed the appeal but in doing so remarked in its judgment that s. 14 of the Regulation would not be a bar to another suit for the recovery of the rent paid. Thereupon the present suit was brought by the auction-purchaser both against the zemindar and the defaulting patnidar for the refund of the money paid by him as rent.

Held, that the suit against the zemindar was barred. The proper remedy of the auction-purchaser was under s. 14 of the Patni Regulation. It was not intended by the Regulation that the matter should be dealt with piecemeal. The intention was, at all events so far as the claim against the zemindar was concerned, the whole matter should be enquired into and the auction-purchaser should be put in such a position as to suffer no loss. [p. 473, col. 2.]

Held, also, that s. 14, Patni Regulation, does not exclude suits against any party except the zemindar, e. g., against patnidar. Radha Madhub Samonta v. Sasti Ram Sen (1), followed. [p. 473, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the mere expression by the Appellate Court in the former suit that another suit would lie, could not bind the parties. [p. 473, col. 2.]

Held, still further, that payment of rent by the auction-purchaser to the zemindar could not be regarded as payment under a mistake of fact and could not, therefore, sustain a suit for money paid without consideration. [p. 474, col. 1.]

Appeal against appellate decree of the Additional District Judge, Hooghly, dated the 20th April, 1929.

Messrs. Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty and Subodh Chander Dutt, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Basak and Nasim Ali, for the Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the plaintiff-appellant was the auction purchaser of a patni sold under Regulation VIII of 1819 on 15th May, 1922. Very soon afterwards, on 3rd June, 1922, the patnidar sued to set aside the sale under s. 14 of the Regulation. The plaintiff obtained symbolical possession as it is called on or about 9th June, 1922. In December, 1922, and in April and May, 1923, he paid certain sums of rent to the zamindar. In the end the suit of the patnidar succeeded and the sale was set aside by the first Court. At the time the first Court set aside the sale, it provided that the patnidar should recover possession and it directed the zamindar to pay the plaintiff's costs and also to refund to the present appellant the purchase-money with certain interest, to return him certain security and to bear his costs in the suit.

It is natural enough that in the written statement of that suit no mention should have been made by the present appellant, the auction-purchaser, of the sums of money paid as rent and I will assume that he did not refer to them and for that reason, it may be that the matter was omitted from the consideration of the Court of first instance. However the auction purchaser as well as the zemindar appealed from the decision of the first Court and in the lower Appellate Court the auction-purchaser contended that he should be refunded the rent for 1329 B.S. which he had paid; apparently, he must have contended that it should be refunded to him by the zemindar. The lower Appellate Court observing that the matter was not mentioned in the written statement went on to express this opinion :

"I think s. 14 of the Regulation would not be a bar to such a suit for recovery of rent paid subsequently. In fact the lower Court awarded to the defendant No. 2," that is, the auction-purchaser, "the amount he claimed in the written statement." Thereupon the present suit was brought the auction purchaser claiming against the zemindar the return of the money which he had paid as rent. He claimed also against the defaulting patnidar. The defaulting patnidar did not appear and contest and judgment was given against him ex parte. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the suit so far as the zemindar is concerned.

On this second appeal, it is contended for the plaintiff-appellant first that s. 14 of the Patni Regulation is not exhaustive of the remedies of the plaintiff for the present purpose; secondly, that if it is thought to be exhaustive in view of the opinion expressed by the Appellate Court in the suit of the patnidar to set aside the sale, it must be taken for the purpose of this case that it is not exhaustive—the matter having been so decided between the parties and thirdly, that the plaintiff is quite entitled to recover what he claims independently of s. 14 as money had and received to the use of the defendant or money paid without consideration. No question of limitation arises in the present case.

In my judgment the correct view of s. 14 is the view adopted by Banerjee, J., in the case of Radha Madhub Samonta v. Sasti Ram Sen (1). In that case the learned Judge was dealing with the question whether the auction-purchaser in such a case was entitled to recover the rent paid from the defaulting patnidar and the Court held that under s. 69, Contract Act, there was a cause of action independently of s. 14 altogether. On the question whether a separate suit was an infringement of s. 14 of the Regulation, Banerjee, J., pointed out that that section provided for the auction-purchaser being indemnified against all loss at the expense of the zemindar at whose instance the sale was brought about. He was not therefore prepared to hold that that section excluded suits against any party other than the zemindar, namely, against the patnidar.

To that view of the section I venture to think that there is no valid objection. But it is another matter altogether when it is said that the auction-purchaser can get part of his remedy against the zemindar under s. 14, and can also retain the right to sue the zemindar for further relief in respect of the same transaction by a separate suit. In my judgment, so far as the zemindar is concerned, it is not intended by s. 14 of the Regulation that the matter should be dealt with piecemeal. The intention is that, at all events so far as the claim against the zemindar is concerned, the whole matter should be inquired into and the plaintiff auction-purchaser should be put in such a position as to suffer no loss.

The next question is whether, if that is so, the decision of the Appellate Court in the previous case makes any difference. It is said that the auction-purchaser asked for his remedy before the lower Appellate Court and the lower Appellate Court held that he could get it in another suit. It is contended that that being so, unless the other suit is held to be maintainable, the auction-purchaser would have no remedy at all. I cannot say that I agree in this contention. It was open to the auction-purchaser to appeal to the High Court against the refusal of the relief claimed by him under s. 14 of the regulation. The mere expression of opinion that another suit would lie cannot possibly be held as binding on the parties. It was not part of the duty of the Appellate Court to give advice to the parties; and, while one cannot but be sorry for the auction-purchaser if he was misled by this expression of opinion on the part of the lower Appellate Court, there can be no doubt that the legal position was that he should have appealed against that judgment; otherwise he took the risk of the advice given to him.

The third branch of the case which seems to me worthy of consideration is the question whether assuming that s. 14 of the Patni Regulation does not stand in the way of the plaintiff, the plaintiff here can show an independent cause of action apart from the provisions of s. 14 of the regulation. In one case, namely, the case of Nagendra Nath Pal v. Chandra Sekhar Dalal (2) Woodroffe, J., was of opinion that in a case of this character, money was recoverable as money paid under a mistake of fact. The learned Judge says :

(2) 5 C. L. J. 59.

"The question whether there can be said to have been such a mistake is not altogether free from difficulty but the effect of the subsequent reversal of the sale must I think be taken to be this: that when the payments were made they were so made under mistake, though the circumstance which made the payment one by mistake did not take place until afterwards."

Now, I cannot say that I agree with these remarks in principle. The mistake may be discovered afterwards but it cannot be that the circumstance which makes the payment one by mistake is one which took place afterwards. In the present case, the position was that the plaintiff got symbolical possession or ineffective possession on 9th June 1922, a suit at that time having been started to set aside the sale. It was in October of the following year that the payments were made to the zemindar, that is to say, he made the payments with his eyes open seeing that the sale had been challenged by the patnidar. In these circumstances if a question arises whether these payments were payments made under a mistake of fact, I fail altogether to be convinced that it can be treated in that way. I am also not convinced that, as a matter of common law, the rents which were paid by the auction-purchaser to the zemindar can be treated as money paid without consideration. It is said in this case that the possession was entirely ineffective and was only symbolical possession. In an ordinary case, one would suppose that the person paying rent is in effective possession and whether in these circumstances he ought to get back any of the rents which he has paid is essentially a question to be determined under s. 14 of the Patni Regulation. But I am not prepared to hold, even supposing that he got no effective possession, that the fact would be of any service to him and that notwithstanding the symbolical possession which he did obtain, he was in a position to maintain a common law cause of action for money paid without consideration. The remedy which is to be obtained from the zemindar should be obtained quickly and once for all under s. 14 of the Regulation. I think this is the true effect of the section not doubting that the interpretation put on it by Banerjee, J., is a correct interpretation.

For the reasons given above, the appeal, in my opinion, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Pearson, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 423—Criminal appeal—Private prosecutor, whether entitled to be heard.

Under s. 423, Criminal Procedure Code, the only persons who have got a right to be heard in a criminal appeal are the appellant or his Pleader and the Public Prosecutor if he appears and in certain cases, the accused if he appears. A private prosecutor has no right to be heard, though the Court may in its discretion hear him and an acquittal in appeal without hearing the complainant's Vakil is not bad in law. [p. 475, col. 1.]

Messrs. Sures Chandra Taluqdar and Bhutnath Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. Quasem, for the Opposite Party.

Mallik, J.—This rule was obtained by the complainant in a private prosecution under ss. 427 and 352, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate who tried the case convicted the accused under these two sections and sentenced him to four months' rigorous imprisonment, and to a fine of Rs. 50. Against this order of the trying Magistrate there was an appeal preferred to the District Magistrate and the learned District Magistrate after hearing the appellant's Pleader but without hearing the Pleader who appeared for the private prosecutor allowed the appeal and acquitted the accused.

The only ground upon which the rule was issued and the only point that was urged on behalf of the petitioner before us was that the learned District Magistrate committed an error of law when he disposed of the appeal without hearing complainant's Pleader. If the complainant's Pleader had a right to be heard and the District Magistrate disposed of the appeal without hearing him, the order passed by him could not but be held to be an order wrong in law. But the question is whether the complainant's Pleader had such a right. Mr. Talukdar for the petitioner in this connexion drew our attention to the provisions of s. 440, Criminal Procedure Code. This section lays down certain restrictions against parties being heard, in revision cases. Mr. Talukdar contended that when there are these restrictions laid down by the law in revision cases, it follows by implication that a party in a criminal appeal cannot be refused a hearing. I could have understood the force of this argument if there was no provision in the Act as regards the procedure that is to be followed in hearing a criminal appeal.

But in Chap. XXXI, Criminal Procedure Code which deals with "appeals," there is one section, viz., s. 423 which specifically deals with the procedure which an Appellate Court has to follow in disposing of an appeal. Section 423 lays down that the Appellate Court shall peruse the record of the case and hear the appellant or his Pleader if he appears and the Public Prosecutor if he appears and in case of an appeal under s. 417, the accused if he appears and then proceed to dispose of the appeal. Under this section the only persons who have got a right to be heard in a criminal appeal are therefore the appellant or his Pleader and the Public Prosecutor if he appears and in certain cases, the accused if he appears. It cannot therefore be said that a private prosecutor, like the complainant in the present case had under s. 423 any right to be heard. It is true that in some cases it has been held that it may be advantageous to the Appellate Court to allow the complainant to support the judgment. But in the present case the Appellate Court did not consider it necessary to hear the Pleader for the complainant. The Appellate Court in the present case did not exercise its discretion on the point in favour of the complainant it is true but simply because it did not do so, it cannot be said that it did something that was wrong in law. That being so, the ground on which the rule was issued must be held to have failed. The rule is accordingly discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Breach of peace—Fear of 'imminent' breach of peace, whether necessary.

Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, requires that there must be a present dispute, and that there must be a likelihood of the breach of the peace. Under the section there must be a present fear, that it is probable that there will be a breach of the peace

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Bakarganj, dated the 28th November 1930.

Messrs Sures Chandra Talukdar and Jatis Chandra Banerjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr Usha Kanta Guha, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment—In this case the Magistrate made an order under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in favour of the first party. He acted upon the Police report dated 14th January 1930, which stated that a certain char had formed in the bed of the Rajpur river and that this had been cultivated by the first party without objection, but that in June 1929, members of the second party tried to cultivate the char, and that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace but for Police interference. He went on to say that he had formed the opinion that the first party was rightly in possession so that :

and he asked that proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, should be drawn up. That being the position, the matter came before the Sessions Judge of Bakarganj and he has made a reference to this Court. In this letter of reference he recommends that the order may be set aside as being bad in law and states that his reason for the recommendation is that the Police report to which I have referred discloses that there was a likelihood that a breach of the peace would occur in June 1930, some five months after the date of the report, and that this anticipation was based on the fact that a breach of the peace in June of the previous year had been narrowly averted. The learned Judge does not think that s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, can have any application to such circumstances and he refers to the ruling in the case of W. Stewart v. Hubert Hughes (1), which in his opinion, exactly covers the present case. A rule also was issued by this Court upon the ground that the Police report did not state that there was a dispute likely to cause a breach of peace and on the ground that the first party did not lay any claim to the western portion of the disputed land, which the Magistrate had declared to be in the possession of the first party, in addition to the other land. The Magistrate in his explanation says that it was clearly stated in the Police report that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace and that the western portion of the land had been included by an oversight, and that it was clear from the petition of the first party that they had surrendered their claim to possession of this western portion. In our opinion the words of s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, must be given their plain meaning without adding to them any explanatory words. Formerly, in some decisions, words such as, 'imminent' or 'immediate' were added by Judges to the section in an attempt to make the meaning more clear.

But in the case of Kulada Kinkar Roy v. Danesh Mir (2) it was decided that the introduction of such words into the section, giving it a stronger significance than the words used in the section, was not justified and we agree with that opinion. The section requires that there must be a present dispute, and that there must be a likelihood of the breach of the peace. That is to say, there must be a present fear, that it is probable that there will be a breach of the peace owing to the dispute, unless proceedings are taken under the section. Of course that does not mean that orders under this section are to be made when somebody comes and says that he fears that a breach of the peace will occur a considerable time ahead. The procedure under the section is intended to deal with conditions in which the parties responsible for law and order have an existing fear that unless steps are taken under the section, a breach of the peace will occur before they can prevent it. In this case the words of the Police report are that the cultivating season is near at hand and that a breach of the peace is feared. That must mean that in the opinion of the writer of the report a breach of the peace was near at hand. The learned Sessions Judge has interpreted that to mean that the writer of the report only feared that a breach of the peace might occur in June 1930. But the words of the report do not justify any such interpretation. We therefore reject the reference.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money due on a simple mortgage bond, dated the 11th Agrahayan, 1319 B. S., executed by defendant No. 1. The claim of the plaintiff in the suit was resisted by defendant No. 1 and it was pleaded by defendant that there was a payment made of Rs. 150 to the plaintiff on 20th Chaitra, 1326 B. S. On the pleadings before the Court, the first issue and the material question arising for consideration in the case was whether the plea of payment of Rs. 150, as alleged by the defendant, was true or not. The plea of payment as raised in the suit, based on an alleged admission of the plaintiff himself, was sought to be substantiated by the defendant by evidence adduced by him; and the material witnesses examined in this behalf were two in number, D. Ws. Nos. 3 and 4. With reference to the first of these witnesses, witness No. 3, his deposition was to the effect that the plaintiff had on a previous occasion admitted the receipt of Rs. 150 from the defendant, in part payment of the mortgage debt. The most important evidence in the case in respect of this payment by defendant No. 1 was that afforded by the deposition of the D. W. No. 4 Babu Harikrishna Bhatta, a Pleader; and the statement that this Pleader witness made before the Court in his deposition was this:

"The plaintiff and the defendant admitted to have received and paid respectively the same amount of money Rs. 125 or Rs. 150 in connexion with payment due to the mortgage bond."

The witness added that the plaintiff and the defendant were present, but did not remember who else was present when the plaintiff admitted to have received the amount of Rs. 150. The witness further stated in his deposition before the Court, that the defendant approached him, and had informed him that the settlement of the debt due on the mortgage-bond had not been effected. Upon this state of the evidence before the Court, the trial Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, holding that the plea of payment of Rs. 150 had not been made out.

On appeal by the defendant No. 1, the decision of the trial Court and the decree passed by that Court in favour of the plaintiff were reversed. The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court of Appeal below allowed the appeal by defendant No. 1 in part. The decree of the Court of first instance was modified. The plaintiff's claim was reduced on the footing of the payment of Rs. 150 on 25th Chaitra, 1326, as alleged by defendant No. 1; and the decree made by the Court below was for the sum found due with interest upon calculation as indicated in the judgment of the lower Court. The lower Appellate Court has entirely relied upon the testimony of the two witnesses referred to above. According to the learned Subordinate Judge, the testimony of the witnesses could not be lightly discarded. It was held that the deposition of the two witnesses mentioned above supported the other evidence given by defendant No. 1, relating to the actual payment of Rs. 150 to the plaintiff; and the Court below has expressed the definite opinion that it could not but believe that the plaintiff did actually get Rs. 150 from defendant No. 1 in Chaitra, 1326.

The present appeal is directed against the decision and the decree of the Subordinate Judge in the Court of Appeal below. The main question that has been raised in support of the appeal by the plaintiff is this: that the Court of Appeal below has erred in law in relying upon the statement of the Pleader, Harikrishna Bhatta, which was inadmissible in evidence by reason of s. 126 Evidence Act. It is necessary, therefore, to examine whether the deposition of D. W. No. 4, Harikrishna Bhatta, was or was not admissible in evidence by reason of s. 126, Evidence Act. The witness has stated in his deposition that the admission was made by the plaintiff in the presence of the defendant and it was not suggested, neither was it indicated by anything contained in the deposition of the witnesses before the Court, that the communication was made to him as a Pleader, much less as a Pleader, who was employed by the plaintiff; nor was there any indication that the communication was made to the witness in the course, and for the purpose of his employment as a Pleader. On general principles, and under s. 126, Evidence Act, there is no privilege to communications made before the creation of relationship of Pleader and client. Further where two persons have a dispute about a claim made by one of them upon the other, and both seek the help of a Pleader, and one of them makes a statement to the Pleader, the statement so made to the Pleader by one of the parties is certainly admissible. see Shore v. Bedford (1). The question being, was the communication or admission made by the plaintiff to the witness in the character of his own exclusive Pleader or legal adviser? If it was so, the bond of secrecy is upon the witness; and if it was not, the communication was not privileged: see Perry v. Smith (2). It may be mentioned further that to be privileged under s. 126 Evidence Act, a communication by a party to his Pleader must be of a confidential nature: see Memon Hajee Haroon Mahomed v. Abdul Karim (3). The communication to the Pleader in this case was made in the presence of the defendant. As indicated above, regard being had to the principles which underlie s. 126, Evidence Act, to which reference has already been made, it is impossible to hold that the deposition of the Pleader witness, D. W. No. 4 in this case, was inadmissible in view of the provisions contained in s. 126, Evidence Act.

A further point was argued in support of the appeal by the plaintiff, that the plea of payment, as raised by the defendant No. 1 in the suit, could not be allowed to be proved by him, by reason of the fact that the admission as to payment made by the plaintiff was in the course of a negotiation for arriving at a compromise. That compromise having fallen through, the terms could not be proved. There is no substance in this contention. It is hardly necessary to mention that it was not necessary for defendant No. 1 to prove the terms of any compromise, which ultimately failed, and which had no direct bearing on the plea of payment raised in this case, the question for consideration in this case being whether the plaintiff had made an admission as to the receipt of the amount of Rs. 150 from defendant No. 1. The admission by the plaintiff has been proved, and the plaintiff's claim in suit has therefore been reduced to the extent of the payment already made by the defendant No. 1.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against an order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Bakargani, dated the 26th May 1930.

Messrs. Dwarkanath Chakravarti and Srish Chandra Dutt, for the Appellants

Messrs. Gunada Charan Sen and Prokash Chandra Majumdar, for the Respondents.

Pearson, J.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether in the circumstances a deposit in Court by a judgment debtor made under protest, would entitle him to have a sale in execution set aside under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code.

The sale was held on 19th February, 1930 and the matter was directed to come up for confirmation on 24th March. Meantime on 19th March two orders were passed viz.:—

"(1) Judgment-debtors are permitted to deposit the decretal money with compensation as prayed for; and (2) judgment-debtors by a petition state that they have deposited the decretal amount with interest on protest on the ground stated therein. The decretal money will remain in Court until further orders."

On 24th March notice was directed to issue on the decree-holders to show cause why the sale should not be set aside. The matter came on for hearing on 26th May, 1930, when the learned Judge directed the sale to be set aside and the execution case dismissed on full satisfaction. The ground on which this order proceeded was that the protest in making the deposit by the judgment-debtors was so far justified in that interest had been calculated on the entire decretal money up to the date of deposit; that that was wrong; that a sum of Rs. 47-3-6 on that account had been wrongly assessed and fell to be deducted from the deposit in Court.

The amount specified in the sale proclamation is what the judgment-debtor has to deposit under O. XXI, r. 89 (1) (b) of the Code. That figure in this instance was the sum of Rs. 11,593 7-0 from which had to be deducted certain payments made by the judgment debtors. In addition to that there was charged against the judgment-debtors in the account made up by the Court Officer the sum of Rs. 10-1-3 for "subsequent costs" and Rs. 264-1-6 for "interest up to 19th March 1930," both of which sums were included in the total deposited by the judgment-debtor under protest the latter sum apparently including the sum of Rs. 47-3-6 disallowed by the Judge in his order of 26th May. At any rate having regard to the provisions of r. 89(1) (b) it may be taken that the judgment-debtor was not compellable to pay those two sums of Rs. 10-1 6 and Rs. 264-11-6 in order to obtain the benefit given him by the rule.

It has been argued in the present appeal that the learned Judge was nevertheless wrong in passing an order setting aside the sale because by making the payment under protest in the way they did the result was that the judgment-debtors prevented the money from becoming available forthwith unconditionally to the decree holder and such a conditional deposit is bad: see 10 Ind. Cas. 880 Dulhim v. Bansidhar (1), Shakoti v. Jotindra (2) and Narayan v. Amgauda (3). It seems to be clear that when a deposit is made under r. 89 it must be made, in the ordinary way, for payment to the decree-holder voluntarily and unconditionally: see Narayan v. Amgauda (3) and Raghu Ram v. Deokali (4). Mr. Sen however has argued that the present case differs from the cases cited in that the judgment-debtors here never denied but on the contrary admitted their liability under r. 89, O. XXI. In the present case the deciding factor in my judgment must be the terms on which the payment of the deposit was made. These are to be found in the petition of the judgment-debtors filed on 19th March. In that they state that:

"When the petitioners wanted to deposit money with the permission of the Court the officer of the Court gave them an account according to which they have to deposit a large sum of money in excess. Besides this an excess amount is found to have been calculated as costs of execution and interest. Still the judgment-debtors deposit under protest the amount as calculated by the officer of the Court."

and this is followed by a prayer that—

"the permission to the decree-holder to withdraw the said money may be withheld till the hearing of the objection on behalf of these judgment-debtors."

Had the objection been limited only to the execution costs and interest, the judgment-debtors would have been in better case; but it is not so limited. They object to having to deposit "a large sum of money in excess" and "besides this" (meaning "in addition to this" there are the items of costs and interest. It is not, therefore, correct to assert that in that petition the judgment-debtors are admitting their liability. It would have been easy enough for them to frame the petition for deposit, without objection of the amount required by the rule and protest against the other items but this they have not done. The protest according to the petition extends to a "large sum of money in excess" over and above the costs and interest. In my judgment therefore this was not a good deposit under r. 89 which entitled the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside and prima facie the order of the learned Judge cannot stand.

It appears, however, that on 25th March, 1930, a few days after the deposit an attachment in execution was made of the deposit moneys to the extent of R. 3,410 10-0 by creditors holding a decree against the decree holders in the present matter. A certificate for payment of that amount was granted to the attaching creditors on 12th July, 1930. In the circumstances this matter must go back to the lower Court for consideration of what effect if any, these facts may have upon the present position and rights of the parties.

The appeal is allowed with costs three gold mohurs. The case is remanded to the lower Court for the final disposal of the matter upon determination of the question set out in the foregoing paragraph.

Civil Revision against an order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Barisal, dated the 7th March 1931.

Mr. Phanibhusan Chakravarti for Mr. Sudhansu Sekhar Mukerji, for the Petitioners Messrs. Gopal Chandra Das and Bhuban Mohan Saha, for the Opposit Party.

Judgment—This rule has been issued upon the opposite party to show cause why a judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court should not be set aside in a suit by the plaintiff opposite party for contribution on account of rent paid by the plaintiff on account of arrears of rental of tenures alleged to be held by the opposite party in order to save them from sale.

The first ground on which the rule was issued is that, the plaintiff opposite party's raiyati holdings, having been in no danger of being avoided or in any way adversely affected by the default in paying up the revenue, the present suit should have been dismissed; and secondly that assuming that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, she was entitled to a decree, only against the opposite party No. 2, who is defendant No. 3 to whom, the petitioners allege, they had transferred the tenure which was saved from being sold by the payment made by the plaintiffs.

As regards the first point, contribution is claimed under s. 9, Act XI of 1859, and the person depositing the arrears of revenue is entitled to recover the amount if it is deposited in good faith, believing that the interest of the person so depositing is in danger. In the circumstances of the present case, there is no reason to think that the deposit was not made in good faith thinking that the interest of the plaintiff was endangered by the sale. So there is no substance in this ground.

The other ground of the rule is that in fact, the defendants are not liable, because they had already sold their tenure, previous to the period for which the revenue was in arrears. It appears that in the suit, they filed a sale deed, showing that they had transferred their interest to defendant No. 3, and referring to this the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court says, that, defendant No. 3 did not register her name in the Collector's register after her purchase. It therefore appears that he finds that defendant No. 3 actually purchased these tenures, but holds that under s. 11, Act VII of 1868 read with s. 9 of Act II of 1859, the liability to Government, as well as, to the party depositing would attach to the registered defaulter. Section 9, Act XI of 1859, states that the person, so depositing, shall be entitled to recover the amount deposited from the defaulting proprietor. As the tenures had been transferred to defendant No. 3 before this deposit was made and these arrears accrued, he is obviously the defaulting proprietor, so that it is defendant No. 3 alone, who would be liable under s. 9, Act XI of 1859. There is no mention in this section of the registered defaulter. But it is contended on the other side, that under s. 69, Contract Act, the persons whose names are registered as the proprietors of the tenure, in the Collector's register, being jointly liable, the plaintiff is also entitled to recover from them. Under s. 68, Land Registration Act, the recorded proprietors are jointly and severally liable for the discharge of any duties and the obligations imposed upon the proprietors of the estate and all persons, who are required by this Act to apply for registration, shall from the date on which the obligation so to register is imposed on them respectively by the Act, be deemed to be liable for the discharge of any duties and obligations, which are by any such law imposed upon the proprietors of the estate. From this it appears that from the date on which the parties are required to apply for registration, the liability devolves upon them. Defendant No. 3 having purchased the estate it is clear that he should have applied for registration, within six months from the date of his purchase, so that the liability under s. 68 has devolved upon defendant No. 3. I therefore think that the plaintiff was entitled to the amount claimed against defendant No. 3, and not against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, because they had already transferred their share, before the period in respect of which the arrears of revenue accrued.

The rule is therefore made absolute. The decree of the Court below is set aside and the suit is decreed for the same amount as against defendant No. 3. The petitioners will be entitled to their costs in this Court—the hearing fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 65, 83—Commission agent—Suit against principal to recover loss—Limitation—Article applicable—Cause of action—Art. 83, scope of—Cross-contracts—Cause of action, when arises.

A suit by a commission agent to recover loss on the transactions entered into on behalf of his constituents is governed by Art. 83 of the Limitation Act. Article 35 applies only where there is an agreement between the parties to pay the loss immediately on its being ascertained, and in the absence of any specified time or specified contingency, that Article would not apply. Under Art. 83 time begins to run when plaintiff is actually indemnified. Kadari Pershad v. Har Bhagwan (12), Munshi Ram v. Bhagwan Das (13), Abdul Aziz Khan v. Mohammad Bakhsh (5), Muhamad Mazhar Ahad v. Muhamad Azim-ud-Din (6), followed. Kandaswamy Pillai v. Anayambal (3), dissented from. [p. 485, cols. 1 & 2.]

The contract to indemnify within Art. 83 of the Limitation Act need not be by express stipulation, and may be either imposed by Statute or implied or inferred by virtue of the jural relations of the parties. Ram Barai Singh v. Mohendra Persad (15), relied on. [p. 485, col. 1.]

When a commission agent allocates the cross-contracts to himself it might be said that he is damnified on the day when the cross-contracts were entered into. If, on the other hand, he enters into cross-contracts with others, it cannot be said that the loss has necessarily occurred to the commission agent on the day on which such cross-contracts were entered into. Bhagwan Das v. Kanji (1), referred to. [p. 485, col. 2.]

Second Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Dhulia, in Appeal No. 28 of 1924.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. G. Rao and S. A. Merchant, for the Respondent.

Fawcett, J.—This was a suit brought by a pakka adatia against a client, who dealt through him in regard to contracts of cotton seeds, cloth bales, etc., in Samvat 1974-1975. He sought to recover a sum of Rs. 2,227-12-0 as balance due on the account with interest. The defendant raised various contentions, which are now immaterial. Among them there was no objection that the claim, or any part of it, was barred on account of limitation, but the point seems to have been raised, as the Subordinate Judge in his judgment held, that by virtue of an admission in the written statement that a certain sum was due the claim was not time-barred and passed a decree for the amount claimed with future interest. The defendant appealed, and among the grounds of appeal was one that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the admission of part of the claim in the written statement saved the bar of limitation. The Appellate Court had also before it other questions which were raised, but which are not now material. In regard to the point of limitation the District Judge held that the claim was time-barred. The proved transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant are in regard to the purchase and sale of eleven bales of cloth, in respect of which items were debited and credited in the account of the defendant. The District Judge says:

"On 23rd August, 1918, there is a debit for the value of eleven bales purchased. On 7th September, 1918, and then on 8th September, 1918, there are credit items for the value of five bales and six bales sold by defendant. Thus this saoda for eleven bales was settled on 8th September, 1918, and on that date plaintiff could know what amount defendant had to pay to him for the loss. The plaint was filed on 18th November, 1921 more than three years after 8th September, 1918. I have not overlooked the fact that the saoda for eleven bales was of the vaida of 15th Kartik Sud corresponding to 18th November, 1918. But it was open to parties to settle it up even before that date and since the whole contract was fulfilled before then, I think limitation ran from the day after 8th September, 1918."

The plaintiff comes to us in second appeal on the ground that the lower Court erred in holding the claim in regard to these eleven bales to be time-barred.

In the arguments before us Mr. Shingne for the appellant contended that the article applicable was either Art. 65 or Art. 120. On the other hand, Mr. Rao for the respondent contended that the article applicable was Art. 83, and he cited various authorities in support of that contention. In my opinion, the article that directly applies to the claim is Art. 83. In this case the contracts were made through the plaintiff as pakka adatia on terms that in Bhagwandas v. Kanji (1) are stated by Sir Lawrence Jenkins at pages 215 and 216*. He there says that the contract is one of employment for reward; and as pointed out by the Privy Council in Bhagwandas Parasram v. Burjorji Ruttonji (2), in so far as the plaintiff made the contracts in suit in exercise of the authority conferred upon him and became liable for their performance, he also became entitled to be indemnified by his employer, against the consequences of the acts done by him, unless those acts were unlawful. Here, there is no question of any illegality. In view of this relationship, in my opinion, the basis of the plaintiff's claim in respect of the loss caused by these cross-contracts is the right to be indemnified, and the suit is, therefore, one upon a contract to indemnify, which does not fall either under Art. 81 or Art. 82, and so comes under Art. 83.

In Kandaswamy Pillai v. Avayambal (3) it was held that Art. 83, Limitation Act, only applied to a case where the obligation to indemnify directly arose from the contract itself and not from any statutory enactment such as that contained in s. 222, Contract Act. This view has been dissented from in various cases, such as Manghi Ram v. Ram Saran Das-Maman Chand (4), Abdul Aziz Khan v. Mohammad Baksh (5) and Muhammad Mazaharat Ahad v. Muhamad Azimud-Din (6). I agree with the view taken in these latter cases, because there is nothing in the article itself which, in my opinion, justifies the distinction made by the Madras High Court. But, in any case, I think that the obligation to indemnify in this instance arises from the customary terms of a pakki adat, quite apart from the provisions of s. 222, Contract Act; and if that is so, even if the distinction made by the Madras High Court is a good one, still the present case falls under Art. 83.

I do not think that the case can be properly held to fall under Art. 65, Limitation Act. That article requires the suit to be one for compensation for breach of a promise to do anything at a specified time, or upon the happening of a specified contingency. Due effect must, I think, be given to this word "specified." It might, for instance, be contended that Art. 65 contemplates a contract in writing just as a contract in writing is obviously contemplated in Art. 66 and Art. 67, where the same word "specified" is used; and the Privy Council in Durga Chowdhurani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhury (7) and Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (8) held that the word "specified" in s. 584, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, as used in the phrase "specified law or usage", meant "specified in the memorandum of appeal." But, on the other hand, I am prepared to concede that a thing can be specified in an oral contract as well as in a written contract; and s. 46, Contract Act, for instance, which says:

"Where, by the contract, a promisor is to perform his promise without application by the promisee and no time for performance is specified, the engagement must be performed within a reasonable time"

clearly applies to an oral contract as well as a written contract. At the same time it seems to me that the word "specified" implies that there must be some particularity in the contract as to the time when the promise is to be performed, or as to the contingency which is to happen. I quite agree that in a contract of this kind there is an implied promise on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiff under ordinary rules as to constructive contracts, such as are given in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 7, s. 2, at pages 465 and 467. The case would fall either under Art. 946 or Art. 950, para. 2, as regards an agent's right to recover any payment that he makes on behalf of his employer. But that does not necessarily imply a promise to pay at any particular time, and certainly not a promise to pay at a "specified" time.

The view of the District Judge would amount to this; that there was an implied promise to pay as soon as the cross-contract effected on 8th September, 1918, resulted in showing what was the loss on the transactions. If an agreement were proved to pay such loss immediately on its being ascertained, then, no doubt, there would be a specified time which would bring the case under Art. 65. But, where is the evidence of any such contract in this case? So far as I am aware there is not an iota of such evidence, and the accounts that were actually rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant were drawn up at a date subsequent to 8th September. It seems to me that the circumstances would not warrant it being held that there was an agreement by the defendant to pay the loss in a case settled by cross-contract on the very day that the loss is ascertained. A debtor is generally not in a hurry to pay his debts, and the probable state of affairs would be that the obligation to pay would not arise till the plaintiff made a demand for payment by sending his account to the defendant. That would probably be at any rate not before the settlement day, for ordinarily, while

In my opinion, there is no warrant for holding that in this case there was an implied promise to pay the loss on the very day that the loss was ascertained. Then, can it be said that there was a breach of a promise to pay anything upon the happening of a specified contingency? Can it be said that the settlement of differences of cross-contracts is a specified contingency within the meaning of this article? In my opinion, the answer is clearly, No. The word "contingency", so far as it applies to contracts, obviously has reference to the case of "contingent contracts," which are the subject-matter of Chap III, Contract Act. Section 31 defines a "contingent contract" as a contract to do or not to do something, if some event, collateral to such contract does or does not happen; and the various illustrations to this and the following sections are all ordinary cases of a contract to do something, such as to make a payment, if a house is burnt, if a person survives another, if somebody marries somebody, and so on. The only way in which the present case can be brought within the definition of a contingent contract is to say that there is a contract between the parties that, if the transactions are settled by cross-contracts payment will be made at once, although otherwise payment would be made later; but the event of settling transactions by cross-contracts is one within the entire control of the parties and not of the fortuitous kind contemplated by Chap. III, Contract Act, or the general meaning of the word "contingency." Accordingly, in my opinion, Art. 65 cannot properly be applied in the present case; and, as I have already said, the real basis of the suit is a pakka adatia's right of reimbursing, or being indemnified, so that Art. 83 seems to me to be the appropriate one. Under Art. 83 limitation begins to run from the time, "when the plaintiff is actually damnified." These words are of significance.

The article does not say, "when the loss is ascertained," but "when the plaintiff is actually damnified," and that is based upon the leading case of Collinge v. Heywood (9), which interpreted the corresponding law in England. There it was held that on a contract to indemnify plaintiff against costs of which he is afterwards called upon to pay, the cause of action arises when he pays, and not when the costs were incurred or the attorney's bill was delivered to the plaintiff, and, therefore, the time of statutory limitation runs from the time of payment. Accordingly, here also limitation would not run from the time when the plaintiff submitted a bill or an account to the defendant about the loss; a fortiori it would not run merely from the time when the loss was ascertained. It runs from the time when the plaintiff becomes out of pocket by payment of the loss incurred on account of these contracts; so that, if the District Judge intended to hold that Art. 83 applied, I think he is clearly in error in saying that time ran from 8th September, when the loss was ascertained.

Supposing that Art. 61 applied and not Art. 83, the suit being treated as one for money paid for the defendant, still the same test would apply. Limitation would run only from the time when the money was paid by the plaintiff for the defendant. Therefore, in my opinion, before it can be decided whether the suit is time-barred, it has to be ascertained when it was that the plaintiff paid this loss as agent of the defendant. So far as I am aware, it is not clear when in fact, he paid it; and to enable us to pass orders on the appeal, in my opinion, the parties should be heard on this point, if necessary, an issue should be framed about it and sent to the lower Court for determination.

Mirza, J—The only point in this appeal is whether the appellant's claim in the suit is time-barred. The appellant sued the respondent to recover a sum of Rs. 2,227-12-0 which had become due on a transaction for the purchase of eleven bales of cloth. The respondent employed the appellant as his pakha adatia to purchase eleven bales of cloth deliverable on 18th November, 1918. Before the due date the transaction was settled by means of two cross-contracts of sale, one dated 7th September, 1918, for the sale of five bales and the other dated 8th September, 1918, for the sale of six bales. Rs. 2,227-12-0 was the difference which thus became payable by the respondent. The appellant instituted this suit on 18th November, 1921. The lower Appellate Court held that the suit should have been brought within three years from the day after 8th September, 1918, and was, therefore, time-barred.

Mr. Shingne for the appellant contends that the period of three years should be computed from 18th November, 1918. He relies upon Art. 65 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, and contends that the respondent committed a breach of his promise on 18th November, 1918, when he had to pay for and take delivery of the eleven bales. This argument in my opinion, ignores the fact that on 18th November, the transaction was not outstanding. It was settled and closed on 8th September, previously. The liability of the respondent in respect of the transaction was then ascertained and settled. The original transaction became merged in the subsequent transaction. The amount found due became payable immediately and the period of three years would, in my opinion, commence from 8th September, 1918.

In Chandulal v. Sidhruthrai (10) Jenkins, C. J., in dealing with the nature and effect of cross-contracts under the pakki adat system, states that when the cross-contracts are effected the liability is treated as balanced and adjusted. In Bhagwandas v. Kanji (1), the learned Chief Justice says that a contract between a pakka adatia and his constituent is one of employment for reward. At page 217* he remarks,

"I do not say that there is no relation of principal and agent between the parties at any stage; there may be up to a point."

He is inclined to limit the agency to the earlier stages in the transaction when, e. g., the rate at which goods are to be purchased or sold is agreed upon.

When the transaction is settled the constituent is immediately, in my opinion, liable to the pakka adatia in respect of the difference. That liability, in my opinion, does not depend on the pakka adatia proving actual loss or damage to himself as he would have to do in an ordinary agency. He is entitled, if he so chooses, to appropriate the contracts to himself. The constituent is not interested in the pakka adatia's transactions with third parties in pursuance of his employment as pakka adatia. The pakka adatia is not bound to disclose those transactions to the constituent. Article 83 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act has, in my opinion, no applicability to the case.

The judgment of the lower Appellate Court, in my opinion, is correct. The appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Fawcett, J.—In view of this difference of opinion the case will have to be referred to another Judge or other Judges for decision under s. 98 (2), Civil Procedure Code, on the point of law on which we differ, viz., whether the plaintiff's suit is time-barred.

(The case was next heard by a Bench composed of Patkar and Baker, JJ.)

Patkar, J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant a sum of money as damages on the allegation that the defendant purchased through the plaintiff eleven bales of cloth at Rs. 2-12-6 per lb on 20th August, 1918. The defendant, on 7th September, 1918, sold five bales through the plaintiff, and on 8th September, sold six bales, and it is alleged that in the transaction of the eleven bales the defendant was bound to pay the plaintiff loss to the extent of Rs. 479 13-0.

In the suit the plaintiff also claimed that the defendant had entered into an additional transaction of purchase with him with regard to five bales. The learned Subordinate Judge held the transaction proved, but the lower Appellate Court held that the transaction was not proved. We are, therefore, concerned only with the transaction of eleven bales of cloth purchased by the defendant through the plaintiff on 20th August, 1918.

The question of limitation was not raised in the trial Court, and the defendant in his written statement admitted the claim with regard to Rs. 479-13-0 in respect of the transaction relating to the eleven bales. On appeal the learned District Judge held that limitation ran from 8th September, 1918, on the ground that on that day the plaintiff could know what amount the defendant had to pay to him as damages. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On second appeal the case came before Fawcett and Mirza, JJ. Fawcett, J., was of opinion that the article of limitation applying to the present case was Art. 83, Limitation Act. Mirza, J., was of opinion that Art. 83, Limitation Act, had no applicability to the present case, but, without specifying the Article of the Limitation Act applicable to the case, held that when there was a cross-contract entered into by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant the liability was settled, and the liability did not depend on the pakka adatia proving actual loss or damage to himself. In view of this difference of opinion the case was referred to this Bench under s. 98, cl. (2), Civil Procedure Code.

The question, therefore, arising in the present case is which Article of the Limitation Act applies to the facts of the present case. According to the decision in Bhagwandas Parasram v. Burjerji Ruttonji (2), when a commission agent enters into a transaction on behalf of his constituent he becomes entitled to be indemnified by his employer against the consequences of the acts done by him unless those acts are unlawful. To the same effect is the decision in the case of Tika Ram v. Daulat Ram (11). The commission agent, therefore, has a right to be indemnified in respect of the transactions entered into on behalf of his constituent.

(10) 29 B. 291; 7 Bom. L. R. 165.

Under those circumstances we think Art. 83, Limitation Act, would apply. This view is accepted in the cases of Kadari Pershad v. Har Bhagwan (12), Munshi Ram v. Bhagwan Das (13) and Kirpa Ram Lachman Das v. Firm Sawan Mal Gopi Chand (14). To the same effect are decisions in Manghi Ram v. Ram Saran Das-Maman Chand (4), Abdul Aziz Khan v. Mahomad Bakhsh (5) and Muhammed Mazharul Ahad v. Muhamad Azimuddin (6) where the view taken in Kandaswamy Pillai v. Avayambal (3) is dissented from. In Kandaswamy's case (3) the Madras High Court appears to have held that the agent's right to indemnification arises from the statute law, i. e., s. 222, Contract Act, and is not a part of the agency contract. We think that the right to indemnification though recognized by statute is the necessary consequence of the agency contract. The contract to indemnify under Art. 83, Limitation Act, need not be by express stipulation, and may be either imposed by statute or implied or inferred in virtue of the jural relations of the parties: see Ram Barai Singh v. Mohendra Persad (15).

We think that a suit by a commission agent to recover loss on the transactions entered into on behalf of his constituents is governed by Art. 83, Limitation Act. Article 65, Limitation Act, would not apply unless there is an agreement between the parties to pay the loss immediately on its being ascertained; and in the absence of any specified time or specified contingency, Art. 65 would not apply. Under Art. 83, Limitation Act, the time would begin to run when the plaintiff is actually damaged. It is urged on behalf of the respondent, relying on the case in Chandulal v. Sidhruthrai (10), that when cross-contracts are entered into by a commission agent the liability on the original contract must be considered to have been balanced and adjusted. On the other hand, it is contended that the time ought to begin to run from the vaida date which in this case would be 18th November, 1918. It is further urged that in the books of the plaintiff the account is written on 19th November, 1918, i. e., the day after the vaida day. Incidents of the custom relating to pakki adat have been fully dealt with in Bhagwandas v. Kanji (1). It may be that when the commission agent allocates the cross-contracts to himself it might be said that he is damaged on the day when the cross contracts were entered into. If, on the other hand, he enters into cross-contracts with others, it cannot be said that the loss has necessarily occurred to the commission agent on the day on which such cross-contracts were entered into. There is no evidence in the present case to show when as a matter of fact the plaintiff commission agent was damaged. There is no dispute with regard to the amount due to the plaintiff, viz. Rs. 493-13-0. We think, therefore, that it is desirable that we should send down an issue in this case on the following point:

When was the plaintiff actually damaged?

Both the parties will be allowed to lead evidence on the point. Finding will be returned within two months.

(On return of the finding on the issue Patkar and Baker, JJ., delivered the following judgment on 12th March 1931.)

Patkar, J.—The case was sent down for a finding on the issue as to the date on which the plaintiff was actually damaged. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the plaintiff was actually damaged on the vaida day, viz., on 18th November, 1918. The suit was brought on 18th November, 1921. Therefore the plaintiff's claim is within time.

It is agreed on both sides that the amount due to the plaintiff would be Rs 479-13-0. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be reversed, and a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 479-13-0 with proportionate costs. The rest of the claim will be dismissed with costs.

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 144—Restitution of property—Decree-holder selling property of judgment-debtor in his possession and under charge of decree—Over payment and satisfaction of decree—Recovery of sum overpaid.

The plaintiff obtained a money decree against the defendant. The decree created a charge on certain bales of cotton in the possession of the plaintiff and which belonged to the defendant. The plaintiff alleged to have sold the said bales for Rs. 143-2-6. The first Court found the value of the bales to be Rs. 1,830. On appeal the lower Appellate Court declared the value of bales to be Rs. 5,511-10-0. The decree was for a sum of Rs. 4,413-7-9. The defendant prayed that the plaintiff should deduct the decretal amount from the value of the bales and claimed to recover the balance under s. 144, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that s. 144, Civil Procedure Code, on a liberal construction applied to the case. [p. 487, col. 2]

Held, further, that the question of over payment like this and satisfaction of a decree is a matter to be decided in an application in execution and not by a separate suit. [p. 488, col. 2]

Second Appeal from a decision of the District Judge of West Khandesh at Dhulia, in Appeal No. 134 of 1930, varying that of the Munsif, Joint Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Miscellaneous Application No. 196 of 1929.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. W. B. Pradhan), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, (with him Mr. Y. V. Dixit,) for the Respondent.

Baker, J.—In order to understand this appeal, it is necessary to set out the facts in some detail. The present respondent Laduram obtained a decree against the present appellant and his partners in Suit No. 474 of 1919 on September 6, 1921. The decree was for Rs. 3,307 principal, and Rs. 295 for interest, and Rs. 24 for commission, in all Rs. 3,626, and the costs of the suit, to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, and it was provided that the said amount should be a charge on nineteen bales of cotton belonging to the defendant which were lying with the plaintiff, who was a commission agent for sale. The value of the nineteen bales was not stated. In execution of this decree the plaintiff presented a darkhast in which he gave credit to the defendant for Rs. 143 2 6, being the price of the nineteen bales of cotton which he had sold. The defendant objected to this price, and in execution proceedings an issue was framed regarding the value of the nineteen bales of cotton, and it was held in 1925 that the value of the bales was Rs. 1,830. Against this decision an appeal was presented by another partner of the defendant's firm, and ultimately it was held by the District Court on February 12, 1927, that the value of the bales was Rs. 5,511 11-0. It so happened that in the interval between 1921 the date of the first darkhast, and 1927 the date of the final determination of the value of the bales by the District Court, the decree-holder plaintiff had recovered various sums under the decree from the defendants, and ultimately this amounted to Rs. 3,152 odd. Therefore, when the Appellate Court finally found that the value of the bales was over Rs. 5,500, it was obvious that the decree-holder had recovered from the judgment-debtor considerably more than the amount of the decree, and an application was made by the present appellant to the executing Court for restitution. In the course of those proceedings accounts were taken, and the objections raised by the respondent in those proceedings were as to certain items of figures and interest. But he did not contend that the judgment-debtor should be referred to a separate suit, and both parties joined in a purshis, which is Ex. 9, dated January 25, 1930, agreeing to the appointment of a Commissioner to take the accounts. Accounts were taken. The contention regarding interest was overruled, and ultimately the Subordinate Judge found on the Commissioner's report that Rs. 2,098-4-6 were due for principal, and Rs. 49-1-9 for interest, in all Rs. 2,193-6-3 to be paid by the decree-holder to the judgment-debtor. It is to be noted that this order is based on the calculation that the nineteen bales of cotton were sold by the decree-holder for Rs. 5,511. Against this order the decree-holder lodged an appeal to the District Court, in which it was contended that the order passed by the Subordinate Judge could not be said to be an order under s. 144 as the original decree was neither varied nor reversed, so that the appellant (plaintiff) could not be called upon to restore to the applicant (defendant) what he had erroneously recovered under the decree. The District Judge accepted this contention, and held that it was not an order under s. 144, although it was an order more properly speaking under s. 47, and he held that the order so far as it called upon the plaintiff to refund Rs. 1,098-3-3, which is the difference between the decretal amount and the price of the bales as found by the District Judge, viz., Rs. 5,511 odd, which sum could not in any sense be said to form part of the decree, cannot be sustained. The order, therefore, could not be sustained either under s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code or under s. 144, and that under the latter section the only restitution that the defendant could get was as regards the sum recovered by the plaintiff in execution of the decree and in support of that proposition, the learned District Judge relied on the case of Hukum Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (1), and, therefore, he set aside that part of the order which includes the sum of Rs. 1,098-3-3 and the interest thereupon. The judgment-debtor has appealed, and it is contended by the learned Counsel on his behalf, first, that it was not open to the decree-holder to raise that contention in appeal, because the whole of the execution proceedings in the lower Court had proceeded on the basis that the price of the nineteen bales was to form part of the proceedings in execution, and that no objection was taken before the Subordinate Judge to that sum or whatever sum the bales were found to be worth being taken into account, the only objection being as regards certain figures, matters of calculation, and, secondly, on the merits, it is contended that on the rulings of the Privy Council s. 144 is not to be narrowly construed, and that it would cover the present case, and thirdly, it is contended that in any case this case clearly falls under s. 47, and any balance due by one party to the other can be recovered in execution proceedings without a separate suit. The learned Counsel for the respondent has very fairly admitted that the objection taken by his client is a technical objection, and he commenced by saying that the decree only gave a charge on the nineteen bales, and that ordinarily speaking a charge-holder has no power to sell. I have no hesitation in holding that the decree-holder is estopped from raising this contention, because as a matter of fact he has sold the bales. He has credited the price towards the decretal amount, and the whole execution proceedings have proceeded on that basis, viz., that the price of the bales was to form part of the payment towards the decree. I am unable to accept the contention of the District Judge that this sum of Rs. 1,089, which represents the difference between the decretal amount and the amount for which the bales were held to be sold, does not form part of the decree. The decree itself gives the decree-holder a charge on the nineteen bales, and therefore, these nineteen bales are directly covered by the decree. It is quite true that the decree did not lay down what the value of the bales was to be, but that was subsequently ascertained in execution proceedings, and it cannot be said that the executing Court has varied the decree when it finds what the value of the charge is, a matter which was left open, or rather I may say, undisposed of by the original decree. Throughout these years from 1921 to 1929 the execution of the decree has been going on on the basis that the price of the nineteen bales, which were sold by the decree-holder, forms part of the amount recovered in execution of the decree. Section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code says:—

"Where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of first instance shall, on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed;..."

Now, strictly speaking, there has been a variation of the decree in this case, because the original decree, as I have said, merely gave the decree-holder a charge on nineteen bales of cotton. Subsequently when he sold those bales and the amount is brought into accounts in the execution proceedings, the first Court held that the value of those bales was Rs. 1,800 odd, but in appeal that decree was varied by finding that the value of the bales was upwards of Rs. 5,000. Now, if at the presentation of the first darkhast the decree holder had mentioned in his application that he had sold the bales, and their value was Rs. 5,500, it is obvious that the decree would have been completely satisfied, and that the judgment-debtor would have been entitled under s. 47 to recover the excess of the amount received by the decree holder above the decretal amount. As a matter of fact, s. 144 has been held by the Privy Council not to be one which is to be strictly construed. That is laid down in Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath Marwari (2), and a reference has been made to the dictum of Cairns L. J. as to the expression 'act of the Court', meaning' not merely the act of the primary Court, or of any intermediate Court of Appeal, but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case. It is quite true that the facts in that case were not on all fours with the present case, but in view of the opinion expressed by their Lordships as to the section being read in a liberal manner, I have no doubt that these principles will apply to the facts of the present case. The case which the learned District Judge has quoted in Hukum Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (1) rather supports the appellant. The penultimate paragraph of the headnote says:—

"The Code of Civil Procedure binds all Courts so far as it goes. It is not however exhaustive and does not affect previously existing powers, unless it takes them away; in matters with which it does not deal the Court will exercise an inherent jurisdiction to do that justice between the parties, which is warranted under the circumstances and which the necessities of the case require."

Now if we apply that to the facts of the present case, it will be seen that the amount which the decree-holder credited to the judgment-debtor on account of the sale of the bales has been found on appeal to be an extreme under-estimate, and it is also apparent that by reason of the decree-holder having received the sum of Rs. 5,500 by his sale of the bales plus a sum of some Rs. 3,000 which he has recovered in other ways from the judgment-debtor, he has as a matter of fact been overpaid. Quite apart from s. 144, s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code strictly applies to the facts of the present case, which lays down that all questions between the parties to the suit or their representatives—there are no representatives in this case—relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. This section directly relates to the discharge and satisfaction of the decree, because the point which we have to consider is what is the amount which the decree-holder has received in excess of that to which he was entitled under the decree. Lastly, no such point was taken in the first Court when the Commissioner was appointed with the consent of both the parties, who have put in a purshis, and the only objections raised were as to some questions of arithmetical calculation.

In these circumstances, I have no doubt that the view of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported, that by a liberal application of s. 144 it cannot be made to cover this case and that there has as a matter of fact been a variation of the decree in appeal. Secondly clearly under s. 47 the question of an overpayment like this and satisfaction of a decree is a matter to be decided in an application in execution and not by a separate suit. For these reasons, I do not think that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court can stand. The decree will be reversed, and the order of the first Court, the Joint Subordinate Judge, will be restored with costs throughout.

BEAUMONT, C. J. AND RANGNEKAR, J.
THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX,
BOMBAY—RESPONDEE

versus

THE TRUSTEES OF THE SIR CURRIMBHAY
EBRAHIM BARONETCY—ASSEESSE.

Income-Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 3—Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy Act (IV of 1913)—Individual, what is—Trustees under latter Act—Liability for income-tax and super-tax.

The assessee corporation were the trustees under a private Act No. IV of 1913 which was passed by the Governor-General of India in Council entitled "an Act for settling certain properties belonging to Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronet, so as to accompany and support the title and dignity of a Baronet and for other purposes connected therewith". The corporation was constituted with perpetual succession and common seal under the style and title of the trustees of the Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy. The corporation consisted of the Baronet for the time being and three Government Officials named in the Act. Certain properties were made to vest in the corporation who were to pay all taxes etc, to defray the expense of repairs and insurance, to set aside a sinking fund and a repair fund and to pay the surplus to the Baronet for the time being. The second Baronet died just before the end of the Financial year 1927, 1928. On 26th September, 1928, the corporation made a return for income-tax for the year 1928-29. The corporation were ordered to pay the income-tax which was paid. In March they were asked to pay super-tax which they refused to do. The question referred by the Commissioner of Income-tax was whether apart from s. 56, Income-Tax Act, the corporation were properly assessed to income-tax and super-tax for the year 1928-29:

Held, that the corporation constituted by the special Act was an individual within the orbit of s. 3, Income-Tax Act and not an association of individuals. [p. 490, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the corporation was liable to be assessed both for Income-tax as well as super-tax. [p. 491, col. 1.]

Civil Reference made by the Commissioner of Income-Tax, Bombay.

Sir Jamshed Kanga, Advocate-General (with him Mr. A Kirke-Smith, Government Solicitor), for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Mr. Coltman (with him Messrs. Payne & Co.) for the Assessee.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a case which the Income-tax Commissioner has referred to this Court under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, and the question which he asks as in his amended case is whether notwithstanding the payment already made of Income-tax by the corporation they were properly assessed to Income-tax and super-tax or either of them for the year 1928-29 by the Income-tax Officer as per his orders of October 11, 1928, and March 11, 1929, in view of the circumstances of the case and the provisions of ss. 40 and 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The corporation referred to are the trustees under a private Act IV of 1913 which was passed by the Governor-General of India in Council entitled "an Act for settling certain properties belonging to Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim, Baronet, so as to accompany and support the title and dignity of a Baronet and for other purposes connected therewith." Shortly before the passing of the Act Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim had been created a Baronet and the purpose of the Act according to the preamble was to make provisions for keeping up the Baronetcy. By s. 2 of the Act there was constituted a corporation with perpetual succession and a common seal under the style and title of the trustees of the Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy. That corporation was to consist of the Accountant-General of Bombay, the Collector of Bombay, the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay, and the Baronet for the time being. Then by s. 5 certain immoveable properties of the estimated value of twenty lakhs of rupees described in the First and Second Schedules to the Act were by virtue of the Act vested in the corporation. Section 6 of the Act provided that out of the income of the properties the corporation should pay all rates, taxes, assessments, dues and duties in respect of the said hereditaments and premises and defray the cost of all ordinary repairs and of insuring the same against fire and all other outgoings of every nature whatsoever. Then s. 7 provided for the setting aside of a sinking fund and a repair fund by paying certain fixed proportions of the income into the sinking fund and repair fund. Then under s. 8 the residue of the income after making all the above payments is to be paid to the Baronet for the time being provided he is of full age and using the name of Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim. Then the Act contained provisions enabling the corporation to sell the immoveable properties and invest the proceeds and there are powers for the Baronet for the time being of jointuring a widow, and under s. 29 the Baronet is to have the actual management of the hereditaments vested in the corporation including the collection of rent.

The second Baronet died in March, 1928, that is to say, just before the end of the financial year 1927-28. On September 26, 1928, the trustees under the Act made a return for Income-tax for the year 1928-29, that is, the year expiring on March 31, 1928, and on October 11, 1928, the Income-tax Officer made an order on the trustees to pay the Income-tax. On February 22, 1929, the trustees paid the tax. On March 11, 1929, the trustees were assessed to super-tax and they objected to the assessment and it was owing to their objection that this case was stated.

It appears from the case that for the previous year 1927-28 there had been an arrangement between the Commissioner and the trustees under which the trustees paid the Income tax and the Baronet paid the super tax, and the trustees say that when they paid the Income-tax for the year in dispute they assumed that the same arrangement would continue and that the Baronet would be charged with the super-tax. The Commissioner, not desiring to do anything unfair or to take advantage of a mistake, has agreed that he will not treat the payment of the Income-tax as imposing any liability for the payment of super tax under s. 56 of the Indian Income-tax Act, and that accordingly we should deal with the questions put to us without reference to that section and as though the Income-tax for the year 1928-29 had not in fact been paid. On the other hand the assessee agrees not to claim any refund.

Now, the argument which Mr. Coltman puts forward on behalf of the assessee—it is really on behalf the Baronet—is that the general scheme of the Act is to tax the person who actually enjoys the income, so that he says, where you have property vested in A in trust to collect the income and pay the income over to B, it is B, the beneficiary, and not A, the trustee, who is to be assessed under the Act. The charging section under the Act is s. 3 which provides that:—

that Income-tax shall be charged for any year at any rate or rates applicable to the total income of an assessee, tax at that rate or those rates shall be charged for that year in accordance with, and subject to the provisions of this Act in respect of all income, profits and gains of the previous year of every individual, Hindu undivided family, company, firm and other associations of individuals."

I think the corporation constituted by the special Act is an individual within that section. The learned Commissioner seems to treat it as an association of individuals, but I think myself it comes within the term individual, and not an association of individuals, and on the words of that section it seems to me clear that the trustees can be charged, if you take that section alone.

When one comes to the later assessing ss. 22 and 23, they seem to me to contain nothing to prevent the trustees being assessed. But Mr. Colman relies very strongly on ss. 40, 41 and 42 which contain special provisions for assessing trustees in certain specified cases, as for instance, where the beneficiary is a minor, lunatic or idiot or residing out of British India, and he says that if the Act enabled a trustee to be assessed in any case, it would be quite unnecessary to provide for those special cases of assessing the trustees. Well, I agree that there is a good deal of force in that argument. We were referred to the case of Williams v. Singer: Pool v. Royal Exchange Assurance (1), in which the question whether trustees or beneficiaries should be assessed to income-tax was fully discussed. The learned Law Lords were of course dealing with the English Acts which are worded quite differently from the Indian Act, but I think the conclusion at which Lord Cave arrived is as applicable to cases under the Indian Act as to cases under the English Act. He points out that in a normal case, if you were to assess the trustee and not the beneficiary you would get into all sorts of difficulties, because the trustee might be entitled to allowances and so forth which the beneficiary would not be entitled to, and it would not do to confuse the beneficiary's income, with the trustee's income, and, therefore, he says, generally speaking, the beneficiary is the person who should be charged. But then he points out that in certain cases the trustee might be the person to be charged as, for instance when he holds property in trust for somebody who cannot deal with it, say, an infant or lunatic, or in cases

"The fact is that if the Income-Tax Acts are examined, it will be found that the person charged with the tax is neither the trustee nor the beneficiary as such, but the person in actual receipt and control of the income which it is sought to reach. The object of the Acts is to secure for the State a proportion of the profits chargeable, and this end is attained (speaking generally) by the simple and effective expedient of taxing the profits where they are found. If the beneficiary receives them, he is liable to be assessed upon them. If the trustee receives and controls them, he is primarily so liable."

Now that may be the general rule in the case of an ordinary trustee and beneficiary, indeed I think it is the general rule; but in the present case it seems to me we are dealing with something which is quite unusual. We have by a special Act of the Legislature a trust constituted which unless so constituted would not be recognised by the general law because it would infringe the rule against perpetuities. We have a corporation specially created by the Act for the purpose of acting as a trustee under the Act. That corporation has vested in it by the Act certain property. It has to a great extent to manage that property although the Baronet himself is given the power actually to collect the rents and so forth. But the trustees must receive the rents and income as they have to apply a proportion in effecting ordinary repairs and paying for insurance of the property, and they have also to set apart a proportion of the income to constitute the sinking fund and repairs fund. There may also be a proportion of the income payable to a widow or widows for jointures and then the balance is payable to the Baronet. It seems to me that in such a case the trustees are a taxable unit in respect of this trust property. It appears from the case that of the total taxable income of the trustees the Baronet receives about seventy-five per cent. and about twenty-five per cent is expended by the trustees either in management or in establishing the two funds under the Act and plainly in respect of that twenty-five per cent. the trustees are the only persons who can be assessed and charged because the income never goes into anybody else's hands. It seems to me that the Commissioner is entitled under s. 3 of the Act to assess and charge the trustees, and there is nothing in any other part of the Act, so far as I can see, which prevents him from doing so. There is no express provision that trustees are not to be charged, and it is obviously a convenient course in this case to charge the trustees. The difficulties which arise in the case of an ordinary trustee, who has got other income vested in him—either trust income or private income of his own—on which he may be assessed, cannot arise here because these trustees are constituted simply for the purposes of this Act and they have got the income of this particular property vested in them and nothing else and there is no inconvenience in assessing them I think, therefore, that in this special case and having regard to the peculiar circumstances and the peculiar language of the special Act the Commissioner is entitled to assess and charge the trustees both to income-tax and super-tax.

I should have said that the charging section in respect of super-tax is s. 55, but that is worded in virtually the same way as s. 3, and most of the argument in this case has proceeded on the basis that the corporation are not liable for the income-tax. If they are liable for income-tax, I think they are also liable for super tax. In my judgment, therefore, we must answer the question by saying that the corporation were properly assessed to income-tax and super-tax for the year 1928-29 by the Income-tax Officer as per his orders of October 11, 1928, and March 11, 1929.

MOTILAL KANJI & Co.—APPELLANTS

versus

NATVARLAL M. JHAVERI—

RESPONDENTS

Companies Act (VII of 1913), ss. 153, 202—Appeal—Persons entitled to appeal—Scheme for restarting, consideration of.

A creditor, contributory or a liquidator only has a right of appeal under s. 202, Companies Act. A person who has no present interest but only expects to be appointed secretary or agent of the company if it restarted under a scheme under s. 153 of the Act has no right of appeal. In re London Chartered Bank of Australia (1) and In re Bradford Navigation Company (2), followed. [p. 492, col. 1.]

In considering a scheme the wishes of the creditors and the contributories have to be consulted and not the wishes of any person who may have propounded a scheme. [ibid.]

First Appeal from an order of the District Judge at Surat, in Miscellaneous Application No. 40 of 1928.

Mr. G. N. Thakar (with him Messrs. Kapadia, Shroff & Co.) for the Appellants

Messrs. H V. Wivatia, H C Coyajee, (with him Messrs. Vachha & Co. and N. P. Desai), for the Respondents.

Patkar, J.—In this case the Hatim Mills ceased to work in February, 1924, and went into voluntary liquidation, and on June 13, 1928, the learned District Judge on hearing the application of one Dhirajlal Bhimbhai referred the scheme, which was propounded by the present appellants Motilal Kanji and Co., to the creditors to ascertain whether the modifications suggested were acceptable to the statutory majority after first obtaining the approval of the present appellants to those modifications.

A meeting was held on July 8, 1928, and on July 21 one of the Official Liquidators, Mr. N. M. Jhaveri, made a report Ex. 58. On August 5, Dhirajlal made an application to sanction the scheme as modified. The Court declined to give sanction on the ground that there was not the requisite statutory majority as required by s. 153 of the Indian Companies Act. Dhirajlal filed First Appeal No. 556 of 1928, but died during the pendency of the appeal, and his heirs not having been brought on the record the appeal has abated.

The present appeal is by Motilal Kanji and Co. who propounded the scheme. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that an appeal does not lie under s. 202 of the Indian Companies Act at the instance of the present appellants who are neither creditors nor contributories and who have no present interest in the company but only a prospective interest to be appointed secretaries and agents if the company is made to stand on its legs as a result of the modified scheme.

Under s. 153 of the Indian Companies Act, in the case of a company which is not being wound up, an application has to be made by a creditor or a member of the company, or, in the case of a company being wound up, by the liquidator, and if a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors or class of creditors, or members or class of members agree to any compromise or arrangement, the compromise or arrangement shall, if sanctioned by the Court, be binding on the creditors or the members and also on the company, or in the case of a company in the course of being wound-up on the liquidator and contributories of the company. The persons interested, therefore, in such application are the creditors or the members or the liquidators of the company. According to Buckley on Companies Acts, 11th Edition, page 321, a scheme under s. 153 of Companies Act, 1929, which corresponds to s. 153 of the Indian Companies Act, is an alternative mode of liquidation, which by operation of law relieves the company and its contributories from liability further than that which is contemplated or imposed by the scheme. See In re London Chartered Bank of Australia (1). Under s. 174 of the Indian Companies Act, the Court may, as to all matters relating to a winding-up, have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributories as proved to it by any sufficient evidence. It appears clear, therefore, that in considering a scheme the wishes of the creditors and the contributories have to be consulted and not the wishes of any person who may have propounded a scheme. The appellants have no present interest in the affairs of the company, but only a prospective interest if the scheme is sanctioned. They are neither creditors nor contributories of the company. Their present interests are not likely to be in any way affected by the order of the lower Court. If the scheme had been sanctioned they would have benefited by the scheme in so far as they would have been appointed secretaries and agents of the company if re-started according to the scheme. But by reason of the scheme not being sanctioned it does not appear that the interests of the appellants are in any way affected.

In In re Bradford Navigation Company (2) it was held that no person has a right to be heard against a petition for winding up a company, except creditors and contributories, and that although the Court may reasonably hear other persons who have an interest in the property of the company as amici curiæ, yet such persons cannot appeal against the decision. In the judgment the winding-up proceedings of a company have been dealt with on the same footing as the winding-up proceedings of a partnership, and it was held that if the winding-up order does not in the slightest degree derogate from any right whatever which a third person has in respect of the property, he is not entitled to file an appeal against the order.

Unless a person shows that he has got an interest which is adversely affected by the decree of the lower Court or has an interest in the subject-matter which is under litigation, he has no right to appeal: see the decision of the Privy Council in Chandrika Bakhsh Singh v. Indar Bikram Singh (3), where a person, who has no present title to protect and no interest which can give him a right to contest, is described by their Lordships of the Privy Council as "a mere impertinent intervener in another person's affair."

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that they were parties in the lower Court, but the mere fact that they were parties in the lower Court does not invest them with a right to appeal unless they conclusively prove that their rights are adversely affected by the decision of the lower Court.

I, therefore, think that the preliminary objection prevails and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. There will be two sets of costs, one in favour of respondents Nos. 7, 9 and 11 and another in favour of respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Tyabji, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge refusing to sanction a scheme of arrangement presented in the liquidation of the Hatim Mills Co. Ltd.

The appellant before us is neither the Official Liquidator, nor a contributory, nor a creditor of the company, but he is the person who put forward the rejected scheme.

A preliminary objection is taken that such a person cannot appeal.

The decision depends upon the general principle of law that no person has a right to appeal unless he has an interest in the question sought to be raised in the appeal. It does not entirely depend upon whether the person who proposes to appeal is a party to the proceedings. The principle is stated in clear terms in Daniell's Chancery Practice, 8th Edition, page 1111; and is well illustrated by the decision of the Privy Council in Chandrika Bakhsh Singh v. Indar Bikram Singh (3). There the question was whether a transfer by a Hindu widow was valid. The respondent before their Lordships of the Privy Council had claimed under a Will, which was held and admitted by the respondent to be invalid. Nevertheless, in appeal to the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, the respondent had been allowed to contend that the widow was not entitled to deal with the estate (in which he was himself not interested), and the Judicial Commissioners went into the merits, and decided that the widow's dealings with the estate were unauthorised, and ought to be set aside. The Privy Council reversed this decision, holding that inasmuch as the respondent had admitted that he himself had no interest in the estate, the Judicial Commissioners were wrong in hearing him in appeal, and that the appeal should have been dismissed.

It was argued that the appellant before us had a right to appeal inasmuch as he had been made a party to the proceedings in the lower Court; and, secondly, that he was interested in the appeal, as the scheme of arrangement that was rejected was put forward by him, and, if it had been accepted he would have been given the management of the Mills.

The question whether the appellant's interests are affected must be decided with reference to the proceedings before the Court. The proceedings arose in the liquidation of the company. Section 153 of the Indian Companies Act provides for the manner in which—in liquidation as well as at other times—questions arising between a company, its contributories and its creditors may be compromised or arranged. The persons concerned in the liquidation of a company are strictly only the contributories, following the analogy of partners in the dissolution of an ordinary partnership. But the law relating to joint stock companies (as explained by Lord Justice James in In re Bradford Navigation Company (2) has provided that the creditors of the company should also have a say in its liquidation: this is given effect to in s. 153. That section provides that any arrangement or compromise which is proposed shall be placed before the creditors, as well as the contributories and shall (if sanctioned) be binding on both. But no one except the liquidator, the contributories and the creditors of the company is bound by it, or has any concern in any of the questions arising in liquidation. A compromise or arrangement in the course of liquidation is an "alternative mode of liquidation," as Lord Wrenbury calls it (Buckley on Companies, 11th Edition, page 321).

That a person has come forward before a meeting of the share-holders, and proposed a scheme for carrying out the liquidation of the company, does not make him a party to the original proceedings relating to the winding-up of the company, nor does it give him any interest, in the eye of the law, in the question how the liquidator, the contributories and the creditors settle their domestic affairs. It may have been convenient in this case—the analogy of the Bradford Navigation Co's case (2) is very close—to let the creditors and the contributories hear for themselves what scheme the appellant proposed for their consideration. But when the parties really concerned in the affairs of the company rejected the scheme, it was no concern of the appellant to appeal to this Court, and say that the contributories and the creditors of the company shall not be allowed to manage their own affairs as they like. Without applying to him the choleric words of the Privy Council to which my learned brother has referred, it may be said that he has nothing to do with what the liquidator, the contributories and the creditors of the company do amongst themselves.

I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs on the preliminary point.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 405—Criminal breach of trust—Partner, liability of—Dishonest intent—Burden of proof—Duty of Court in partnership cases.

The words of s. 405, Penal Code, are quite enough to cover the case of a partner and if one partner is given authority by the other partners to collect moneys or property of the firm, he is entrusted with dominion over that property and if he dishonestly misappropriates it, then he comes within the section. Queen v. Okhoy Coomar Shaw (1) and Emperor v. Laloo (2), followed. [p. 494, col. 2.]

The burden of proving dishonest intention under s. 405, Penal Code, on the part of the accused is on the prosecution. In other words, the prosecution must prove facts from which the only possible inference which can reasonably be drawn is that there was a dishonest intent [p. 495, col. 1.]

In case of charges of criminal breach of trust against partners, the Court ought to be very careful

In many cases it is impossible to say what the share of the accused may be, whether he is indebted to the firm or whether the firm is indebted to him and if the firm is indebted to him there may be no dishonest intent in his withdrawing money from the firm. If there is any doubt upon the matter, the accused must always have the benefit of the doubt. [p. 495, col. 2.]

Criminal Appeal from the convictions and sentences passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Messrs. Bhaishankar, Kanga & Girdharlal), for the Accused.

Mr. Taraporewala, Acting Advocate-General (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne, Government Pleader), for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal by the accused from a conviction before the Chief Presidency Magistrate under s. 406 of the Indian Penal Code. The charge is that the accused on or about September 14, 1929, at Bombay did bring various sums of money aggregating to Rs. 51,228 5-0 from several constituents of the firm of Rai Saheb Ramdayal Ghasiram for the use of the said firm and did dishonestly misappropriate the said sum to his own use and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 406. He was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000, in default six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The history of the matter so far as is material is this: There was an old firm in which one Gopilal, whose Munim Ganpatlal Jankidas is the complainant in this case (though I will hereafter refer to Gopilal as the complainant), was a partner, and the accused and a man named Motiram were also partners. That firm was wound up in July, 1928, a settlement was then arrived at and a deed of retirement executed. The firm was to be taken as having been wound up from October 26, 1927, and Motiram retired. The deed of settlement shows that Motiram was indebted to the firm in a sum of Rs. 48,000 odd and the accused was indebted in a sum of Rs. 42,000 odd. For that sum the accused gave a promissory note to the complainant and it is said, and I will assume, that thereby the accused's liability to the firm was discharged. Very shortly prior to this settlement in July 1928, the complainant had written some letters to the accused pointing out that the accused was indebted to the firm and that until that debt was paid-off the accused was not entitled to draw a single pie out of the firm and the accused seems to have acquiesced in that position. Those letters were strongly relied upon by the learned Magistrate as showing that the withdrawals—the subject-matter of the charge, could not possibly have been justified. But it is, I think, a fair criticism that those letters were written prior to the settlement of July 2, and I will assume for the purposes of my judgment that the arrangement embodied in those letters did not continue after July 2. Motiram having retired, there is no question but that the complainant and the accused continued in partnership. There is a question as to the relative shares which they had in the partnership business and profits, but I will assume for the purposes of my judgment that the accused was entitled (as he claims) to a half share in the profits. It is in evidence that the accused brought no capital into the business. That statement was elicited in the cross-examination of the complainant's Munim. Now, on September 14, 1929, the accused admittedly collected outstandings of the firm amounting to the sum mentioned in the charge, that is to say Rs. 51,000 odd, and he applied those moneys for his own purposes: that is to say, he did not put them into the firm, he debited himself in the accounts with the firm as having had those moneys but he put the moneys in fact into his own pocket. The question is whether in those circumstances he can be charged with criminal breach of trust under ss. 405 and 406 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 405 is in these terms:—

"Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property, or with any dominion over property, dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use that property, or dishonestly uses or disposes of that property in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged, or of any legal contract, express or implied, which he has made touching the discharge of such trust, or wilfully suffers any other person so to do, commits 'criminal breach of trust'."

Now Mr. Thakor's first point is that that section does not apply to the case of a partner dealing with partnership property. He points out that all the illustrations are illustrations of a person entrusted absolutely with property of another and do not relate to property which is in part in the ownership of the accused. But, in my opinion, the words of the section are quite wide enough to cover the case of a partner. Where one partner is given authority by the other partners to collect moneys or property of the firm I think that he is entrusted with dominion over that property, and if he dishonestly misappropriates it, then I think he comes within the section. That is the view which prevailed in a Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court as long ago as 1874—the case of Queen v. Okhoy Coomar

Shaw (1), and the view was adopted by this Court apparently with approval in Emperor v. Lalloo (2), and in my opinion that is the right view. Then Mr. Thakor says that assuming the section applies, the burden is upon the prosecution to prove a case under it, and one of the essential ingredients which has to be proved is that there was a dishonest intent, and Mr. Thakor says that we cannot uphold this conviction unless the prosecution have proved such a position that a dishonest intent must necessarily be inferred. Well I agree with that. I think that the prosecution must prove facts from which the only possible inference which can reasonably be drawn is that there was a dishonest intent. Here, the accused brought no capital to this firm. I ought perhaps to have mentioned in my statement of the relevant facts that when the old firm was wound-up in 1929 some of the property was retained by the three former partners jointly and the accused says that that property may be of value. But I think that property must be left out of account entirely in dealing with this charge. I think that it is really essential for the accused's case to say that a new firm started in July 1928 because otherwise he would still be saddled with the liability of Rs. 42,000. Therefore, I leave out of account the property in the joint names which formerly formed part of the old partnership assets, and I repeat that the accused brought no capital into the new firm. The accused says that he had reasonable grounds for thinking that at the time when he received this Rs. 51,000 and applied it to his own use his share in the partnership was at least equal to that sum. Now, can we accept that view? The accused had no interest in the capital of the firm, the firm had only been in existence for two years and there is some evidence that a certain amount of profit had been made. But no accounts had been taken. This is clear from the evidence. Therefore, it was impossible to say what the profits were. The complainant in a plaint which he filed against the accused in a civil action admitted that the profits for 1928 were Rs. 30,000. On the other hand, the witness Dagroolal Shivnarayan says that he thinks that in 1929 there will be a loss of Rs. 50,000. However that may be there is not a particle of evidence that the profits of the new firm will amount to any thing like Rs. 1,00,000, and unless it does, clearly the accused was not entitled to withdraw Rs. 51,000. Nor can I see any evidence from which the accused could have supposed that the profit reached that figure. It seems to me that on the facts as proved by the prosecution we must necessarily infer that when the accused received collectively Rs. 51,000 odd and put them into his own pocket he did it dishonestly. We have got his account with the firm and it appears that at no time during 1928 and 1929 did he withdraw a sum exceeding at any one time Rs. 300. Most of his withdrawals are quite small. There is one item of just over Rs. 4,000, but that according to an entry in the book was a havala entry because the accused had settled a claim for Rs. 4,000 and the firm accepted that settlement and credited him with the amount. But so far as ordinary drawings are concerned he had only withdrawn small sums below Rs. 300 and then suddenly for no particular reason he collects Rs. 51,000 and puts the whole amount into his pocket at once.

In these cases of charges against partners of criminal breach of trust, I think the Court ought to be very careful. In many cases it is impossible to say what the share of the accused may be, whether he is indebted to the firm or whether the firm is indebted to him, and if the firm is indebted to him there may be no dishonest intent in his withdrawing money from the firm. If there is any doubt upon the matter, I think the accused must always have the benefit of the doubt. To some extent the question is one of degree. If you have a partnership consisting of two partners entitled in equal shares and the assets consist of a particular item of property, say a ship, and you find that the managing partner has sold the ship and put the whole of the sale proceeds into his own pocket, that would be an obvious case from which one would have to infer a dishonest intention because it is plainly robbing the partner of his share of the entire property. On the other hand, if you have a firm with assets valued at a lac of rupees and you find that the managing partner entitled to half the assets has put into his own pocket sums amounting to Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 20,000, I think it would be impossible to infer a dishonest intention because it is really then only a question of accounting and his partners are not going to lose. As I say, if there is any doubt, it is the duty of the Criminal Court to say that the prosecution must wait until the accounts are gone into in a civil action, if there is a civil action proceeding, as in this case there is. But in my view on the facts of this case it is impossible really to say that there is any doubt at all. The accused might have given evidence himself to displace the prosecution case. Mr. Thakor very much objects to the phrase that the burden of proof shifts to the accused. He says that the burden of proof in a criminal case is always on the prosecution. I think it is really only a question of language. I agree that the burden of proof is always on the prosecution and that they must prove their case, and where a dishonest intention is an essential ingredient, they must prove facts from which the necessary inference is that there was a dishonest intention. But having got to that point it is open to the accused to bring evidence to disprove the facts or to give evidence of new facts from which it appears that the inference of a dishonest intention should not necessarily be drawn. It would have been open to the accused here to give evidence to show that he had reasonable grounds for thinking that he had a right to a share in the assets greater than the amount which he withdrew. But he gave no such evidence and on the prosecution evidence as it stands I think the charge under s. 435 is made out. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed.

We modify the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment to six months' simple imprisonment. Fine to stand.

Barlee, J.—The facts in this case shortly are that the complainant, the accused and one Motiram were partners in business. All the capital was supplied by the complainant. That business went on for many years until 1927 Diwali when Motiram retired. The complainant and the accused each had a six annas share and Motiram had a four annas share and one anna was devoted to charity making in all a rupee of seventeen annas. The making of the accounts lasted till the next July and then it was discovered after leaving aside certain items of which the value could not be estimated at that time, that there was a debit balance against Motiram of some of Rs. 26,000 and against the accused of some Rs. 42,000. The items excluded were, firstly, an item of Rs. 22,000, secondly an item of anamat amounting to Rs. 18,094, and thirdly, an unvalued item i. e., a decree of a Civil Court by which the partnership had become entitled to land.

After this settlement the accused gave the complainant a promissory note for

Rs. 42,000 and his account of the old partnership was squared. The accused and the complainant continued as partners and it has been found by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate that their shares in the new partnership were eight annas each. The accused had a power-of-attorney and managed the business in Bombay and Bayandar. He did not pay up the amount of the promissory note and was pressed for security but he did not give it. Then a year later, in September, 1929, the accused who had been in the habit of drawing small amounts—never more than Rs. 200 or Rs. 300, from the shop presumably for his maintenance and as pocket money, suddenly collected from the constituents and withdrew Rs. 51,000 odd. He entered this withdrawal, debiting the amount against himself in his own hand in the account book and wrote to his capital partner at Hyderabad asking him to come down and take over charge. The complainant came down, looked into the accounts and at once filed the complaint against the accused for criminal breach of trust as a servant. He also filed two suits, one on the promissory note and one for the dissolution of the partnership. These suits have been mentioned in the argument, but it is only necessary to say here that they were referred to arbitration, that the arbitrators made awards but were not accepted and the criminal prosecution was presided in.

The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate convicted the accused. He held that the accused was a partner and not a mere servant as had been stated in the complaint. But he also held that by agreement which is evidenced by certain letters he was restricted to withdrawals of about Rs. 250 a month and on this account he decided that the withdrawal of Rs. 51,000 amounted to misappropriation and was dishonest.

I shall take it for the purpose of this case that these letters had not the effect which has been given them by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate. As pointed out by Mr. Thakor the only letters which really restricted the power of the accused to draw were written before the settlement of the accounts in 1927, and it is not unfair to say that this restriction had no effect afterwards or at any rate that these letters do not prove that the restriction was in force at the time of the withdrawal of Rs. 51,000 in 1929. The only questions of fact about which there has been any dispute here are as to who supplied the capital and whether there were any losses or profits in the new partnership.

The first question does not appear to have been disputed in the lower Court where it seems to have been assumed all through by every one that the accused had supplied no capital but that the capital had all been supplied by the complainant. Nevertheless it was necessary for the complainant to prove that the capital belonged to him and it was very fortunate for the prosecution that this fact was elicited by the defence in the course of the cross-examination.

It was also argued here by learned Counsel for the accused that there was no evidence on the record to show that there had not been any profits in the new firm. At first on searching the record and looking through the examination-in-chief of the complainant's witnesses we failed to find any evidence on this important point. But later on it was pointed out that one of the prosecution witnesses had been questioned on the matter in cross-examination and that he had stated that he had been through the accounts and had found that there had been a loss of Rs. 50,000. That of course may or may not be true but the fact remains that this point which was very important to the prosecution is on the record owing to the kindness of the defence in the lower Court.

Now the first and most important point in this case is whether the evidence offered by the complainant in the lower Court was sufficient to satisfy the burden of proof, that is, was the accused to be called on for an explanation or was he entitled to an acquittal even though he had kept his mouth shut and refused to make any statement at all. Mr. Thakor's argument is partly based on the wording of s. 405 and partly on the law of partnership. He practically denies that a partner can be guilty of criminal breach of trust on the ground that it cannot be said that partnership funds of which he has control and which he is entrusted with come within the meaning of s. 405. He has relied on the case of Debi Prasad Bhagat v. Nagar Mull (3), where it is laid down that a partner cannot be held guilty of misappropriation, but is only entitled to be called upon for an account of the expenditure of the money which he has received, and that it is open to him to spend the money received by him and to account for it in dealing with the partnership. But so long as 1874 a

(3) 35 C. 1108.

Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Queen v. Okhoy Coomar Shaw (1) decided that a partner, who dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use any of the partnership property with which he is entrusted or which he has dominion over, is guilty of an offence under s. 405, and this Full Bench case is quoted with approval in a case of our own High Court, Emperor v. Lalloo (2). I agree, therefore, with his Lordship the Chief Justice in the view that there is nothing in s. 405 to prevent its being applied to a partner. Especially this is the case where, as here, we have a capital partner and a working partner. A capital partner is one who supplies the capital for the working partner and it seems to me that in such a case it can certainly be said that the working partner is entrusted with dominion over the capital partner's property. The position in law seems to be this that the working partner, as the accused in this case was entitled only to a share in the profits and had no interest in the capital. Therefore he was an agent and trustee for the capital partner's capital and was entitled only to the profits after they had been ascertained. Speaking strictly, therefore, according to the section it can be said that if he used for himself any of the property in his hands which could not be looked upon as profits, he was misappropriating it. Whether of course the misappropriation is criminal or not depends naturally on the intention with which it was done. But I cannot agree with the learned Counsel on behalf of the accused that under s. 405 there can be no misappropriation of partnership property on the ground that the partner cannot be looked upon as a person entrusted with partnership property.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 3, —Misjoinder of causes of action—Contract of sale by one partner—Dissolution of partnership—

Suit for specific performance against vendee and for indemnity against contracting partner—Practice—Dismissal of suit on preliminary issue, propriety of.

The plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 were partners in a firm of which the latter was the managing partner. He agreed on behalf of the firm to sell certain land belonging to the firm to defendant No. 1 and entered the transaction in the books of the firm as being a contract to sell the land for Rs. 9,000. The actual agreement for sale was for Rs. 5,000. Subsequently the partnership dissolved and the terms of dissolution were embodied in a deed and the effect of dissolution was that the plaintiffs took over the whole of the partnership assets, the accounts were to be taken as correct, and if it was found that any entry was wrong, the partner in default was to make good the loss to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs sued for specific performance of the agreement of sale, stating in the plaint that if the sale price was Rs. 9,000 the defendant No. 1 was bound to pay Rs. 9,000 and purchase the land. If on the other hand the price fixed was Rs. 5,000 then they claimed against defendant No. 1 specific performance on that basis and as against defendant No. 2 the balance of Rs. 4,000 under the contract of indemnity contained in the deed of dissolution. The Sub-Judge dismissed the suit on ground of misjoinder of causes of action:

Held, that there was no misjoinder of causes of action as there was a common question of fact, namely, what were the terms of the contract of sale. [p. 498, col. 1.]

Order I, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, applies to joinder of causes of action as well as to joinder of parties. Payne v. British Time Recorder Co. (1), and Harendra Nath Singha Ray v. Purna Chandra Goswami (2), followed. [p. 499, col. 1.]

As a general rule a Subordinate Judge ought not to dismiss an action on a preliminary issue, but ought to try the preliminary issue and then try out the other issues as well. It is only in exceptional cases when the preliminary point seems clear and the record is a very heavy one and the trial of other issues would take a long time that it would be desirable to dismiss the action on a preliminary issue [p. 499, col. 2.]

First Appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Thana, in Civil Suit No. 40 of 1926.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, (with him Messrs. Y. V. Dixit and P. B. Shingne), Government Pleader, for the Appellants.

Messrs R. W. Desai, G. N. Thakor, (with him Mr. Ramnath Shivilal, for Mr. W. B. Pradhan.) for the Respondent.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Thana. At the trial the learned Judge framed the first issue in these terms—and he answered that issue in the affirmative and dismissed the action without considering the merits.

In dealing with the preliminary issue, one must, of course, assume that the facts stated in the plaint are correct and see whether on that basis the plaintiff has a cause of action.

Now, the material facts are these—

The plaintiffs and respondent No. 2 were partners at the material dates. There were other persons also in the partnership, but that is immaterial. Defendant No. 2 was the managing partner, and on June 2, 1924 he agreed on behalf of the firm to sell certain land belonging to the firm to respondent No. 1 and he entered the transaction in the books of the firm as being a contract to sell these lands to respondent No. 1 for Rs. 9,000. The actual agreement for sale made between respondent No. 2 and respondent No. 1 was for a sale of the land at Rs. 5,000, and not Rs. 9,000. In January 1925, there was a dissolution of the firm between the plaintiffs and respondent No. 2 and the other partners. The terms of the dissolution were embodied in a deed and the effect of the dissolution was that the plaintiffs took over the whole of the partnership assets, the accounts were to be taken as correct, and if it was found that any entry in the accounts was wrong, the partner in default was to make good the loss to the plaintiffs. In that state of the facts, on February 2, 1926, this suit was commenced against respondent No. 1 and respondent No. 2; and what the plaintiffs claimed was this. They claimed, first of all, specific performance of the agreement for sale. They stated in their point that they did not know what terms respondent No. 2 had actually made for the sale of the land. If the sale price was Rs. 9,000 then they claimed specific performance against respondent No. 1 and on that basis payment to the plaintiffs of the balance of Rs. 9,000. If, on the other hand, the agreement was for a sale for Rs. 5,000 then they claimed against respondent No. 1 specific performance on the basis and as against respondent No. 2 the balance of Rs. 4,000 under what is really the contract of indemnity against mistakes in the accounts contained in the deed of dissolution.

The learned Judge held that those two causes of action could not be joined. He said that the transactions were unconnected with each other and that there was no common question of fact or law. It seems to me obvious that there was a common question of fact, viz, what were the terms of the contract of sale.

Now, the plaintiffs' case is that the action is well constituted having regard to the terms of O J, r. 3. That rule provides:—

against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise."

It seems to me that this case plainly falls within the words of that rule. There is a series of transactions contained in the agreement for sale and the deed of dissolution and there is a common question of fact, viz., what were the terms of the agreement for sale. That being so, the learned Judge was wrong in dismissing the action on the preliminary point.

Mr. Thakor, on behalf of respondent No. 2, has argued that O. I, r. 3, must be read in conjunction with O. II, r. 3. Order II, r. 3, says :—

"Save as otherwise provided, a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly;—"

And Mr. Thakor says, no doubt with truth, that the cause of action against the defendants here is not, in any sense, joint. Mr. Thakor points out that the heading to O. I is "Parties to Suits" and that the heading in O. II is "Frame of Suit". But, unless we are going to disagree with a large number of English cases and also cases in this country, we are bound to hold that O. I, r. 3, applies to joinder of causes of action as well as to joinder of parties. Questions relating to the history and application of these rules and the corresponding rules of the Supreme Court in England were considered at length by the English Court of Appeal in the case of Payne v. British Time Recorder Co. (1), and by the Court of Appeal in Calcutta in Harendra Nath Singha Ray v. Purna Chandra Goswami (2), and I think the reasoning in those two cases clearly covers this case.

Mr. Thakor has further contended that in this case the cause of action does not arise under the same transaction, or the same series of transactions. He says that the case against respondent No. 1 arises under the sale agreement and the case against respondent No. 2 arises under the deed of dissolution, but that point is covered by the English case to which I have referred in Payne v. British Time Recorder Co. (1). In that case the plaintiff had entered into a contract with B. & Co., to supply them with certain printed cards which were to conform to certain specimens supplied to them and in order to carry out that contract the plaintiff entered into another contract with W. & Co., for the supply of the cards. W. & Co., sent the cards direct to B. & Co., and B. & Co., refused to accept them on the ground that they were not in accordance with samples. The plaintiff brought an action against B. & Co., for the price of the cards, and against W. & Co., claiming that if the cards supplied to B. & Co., were not in accordance with sample then he was entitled to damages against W. & Co. So that, in that case, as in this, the causes of action against the two parties were totally distinct and arose under different contracts, but the Court of Appeal held that the two causes of action could be joined in one action. It is quite true that the wording in the English rule is not identical with the wording of the rule we have to deal with, but, in my opinion, the wording of O. I, r. 3, in this country is much more favourable for the plaintiffs than the wording of the English rule, O. XVI, r. 4.

In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge was wrong and this action must go back to be tried.

I desire to say that I think the learned Judge adopted an extremely inconvenient course in this case. As a general rule the Subordinate Judge ought not to dismiss an action on a preliminary issue, but ought to try the preliminary issue and then try out the other issues as well. Of course, there may be exceptional cases when the preliminary point seems clear and the record is a very heavy one and the trial of the other issues would take a long time. In such a case it may be desirable to dismiss the action on the preliminary issue but no such consideration as that arises in this case. The trial of the action on the merits would not have taken more than a few hours. The result of the course which the learned Judge adopted is that the unfortunate parties have to wait for four years in order to get the preliminary point disposed of and now they will have to go back to the trial Court in order to have the issues tried. I think the appeal must be allowed. Respondent No. 2, who took the preliminary point, must pay the plaintiff's costs of the appeal. Respondent No. 1 was not interested in the preliminary point and did not take it originally, but he has argued in this Court that we ought to exercise our discretion under O. II, r. 6, directing that the issues against the two parties should be tried separately. I see no reason whatever for exercising our discretion in that way, and as respondent No. 1 has failed on that point I think we should make no order as to his costs.

Murphy, J.—The real dispute on the statements in the plaint is about a sum of Rs. 9,000 the sale-price of some land. Defendant No. 1, who agreed to buy from defendant No. 2, who then represented plaintiff's firm, contends that the price settled was Rs. 5,000 only, and the reason for joining the two defendants was that plaintiffs considered that if they could not recover more than Rs. 5,000 from defendant No. 1 they had the right to recover the difference from defendant No. 2, in the terms of the agreement on the dissolution of the partnership. Under O. I, r. 3, the bond which justifies joining several defendants is, that the relief sought is one arising out of the same act or transaction, or series of transactions, jointly, severally or alternatively, involving a common question of fact or law had separate suits been brought. I agree that the relief here is sought in respect of the consideration of the agreement to sell, and whether it was for Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 9,000 is a question common to the case against both the defendants, and this seems to me sufficient to bring the case within the rule, and the finding that the suit is bad for multifariousness appears to me on the facts to have been a mistaken one. I agree that the decree should be set aside as proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Costs of the trial will have to be dealt with by the trial Court.

Hindu Law—Adoption (Bombay School)—Power to adopt—Death of son leaving widow—Mother's power to adopt with consent of son's widow.

Under the Bombay School of Hindu Law where a person dies leaving his widow and a son, and the son dies thereafter leaving a widow, the mother has no power to adopt, even with the consent of the son's widow. Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1), followed. Payapa v. Appanna (2), distinguished.

Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Madgavkar, J. in Second Appeal No. 28 of 1927, confirming the decree passed by the District Judge, Bijapur, in Appeal No. 85 of 1925, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Bagalkot, in Civil Suit No 603 of 1924.

The appeal was originally heard by Madgavkar, J. and his Lordship delivered the following judgment.

Madgavkar, J.—The relationship between the parties will be apparent from the following genealogical tree :—

The plaintiff-respondent claimed in this suit to be the nearest heir of Sangangauda and to succeed to his watan property. The defendants appellants resisted the claim on the ground that the plaintiff respondent had been adopted by Dandava the widow of Mudirangappa with the consent of Parvateva, the widow of Timappa the son of Mudirangappa. The respondent's reply was that his adoption by Dandava was invalid. The question in appeal is whether the respondent's adoption by Dandava was valid so as to deprive him of his succession to Sangangauda, or was invalid so as to maintain him in that succession. The trial Court held that the consent of Timappa's widow rendered the adoption valid, and, therefore, dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court held that Dandava had no power to adopt, and, therefore, the adoption was invalid, and the suit must succeed. The defendants appeal

It is contended for the appellants that the Full Bench decision in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1), is not applicable, but that the present case falls within the third exception laid down by Mr. Justice Ranade in Payapa v. Appanna (2), and that the view in Payapa's case (2) had been applied and followed in a series of cases such as Shidappa v. Ningangauda (3), Pratapsing Shivsing v. Agarsingji Raisingji (4), Vaman Vithal v. Venkaji Khando (5) and Yeshvadabai v. Ramchandra (6).

For the respondent reliance is placed on the Full Bench decision in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1).

As was pointed out by Shah, J. in Shidappa v. Ningangauda (3), the Full Bench ruling in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1) is not in conflict with the main ground of the decision in Payapa's case (2).

The essential points in the two cases were entirely different. The question in Payapa's case (2), affirmed a rule that (page 329) :—

"It is only the widow of the last full owner who has the right to take a son in adoption to such owner, and that a person in whom the estate does not vest cannot make a valid adoption so as to divest (without their consent) third parties, in whom the estate has vested, of their proprietary rights."

To this rule Ranade, J. sought to summarise four exceptions. The Full Bench decision in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1), affirmed the view of this Court in Krishnarav Trimbak Hasabnis v. Shankarrav Virayak Hasabnis (7), where it was held that:

"An adoption to herself and her deceased husband by a mother who has succeeded as heir to her son after his death and that of his widow is invalid according to Hindu Law."

In the Full Bench case it is laid down that :—

"Where a Hindu dies, leaving a widow and a son, and that son himself dies leaving a natural born or adopted son or leaving no son but his own widow to continue the line by means of adoption, the power of the former widow is extinguished and can never afterwards be revived".

The facts in the last case were very similar to the facts here, and these observations apply precisely to the facts now in question. Mudirangappa died in about 1875 and left his son Timappa who died about six years later, leaving a widow Parvateva who died in 1920. Dandava, the widow of Mudirangappa, purported to adopt the plaintiff-respondent in 1902 as heir to her husband Mudirangappa. That power under the above Full Bench ruling and on general principles she did not possess, and it was extinguished when Timappa died leaving the widow Parvateva. The case would be different had the power been potential and capable of revival as it might be in the various sorts of cases, some of which have been referred to in Payapa's case (2). In such a case it might well be that the consent of the parties affected by such adoption might validate an adoption otherwise invalid. This, however, is not the case in the present appeal. The same view has been taken by other High Courts: Adivi Suryaprakasa Rao v. Nidamarty Gangaraju (8), where it was held that :—

"A power given to a widow to adopt is absolutely at an end when once the estate has vested in the heir of her deceased son and is not revived even if she afterwards succeeds to the estate" and "that, in such a case, the consent of the son's heir in whom the estate had vested, will not validate the adoption. Manikyamala Bose v. Nanda Kumar Bose (9)".

and the observations of the Privy Council in Madana Mohana v. Purushothama (10). In this view, the trial Court was in my opinion, wrong in holding that any consent by Parvateva would validate the adoption of the plaintiff respondent by Dandava. I agree with the lower Appellate Court that Dandava had no power to adopt the plaintiff as she purported to do, and that the respondent did not, therefore, by such adoption lose his right to the estate of Sangangauda.

point of law. The plaintiff claims to succeed to certain watan property as the heir of his natural father Sangangauda. The answer of the defendants is that the plaintiff was adopted into the family of one Mudirangappa and that thereby he lost his right to succeed to his natural father. The reply of the plaintiff is that the alleged adoption was invalid.

The material facts are that the adoptive father Mudirangappa died in 1875 leaving a widow named Dandava, whom I will hereafter refer to as "the father's widow." He also left a son named Timappa who died in 1881. Timappa left a widow named Parvateva, whom I will refer to as "the son's widow." It is clear that on the death of the son the estate would vest in the son's widow, and that whether before or after the death of the son the father's widow could not herself exercise any power of adoption, because under the general rule of Hindu Law the widow has no power to adopt if by so doing she will divest the estate of another. Therefore, the father's widow never actually had a power of adoption which she could have exercised at any given moment. On the other hand the son's widow could undoubtedly have adopted to her husband after his death. In 1902 the son's widow consented to the father's widow adopting the plaintiff and it is not disputed that a form of adoption of that nature was gone through. The question is whether that adoption is valid.

Mr. Jayakar, to whom we are indebted for his very able argument, has referred us to a large number of cases commencing with the Privy Council case of Bhocbun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Achary Chowdhry (11) and including Pudma Coomari Debi v. Court of Wards (12), Thayammal and Kuttisami Aiyar v. Venkatarama Aiyar (13), Keshav Ramkrishna v. Govind Ganesh (14), Krishnarav Trimbak Hasabnis v. Shankarrav Vinayak Hasabnis (7), Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1) Anandibai v. Kashibai (15) and Manikyamala Bose v. Nanda Kumar Bose (9). These cases establish a rule which, I think, is accurately stated in the judgment of the Full Bench of this Court in Ramkrishna v.

Shamrao (1) a judgment which was expressly approved by the Privy Council in Madana Mohana v. Purushothama (10). The learned Judge Mr. Justice Chandavarkar delivering the judgment of the Court states the rule which he gathers from the Privy Council decisions at page 532* in these terms:—

"Where a Hindu dies leaving a widow and a son, and that son himself dies leaving a natural born or adopted son or leaving no son but his own widow to continue the line by means of adoption, the power of the former widow is extinguished and can never afterwards be revived."

Now it is clear that the facts of this case do come within the literal terms of that rule, because a Hindu died leaving a widow and a son and that son died leaving his own widow. But Mr. Jayakar says that in none of those cases was the question of consent to the adoption by the person in whom the estates were vested in any way raised. Of course the facts in the various cases differ, but putting it shortly I think they were all cases of this nature: A Hindu dies leaving a widow and descendants. So long as the descendants live the widow cannot exercise her power of adoption because of the general rule that she cannot divest the estate of others. Eventually by reason of the deaths of parties and the failure of issue, natural or adopted, the estates descend upon the original deceased owner's widow and the question which the Court has had to decide has been whether, when that event happens, the power of adoption which up to then the widow has not been able to exercise can then be exercised by her. The question really has been whether the power should be treated as having been in abeyance while the estates were vested elsewhere than in the widow and as having revived on the estates descending upon the widow, or whether the power should be treated as having come to an end. The Privy Council decided that in such cases the rule was that the power had come absolutely to an end, had been extinguished and could not be revived. I think, as appears from the Privy Council judgment in Bhocbun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Achary Chowdhry (11) that the rule is rather one of convenience than of principle, and that the Court felt that at some time or other this power of adoption must come to an end and could not be kept in a state of suspended animation indefinitely. At any rate the cases do undoubtedly establish that that rule exists, but Mr. Jayakar is quite right in saying that in none of those cases was the question of consent by the owner for the time being of the estate discussed, and he says that this case really falls within the principle of Payapa v. Appanna (2). Now Payapa's case (2) was the converse of the present case. In that case the son had predeceased the father leaving a widow. Therefore, on the father's death the estate descended upon his widow, who had a power of adoption exercisable at any time. She consented to the son's widow exercising a power of adoption to the son, and it was held that that adoption was good. Mr. Justice Ranade who gave the judgment of the Court refers in the first instance to the settled rule that (page 329*):

"It is only the widow of the last full owner who has the right to take a son in adoption to such owner, and that a person in whom the estate does not vest cannot make a valid adoption so as to divest (without their consent) third parties, in whom the estate has vested, or their proprietary rights."

Then he says that there are four exceptions to this general rule and the third one is stated in these terms (page 331*):—"When the adoption takes place with the full assent of the party in whom the estate has vested by inheritance, the adoption is validated by such consent," and in the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Ranade gives what he considers the justification for the rule. He says at page 332* of the report:—

"Nothing is more common in this country than to find that parents, when they grow old, and have the misfortune of losing an only son in their old age, leaving a young widow behind, think it their duty to console that widow for the loss she has suffered by permitting her to adopt a son in preference to adopting a son themselves."

Mr. Nilkant has suggested that Payapa's case (2) is not good law, and he relies on an observation of Mr. Justice Chauluk in Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (16). But Payapa's case (2) has been followed by this Court in Shidappa v. Nigangauda (3) and in Yeshvadbai v. Ramchandra (6). In particular, in the case of Shidappa v. Nigangauda (3) Mr. Justice Shah, a great authority on Hindu Law, not only follows Payapa's case (2) but expressly says that he approves of it. I think, therefore, that we must take Payapa's case (2) as being an authority binding upon this Court. But I also think that the learned Judges who decided Payapa's case (2) had not present to their minds any case of the exercise of a power of adoption which had come to an end. They state the rule by saying that the adoption is "validated" by the consent. The word "validated" would be an inappropriate word to apply to a power which had altogether ceased to exist. I think, therefore, we must take the rule as stated in connection with the facts of that particular case in which there is no suggestion that the power had come to an end and had been extinguished. The real question which we have to determine in this appeal is whether this case on its facts falls within Payapa's case (2) or whether it falls within the general rule established by the Privy Council as stated in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1). Mr. Jayakar says, and I am disposed to agree with him, that there is no substantial difference between the adoption which was held valid in Payapa's case (2) and the adoption with which we are dealing in this case. It does not seem to matter to the reversioners whether the father's widow consents to the adoption by the son's widow or whether the son's widow consents to the adoption by the father's widow. In either case the adoption goes in the same line and the effect on the reversioners is the same. But there is in, my opinion, this essential difference between Payapa's case (2) and the present case. In Payapa's case (2) there was no question of the power to adopt of the son's widow having been extinguished. It is true that it never became exercisable and could not be exercised at the moment when the particular adoption was made, because any such exercise would divest the estate of the father's widow. But if that is the only objection to the exercise of the power, it seems logical to hold that the objection can be removed with the consent of the person affected, namely, the father's widow. But in the present case, having regard to the decisions of the Privy Council, we are bound to hold that the power of adoption in the father's widow has absolutely come to an end, has been extinguished, and cannot be revived; and if that is so it seems to me impossible to say that it can be validated by the consent of anybody. However the case is put, it is clear that the power of adoption which was exercised in this case was the power of the father's widow, and not the son's widow. However much it may have been exercised with the consent of the son's widow, it is in no sense a delegation of the power which admittedly existed in the son's widow, because any adoption by the father's widow must be to her husband, the father and any adoption by the son's widow must be to her husband, the son. On the whole, therefore, I have come to the conclusion that to apply the principle of Payapa's case (2) to the facts of this case would really be to go behind the rulings of the Privy Council, and that we must hold that the adoption by the father's widow in this case was invalid. The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Murphy, J.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are the occasion of a new point of Hindu Law, or at any rate of one not directly included in existing decisions. The original plaintiff, Hanmantgauda, was adopted into another family by Dandava, a widow to her deceased husband. He, however, claimed to be the next heir to his natural father, on the ground that his adoption by Dandava had been invalid, because at the time she had no power to adopt, since her husband, who had died in 1875, had left a son Timappa who died in 1881 leaving a widow Parvateva, who on these facts was alone entitled to adopt a son to the family. The reply was that Dandava's adoption had been made with Parvateva's consent, which validated it. Whether Parvateva could, by consenting to the adoption, validate it, is the only point in the appeal.

I think the general rule is beyond dispute, that the person entitled to adopt in a Hindu family is the widow of the last male owner, with certain exceptions, such as a widow in an undivided Hindu family who adopts with the consent of her husband's surviving coparceners. The original Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The first Appellate Court allowed it, and a single Judge of this Court agreed with the first Appellate Court in second appeal. This appeal is under the Letters Patent.

The general rule to be derived from authoritative decisions is that where a Hindu dies leaving a widow and a son, and the son dies leaving a widow to continue the line by means of an adoption, the power of the first widow is extinguished and can never be revived. We have considered the cases of Pudma Coomari Debi v. Court of Wards (12), Bhoobun Moyee Debi v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (11), Thayammal and Kuttisami Aiyar v. Venkatarama Aiyar (13), Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (4), which was a decision of the Full Bench, Krishnarav Trimbak Hasabnis v. Shankarrao Vinayak Hasabnis (7) and Vaman Vithal v. Venkaji Khando (5) and the cases relied on for the contrary, the original one being Payapa's case (2)—which is the exact converse of the present one—Payapa v. Appanna (2). The facts there were that the widow of the last male owner, in whom the right vested, consented to an adoption by her predeceased son's widow, such an adoption being held valid, as being in agreement with Hindu sentiment, by the late Mr. Justice Ranade. The later Bombay cases are all on adjacent facts to those in Payapa's case (2): see Vaman Vithal v. Venkaji Khando (5) and Yeshvadabai v. Ramchandra (6). Mr. Justice Ranade's third exception, in Payapa's case (2), rests on an analogy drawn from the parallel instances where an adoption is permissible with the consent of the person in whom the estate vested at the time, and Mr. Jayakar's argument really is, that this is such a case, and therefore, comes within that rule. On the facts in Payapa's case (2) the widow of the predeceased son might have validly adopted with the consent of her father-in-law and the decision is really an extension of this power of consenting to the widow, in whom the estate vested on his death. But the facts are not so here. On those of the present case, Dandava never had a power of adoption, for on her husband's death her son stood in its way, and on his death, the estate vested in the son's widow, and if Dandava adopted, she was really doing so as deputy of her daughter-in-law, and there is no authority for holding such an adoption valid. The rule is clear that, in such circumstances, the power of the former widow, if it ever existed, is extinguished, and that it can never be revived. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs, and the decree of the lower Appellate Court confirmed.

RATANLAL BALCHAND—RESPONDENT.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 15-B—Decree by Court to which Act does not apply—Execution by Court where Act applies—Power to grant instalments.

Held, per Baker, J., (Nanavati, J. dubitante):—

When a decree has been passed by a Court where the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does not apply, it is not open to the executing Court where the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does apply, to grant instalments to the defendants assuming that they are agriculturists. [p. 505, col 1.]

First Appeal from a decision of the First Class Sub Judge, Jalgaon.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee and Y. V. Dixit, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. G. Rele, for the Respondent.

Baker, J—The point arising in this appeal is one which, so far as I know, has not come before the Courts below. The facts are that the plaintiffs obtained a decree on a mortgage against the defendants in the Court of the District Judge at Akola in the Berars. The defendants pleaded that they were agriculturists, and prayed for instalments, but the Court held that the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act not having been made applicable to the Berars, the defendants could not avail themselves of its provisions, and they could not claim accounts or instalments. The bulk of the mortgaged property is situated in the Khandesh District. The decree was transferred for execution to the First Class Subordinate Judge of Jalgaon. The defendants asked for instalments, but the Judge held that instalments could not now be allowed as they were claimed in the suit and were refused, and, therefore, it was not necessary to go into evidence about their status as agriculturists. The defendants make this appeal, and the point is, whether, when a decree has been passed by a Court where the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does not apply, it is open to the executing Court where the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does apply to grant instalments to the defendants assuming of course that they are agriculturists. The learned Counsel for the appellant has contended that the Judge is wrong in holding that instalments were refused, the ground on which the Akola Court proceeded being that the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not applicable and so the question of instalments could not be considered. The defendants claim instalments under s. 15-B, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which says:

"The Court may in its discretion, in passing a decree for redemption, foreclosure or sale in any suit of the descriptions mentioned in s. 3, cl. (y) or cl. (z), or in the course of any proceedings under a decree for redemption, foreclosure or sale passed in any such suit, whether before or after this Act comes into force, direct that any amount payable by the mortgagor under that decree shall be payable in such instalments, etc., etc."

Now in order that s. 15-B may apply, the suit in which the decree is passed or the execution proceedings are taken must be a suit of the description mentioned in cl. (y) or cl. (z). The present suit was of the same nature as suits falling under cl. (y), but it was not a suit under s. 3, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, Chapter II, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, applies to suits hereinafter described when they are heard by Subordinate Judges of the First or Second Class, and do not exceed a certain value. That is s. 2, cl. (b). The present suit is not a suit of that description. It was not heard by a Subordinate Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and it was held in Devu v. Revappa (1), that, considering the nature of the Act, the description of 'suit' in s. 3 is not confined to the relief claimed in the suit, but also includes the status of the parties, and hence it was held that the Court cannot, under the provisions of s. 15-B, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, grant instalments under a decree to a person who at the time the decree was passed was not, but has since become, an agriculturist. There can be no doubt that at the time the suit was determined the defendant was not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which does not apply in Berars. There is another case in the same volume, which is apposite to the present case, i.e., Mulji v. Goverdhandas (2), in which a decree was passed on the original side of the High Court against the defendant. In execution proceedings the defendant made an application under s. 20, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, for instalments contending that he was an agriculturist. It was held (1) that the point whether the defendant was or was not an agriculturist was involved in the suit as in virtue of s. 11 and s. 3, cl. (w), Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the High Court would not have jurisdiction to entertain the suit if the defendant was an agriculturist, and it must, therefore, be taken to have been decided that the defendant was not an agriculturist at the date of the decree and (2) that as the defendant was not an agriculturist at the date of the decree he could not in execution proceedings raise the question that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree. Applying this principle, it is clear that as defendants were not agriculturists within the meaning of the Act at the date of the passing of the decree, they cannot now in execution proceedings raise this question.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on three cases, Maneklal v. Mahipatram (3), Rudrappa v. Chanbasappa (4) and Mancherji v. Thakordas (5). In Maneklal v. Mahipatram (3), which is a Full Bench case, it was held that under s. 21, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, the material date for the determination of the status of an alleged agriculturist is the date of the attempted arrest.

But by reason of the definition of the term "agriculturist" in s. 2 (2) of the Act, that determination may also import the determination of his status at the date when the liability arose. A person, who is sued as a non-agriculturist and who fails to appear and urges his status at the hearing of the suit and suffers a money decree to be passed against him ex parte, is not precluded from urging in execution proceedings that he is an agriculturist at the date of the arrest or imprisonment; and for the purposes of that plea, he is not debarred from urging, if necessary, that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree. That case was a case under s. 21. This case does not overrule Devu v. Revappa (1), as is shown by the remarks of Patkar, J., at page 1120*. The next case relied on, Rudrappa v. Chanbasappa, (4) holds that where a decree is passed ex parte the defendant can in execution proceedings show that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree and claim instalments under s. 15-B. The material date of the determination of the status of the alleged agriculturist under s. 15-B is the date of the decree, and that principle has been extended in the case of Narayan v. Dhondo (6), where it was held that the defendant can in execution proceedings show that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree in spite of the fact that he had not claimed the privilege in previous execution proceedings arising out of the same decree. The material date for the determination of the status of the alleged agriculturist in all these three cases, which were decided under s. 15-B was, therefore, held to be the date of the decree. This view proceeded upon the particular words of s. 15-B which involved the result that the alleged agriculturist had to prove that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree. But it has already been pointed out that at the date of the decree of the Akola Court the defendant was not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. It follows, therefore, on the decided case that he cannot raise that question now.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on the case, in Mancherji v. Thakordas (5). In that case in execution of a decree for sale of mortgaged property a portion of the property was sold, and the rest was ordered to be sold by the Collector to whom the decree was transferred for execution. In the meanwhile the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act having been made applicable to the District, the mortgagor applied to the Court for payment by instalments under s. 15-B. The application was refused by the Court on the ground that the decree having been transferred to the Collector, it had no power to grant instalments. It was held on appeal by the mortgagor, reversing the order of the lower Court, that payment by instalments could be decreed. The application for payment by instalments having been made within one month from the time the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was made applicable, no question of limitation arose. Now it is true that in that case at the time the decree was passed the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not applicable to the Surat District, and, therefore, it might be contended that the defendant was not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act. But nowhere in the judgment do I find any reference to this point, the case, having been decided on other considerations, and hence although a very similar point to the present arose in that case it does not seem to have received the attention of the learned Judges deciding that case and in these circumstances I think I am bound by the view expressed in the cases already quoted, Devu v. Revappa, (1) etc. I am of opinion that the suit in which the decree was passed was not a suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, nor was the defendant an agriculturist as defined in that Act, and, therefore, s. 15-B will have no application. I may further refer to Sawantrawā v. Giriappa (7), as supporting my view.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the view of the lower Court is correct, and the appeal should be dismissed with costs including costs in the lower Court. In Civil Application No. 418 of 1930, the rule is discharged with costs.

Nanavati, J.—The decree-holder in this case had obtained a mortgage-decree against the mortgagors in the Court of the District Judge of Akola on 30th September, 1926, and it was sought to execute the decree in the Jalgaon Court by sale of the joint share of the debtors in the mortgaged property the bulk of which is situated in Khandesh. The judgment-debtors, among other things, claimed to be treated as agriculturists and asked for instalments. The learned Subordinate Judge held that instalments could not be allowed as they were claimed in the suit and were refused. It is from this decision that the present appeal is brought.

Now it is true that an issue was raised in the trial Court on the point in question. It runs as follows :

"16. Whether the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act can apply to the defendants. Whether they can avail themselves of its provisions and whether they can claim accounts of the past dealings. Whether they can claim a decree for instalments?"

On this issue, the decision of the Akola Court was to the effect that as the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act had not been made applicable to the Berars the defendants could not avail themselves of its provisions. He, therefore, held that the Court could not grant any relief to the defendants under the Act. It has been contended, and I think rightly, that this decision is not a decision on the merits of the claim. The Court did not consider the question whether the defendants came within the description of an agriculturist in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act; nor did it consider the question whether the grant of instalment would be a proper exercise of discretion in the circumstances of this case or not. It could not consider these questions as the Act was not in force in its territory. The cases, therefore, in which it has been held that where the status of an agriculturist might have been pleaded at the trial of a suit but was either not so pleaded, or if pleaded, was decided adversely to the defendant, the same plea could not be raised again in execution proceedings, do not apply to the present case. For example, in Mulji v. Goverdhandas (2), the suit was one that could not have been tried by the High Court on the original side unless the defendant had been a non-agriculturist; and so it was held that the fact that it was tried by that Court necessarily implied a decision against the status sought to be pleaded in subsequent execution proceedings. But in the present case the fact that the Akola Court was not able to consider the question of the defendant's status in any way, did not necessarily imply that he was not a person entitled to that status in the Jalgaon Court.

The question, however, remains whether s. 15 B, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, can in its terms apply to the appellants. That section applies to proceedings under a decree in a suit of the description mentioned in s. 3, cl. (y), which refers to suits "for sale of mortgaged property when the defendant or any one of the defendants is an agriculturist".

Now "an agriculturist" is defined in s. 2, and since the Act did not apply to the Akola Court, the question is whether the suit could at all be described as a suit against an agriculturist as defined in the Act.

A case somewhat analogous in its circumstances to the present case is to be found in Mancherji v. Thakordas (5). There the position was that at the date of the decree the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not applicable to the district in question, but it became applicable subsequently, and during the execution proceedings the judgment-debtor applied for instalments. The application was refused by the lower Court on the ground that the decree having been transferred to the Collector, it had no power to grant instalments. It was held on appeal that payment by instalments could be decreed. But the point that at the time when the decree was passed the defendant could not have been an agriculturist as defined in the Act by reason of the Act not being applicable to the District, does not appear to have been argued or noticed in the case.

It may, however, be urged that a person may be an agriculturist, that is to say, one who earns his livelihood by agriculture as defined in the Act, though he may not be one for the purposes of a suit in the Akola Court. When a class is defined in an Act,

(7) 21 Ind. Cas. 4; 38 B. 18; 15 Bom. L. R. 778 (F. B.).

It does not mean that persons included in that class can have no existence where the Act does not apply. In other words, an agriculturist is an agriculturist whether the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act applies or does not apply to the Court in which a suit against him is brought. The only result of the non-applicability of the Act to the area is that the Court cannot give him the protection of the Act. It may further be urged that in interpreting an Act intended for the benefit of a special class it would be too narrow a construction to hold that a person who satisfies the conditions laid down in the definition cannot get the benefit of that Act even where that particular legislation applies, merely because another Court could not apply the Act.

The question, however, is one of considerable difficulty. In Sawantrawa v. Giriappa (7), which was a case under s. 10 A, it was held that "agriculturist" was not to be read in the general and popular sense as a person earning his living by agriculture, but that he must belong to that class as defined by Statute at the date of the transaction. It was there held that the mortgagor could not have been an agriculturist at the date of the transaction because at the date the Act had not been extended to the district in question. This case, however, is distinguishable, because in the present case the mortgagors who had lands in Khandesh at the date of the transaction were (if they fulfilled the other conditions of the definition) agriculturists as defined in the Act in Khandesh.

In Desu v. Revappa (1) it was no doubt held that s. 3 includes the question as to the status of the parties and that, therefore, at the date of the suit the defendant must be an agriculturist. This is not, however, the point in dispute. This case does not lay down that he must be an agriculturist in the district in which he is sued.

In Ganpat v. Tulsi (8) the question was again under s. 10-A of the Act and it was agreed that a person to be an agriculturist within the definition in s. 2 should earn his livelihood by agriculture within a district where the Act for the time being extends. The main question in that case was different, viz., what was to be understood by the phrase "the District to which the Act may extend," and whether the extension of certain sections of the Act to a district was sufficient extension of the Act or not.

These cases, therefore, lay down that an "agriculturist" means an agriculturist as defined in the Act, and it might appear at first sight that these cases lay down that there can be no suit against an "agriculturist" as defined by the Act in a Court to which the Act does not extend. It is however possible to distinguish the present case for the following reasons. In the cases above referred to, the lands of the defendant from which his status as an agriculturist arose were situated in the district in which the suit against him was brought. If the Act had not been extended to that district he could not have been an agriculturist as defined for the reason that the definition requires that the agriculturist should earn his livelihood from agriculture carried on in a district to which the Act applies. But in the present case the suit was brought in a Court in a different district under the provisions of s. 17. Civil Procedure Code, part of the mortgaged lands being in the jurisdiction of that Court. Hence, in the present case the possibility of the defendant satisfying the condition laid down in the definition in s. 2 is not excluded. He may well have been a person earning his livelihood at the date of the suit by agriculture carried on within the limits of Khandesh District where his lands are situated and to which the Act applies. The only difficulty in his way is the fact that the Akola Court could take no cognizance of the fact because the Act does not apply to that district.

The question is, therefore, an extremely difficult one and there is much that can be urged for conflicting opinions. I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my brother Baker. It seems to me, with great respect, that the fact that the case was not tried by a Subordinate Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is immaterial for the present purpose. That fact is only material as regards the question of the application of the special procedure laid down in Chap. II, while s. 15 B is in Chap. III of the Act. I am inclined to think that it is possible for a person to be an agriculturist as defined in the Act though sued in a Court where the Act does not apply. The cases which appear to lay down that he cannot, all deal with the case of a person whose "agricultural work" was carried on within a district where the Act had no application, the Court in which he was sued also being situated in the same district.

In the present case the appellants' "agricultural work" (assuming that they so earn their livelihood) is carried on in a district where the Act does apply (Khandesh), and the only point against them is that they were sued in a Court where it does not. As against this is the fact that the execution proceedings are in a Court where the Act does apply. If in these circumstances it were to be held that they cannot possibly be "agriculturists" as defined in the Act merely because the trial Court could not apply the definition, it means not only that an agriculturist can have no existence in a Court not under the Act, but also that his existence cannot be recognized at any subsequent stage even by a Court governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. It would follow that when a decree of a Native State is transferred for execution to a British Indian Court under s. 44, Civil Procedure Code, the latter Court would be bound to execute the decree even by arrest of the judgment-debtor in spite of his being in a position to prove that at all material dates he was an agriculturist as defined by the Act in British India. Such a result would be at least very anomalous. Moreover, the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is a special legislation designed for the protection of a particular class and it should, as far as possible, receive an interpretation calculated to carry out that object.

It appears to me unnecessary however in the present case to decide this point finally one way or the other since it is clear that the relief sought by the appellants is a purely discretionary one which the Court might or might not grant according to the circumstances of each case. The circumstances of the present darkhast are such as to make it extremely unlikely that any Court would exercise that discretion in favour of the appellants. The judgment (Ex. 25) shows that the debt on which the suit is based, in its origin was a trade debt incurred in or about 1916. There were various proceedings in connexion with the debt and finally the suit from which the present proceedings arose was brought in the year 1922. A decree was obtained in the year 1926 and the decree was transferred to the Court at Jalgaon in 1928. No portion of the decretal amount appears to have been realised so far. Taking these circumstances into account as was done in Bal- krishna v. Sarupchand (9), the present case does not appear to be a case in which the discretion of granting instalments should in any case be exercised.

I would, therefore, maintain the order of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge refusing to grant instalments and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal against a decision of the District Judge, Broach, in Appeal No. 40 of 1926.

Mr H. V. Divatia, for the Appellants.
Mr K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts of this appeal are peculiar, and were I not of the opinion that they are covered by authority I should have referred it to a Bench.

The facts are simple. The plaintiffs sued for specific performance of a contract of sale dated 14th May, 1874. The plaintiffs' ancestor Ali Isap was the original owner of the land. One Ranchhod obtained a decree against him in 1871, and then in sale in execution the suit land was sold by auction and purchased by one Jibhai on 8th October, 1872. On 14th May, 1874, the said Jibhai sold the suit land to the grandfather of defendants Nos 1 to 3 and 5 to 10 and on the same day the vendee Akuji, defendants' grandfather executed a registered agreement in favour of Abhram by which he bound himself to sell the land to Abhram for Rs. 461 at any time when the money was offered, and not to sell the land to any other person whatever. The plaintiffs' case is that Jibhai was a mere benamidar for their ancestor Isap, the father of the person to whom the agreement was executed. And now after more than 50 years they sue for specific performance of the agreement. Both the Courts below have awarded the plaintiffs' claim. Defendant No. 1 makes this second appeal, and four objections have been taken in appeal: viz., (1) that the agreement is incapable of specific performance as it infringes the law of perpetuity, (2) the agreement which prohibits alienation to anybody else is void, (3) Jibhai was a benamidar of the original creditor, and plaintiffs sue to enforce the agreement against the successor-in-title of the original purchaser, which is against s 66, Civil Procedure Code, and (4) the original agreement was with a minor. (This has been given up).

The most important ground is the first one. The agreement in question is before the Transfer of Property Act came into force. Under s. 54, Transfer of Property Act, a contract for sale does not of itself create any interest or charge on such property but it is contended that before the Transfer of Property Act came into force it was held that English Law applied to agreements and they created an equitable interest in land, and, therefore, were subject to the law of perpetuities, and reference is made to Harkisandas v. Bai Dhanu (1) That case refers to the case of Dinkarrao Gupatrao v. Narayan Vishwanath (2) in which it was held, in dealing with a contract of 1878, that prior to the Transfer of Property Act a contract for the sale of immovable property created an equitable interest in the property and made the purchaser the owner in equity, and consequently the English decisions like London and South-Western Railway Co. v. Gomm (3) would apply, and it was not, therefore, really necessary in that case to decide the question whether the law would be the same in cases governed by the Transfer of Property Act. On reference to Dinkarrao's case (2), I am of opinion that the present case is clearly governed by it. In that case by a sale-deed of 1878 the vendor conveyed to the purchaser a plot of land forming part of a larger piece of land, and the vendor covenanted that:

"In case you or your heirs have to sell the said plot, the same is to be sold back to me for the above-mentioned value. It is not to be sold to any other person. In case you are informed in writing that I or my heirs or vahivatdars or donees from me are not going to purchase it, then only you can sell it to another person if you like."

It was held that the covenants in question were void as offending against the principle underlying the rule against perpetuities, relying on London and South-Western Railway Co. v. Gomm (3), and the other cases quoted there. It is described in the judgment as a contract creating a right of pre-emption which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, and it was held by Macleod, O. J., that such contracts, though not creating an interest in land either equitable or executory under s. 54, Transfer of Property Act, do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties, and the rule of perpetuities made applicable to this country by s. 14, Transfer of Property Act, applies to this class of contracts, and it was held by Kanga, J., that prior to the Transfer of Property Act the law assumed in Illus. (a), s. 13, Specific Relief Act, that a contract for the sale of immovable property created an equitable interest in the property and made the purchaser the owner in equity, was the law in India, and he goes on to say (page 215*):

"Now we have before us an agreement made in 1878 to convey an immovable property upon the happening of an event which might occur at a more remote period than the lives in being and 18 years afterwards. It is an agreement creating under the law prior to the Transfer of Property Act an equitable interest in immovable property which would be void as infringing the rule against perpetuities": London and South-Western Railway Co. v. Gomm (3) and Woodall v. Clifton (4)."

I am unable to see any distinction between that case and the present case. In the present case we have an agreement which gives to one of the parties to it the right of pre-emption which might not arise until long after the period contemplated by the law of perpetuities, and is as a matter of fact now attempted to be enforced after an interval of 51 years. The learned Advocate for the respondents admitted that he was not able to distinguish that case on any plain basis, but contended that a different view has been taken by the Madras High Court in Charamudi v. Raghavulu (5). I am, however, bound to follow the ruling of the Divisional Bench of this Court and it is not for me to say whether the view taken by the Madras High Court is correct or that taken by this High Court. There is moreover a case of the Privy Council in Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand (6) which leads to the same conclusion. There an agreement had been made between a Maharaj and a Jain Society that if the Society should require a site for the erection of a temple thereon, he and his heirs would grant a site free of cost. The proprietor afterwards alienated the whole hill. Subsequently the Society sued the alienees for possession of a site defined by boundaries, alleging notice to the proprietor requiring that site and that they had taken possession but had been dispossessed. It was held that the action failed because the agreement conferred on the Society no present estate or interest in the site, and was unenforceable as a covenant since it did not run with the land and infringed the rule against perpetuities. It has been argued by the learned Advocate for the respondents that that was a suit against an alienee from the person who originally entered into the contract but that is not the sole ground of the decision. Their Lordships say (at page 380 of 46 I. A.) that the covenant does not, and cannot, run with the land, and therefore was not capable of enforcement. But their Lordships also hold (page 380 of 46 I. A.):

"Further if the case be regarded in another light—namely, an agreement to grant in the future whatever land might be selected as a site for a temple—as the only interest created would be one to take effect by entry at a later date, and as this date is uncertain, the provision is obviously bad as offending the rule against perpetuities, for the interest would not then vest in presenti, but would vest at the expiration of an indefinite time which might extend beyond the expiration of the proper period."

In the present case the interest created is one which would take effect by the tender of the fixed price at a later date which is uncertain, the period being left entirely to the option of Abbram or his heirs. The learned Advocate for the respondents also referred to Fakirji v. Bhagatallal (7). That however was a case under the Registration Act, and does not in my opinion, affect the principles which are laid down in the last lines of the Privy Council judgment in Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand (6) which I have just referred to. As a result, I must hold that the agreement is void as being against the principle of perpetuities, and that it cannot, therefore, be enforced.

This is sufficient for the decision of the appeal. I will however refer briefly to the other two contentions which have been raised by the appellant, in case there is a Letters Patent appeal against this decision. It has been contended that the agreement is also bad inasmuch as it prohibits alienation except to the plaintiffs and at a fixed price, and it, therefore, offends against the principle of s. 10, Transfer of Property Act, which provides that :

"where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation absolutely restraining the transferee or any person claiming under him from parting with or disposing of his interest in the property, the condition or limitation is void except in the case of a lease where the condition is for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him," etc

It has been contended that the case is governed by Asghari Begam v. Maula Baksh (8), where it was held that where a deed of transfer at first absolutely transferred property to another, but by a subsequent clause makes the clause subject to a condition restraining the transferee from parting or disposing of that interest to any person other than the transferor, the condition amounts to an absolute restriction on the right of transfer and so is void. In the present case the transfer was by Jibhai the auction-purchaser to the defendant's ancestor, and that transfer was without any condition, and it is contended that in the Allahabad case the clause prohibiting the transfer was in the deed. In the present case the prohibition of transfer is in a separate agreement made with a third person, i. e., Abhram. It is further contended on behalf of the appellant that the transfer by Jibhai and the agreement with Abhram which took place on the same day formed part of the same transaction, and are based on the fact of Jibhai being only a benamidar for Abhram who was the real owner of the land. The question of whether this amounts to a restraint of alienation within s. 10, Transfer of Property Act, which by the way was not in force at the time when this transaction was entered into, would depend on whether the agreement with Abhram is regarded as forming part of the same transaction as the sale by Jibhai. In my opinion they should be so regarded, and, therefore, under the ruling in the Allahabad case referred to above the restriction on alienation would be void under the principles of s. 10, Transfer of Property Act, although the Act itself was not in force at that time. It has been frequently held that the principles which underlie the Act were principles in existence before.

The third objection is that the suit is barred by s. 66, Civil Procedure Code, which lays down that :

"No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims".

and it is contended that the present suit is based on the allegation in the plaint that Jibhai was merely a benamidar for the original owner Ali Isap whose descendant the plaintiff is. It is contended that that section has no application. The section has to be construed strictly. The present suit has nothing to do with the transfer by Jibhai to the defendants' ancestor, and the ruling in Balaram v. Naktu (9) which was quoted by the learned Advocate for the appellant has no application inasmuch as the suit in that case was directly based on a benami transaction. I am of opinion that as s. 66, Civil Procedure Code, has to be strictly construed, it will apply only to a suit in which the cause of action is given by the benami purchase and not to a suit like the present which is based on a contract which is separate from the transfer. The Court sale which was in the name of Jibhai had taken place some time before. If Ali Isap had brought a suit to recover possession of the property against the present defendants' ancestor on the ground that he was the person on whose behalf the purchase was made, s. 66 would apply, but not I think to a suit which is based on a different cause of action, i. e., a contract entered into between the defendants' ancestor and the ancestor of the plaintiff even though the basis of that contract might be the benami nature of the original purchase at the Court sale. That however is a minor point in view of the opinion to which I have come on the question of perpetuity.

As a result the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Criminal Revision Application No. 88 of 1931.

June 23, 1931.

MILNE, J. C. AND ASTON, A. J. C.

EMPEROR—APPLICANT

versus

ABDULLAKHAN—OPPONENT.

Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890), s. 80 (3)—Prosecution of Police Officer—Limitation—Applicability of rule of limitation to Crown prosecutions—'Act', whether includes omissions—'Under colour of duty', meaning of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 436—Jurisdiction of High Court where application lies to Sessions Court

Although the High Court will not ordinarily entertain applications for revision under s. 436, Criminal Procedure Code, when the Sessions Court has jurisdiction to entertain them, the High Court may entertain them in special cases. When the application is connected with another application which has been made and which can be entertained only by the High Court, it may be entertained. Gullay v. Bakar Husain (1), Emperor v. Abdus Sobhan (3), Bipin Behari Mukerji v. Emperor (5), Shafaqatullah v. Wali Ahmed Khan (2) and Bajirao v. Dadibhai (4), referred to. [p. 513, col. 2.]

Section 80 (3), Bombay District Police Act, refers to all prosecutions, and covers a prosecution instituted by the Crown. Queen-Empress v. Murarji Gokalal (6), referred to. [ibid.]

The word 'act' in s. 80 (3) should be taken as including omissions also. [p. 514, col. 1.]

Where a Police Officer is dealing with a complaint in his capacity as such his procedure would be under the colour of his duty and authority though he had made up his mind from the beginning to hold no real investigation. Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji (7) and Sivarama Krishna Ayyar v. Seshappa Naidu (8), followed. [p. 514, col. 2.]

The act for which protection is given by s. 80 (3) must be an act which appears to be done in the lawful discharge of a duty or in the lawful exercise of an authority conferred by the Bombay District Police Act or other law for the time being in force. This would not include acts which are obviously offences and in no manner reconcilable with the duties or functions of a Magistrate or Police Officer such as bribery or extortion. Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji (7), In re Mangapathi Naidu (10) and Emperor v. Khanchand (11), referred to. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Application under s. 436, Criminal Procedure Code, against an order of the Huzur Deputy Collector and First Class Magistrate, Larkana.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Public Prosecutor, for Sind, for the Crown.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai, for the Opponent.

Milne, J. C.—The opponent a Sub-Inspector of Police was prosecuted under ss. 217, 218, 354 and 466, Indian Penal Code. It was alleged that opponent did not record the first report when a complaint of theft was made to him (s. 217), that he extorted money from the accused (s. 384), that he forged documents showing that no theft had been committed (ss. 218 and 466). The learned Magistrate held that the complaints under ss. 217, 218 and 466 were barred under s. 80 (4) of the Bombay District Police Act 1890, the prosecution not having been instituted within six months of the act complained of. The Crown has applied in revision against that order.

Opponent has objected at the outset that this application should have been made to the Sessions Court which has jurisdiction in the matter. He relies on Gullay v. Bakar Husain (1), Shafaqatullah v. Wali Ahmed Khan (2), Emperor v. Abdus Sobhan (3), Bajirao v. Dadibhai (4), Bepin Bihari Mukerji v. Emperor (5); and a circular of this Court No. A-1550 of 3rd August, 1927. But though it has been laid down that the High Court will not ordinarily entertain such applications when the Sessions Court has jurisdiction to entertain them, it has also been laid down that the High Court will do so in special cases. There is a special reason in this case. The opponent has applied that the proceedings under s. 384 should be quashed. This is a matter which must come before the High Court and it is, therefore, expedient that both applications should be heard together.

The Public Prosecutor has on the merits of the application contended in the first place that s. 80 (3) has no application to a prosecution by the Crown. He admits that he has no authority to support his proposition but he contends that it is absurd that a Police Officer who has been so clever as to escape detection for six months should on that account escape scot-free. I can find no warrant for the alleged distinction between Crown cases and others: the contrary is laid down in Queen Empress v. Murarji Gokalal (6). Even if any distinction could be drawn in respect of cases instituted by private complainants, it would be impossible to hold that s. 80 (4) applied only to the latter when there is absolutely nothing to show that any distinction was contemplated between various kinds of complaints. Section 80 (3) refers to all prosecutions. The Public Prosecutor contends that a suit could be filed only by a private person; therefore, a prosecution also must be a private person. There does not appear to be any reason why the Crown should not sue one of its servants but even if the Public Prosecutor's contention were sound, that a suit contemplated by s. 80 (3) could be brought only by a private person, a prosecution could be instituted either by the Crown or by a private person. I hold, therefore, that s. 80 (3) covers a prosecution instituted by the Crown. The result may be unfortunate: it is not particularly so in this case, as one of the major charges stands. But the section is one which the Legislature might well amend.

The second contention raised was that s. 80 (3) refers only to acts and not omissions: the context shows that the section does not apply to omissions. The offence under s. 217 is the alleged omission. It is true that the words "any omission," do not go well with the words "under colour or in excess of any such duty or authority" as aforesaid. The acts of a Police Officer acting as such in respect of matters which fall within the scope of his duty or authority are clearly covered by the section. There is then no ground for distinguishing between acts and omissions. The intention of s. 80 (3) as expressed is to give protection even to the mala fide acts of a Police Officer acting as such if proceedings are not taken against him within six months: it would be unreasonable to hold that his mala fide omissions also were not covered. We are not dealing with the case of an officer who refused to function as such: whether the omissions of an officer who so refused would be protected by s. 80 (3) is another question. But where the officer is functioning as such whether bona fide or mala fide and in the present case the officer was, it is clear, acting under colour of his office even if it was for the purpose of lurking the complaint, I would hold that the word "act" should be taken in its usual sense as including omissions.

The learned Public Prosecutor has argued that the opponent did not record the first report which must be done before the investigation starts: there was, therefore, no investigation: the Sub-Inspector of Police was not acting as a Police Officer: he was not, therefore, acting under colour or in excess of his duty or authority so as to get the benefit of s. 80 (3). On this ground Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji (7) is distinguished: the statements in that case were recorded in the course of an investigation. It is clear that it was the Sub-Inspector's duty to investigate the offence; he was ostensibly doing so: he went to the scene: the accused was secured; the stolen property was secured and a mashirnama made; documents were prepared showing that no offence had been committed. He was then acting under colour of his duty and authority: it may be that he was acting ma'a fide: but as he was dealing with the complaint in his capacity of Sub-Inspector his procedure would have been under the colour of his duty and authority though he had made up his mind from the beginning to hold no real investigation. It is clear that he recorded the alleged false statements of complainant in his official capacity: it was apparently to be part of his official record to show how the matter had ended. In an analogous case, Sivaramakrishna Ayyar v. Seshappa Naidu (8) it was held that a Judge, fabricating the record of a suit which was wholly false from beginning to end, was purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties.

I am of opinion that the order of the learned Magistrate was correct and would dismiss the application No. 88 of 1931.

The opponent has also applied in Criminal Revision No. 91 of 1931 that the proceedings against him under s. 384 should be quashed. He contends that the words "under colour of" mean "in relation to": that the offence of extortion is alleged to have been committed in relation to the performance of his duty to investigate; and, therefore, the proceedings under s. 384 are barred under s. 80 (3).

The Sub-Inspector relies on the ruling Queen Empress v. Sadanund Doss (9) under s. 170 Indian Penal Code. A person pretending to be a Police Officer reprimanded some villagers on account of the state of the roads in the vicinity and obtained some money from them: it was held that the act committed had some relation to the office which he pretended to hold. The pretended Police Officer was able to commit the offence under colour of the office which he had assumed. The question whether the office assumed would have entitled the holder to do the act complained of or whether any one was under that impression was not material in that case. The words "under colour of such office" in s. 170 connote two things: the false personation and the act which could not have been done without the false personation. But in the present case the question whether the act complained of could be or was attributed to any duty or authority of the Police Officer is material. Both sides however knew that the Sub-Inspector of Police had no authority, nor was it his duty to commit extortion: both knew that he was committing an offence.

The applicant has relied on certain rulings under s. 117 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The wording both of the old and the amended section is different from the wording of s. 80 (3). In In re Mangapathi Naidu (10) it was held that where a Village Magistrate uses his authority and position to obtain a bribe: sanction was necessary for his prosecution, he was in the words of the old section a public servant accused as such public servant of an offence: Cf. also Emperor v. Khanchand (11). Under the amended section the question whether an offence arising out of abuse of official position by an act not purporting to be official requires sanction is disputed: e.g., a Municipal President threatening injury to the property of a voter to influence his vote or criminal breach of trust by an Official Liquidator. But it would hardly have been contended that the public servant demanded the bribe or committed the other offences stated under the colour of any duty or authority. That is the wording of s. 80 (3) and it would be absurd to contend that the alleged extortion was committed under the colour of any duty or authority.

The present case is on all fours with the case reported as Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji (7); there the investigating police officers were alleged to have assaulted certain persons in the course of their investigation.

I would, therefore, dismiss the Application No. 91 of 1931.

Aston, A. J. C.—This is an application made by the Public Prosecutor under s. 436, Criminal Procedure Code, for the revision of an order of the learned First Class Magistrate, Saddar Station, Larkana, dated 1st May, 1931, dismissing the complaint against the accused under ss. 217, 218 and 466, Indian Penal Code. The accused has also made an application under s. 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for the revision of the learned Magistrate's order, of the same date, that he would enquire into the alleged offence under s. 384, Indian Penal Code.

The facts briefly are that on the 18th March, 1931, a complaint was filed by Gokaldas Wadhmal Deputy Superintendent of Police against the accused, who is Sub-Inspector of Police charging him with having intentionally omitted to record the first report of a theft made to him on 28th July, 1930, by one Ghulam Rasul, with having extorted Rs. 64 from Pheruma', the person accused, through his brother Govind, with having forged a statement, purporting to be that of Ghulam Rasul, showing that no theft was committed, and with having destroyed a mashirnama prepared by a Policeman, whom he had sent to investigate. The learned Magistrate issued process under ss. 217, 218, 384 and 466 of the Indian Penal Code. It was contended at the trial that no prosecution could be entertained or continued against the accused by reason of s. 80 (3) of the Bombay District Police Act IV of 1890, since the complaint was filed more than six months after the acts complained of. The learned Magistrate upheld the contention and dismissed the complaint with regard to ss. 217, 218 and 466, Indian Penal Code. He disallowed the contention with regard to the alleged offence under s. 384, Indian Penal Code and decided to proceed with the enquiry into that alleged offence.

With regard to the application filed by the learned Public Prosecutor a preliminary objection has been raised by the defence that since s. 436, Criminal Procedure Code, gives concurrent jurisdiction to the Sessions Judge and District Magistrate and no application has been made to the Sessions Judge the High Court will not entertain it. Reliance is placed on Gullay v. Bakar Hussain (1), Shafaqatullah v. Wali Ahmad Khan (2), Emperor v. Abdus Sobhan (3), Bajirao v. Dadibhai (4) and to the Circular issued by this Court, dated 3rd August, 1927. It is a recognized rule of practice, no doubt, that failure on the part of an applicant to submit his application to a lower Court having concurrent jurisdiction will operate as a bar to the application being entertained by the High Court, see Mitra 7th Edition page 1135. Where however an application has been admitted by the High Court, even ex parte, there is nothing to prevent the High Court from disposing of it on the merits even though no petition has been made to the Sessions

Judge Emperor v. Mansur Husain (12), Abdul Matlib v. Nanda Lal Khatel (13), etc. too where special circumstances exist. In the present case it will be necessary for the determination of the accused's application under s. 439, Criminal Procedure Code, to consider the validity of the learned Magistrate's order with regard to the alleged offence under s. 384, Indian Penal Code and the principles of law applicable to the facts complained will have to be considered. There will be no saving of time in referring the applicant to a Sessions Judge with regard to his application under s. 436 and a rule has been granted. We have decided in the special circumstances of this case to dispose of this application ourselves on the merits.

It is contended by the learned Public Prosecutor that s. 80 (3) of the Bombay District Police Act has no application to prosecutions instituted by the Crown and that its object is to protect public servants from stale prosecutions by members of the public. In support of this contention, reliance is placed on language in s. 80 (3) having reference to suits and to the alleged absence of other instances of limitation, against the Crown. The doctrine "nullum tempus occurrit regi", however, has been largely qualified by the legislature in modern times, see Broom's Legal Maxims, 3rd Edition, page 62 and the words in "in any case of the alleged offence the prosecution shall not be entertained" seem to me wide enough to cover not only complaints filed by private individuals, but also complaints filed by the Police or by a Public Prosecutor under instructions from a Local Government. It is suggested that it could never have been the intention of the legislature to give so wide a protection to the public servants referred to in s. 80 (3) and that unless the protection is limited to private complaints a public servant has only to conceal a crime for six months to be immune. A reference to the Bombay District Police Act however shows that s. 80 (3) does not provide a six months period of limitation for the prosecution of Magistrates, Police Officers and certain other persons acting under their orders with regard to all offences. The object of the section was to protect Magistrates, Police Officers and others from stale prosecutions, based on the fact, that some duty imposed or authority conferred by a provision of the Bombay District Police Act or by some rule or order or direction lawfully made or given thereunder had been neglected or misused whether such neglect or misuse was bona fide or mala fide. The section provides that the offence or wrong must be "under colour or in excess of a duty imposed or authority conferred by the Act" and this by virtue of s. 51 of the Bombay District Police Act includes duties imposed by other laws for the time being in force, see Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji (7). But since the offence must be "under colour or in excess of a duty or authority," the act for which protection is given by s. 80 (3) must be an act which appears to be done in the lawful discharge of a duty or in the lawful exercise of an authority conferred by the Bombay District Police Act or other law for the time being in force. This would not include acts which are obviously offences and in no manner reconcilable with the duties or functions of a Magistrate or Police Officer, such as an unprovoked assault: see Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji (7), though the language might protect a Police Officer who had used excessive force in making a lawful arrest. It is suggested on behalf of the accused that the charge if any with regard to the sum of Rs. 64 should be under s. 161, Indian Penal Code, and not under s. 384 Indian Penal Code. But neither of these offences seem to me to come within the protection provided by s. 80 (3) of the Bombay District Police Act. The taking of bribes is no more reconcilable with the duties or functions of a Police Sub-Inspector than the extortion of money. Neither could in my opinion be regarded as an act committed under colour of a duty or authority. A number of cases have been cited having reference to sections differently worded in the Indian Codes. Such cases have reference to an entirely different class of offence and provide protection of a different character. We cannot properly be guided by them in arriving at the meaning of s. 80 (3) of the Bombay District Police Act. Nor can we be guided by English authorities on different expressions in English Statutes: see Bhagchand Dagdusa Gujrathi v. Secretary of State for India (14) cited by Fawcett, J., in Narayan Hari v. Yeshwant Raoji (7). The word "acts" under the Bombay General Clauses Act include omissions where such inclusion is not repugnant to the words in the context.

At first sight the expression "an omission under colour of a duty or authority" seems perhaps incongruous, but a little reflection shows that an omission to act might well be under colour of a duty. If a complaint, for instance, were made to a Police Officer for a non-cognizable offence, it would be his duty to refrain from taking cognizance, and if a Police Officer, while ostensibly acting in the discharge of his duties as such, is guilty of illegal omissions, s 80 (3) of the Bombay District Police Act read with the Bombay General Clauses Act would, in my opinion, protect him against stale prosecutions instituted more than six months after the alleged omissions. For the reasons above mentioned I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate rightly decided that the alleged offences under ss. 217, 218 and 466, Indian Penal Code, were covered by s. 80 (3) of the Bombay District Police Act and that it was his duty to proceed with the enquiry into the alleged offence under s. 384, Indian Penal Code.

I would, therefore, dismiss both applications for revision.

Civil Suit No. 127 of 1930.

May 13, 1931.

ASTON, A. J. O.

RADHAKISHEN—PLAINTIFF

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE—DEFENDANT.

Minor—Guardian investing moneys in his own firm—Insolvency of firm—Liability of guardian's estate—Negligence—Contributory negligence—Apportionment of liability—Crown—Liability for acts of servants—Court losing security bond—Liability of Secretary of State.

Where the defendant's negligence is the primary and substantial cause of the damage sustained by the plaintiff, he will be responsible for the whole damage, though it may have been increased by the wrongful conduct of a third person or though there may have been negligence on the part of such third person which jointly with the defendant's negligence so caused the damage. The same rule applies where the negligence is that of a person for whom the defendant is liable [p. 519, col. 2.]

Where the guardian of the property of a minor deposited the minor's money in his own firm and omitted to give proper accounts and subsequently, after the death of the guardian, the firm was adjudicated insolvent owing to the speculation of other persons;

Held, that as the omission of the guardian to invest the minor's property in trustee securities as directed by s. 20, Trusts Act, 1882, and the omission to file proper accounts was the main cause of the loss caused to the minor, both the guardian and his surety were liable for the loss sustained by the minor. Collins v. Middle Level Commissioners (3) and Burrows v. March Gas and Coke Co. (5), relied on. [ibid.]

So far as torts committed by the servants of the Secretary of State in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by private persons are concerned, exemption from liability cannot be pleaded by the Secretary of State. But the Secretary of State will not be liable for torts committed by Government servants while performing acts done in the exercise of powers which are usually termed sovereign. [p. 521, col. 2.]

Where the security bond executed by the guardian of the property of a minor and deposited in the Judicial Commissioner's Office was lost due to the negligence of the office and a suit was brought by the minor after attaining majority against the Secretary of State for damages caused owing to the negligence of defendant's servants:

Held, that though the plaintiff had sustained loss as he was prevented from taking action against the surety, the fact (relied on only constituted damnum sine injuria [p. 519, col. 1.]

Held, further, that as no appreciable benefit accrued to the Revenue of the Government by the taking of the surety bond and the transaction was not one out of which profit could be derived, the transaction was not such in which the old East India Company might have been sued and plaintiff had no cause of action against the Secretary of State. Jehangir Cursetji v. Secretary of State (22), Shivabhai v. Secretary of State for India (19), Secretary of State v. Moment (20) and Mathradas Ramchand v. Secretary of State (21), relied on. Other cases referred to. [p. 522, col. 2.]

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, for the Defendant.

Judgment.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiff to recover a sum of Rs. 23,600 from the Secretary of State as damages for the negligence of the defendant's servants in losing a security bond executed in this Court for a sum of Rs. 23,600. The facts in the suit are virtually admitted. On the 13th of March, 1915, one Chhangomal Kushaldas applied to be appointed guardian of the property of the plaintiffs who were both minors. His application was granted on the condition that he mortgaged his immoveable property. This order was varied by this Court in appeal and Chhangomal was ordered to give ordinary security, the District Judge, Hyderabad fixing the security at Rs. 29,600. Chhangomal being a resident of Karachi applied for permission to enter into the bond at Karachi in this Court and his application was granted. The security bond was taken and on the 8th of August, 1916 the Registrar of this Court informed the District Judge, Hyderabad that the security bond had been taken. Chhangomal thereafter deposited the money in his own firm of Messrs. Kushaldas Mangatram, This firm in those days was in a very flourishing condition; it had 17 immoveable properties and was a firm of good standing. In 1918 Changomal died. The first plaintiff on attaining majority applied to the District Judge, Hyderabad to call on the legal representatives to render accounts and hand over property. In the application it was also mentioned that action would have to be taken against the surety and for this purpose application was made that a search should be made for the bond. On the 14th of June, 1927, an application was made to declare the firm of Messrs. Kushaldas Mangatram insolvents; On the 27th of June, 1927, the District Judge, Hyderabad, requested the Registrar of this Court to send him the security bond; on the 15th of July the Registrar replied that it was missing. On the 3rd of August, 1927, the firm of Kushaldas Mangatram was adjudicated insolvents. On the 22nd of September, 1928, the plaintiff's Pleader asked the District Judge, Hyderabad to move the Judicial Commissioner to have a thorough search made. In January, 1929, plaintiff No. 1 asked the Registrar to make a thorough search but the bond was not found. On the 27th of June, 1927, an application had also been made by the plaintiffs to the District Judge, Hyderabad to assign the bond for proper action being taken against the surety and the order of the learned District Judge was "surety bond to be called for". The Official Assignee investigated the claim of the plaintiffs and found that a sum of Rs. 38,477 was due to them. Interest besides has become due on the amount. The Official Assignee has declared a dividend of one anna and eleven pies in a rupee and he has deposed to the fact that taking the most favourable view another dividend of one anna six pies may be declared.

The following issues were raised,

1. Did the deceased Changomal Kushaldas fail to render any accounts to the Court of the estate of the minors?

2. Did the deceased Changomal Kushaldas in contravention of any provisions of law deposit the amount, if any due to the minors with the firm of Kushaldas Mangatram?

3. Did the plaintiff No. 1 apply to the District Court, Hyderabad as stated in para. 8 of the plaint and did the firm of Kushaldas Mangatram become insolvent before anything could be done?

4. What amount, if any, is due by the firm of Kushaldas Mangatram to the minors?

5. Has the security bond been lost owing to any negligence of the office of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind?

15. General.

My findings on the issues are as follows:—

Issue No. 1. In the affirmative.

Issue No. 2. In the affirmative.

Issue No. 3. In the affirmative.

Issue No. 4. A sum of Rs. 38,477 has been proved as due by the firm of Kushaldas Mangatram to the minors. Interest is payable on this amount and at present a dividend of one anna and eleven pies in the rupee has been declared.

Issue No. 5. In the affirmative.

Issue No. 6. In the affirmative.

Issue No. 7. In the negative.

Issue No. 8. In the affirmative.

Issue No. 9. In the negative.

Issue No. 10. The suit is not necessarily premature, because the bond was not assigned for the suit is for compensation for the damage sustained by the loss of the bond, through the negligence of defendant's servants. Its decision depends on whether the negligent act amounted to a breach of duty towards the plaintiffs themselves, independent of contract, and if so whether defendant is liable.

Issue No. 11. Same as No. 10.

Issue No. 12. In the negative.

Issue No. 13. In the negative.

Issue No. 14. Defendant is not liable. The surety was liable.

In dealing with the issues the learned

Government Pleader has not pressed Issue No. 1 which is covered by Ex. 6, nor has he pressed Issue No. 2. The fact that the money remained in the firm of Changomal was admitted in para. 17 of the written statement. The Government Pleader has not pressed Issue No. 3 which is proved by the certified copies which have been put in by the plaintiffs. As regards Issue No. 4 it is not disputed by the defendant that plaintiff has proved that a sum of Rs. 34,477 was established to be due by the insolvent firm of Kushaldas Mangatram to the minors. Issue No. 5 was contested by the defendant. It was contended that no negligence was proved in the office of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It seems to me, however, that there was undoubtedly an omission to exercise ordinary care with regard to the surety bond. Not a trace of the bond is to be found, not a trace of any entry in any record or register relating to the bond. Had the bond been forwarded to the District Judge, Hyderabad as suggested by the defence a reference to it would have been made in the letter dated 8th of August, 1916, as being forwarded, but the District Judge was merely informed by the Registrar of this Court that the bond had been taken. The security bond was a valuable document; there was no occasion for its destruction, for the Court Rules provide for the destruction of only useless records. With regard to Issue No. 6 it is clear that the loss of the bond has prevented the plaintiffs from taking action against the surety. The evidence shows that the plaintiffs did not know who the surety was. The defendant's Pleader does not press Issue No. 8. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash (1) is in plaintiffs' favour.

I will now deal with Issues Nos. 9, 10, 11 and 14 together. The contention of the defence that the suit is premature because the plaintiff took no steps to ask the District Judge to assign the bond under s. 35 of the Guardians and Wards Act, appears to be due to a misapprehension, for the application made on June 27, 1927, has been put in. I think it is clear that from the point of view of contract, plaintiff would have no cause of action for the loss of the bond damnum might have been occasioned to the plaintiffs but the injuria was with the Judge. It is to be remembered in this connection that the bond prior to assignment enures to the benefit of the Judge. See s. 34, Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890. Plaintiffs, however, contend that they have suffered loss on account of the negligence of the defendant's servants in keeping the bond. On behalf of the defendant it is urged that since the firm of Khushaldas Mangatram became insolvent after the death of the guardian and surety was not liable and hence no damage was caused to the plaintiffs by the loss of the bond. It has been pointed out in Mayne on Damages that even before the case of the 'Bernina' (Mills v. Armstrong) (2), it was settled law that where the defendant's negligence is the primary and substantial cause of the damage sustained by the plaintiff, he will be responsible for the whole damage though it may have been increased by the wrongful conduct of a third person or though there may have been negligence on the part of such third person which jointly with the defendant's negligence so caused the damage: Callins v. Middle Level Commissioners (3). The same rule applies where the negligence is that of a person for whom the defendant is liable. In a case where the defendant contracted to supply gas fittings in the plaintiff's house and the fittings were so defective that the gas escaped and a servant negligently brought in a lighted candle, on which an explosion took place, it was held that the defendants were liable, whether the person who introduced the candle was plaintiff's servant or not: Burrows v. March Gas and Coke Co. (4). Similarly where a District Council employed a contractor to construct a sewer and in the construction the contractor injured a gas main from which the gas escaped into an adjoining house and caused an explosion it was held that the District Council was liable for the result as their primary duty to the public was so to construct the sewer that no injury would ensue. See Mayne on Damages, page 71. In the present case I am of opinion that the omission of the guardian Changomal to invest the minors' property in trustee securities as directed by s. 20 of the Trusts Act, 1852, and the omission of the guardian to file proper accounts was the main cause of the loss caused to the minors. No doubt the action of other persons speculating in sugar partly caused the loss, but on the strength of the cases to which I have referred I am of opinion that the guardian and his surety would be liable for the whole loss sustained by the minors. The question, however, arises: Can the defendant be rendered liable for negligence displayed in the Judicial Commissioner's office in losing the surety bond? It has been held that if "A" breaks his contract with B, C, a third party, cannot sue him on the contract for any harm resulting to himself, but he may sue him if he has suffered damage for some wrongful or negligent act which amounts to a breach of duty towards himself independently of the contract, A Railway Company owes a duty to its passengers; whether the passenger who has been injured purchased a ticket or had it purchased for him or was allowed to ride gratuitously. Similarly a gas fitter who did his work negligently was liable for damages suffered by a person who was injured by an explosion but who was a stranger to the contract. Lopes, J. there said.

"I think the plaintiff's right of action is founded on a duty which I believe attaches in every case where a person is using or dealing with a highly dangerous thing, which, unless managed with the greatest care, is calculated to cause injury to bystanders."

See Parry v. Smith (5). In the case of Heaven v. Pender (6), Brett, M. R. laid down the general proposition that,

"Whenever one person is by circumstances placed in such a position with regard to another that every one of ordinary sense who did think would at once recognise that if he did use ordinary care and skill in his conduct with regard to those circumstances, he would cause danger of injury to the person or property of the other, a duty arises to use ordinary care and skill to avoid such danger."

Cotton and Bowen, L. JJ., however, declined to adopt this proposition but rested the defendant's liability on the obligation of the dock-owner to take reasonable care that the appliances provided in the dock were in a fit state to be used. In the present case it cannot be said that the security bonds are highly dangerous objects involving special care, nor can it be reasonably alleged, in my opinion, that there is an invitation to members of the public to come to the Court and deposit security bonds and that care would be taken of such bonds. In the present case the bond was a bond taken by the Court itself. I am of opinion, that the facts relied on by the plaintiffs, as regards the loss of the bond, constitute damnum sine injuria.

With regard to Issues Nos. 7, 12 and 13 the case seems to me even more clear. The liability of the Secretary of State for acts of his servants was provided for by the Government of India Act, 1858, 21 and 22 Vic. Chap 106 which enacted that the Secretary of State might sue and be sued in India and in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate and that all persons and bodies politic might have and take the same suits, remedies and proceedings, legally and equitably against him as they would have done against the East India Company. In Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India (7), where the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of workmen in a Government dock-yard, a broad distinction was drawn between acts done in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by persons who enjoy no delegated powers of sovereignty and acts done in the exercise of powers usually termed sovereign. It was held that since the plaintiff was injured by workmen employed in an undertaking which might have been carried on by persons who enjoyed no delegated powers of sovereignty, it was a case in which the old East India Company would have been employed and a case, therefore, in which the Secretary of State could not plead exemption. The learned Judges who decided this suit did not hold that all acts done in the exercise of powers usually termed sovereign were exempt but in Nabin Chander Dey v. Secretary of State (8), it was held that exemption could be claimed as regards all acts falling under this clause whether the suit was based on contract or tort. This ruling was strongly criticised in Secretary of State v. Hari Bhanji (9) where it was pointed out that if Nabin Chander Dey v. Secretary of State (8) was correct it was unnecessary for the Privy Council in Foster v. Secretary of State (10) to have enquired into the title of the Begum for the resumption of her jagir was an act which could under no circumstances have been legally done by a private person. Secretary of State v. Hari Bhanji (9) sub-divided acts done in the exercise of powers usually termed sovereign into two classes, namely, acts which are entirely outside the province of Municipal Law and acts which fall within the province of Municipal Law. In the former class belong acts such as making of war and peace, the conclusion of treaties, see Nabab of Carnatic v. East India Co. (11) and acts necessary for public safety not purporting to be justified by any canon of Municipal Law, as for instance, seizing the property of a deceased Raja as Escheat, see Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba (12). It has been held that all that is done under a treaty is as much beyond the domain of Municipal Law as the treaty itself: Rustomjee v. Reg (13). With regard to the second class, namely, acts within the province of Municipal Law, it was pointed out in Secretary of State v. Hari Bhanji (9) that where the act which is the ground of the complaint is the act which professes to be done under the sanction of the Municipal law and in the exercise of powers conferred by that law, the circumstances that it is an act done by the sovereign power or by the Deputy of that power does not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Thus in Foster v. Secretary of State (10) where possession was taken not as a seizure by arbitrary power but under colour of a legal title their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the claim of the plaintiff was prima facie cognizable by the Municipal Courts. Secretary of State v. Hari Bhanji (9) was approved of in Vijya Raghava v. Secretary of State (14) where a Municipal Councillor sued the Secretary of State for wrongful removal from the office and the Court awarded damages. This case was strongly criticised in Ross v. Secretary of State (15) where the plaintiff sued the Secretary of State for damages for the dismissal of an agent of a labour Association and for alleged libel. It was held in Ross v. Secretary of State (15) that Vijya Raghava v. Secretary of State (14) had omitted to give proper consideration to the question whether acts were done in the exercise of powers usually termed sovereign or whether they were done in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by persons who enjoyed no delegated powers of sovereignty. Ross v. Secretary of State (15) sub-divided acts done in the exercise of powers usually termed sovereign into torts committed by Government servants while acting as agents of Government and secondly acts done by Government servants in the exercise of statutory authority, and thirdly acts done by Government servants acting as agents of Government. As regards torts committed by Government servants while acting under colour of Municipal Law, Wallis, J. in Ross v. Secretary of State (15) observed that the question will not be settled conclusively until their Lordships of the Privy Council have had an opportunity of considering the case of Rogers v. Rajendro Dutt (16) where irresponsibility was assumed and he expressed the opinion that, as it was a case in which a petition of rights would not lie against the Crown, and as the East India Co. would not have been liable and there had been no ratification, there was no cause of action against the Secretary of State. This was followed in Secretary of State for India v. Cockcraft (17) in which it was held that there was no cause of action against the Secretary of State for a tort committed by the servants of a Public Works Department, namely, negligence in making a military road. In McInerny v. Secretary of State for India (18), Fletcher, J., held that no suit could lie for negligence with reference to a highway. See also Shivabhajan v. Secretary of State for India (19). It is quite clear that so far as torts committed by the servants of the Secretary of State in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by private persons are concerned exemption from liability cannot be pleaded by the Secretary of State. This was laid down in Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India (i) which was approved of in Secretary of State for India v. Moment (20). This Court also in Mathradas Ramchand v. Secretary of State (21) awarded damages for wrongful ejection of the plaintiff from a 2nd class carriage by Railway servants and in Jehangir Carsetji v. Secretary of State (22) it was conceded by Government in appeal that such actions of tort as could have been brought against the East India Co., would also lie against the Secretary of State. It is also clear that property has been illegally sold or money has been improperly recovered by a public servant acting ostensibly under a Statute and where the money has found its way into the public fund, a suit will lie against the Secretary of State for its recovery: Kailash Chandra Nag v. Secretary of State (23) and 56 Ind. Cas. 507 Secretary of State for India v. Lown Karan Marwari (24). See also Pamulapati Ankinudu v. Secretary of State for India (25). It appears to me, however, established beyond all reasonable doubt that the Secretary of State will not be liable for torts committed by Government servants while performing acts done in the exercise of powers which are usually termed sovereign. The facts in the Bombay case above cited viz., Shivabhanjan v. Secretary of State for India (19) seem to me in certain respects very similar to the facts in the present case. The suit was instituted against the Secretary of State in Council to recover damages on account of the negligence of the Chief Constable with respect to goods seized. It appears that 62,500 bundles of hay were attached by the Chief Constable of Mahim in the beginning of November, 1900 while the hay was in the plaintiff's possession. On the 2nd of January, 1901, the plaintiff gave a notice to the District Superintendent of Police for delivery and possession of the hay but only 14,700 bundles were delivered and the remaining 47,800 bundles of hay were missing. In other words, certain acts were performed under colour of Municipal Law, and subsequently loss was caused to the plaintiff owing to the negligence of a public servant. It was held that the seizure of the goods was not in any sense productive of benefit to the Revenues of the Bombay Government, that it was not a transaction out of which profit could be derived and there was no ratification or adoption of the act. In order that a suit could lie against the Secretary of State in Council, it must be one in which the East India Co., might have been made liable. It was further held in that suit, where the duty to be performed is imposed by law and not by the will of the party employing the agent, the employer is not liable for the wrong done by the agent in such employment. The case for the plaintiff was stronger in Shivabhanjan v. Secretary of State for India (19) than in the present suit for missing hay in that suit was actually taken from the plaintiffs' possession while the missing bond in the present suit was only to enure eventually for the plaintiffs' benefit. In the present case no appreciable benefit accrued to the Revenues of Government by the taking of the surety bond. The transaction was not one out of which profit could be derived. The transaction does not appear to me in any sense to be one in which the old East India Co., might have been sued. Plaintiffs in my opinion have no cause of action against the Secretary of State, I accordingly dismiss the suit with costs.

Fraudulent preference—Essentials—Consent decree against insolvent more than three months prior to petition for adjudication—Execution proceedings within three months—Proceedings, whether void-able.*

The conditions precedent to the applicability of s. 54, Provincial Insolvency Act are that the act complained of which is to be deemed fraudulent and void against the Receiver should have been done by the insolvent with a view to give preference to a creditor over others and that such act should have been done within three months of the presentation of the petition. [p. 523, col. 1.]

Where more than three months before presentation of the petition for insolvency, a consent decree has been passed in favour of one creditor, the proceedings taken in execution of that decree cannot be impugned as fraudulent under s. 54, even if the proceedings had been instituted within three months of the presentation of the petition. The execution proceedings taken against the insolvents or the ex parte orders for payment passed against them cannot afford fresh starting point for computing the period of limitation of three months under this section. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Assudomal Rewachaad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Tahilram Maniram and Dipchand Chandumal for the Respondent.

Judgment.—These are appeals against orders passed under s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and arise under the following circumstances:

(23) 18 Ind. Cas. 112; 40 C. 452; 17 C. W. N. 315; 17 C. L. J. 216.

(24) 56 Ind. Cas. 507.

(25) 28 M. 312.

The appellants are related to the insolvents. They applied for execution of their decrees and were entitled to a rateable distribution in certain proceeds of property which was sold in execution of a decree passed in favour of the Official Assignee, Karachi, against the insolvents.

On January 13, 1927 after the sale proceeds of the insolvents' property had come into Court a petition was made to declare them insolvents. This petition was filed more than 3 months after the consent decrees were passed in favour of the appellants. The Official Receiver did not therefore object to the appellants having a rateable distribution in the sale-proceeds. But the respondents who are certain other creditors applied under s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to prevent payment to the appellants on the ground that the consent decrees passed in their favour were by way of a fraudulent preference. The learned trial Judge refused to give effect to this plea as the decrees were passed more than 3 months prior to the petition. The learned District Judge, Sukkur, has, however, allowed the application of the respondents and has said:

"Now it is true that these two decrees were passed more than three months before the date of the petition. But the section does not speak only of decrees being suffered. Every judicial proceeding taken or suffered with a view to giving undue preference can be annulled by the Court. Execution proceedings following upon a decree are undoubtedly judicial proceedings. Once a decree is passed a debtor has no choice about submitting to the execution proceedings. But if it be held that the original decree was suffered by him to be passed willingly I think it will be absurd to hold otherwise in respect of the subsequent proceedings which follow as a matter of course The execution proceedings in the decrees now under discussion were held within three months of the date of petition. . . . That order is a judicial proceeding following on the decrees which are held to have been fraudulent, I think it is perfectly competent to the Court under s. 54 annul at least this order in favour of the collusive decree-holders."

We are afraid we cannot accept the reasoning of the learned District Judge as sound. The conditions precedent to an applicability of s. 54 of the Act are that the act complained of which is to be deemed fraudulent and void against the Receiver should have done by the insolvent with a view of giving preference to a creditor over others and that such act should have been done within three months of the presentation of the petition. Now preference implies freedom of choice and free-will. In this case the preference if any given by the insolvents was given by them when they submitted to decrees being passed against themselves and not when in consequence of those decrees the appellants were able to claim payment of the amounts due to them under the said decrees. The execution proceedings which gave the appellants the advantage of claiming payment of money were no doubt judicial proceedings but they were neither taken nor suffered by the debtors with a view to give preference to the decree-holders. These proceedings were taken by the creditors in consequence of the alleged preference already given to them and they were not suffered by the debtors because the debtors could legitimately do nothing in those proceedings to prevent payment. The fact that they remained absent would not render the payment which they could be compelled to make in execution proceedings, a payment made by them with a view of giving a preference to the appellants. The execution proceedings taken against the insolvents or the ex parte orders for payment passed against them could not therefore afford a fresh starting point for computing the period of limitation of 3 months under this section. For these reasons we set aside the orders of the learned District Judge and allow these appeals with costs throughout.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Statement of accused before Police—Admissibility in evidence.

Where the accused were tried for offences under ss. 399 and 402 of the Penal Code, and the Deputy Superintendent of Police gave evidence as to the explanations offered by the accused soon after their arrest as to the circumstances which brought them to the place where they were arrested, which differed from those given by the accused in the Sessions Court:

Held, per Milne, J. C., that the evidence was admissible as showing that the conduct of the accused was not that of innocent persons. Hussain Bibi v. Emperor (1), referred to.

Per Mehta, A. J. C.—"It is doubtful if in order to discredit the version of an accused person at the trial, the use of his statement before the Police, although it may be substantially of a non-incriminatory character otherwise, is not provided against in s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code." Umar Daraz v.

Crown (2) and Hussain Bibi v. Crown (1) doubted, Emperor v. Vithu Balu (3) and Emperor v. Issuf Mohammad (4), referred to Appeals from Jail against the convictions and sentences passed by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad.

Milne, J. C.—The accused were charged under ss. 399 and 402 of the Indian Penal Code with making preparations for committing a dacoity and being among 5 or more persons assembled for that purpose. The accused were convicted and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years for the offences under each section—the sentences to run concurrently.

The prosecution story is that one Jurio reported to the Police that certain of the accused had asked him to join them in committing a dacoity and that they had assembled in the Mussafarkhana for that purpose. The Sub-Inspector went to the Mussafarkhana and surrounded the people whom Jurio pointed out. One or two of them escaped. The accused were found with hatchets, lorhs, lathes, chisels and keys in a heap in front of them. One of the accused was made an approver; on this evidence the accused were convicted as stated above.

The accused appealed from Jail and no appearance has been made on their behalf but we have been through the record with the assistance of the learned Public Prosecutor.

The case against the accused depends first on the evidence of the approver Faizu Ex. 16. He was arrested at the scene of the offence and states that he had arranged with the accused to commit the offence. He fully implicates all the appellants in the alleged offence but being an approver his evidence requires corroboration.

The next witness on whom the Public Prosecutor relies is the witness Jurio (Ex. 7) who informed the Police about the intended commission of the offence. He met accused No. 5 and two others on the road who told him that they have been looking for a house which they intend to rob and were going to discuss the matter in the Mussafarkhana with their accomplices. They asked the witness to join them. He went with the accused to the Mussafarkhana and found the appellants and others there. It was decided to commit the robbery and the witness promised to join them, but instead of doing so he left and reported to the Police. This witness also implicates all the accused.

Kimatrai (Ex. 13) is a Punch Witness of the arrest of the accused and of the finding of the articles in front of them. These articles were not recovered from the possession of any particular accused but they were lying in one heap on the ground under an Ajrah. This is general corroboration of the approver's story.

Finally there is the evidence of the Deputy Superintendent of Police (Ex. 39) that the day after they were seized the accused explained the circumstances which brought them to the Mussafarkhana and these explanations are different from the explanations given by the accused in the Sessions Court. That evidence is admissible as showing that the conduct of the accused was not that of innocent persons, vide Hussainbibi v. Crown (1).

I am of opinion then that there is sufficient corroboration of the evidence of the approver against each of the accused and would dismiss these appeals.

Mehta, A. J. C.—I wish to add a few remarks of my own on one particular point.

It is not quite clear from the judgment under appeal but it appears to me that the mind of the learned Additional Sessions Judge who tried this case must to a certain extent, perhaps to a very great extent, have been influenced by the alleged falsity of the statements made by the accused to the Police soon after their arrest. The sum total of the evidence which weighed with the trial Judge as proving the guilt of the convicted persons is to be found given in a short paragraph towards the end of his judgment which reads as follows:

"The evidence of the circumstances in which accused Nos. 1 to 7 were secured, with the evidence of Jurio corroborated by the report he filed, and the ridiculous defences which some of these 7 accused give leave no doubt however as to the guilt of this accused."

I am not sure that in order to discredit the version of an accused person at the trial, the use of his statement before the Police, although it may be substantially of a non-incriminatory character otherwise, is not provided against in s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I am aware of the fact that there are two rulings of this Court, Umer Darez v. Crown (2), Hussainbibi v. Crown (1), in which it is held that s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to statements of accused persons before the Police but only to statements of witnesses before the Police. There are contrary rulings of the Bombay High Court given in Emperor v. Vithu Balu (3) and in Emperor v. Issuf Muhammad (4).

(1) 93 Ind. Cas. 248; 20 S. L. R. 74; 27 Cr. L. J. 456; A. I. R. 1926 Sind 151.

In the present case, however, I am satisfied that the conviction of the appellants can be supported without relying on their statements before the Deputy Superintendent of Police. The finding of the weapons and house-breaking implements under circumstances rightly justifying the inference of possession is, to my mind, sufficient and cogent corroboration of the statement of the approver Faizu and of the informer Jurio. The statements of the accused before the Police which the prosecution have proved to be false through the evidence of the Deputy Superintendent of Police have not been a determining factor with me.

I, therefore, agree that the conviction of the appellants is not liable to be set aside and that these appeals should be dismissed.

The fact that the Sub-Registrar accepted a document from the executant and duly registered it is prima facie proof that the executant was not in an intoxicated condition when he presented it for registration. Gangamoyi Debi v. Troiluckhya Nath Chowdry (1), relied on. [p. 527, col. 1.]

A document executed under undue influence is not void but only voidable and the onus is in the first instance on the person who raises that plea. Before the onus can shift on the other party to prove that the contract was not induced by undue influence he has to prove not only that the other party was in a position to dominate his will, but that the transaction appeared on the face of it or on the evidence adduced unconscionable. Plea of undue influence can be raised only by executant of document or his representative in estate, but not by a third party claiming adversely to such executant. [ibid.]

It is open to the plaintiff in a suit for partition to pray for rectification of a deed relating to the properties sought to be partitioned. He need not institute a separate suit for rectification. [p. 528, col. 1.]

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff-appellant for partition of certain property. It appears that one Ahmed, father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 died in the year 1903 or thereabouts and that at the time of his death he was indebted to the plaintiff on a decree which had been passed against him in Suit No. 1170 of 1909. At that time defendant No. 1 was a minor. For some years defendant No. 2 managed the whole estate and executed certain documents in favour of the plaintiff and others creating mortgages against the property left by Ahmed. When defendant No. 1 came of age he opened a personal account with the plaintiff. On 20th November, 1918 defendant No. 1 executed a registered sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff which forms the foundation of the present suit. By that deed defendant No. 1 conveyed to the plaintiff a four annas share in Survey Nos. 536, 116, 119, 120 and 97-2, a two annas share in Survey No. 111 and a two annas share in a well situated in Survey No. 536. The deed recites that the consideration for the sale was Rs. 300 paid in cash, Rs. 175 due on account by defendant No. 1 and Rs. 425 appropriated towards the decree in Suit No. 1170 of 1909 of the Subordinate Court of Naushahro. Defendant No. 1 appeared before the Sub-Registrar and admitted execution. The plaintiff filed the present suit in 1925, for partition of the property purchased by him and in the plaint he stated that although the sale-deed recited that he had purchased a four annas share in Survey Nos. 436 and 97-2 he had as a matter of fact purchased a four annas share in Survey No. 536-1 and Survey No. 97-3. His case was that the mistake in these numbers was discovered when the document was presented to the tapedar for effecting mutation of names and that the tapedar had noted at the foot of the document the following endorsement :

"In the document No. 536 is sold, but in fact 536-1 is sold. (2) In the document No. 97-2 has been sold but 97-3 has been sold. In the record 536-1 and 97-3 have been entered. Signature of the Tapedar Dabthro."

He further said that he had been put in possession of the share sold to him at the time of sales and had been dispossessed soon thereafter by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and their mother, defendant No. 3, having taken away the produce of Survey No. 536-1 and 111, which were cultivated in 1919-20. In the subsequent year certain other numbers were cultivated and their produce likewise taken away. He however claimed mesne profits only in respect of such survey numbers as were cultivated within three years of the date of suit. He further alleged that defendant No. 3 who was a co-sharer in the property had relinquished her interest in the property in favour of her sons and that she had been made a pro forma defendant. Defendant No. 4 was joined because he owned a certain interest in Survey No. 111 and was, therefore, a necessary party to the suit.

The defence of defendant No. 1 was that he had no interest in the land at the date of suit as the whole of it had been acquired by his brother, defendant No. 2, by adverse possession. He further said that he was given to taking intoxicating drugs and that he had never executed the sale-deed or received the consideration. Defendant No. 2 claimed the property as his own adversely to defendant No. 1 and further said that if defendant No. 1 was proved to have executed the sale-deed, it was executed by him under undue influence and was therefore of no effect. He further pleaded that the document had been materially altered and the plaintiff could not therefore succeed and that in any case he could not sue for partition unless he had got the document rectified. He also raised the plea that the deceased Ahmed had left a daughter Soni who was dead and whose legal representatives were necessary parties to the suit and that certain lessees from defendant, No. 1 were also necessary parties to the suit. On these pleadings the trial Court framed the following issues:

- (1) Does defendant No. 1 own any interest in the survey numbers in suit? If so, what?
- (2) Is the sale deed in suit with consideration, and was it executed under circumstances shown in para. 3 of the written statement (of defendant No. 2) and could defendant No. 2 raise such a plea?
- (3) Are the persons mentioned in paras. 8 and 9 of the written statement necessary parties?
- (4) Has defendant No. 2 remained in adverse possession of the land in suit? If so, what period and what is its effect?
- (5) Is the plea raised in para. 13 of the written statement true. If so, what is the result?
- (6) Cannot the suit lie in the present form?
- (7) Is the suit time-barred?
- (8) What was the produce of the land in suit?
- (9) Cannot the suit lie without rectification of the deed in suit?
- (10) What should the decree be?

On the evidence the trial Court came to the conclusion that defendant No. 1 owned no interest in the survey numbers in suit as he had lost his rights therein by adverse possession that the sale deed was without consideration and therefore unenforceable; but that there was no proof of undue influence and that the plaintiff could not succeed as he had made material alteration in the sale deed. With regard to the joinder of Soni and the lessees he said that the joinder of Soni had not been pressed by the defendants but the lessees were necessary parties to the suit. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that defendant No. 1 had not lost his interest in the property by adverse possession but that the document had been executed by him under undue influence or rather, as he put it, that the plaintiff failed to prove that the document had not been executed under undue influence he being of the opinion that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove want of undue influence. He also upheld the finding of the trial Court that the document having been altered the plaintiff could not maintain the suit. With regard to consideration he said that in a suit based upon a sale deed the decision of the question was not material and therefore recorded no finding on it. Now we have no hesitation in holding that both the Courts have viewed the pleadings and the evidence recorded in the case from a wrong angle of vision.

The document was duly registered. Although in the written statement defendant No. 1, had denied execution of the document his Pleader stated to the Court that defendant No. 1 had put his thumb-mark on the document and that there was no need to send the document for recording the evidence of an expert. There was also evidence of the attesting witness who said that he had executed the document. With regard to the plea that it was executed by defendant No. 1, in a state of intoxication, the fact that the Sub-Registrar had accepted the document from defendant No. 1 and had duly registered it was prima facie proof that he was not in an intoxicated condition when he presented the document for registration. As said by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gangamoyi Debi v. Troiluckhya Nath Chowdry (1), there is a presumption that all things done before the Registering Officer in his official capacity and verified by his signature have been done duly and in order. Except the bare statement of defendant No. 1, made in his defence that he must have executed the document in an intoxicated condition, there was not an iota of evidence on that point. All that the witnesses called on his behalf and who were interested in him had deposed was that defendant was in the habit of taking intoxicating drinks in larger quantities in former years than about the time of the suit. This evidence was quite insufficient to rebut the presumption that the document was properly executed.

With regard to consideration there were recitals in the deed showing exactly the consideration. The plaintiff had produced his account books to show that he had advanced money to defendant No. 1 as alleged. He had also produced the decree obtained by him against the father of defendant No. 1 and produced a certified copy of a plaint which he subsequently instituted in 1909 against defendants Nos. 1 and 3 wherein he had given credit for the sum of Rs. 425 appropriated as purchase price towards the decree. He was supported by the witnesses and defendant No. 1 had admitted before the Sub-Registrar that he had received consideration.

With regard to the plea of undue influence, the learned Judge of the first appeal Court was in error in throwing the onus of that issue upon the plaintiff. A document executed under undue influence is not void, but only voidable under s. 16, Contract Act, and the onus is in the first instance on the person who raises that plea. His case comes within the four corners of s. 16. Clause (3) of that section reads as follows:

"Where a person who is in a position to dominate the will of another enters into a contract with him and the transaction appears on the face of it or on the evidence adduced, to be unconscionable, the burden of proving that such contract was not induced by undue influence shall lie upon the person in a position to dominate the will of the other."

Now before the burden could shift upon the plaintiff to prove that the contract was not induced by undue influence, the defendants had to prove not only that the plaintiff was in a position to dominate the will of defendant No. 1 but that the transaction appeared on the face of it or on the evidence adduced to be unconscionable. Whatever may be said with regard to the position of the plaintiff as a creditor and therefore in a position to dominate the will of defendant No. 1, there was nothing on the face of the transaction to show that it was unconscionable. It was a sale for consideration. There was no evidence to show that the property was worth much more than the price paid for it.

Apart from the above it would appear that the plea of undue influence could only be raised by defendant No. 1 or his representative in estate. But it could not be raised by a third party claiming adversely to him. Defendant No. 1 had not taken the plea of undue influence. Defendant No. 2 was not his representative in estate but was claiming adversely to him and could not therefore raise this plea, nor could he raise it in the vague form in which he had done, that is to say, by merely stating that if the document was executed, it was executed under undue influence.

With regard to the plea that the plaintiff had altered the deed again we find that it is contrary to the admitted facts. The endorsement on the deed is not by the plaintiff but by the tapedar and does not amount to alteration but only purports to be a note made at the foot of it explaining that the proper survey numbers which had been sold were not 536, and 97-2 but 536-1 and 97-3. He had specifically mentioned in the plaint that there was a mistake in the sale-deed with regard to these two survey numbers. The plaintiff could not be punished for the act of the tapedar.

The question of limitation has been rightly decided by the Appellate Court. Up to 1917 or 1918 defendant No. 1 was a minor and defendant No. 2 managed the estate on behalf of himself and defendant No. 1. This suit was filed in 1925, that is within seven years of defendant No. 1 attaining majority. There was also evidence of transactions entered into by defendant No. 2 on behalf of himself and his grandson defendant No. 1 which showed that he never claimed any interest adverse to defendant No. 1 up to 1918.

With regard to the plea whether the plaintiff could not get partition unless he sued for rectification of the sale deed, it is sufficient to observe that it was not necessary for him to file a separate suit for that purpose. It was open to him to claim relief by rectification in this suit. Furthermore his failure to get the rectification in respect of these two survey numbers was no ground for refusing him relief in respect of the other survey numbers. The amendment with regard to rectification was a formal one and should have been allowed. We think that this amendment should now be allowed and opportunity afforded to the parties to prove whether there was a mistake or not as alleged. It is no doubt true that defendant No. 3 did not defend the suit, but no formal proof has been given by the plaintiff even as in an ex parte suit that she had relinquished her interest therein, and we think that this should now be done.

With regard to the joinder of Soni's heirs as parties to the suit, we find that some evidence was led by both parties. Plaintiff said that Soni had died before Ahmed. On the other hand defendant No. 2 gave evidence that she died after Ahmed. Although in view of the fact that the defendants having given up the plea that her heirs were necessary parties to the suit, the defendants are out of Court we think that as we are remanding the case to the lower Court on certain points, her heirs may as well be joined so as to put an end to this litigation and prevent any attempt at re-opening the partition made in this suit. As the lease relied upon in the defence has expired, no question arises whether the alleged lessees are necessary parties to this suit.

We accordingly hold that the sale-deed is with consideration, that it has not been induced by undue influence, that defendant No. 1 had a subsisting interest in the property which was validly conveyed by him to the plaintiff, that the plaintiff's suit is not barred by limitation and that the plaintiff has not lost his right to have partition by the alleged alteration in the sale deed and that he is entitled to the share of defendant No. 1 in the survey numbers sold to him; but as partition cannot be completely and finally made without the joinder of Soni's heirs, and the share of the plaintiff cannot be properly ascertained unless the question as to the relinquishment by defendant No. 3 is gone into, we order that the suit be remanded to the lower Court for trial upon both these points. We also order that the plaintiff be allowed to amend his plaint by praying that the sale deed be rectified and relief be given to him in respect of survey numbers actually sold to him. It will be open to the parties to show whether, firstly Soni's heirs and defendant No. 3 have a subsisting interest in the property, and secondly whether there was a mistake in the survey numbers as alleged. But it will not be open to them to reargue the question of want of consideration or of undue influence or of the document being vitiated by the alleged alteration or the claim of the plaintiff having been lost by adverse possession. Costs to be costs in the cause.

If a firm is dissolved and no notice is given, people who continue to trade with the firm under the firm's name are not affected by the secret dissolution. Their right to sue the retiring partner upon post-dissolution transactions does not depend on whether they knew that he was a partner prior to the dissolution. *Gisvani Gorio & Co. v. If a person is proving that he has retired from a firm he is entitled to show that immediately after the date of retirement he wrote to the Bank and informed them that he had severed his connection with the firm and could not continue to guarantee its account. If he does that, any statement by him made at the time as the reason for his refusing to continue to guarantee is admissible to explain his conduct. [p. 530, col. 2.]

When a party elects to go to trial without the evidence of a particular witness who at the time was ill, the Court will be justified in refusing to issue a commission for examining him when the application for that purpose is made at the end of the trial. [p. 531, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from an order of Panckridge, J., in Suit No. 856 of 1925, dated the 2nd December, 1930.

Messrs N. N. Sarkar, S. N. Banerji, S. M. Bose, Batra, B. C. Kar and N. Chatterji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Pugh, N. N. Bose and S. C. Ghose, for the Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of my learned brother Panckridge, J., upon an issue whether two persons, Mr. Pramatha Chandra Kar and Sir Hari Sankar Paul, are liable as partners of the defendant firm of Dawn & Co., on a money-decree obtained against the firm by the plaintiffs Bhagwandas Madanlal, dated 28th January, 1927. The suit was for a sum of Rs. 4,592 in respect of two contracts which were made in 1923 and 1924 respectively and it was brought on 27th March, 1925.

It appears that the case for the appellants Mr. Pramatha Chandra Kar and Sir Hari Sankar Paul is that, in April, 1922, there was a dissolution of the partnership and Mr. Dawn, after that date, continued to carry on the business under the name of the old firm, Dawn and Co., the appellants having retired. It is clear that before April, 1922, the plaintiffs had transactions with Dawn and Co. at a time when admittedly the appellants were partners of the firm then trading under that name. The plaintiffs brought their suit, as I have said, against the partnership firm in the name of Dawn and Co. in March, 1926, and very soon after that, namely, in April, 1925, Mr. P. O. Kar brought a suit against Mr. Dawn, Sir Hari Sankar Paul and some other members of Sir Hari Sankar Paul's family for a declaration that the partnership had been dissolved as from April, 1922. On 15th July, 1926, he obtained a preliminary decree declaring that the partnership had been dissolved as from that date and providing for the usual accounts. The plaintiffs having got their decree in January, 1927, made no attack upon the appellants as liable under the decree until February, 1930, namely, for a period of some three years. Now, an issue having been directed as to whether the appellants are liable under the plaintiffs' decree as partners of the firm of Dawn and Co., the learned Judge has tried certain questions necessary for the solution of that matter. The plaintiffs maintain that not only did they do business with Dawn and Co., prior to April, 1922, but that they made enquiries and came to know that the appellants were partners of the firm of Dawn and Co., that their dealings with Dawn and Co., were dealings upon which they gave credit to the appellant. It is quite clear that neither in April, 1922, nor at any subsequent period was any public notice of the dissolution of the partnership given.

In the circumstances the learned Judge has tried the question whether it is true that the plaintiffs knew at any time prior to April, 1922 that the appellants were members of this partnership and he has come (to the conclusion that sic) the plaintiffs' evidence on that question cannot be believed and he has, in my judgment, rightly refused to hold that it has been shown that the plaintiffs at the time they gave credit to the firm upon the contracts in suit knew of the status of the appellants as partners of this firm. That being settled, the learned Judge has addressed himself next to the question whether, in the absence of knowledge on the plaintiffs' part these individuals—Mr. P. O. Kar and Sir Hari Sankar Paul were partners—the plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed assuming that the partners as between themselves did dissolve the business in April, 1922. This question in India turns upon the correct construction of s. 264, Contract Act. The learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the authorities to which I will refer in a moment require him to hold that, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 264, a person cannot hold a retiring partner liable unless he knew that that individual person was a partner prior to the dissolution. Accordingly the learned Judge has addressed himself to the question of fact whether or not in April, 1922, the appellants did retire from this firm as alleged. I will deal first with this question of fact.

Now, the defendants called, first of all in importance, Sir Hari Sankar Paul to prove the dissolution. Sir Hari Sankar Paul turned out to be an almost useless witness because, while he had been a partner of the firm, it appears that he took little interest in the matter, and never even drew any money from the firm. When he was called to prove that there was a dissolution of the partnership, he was found to be under the impression that in 1922 the firm had been dissolved by a letter being written. The letter was not in his hand at the time and it turned out that the letter he was thinking of was a letter written on 3rd April, 1925, by himself to Mr. Dawn in the course of which he begged Mr. Dawn to come to a settlement of the accounts of the firm with Mr. Kar, and in that connexion he said that the partnership had been dissolved by mutual consent on 30th April, 1922. He gave no tangible evidence of anything that happened in 1922 amounting to dissolution of the partnership. It is not really contended that upon this evidence the learned Judge could reasonably be asked to hold that there was a proof of dissolution. So far as the letter is concerned, it is to be observed that the letter of 3rd April, 1925, which was after the plaintiffs had brought their suit against Dawn and Co., and shortly before Mr. P. O. Kar had brought his suit for dissolution of partnership, is not in itself at all convincing evidence.

The next evidence of importance produced before the learned Judge is the evidence of a brother of Mr. P. O. Kar, who appears to have been employed as an assistant or clerk in the firm of Dawn and Co. This brother of Mr. P. O. Kar gives no evidence of any conversation and produces no letter between the partners which would amount to clear and direct evidence of dissolution, but he says that he was authorized to sign the firm's name per pro and he says, though curiously enough not in his original examination but in further examination-in-chief, that there was the old firm and then there was the new firm in April, 1922. He produces a book in which he says entries were made with reference to the business of the old firm and that book on examination turns out to be of this character: that, while the entries in it may well have reference to a dissolution of partnership about that time, there is nothing in themselves from which the Court can make certain that there was a dissolution in April, 1922. There was also produced the last book of accounts, the largest book of accounts, and the entries are found to come to an end after the first two or three pages. Mr. Dawn was not produced as a witness, and none of the books after April, 1922, were produced to show what was happening in the firm after April, 1922. In addition to that a letter was produced dated 27th June, 1922, written by Mr. P. O. Kar to the Agent of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China. In that letter, Mr. Kar said that he was writing at the request of Babu Rajendra Lal Dawn of Messrs. Dawn and Co. and was writing to confirm that he had severed his connexion with the said firm of Dawn and Co. as from 1st May, 1922, and had not, therefore, signed the letter of guarantee which Babu Rajendra Lal Dawn had signed in favour of the Bank on behalf of Messrs. Dawn and Co. In my opinion that letter is evidence for the appellants. If I am asked to say under what section of the Evidence Act it is evidence, I think it is evidence under s. 8. If a person is proving that he has retired from a firm, he is quite entitled to show that immediately after the date of retirement he wrote to the Bank and informed them that he had severed his connexion with the firm and could not continue to guarantee its account. If he does that, I think any statement by him made at the time as the reasons for his refusing to continue to guarantee is admissible to explain his conduct.

The evidence of the witness Naresh Chunder Kar is not very satisfactory in some respects. He does not appear to have given very complete or intelligent answers to certain questions: and when he is asked about the books it turns out that he knows rather less about them than one would suppose from some of his answers at the beginning of his examination. As regards the small book, at the end, questions were put to him as to the meaning of the entries and he says:

"I cannot say anything about that. It was Rajen Babu who kept these books. All that I can say is that this particular book was kept to ascertain in fact if there was any sale of any goods relating to the old partnership business and on such occasions I used to refer to that book."

Question.—"The last two entries in the opening page show 'received from Rajendra Lal Dawn as loan Rs. 1,395 and that is shown as expenditure on the other side; you find another entry like that of Rs. 1,350.'"

Answer.—"I cannot say anything about it."

The evidence of Sir Hari Sankar Paul having proved to be of little or no service, the learned Counsel for the appellants before us applied to the learned Judge to stop the trial and direct that the evidence of Mr. P. O. Kar should be taken on commission. It is quite clear that these appellants elected to go to trial without the evidence of Mr. P. O. Kar just as they deliberately went to trial without the evidence of Mr. Dawn and without the books of the firm of Dawn & Co after the alleged dissolution. Mr. P. O. Kar, I am satisfied, was at the time lying seriously ill and when it appeared that the evidence of Sir Hari Sankar Paul manifestly came to nothing the Court was asked to issue a commission to examine Mr. P. O. Kar himself. No previous application of this sort had been made and it is quite clear that with their eyes open the appellants were prepared to go to trial without his evidence. It seems that the learned Judge concluded the hearing of the suit and reserved his judgment and then notice was given of a formal application for the issue of a commission to examine Mr. P. O. Kar. The learned Judge seems to have some doubt as to his power to entertain it. I cannot say that I have any doubt for myself. But the learned Judge did consider the application on its merits and refused it. He thought that to issue a commission at that stage would be a very exceptional order and that as the appellants elected to go to trial without taking any steps at all to have Mr. P. O. Kar examined it would not be fair at the end of the trial to make such an order such as was asked for.

In these circumstances, the first matter which is pressed upon us is that it is unfortunate and unjust that this matter should be disposed of without taking the evidence of Mr. P. O. Kar and that this Court ought now to give a direction which would enable that gentleman to be called and to give his evidence. I find it very difficult to hold that the learned Judge erroneously exercised his discretion when he refused an application of this character made at the time and in the circumstances in which that application was made to him. It has to be remembered that the position now is considerably worse. If we were to make an order which would have the effect of letting in the evidence of Mr. P. O. Kar, then this Court would have to decide upon the reliability and the value of the evidence of the witnesses whom the learned Judge saw and whom we have not seen. The whole case would have to be canvassed afresh and it would be very difficult to conduct the evidence of Mr. P. O. Kar in such a way as to make the taking of his evidence at this stage fair to the plaintiffs without something in the nature of a re-trial. Upon the whole, as the learned Judge has not thought fit to exercise his discretion in favour of the appellants, it would not be right in my opinion, for the Court of Appeal to say that the learned Judge was wrong.

The difficulty I find upon this matter arises chiefly in connexion with the second question, namely, whether the learned Judge is right in refusing to be satisfied with the evidence as a whole called for the appellants. The case from that point of view is very much on the border line. There is the hazy evidence of Sir Hari Sankar Paul and there is the letter to the Bank dated 27th June, 1922.

The books while they do not prove a dissolution suggest that something of that sort was happening at the time and, although Mr. Dawn has not been called, it does appear to be true that in the partnership suit he was professing to be the sole proprietor of Dawn & Co. On the other hand, one has to admit the force of what the learned Judge says that, in the absence of some direct evidence by one or other of these partners as to the dissolution of the partnership, it is difficult to say that the Court is bound to be satisfied with scraps and suggestions of the kind to which I have referred. If this matter rested there, I should find it a difficult matter indeed to be quite certain that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary given by the plaintiffs, the learned Judge in a case of this sort has given full value to the cumulative evidence, such as it was, produced by the appellants. On the whole, I am however, bound to say that it was the duty of the appellants on whom the onus rested to satisfy the learned Judge in a reasonable sense. I find it difficult to divest my mind of the idea that the evidence points to a dissolution in 1922 but at the same time I cannot say that, as a matter of right judgment the learned Judge was obliged to be satisfied with the evidence.

In these circumstances, it seems to me to be necessary to come to a decision upon the contention that was raised as regards s. 264, Contract Act. Now, the cases on the point in favour of the appellants are cases in the High Court of Bombay and the learned Judge has referred to them shortly and very clearly in his judgment. It comes to this that there is a decision in favour of the appellants by Tyabji, J., in the case of Greaves Cotton & Co. v. Purshottam Dharmasi & Co. (1), and there is an opposite decision of Beaman, J., in the case of 30 Ind. Cas. 864. Gisvani Gorio & Co. v. Kalyanji Vallabhdas (2) Then there is a case which went to a Division Bench on appeal, the case of Jwaladutt v. Pansilal Motilal (3). In that case, it was conceded before the Bombay High Court that, unless the plaintiff knew that a particular person was a partner prior to the dissolution, he could not get the benefit of s. 264. That was conceded before the Appeal Court in Bombay and the case went to the Privy Council upon another point, namely, upon the point whether an old customer, as it is said, requires to have an express notice of the dissolution—a point which has been decided in this Court in the case of Chundee Churn v. Eduljee (4). The Privy Council in their judgment upheld the decision in that Calcutta case but in no way dealt with the question whether a person who did not know that a certain man was a partner of the firm prior to the dissolution could under s. 264, in the absence of any notice of any kind, claim to hold him liable upon transactions entered into after the dissolution. There was thereafter a case Bhai Shankar Motiram v. Lakshmi

Dyeing Works (5), where the Appeal Court in Bombay again took the view that a person who was not known to be a partner was not within the scope of s. 264. In that case, the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court appear to have been under a misapprehension to the effect that, in the Privy Council in Jwaladutt's case (3), it was admitted that the view taken by the Bombay High Court on this matter was correct. Now, the learned Judge probably acted very judiciously and rightly in preferring to follow these decisions sitting as a Court of first instance.

The matter is however now in this Court and, in the circumstances of this particular case, it is unfortunately necessary, in my judgment, that we should deal with the point. It is quite clear that, in Eduljee's case (4), the view ultimately accepted was that the section does not profess necessarily to deal exhaustively with the question of notice arising upon a dissolution. It was held that even if public notice had been given, the section did not govern the case so as to decide that express notice was unnecessary in the case of old customers. The case before us, however, is directly within the section. It is not a question of arguing from one proposition to the converse of that proposition. The section does purport to deal with cases where no public notice has been given and the plaintiff has no notice of the dissolution; and the proposition enunciated by the section is that a person dealing with a firm will not be affected by the dissolution in these circumstances. Are we then to say that the section only applies to cases where particular individuals who are sought to be made responsible as partners were known to have been partners to the parties seeking to make them so responsible? I will not enlarge upon the principle that a section of an Act is prima facie to be interpreted according to the plain meaning of the words, nor will I trouble here with the cases now somewhat numerous in which the Judicial Committee has affirmed and applied this doctrine notwithstanding that the result is to make the law in India somewhat different from the law that would obtain according to the English principles. If it were in any way clear to me that to take the language of the section at its face value was to make the section say something paradoxical or plainly inconvenient or disastrous to commerce I might not be prepared even yet to forego the claim that in such a case the Statute ought to be interpreted if possible to leave room for an implication that would render the provisions reasonable. I do not agree with all that was said by Beaman, J., but I am entirely unable to say that there is any sufficient reason to cut down the prima facie and direct meaning of the words of this section so as to exclude from its operation persons who were not known to be partners.

It is quite true that the principles of agency to be found in the Contract Act and in s. 115, Evidence Act, would not by themselves take one so far as s. 264 on this footing takes us. That is very likely why s. 264 were specially enacted with reference to the particular case of partnership. It may well be that a person in India is dealing with a firm; it may well be that the firm has a good reputation; it may also be that a person dealing with the firm made considerable enquiry as to its position; still it may well be that he may not know exactly who are the individuals who compose the partnership. Again, so many people in India and elsewhere trade under names which give no indication of the individuals who compose the partnership that the Legislature may have been minded to cut down to the minimum any kind of enquiry as to the composition of the firm by a person who has to deal with it. Again, I think it may be that the draftsman of the section gave effect to a desire on the part of the Legislature to encourage in every way giving public notice when a change in the constitution of the firm takes place. It is to my mind not paradoxical or in any way impossible to suppose that the Legislature meant to say that if a firm is dissolved and no notice is given and people continue to trade with the firm under the old firm's name they are not to be affected by a secret dissolution. After considering this matter somewhat carefully, while I quite appreciate that the section so construed is from the point of view of accepted English principles an anomaly, I am not prepared to hold that the question under s. 264, Contract Act can be dealt with on the footing that there is any implied exception saving the liability of some persons. That being so it would be entirely unnecessary, on any view taken of these facts, to think of issuing a commission and it is entirely unnecessary to examine further the state of the evidence on the question whether there was in fact a dissolution of partnership in April 1922.

For these reasons, I think the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 39, O. XXI, r. 46—Attachment of debt—Jurisdiction of Court—Conditions—Want of jurisdiction—Validity of sale—Procedure—Debt, location of—Insurance policy, attachment of.

The invalidity or absence of attachment would not invalidate a sale inasmuch as an order of attachment is only a prohibitory order issued on the judgment-debtor and the public in order to protect the decree-holder. [p. 534, cols. 1 & 2.]

But if a property cannot be attached being outside the jurisdiction of a Court it can neither be sold by that Court. [p. 535, col. 1.]

It is not competent in execution of a decree for money to attach at the instance of the decree-holder a debt payable to the judgment-debtor outside the jurisdiction by a person not resident within the jurisdiction of that Court. Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (3), followed, Bank of Bengal v. Sarat Ch. Mitra (2), referred to. [p. 535, col. 1.]

The proper procedure in such cases is to transfer the decree for execution to the Court which has jurisdiction to attach the debt. [p. 535, col. 2.]

It makes no difference so far as the consideration of the present question is concerned as to where the money is payable. [ibid.]

The location of a debt is where the debtor resides. [p. 535, col. 1.]

Appeal from appellate decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 8th August, 1929.

Messrs. Sarat Ch. Roy Chowdhury and Tarakeshwar Nath Mitra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rupendra Comar Mitter, for the Respondents.

Suhrawardy, J.—One Sasi Bhuzan Bhattacharya living within the jurisdiction of the Munsif of Bolpur in the District of Birbhum insured his life with the defendant company for Rs. 2,000 by Policy No 7218. He borrowed some money from the plaintiff who obtained a decree for the amount against his legal representatives after his death, and put it in execution in the Court of the Munsif at Bolpur who had passed the decree. In execution of the decree, the policy or more correctly speaking the amount due under the policy was first attached by the Munsif of Bolpur under O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, and subsequently sold by him and purchased by the plaintiff. Not having obtained satisfaction from the defendant, the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the amount to which he said he was entitled by his purchase of the debt as aforesaid. The plea of the defendant company was that the Bolpur Court had no jurisdiction to sell the debt due under the policy and, so the purchase by the plaintiff did not give him the right to recover it from the defendant. The defendant further objected that the suit did not lie in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Birbhum. As to the second ground of objection, the trial Court held that it had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the learned District Judge on appeal did not consider this point, as in his opinion the plaintiff's suit failed on other grounds. The defendant however desires to support the decree of the Court below on this ground also.

On the first objection of the defendant both the Courts have held that the Bolpur Court had no jurisdiction to attach the debt due from the defendant company and had consequently no jurisdiction to sell it and that by his purchase at such sale the plaintiff did not acquire any right to recover the money. The learned District Judge after discussing the law and facts of the case has recorded his findings in these words :

"I fully agree with the conclusions arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that the order of attachment was ab initio void and the alleged sale subsequently held gave no right, title or interest to the decree-holder the plaintiff in this case."

In this view of the matter both the Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit and the plaintiff has appealed.

It has not been seriously passed that the attachment under O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, of the debt was a valid attachment. But it has been argued that any irregularity in or even absence of attachment does not vitiate the sale and in support of this contention several cases have been cited of which the latest is Naresh Chandra Mitra v Molla Atul Haq (1) in which all the earlier cases have been considered. As a pure question of law there can be no dispute that the invalidity or absence of attachment would not invalidate the sale, inasmuch as the order of attachment is only a prohibitory order issued on the judgment-debtor and the public in order to protect the interest of the execution creditor. But this view of the law is of no help to the plaintiff in the present case. In all those cases the Court had jurisdiction to sell the property. The executing Court, like the Court entertaining a suit (except in case of breach of contract), must have territorial jurisdiction over the subject matter against which execution is sought. Where it has no such jurisdiction the provisions of s. 39, Civil Procedure Code, must apply that is to say, the executing Court should send the application for execution to any other Court which has such territorial jurisdiction. The word "may" used in s. 39 does not mean that it is in the discretion of the Court which passed the decree either to execute the decree itself or to send the application for execution to another Court where the property against which execution is sought is situated outside the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. The discretion given there indicates that the Court should send the application for execution to another Court where it thinks that the decree is executable in the way prayed for :

"Speaking generally, it is an accepted principle of international jurisprudence that the jurisdiction of a Court in enforcing execution of its decree is restricted by its territorial limitations. That is to say, the jurisdiction of the Court is circumscribed by, and is co-extensive with its territorial limits. Thus a Court desiring to seize or attach the property of a judgment-debtor outside its jurisdiction, and where such property is in the hands of, or the custody of another, also outside the jurisdiction, such property sought to be attached in aid of the execution can only be reached by a regular method of procedure which has been prescribed by the rules of the Civil Procedure Code and similar Codes which prevail in all countries, viz, the decree of the executing Court must be transferred to the local limits of the jurisdiction of the external Court within which the property sought to be attached is for the time being." Per Atkinson, J., in Bank of Bengal v. Sarat Ch. Mitra (2).

If the moveable property such as money against which execution is asked for is not within the territorial limits of the executing Court, the only other way in which that Court may have jurisdiction to execute the decree is when the person against whom execution is sought is or resides within the jurisdiction of that Court. Except where these or one of these circumstances exist, or exists, the executing Court has no jurisdiction to seize property which is not within its territorial jurisdiction and where the person against whom execution is sought does not reside within its territorial jurisdiction. This point has been settled by the decision in Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (3), where the question arose with regard to the validity of attachment of a certain sum of money lying outside the jurisdiction of the executing Court. The learned Judges say :

"It is not competent to the Court in execution of a decree for money to attach at the instance of the decree-holder a debt payable to the judgment-debtor outside the jurisdiction by a person not a resident within the jurisdiction of that Court."

But Mr. Roy Choudhury on behalf of the appellant argues that even though the attachment was bad in law and the Court at Bolpur had no jurisdiction to attach the money in the hands of the defendant, it had still the jurisdiction to sell the debt due to the deceased judgment-debtor. The condition that in order to give jurisdiction to the executing Court the debt must be either within the jurisdiction of the executing Court or the person against whom it is claimed is a resident within its jurisdiction applies equally to attachment and to sale. If a property cannot be attached being outside the jurisdiction of a Court it can neither be sold by that Court. In Surendra Nath v. Bansi Badan (4) the view expressed in Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (3) was confirmed and it was further observed that an inferior Court should not be allowed to usurp jurisdiction it did not possess, and the order passed by a Court by usurpation of jurisdiction cannot be allowed to stand on a consideration that similar order would have been made on the merits by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

In the present case there can be no quarrel about the facts. The debt is due from the Company which carries on its business at Calcutta. According to the decision in Begg Dunlop's case (3), the location of the debt is where the defendant resides. The debt and the debtor both being outside the jurisdiction of the Bolpur Court, that Court was not competent to sell the debt and the plaintiff did not acquire the right to recover it by his purchase at Court sale.

A further question is raised, namely, that under the contract evidenced by the policy money is payable to the legal representatives of Sasi Bhusan at Bolpur and so the Bolpur Court had jurisdiction over it. That question is relevant only with reference to the objection raised on behalf of the respondent that the suit is not maintainable in the Birbhum Court. It makes no difference so far as the consideration of the present question is concerned, as to where the money is payable. The point is where the money was lying when execution was taken. I agree with the learned District Judge in holding that the attachment and sale are both void and that the plaintiff has no title to the money in the hands of the defendant. In this view of the matter it is not necessary to consider whether the Bolpur Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Graham, J.—I agree. In my judgment the appeal fails on the ground that Bolpur Court had no jurisdiction to attach or sell any property outside its territorial jurisdiction. The sale was, therefore, a nullity and could confer no right or title upon the plaintiff: see Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (3). As was pointed out in that case the proper procedure for attachment of the policy would have been to transfer the decree to the Court within whose jurisdiction the debtor of the judgment-debtor resided. That course was not adopted. As my learned brother has stated the case referred to above was subsequently followed in another case in this Court; 36 Ind. Cas. 457 Surendra Nath v. Bansi Badan (4).

sound the agreement arrived at cannot be impeached on those grounds. [p. 537, col. 2; p. 538, col. 1.]

When the case was opened the Counsel for defendant in view of certain documents mentioned to the attorney that the defendant should consent to a decree and he also consulted the person who was standing behind his back, but it appeared that the Counsel's was under the impression that the person consulted was a relative of the party and not the party himself. The decree that was passed on the basis of the Counsel's representation was sought to be impugned on the ground that the Counsel did not have the requisite authority:

Held, that the party present having in fact been consulted, the agreement was binding on him. [p. 538, col. 1.]

Per Rankin, C. J.—If the party present in Court was not properly and adequately consulted then his duty was to refuse, when his Counsel was proposing to consent to a decree, to allow that to happen and if necessary to give notice to the other side and the Court that he was withdrawing the authority which the Counsel had on his behalf. If any right is to accrue to the client from the fact of his being in Court he must at least make his presence known to the Counsel in order that the Counsel may act accordingly and it cannot be supposed that because he keeps quiet and does not even instruct his Counsel as to who the client is or take any steps to inform the Counsel of his presence, the Counsel has got to carry on upon the footing that he has no authority to deal with the case as circumstances may require [p. 537, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against original decree of Mr. Justice Panckridge, reported as 126 Ind. Cas 765.

Messrs. A. K. Roy and S. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. I. P. Mukerji and T. Ameer Ali, for the Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—In my opinion this appeal must be allowed. The question is whether a certain decree which was passed by consent should be set aside.

It appears that the suit was brought against defendant No. 2 firm for the price of goods sold and delivered amounting to Rs. 3,000 and the present applicants Haribux Goverdhonedas were impleaded as defendant No. 1 on the footing that they had guaranteed the payment of the price of the goods. At the hearing defendant No. 2 did not appear and as against them the plaintiff proved his case ex parte and obtained a decree. As regards defendant No. 1 the Firm Haribux Goverdhonedas they did appear by learned Counsel Mr. B. O. Ghose. It appears, according to themselves, that they had taken no pains whatever to give instructions to anybody until the case was actually called on and their learned Counsel had not even read the pleadings when the case started. The facts have not been inquired into but the case with which the present respondents came before the learned Judge was shortly this: a short time after the case had been opened Counsel for the plaintiff tendered a Nagri letter of which he had an English translation. That translation was shown to Mr. B. O. Ghose who did not know Nagri and Mr. B. O. Ghose on reading it turned round and asked defendant No. 1 firm's attorney to tell the petitioners to consent to a decree and, just as the attorney was conferring with one Goverdhonedas, Mr. B. O. Ghose got up and told the Court that the petitioners consented to a decree for the amount claimed. That was the story with which the learned Judge was presented. The learned Judge has investigated the facts and he has followed the course that has been adopted more than once in these circumstances. The learned Counsel Mr. B. O. Ghose made a statement from the Bar and the learned Judge has decided this case upon the basis of that statement.

It seems clear enough that defendant No. 1 firm were represented in Court in addition to their Counsel, first of all, by their attorney and, secondly by one of their partners Goverdhonedas Deora. It is also quite clear that Goverdhonedas Deora is the son of Haribux Deora. It further appears that Mr. B. O. Ghose did not know at the time he had to begin this case who Goverdhonedas Deora was. When he got the letter in Nagri, he handed it back to this Goverdhonedas Deora and asked him who he was and if this was his letter. It turns out that in this way he discovered that Goverdhonedas was not Haribux but the son of Haribux the writer of the letter. It further turns out that, although Goverdhonedas was a partner of defendant No. 1 firm, Mr. B. O. Ghose was never made aware of this fact. So one of his clients was sitting behind his back in Court though he did not know that: as a matter of fact, so far as we are informed, he had no other client present in Court at the time. Now, Mr. Ghose's narrative of the matter is that when he heard about this letter, as he was unable to read Nagri, he handed the original letter over where the Solicitor and Goverdhanedas were sitting and in the meantime he read the pleadings. When the letter had been read and Mr. Ghose had the advantage of hearing it read and seeing the English translation, he asked Goverdhonedas whether he admitted that the letter bore the signature that it purported to bear. He further asked whether his client meaning Haribux was present in Court and was going to give evidence. He then discovered that the man behind him and to whom he was talking was not Haribux but his son and the son admitted that the letter bore his father's signature. On that Mr. B. O. Ghose doing his best came to the conclusion that the case was hopeless and then he turned round and said that there was no case and he would consent to a decree. It appears that Goverdhonedas did not object to his so doing. He did not get up to say that he withdrew his authority nor did he take any steps of that sort when Mr. B. O. Ghose got up and consented to a decree and the decree was recorded. That is not the end of the matter. At no time did Mr. B. O. Ghose then or afterwards come before the Court and suggest that when he consented to a decree or advised his client to consent to a decree he was labouring under a mistake or misapprehension of any sort or kind. In these circumstances, the learned Judge having quoted the observations of Lord Esher M. R., in the case of Mathews v. Munster (1), has come to the conclusion that, even although Mr. B. O. Ghose did not know that the man sitting behind him was one of his clients, the presence of his client necessarily meant that Mr. Ghose had no authority to compromise the case without consulting his client. It seems to be a little hard if the law stands as the learned Judge thinks. But before considering the question of law, the first point, in my judgment, to consider is whether within any reasonable meaning of the expression Goverdhonedas can be heard to say that he was not consulted. In my opinion, it is abundantly plain that he was consulted and, if he is heard to say that he was not properly and sufficiently consulted, then his duty was to refuse when his Counsel was proposing to consent to a decree to allow that to happen, to object to anything of the sort being done and, if necessary, to give notice to the other side and the Court that he was withdrawing the authority which the learned Counsel had on his behalf. Why this case should be dealt with on the basis that the client was not consulted, I fail to understand on the statement made by Mr. B. O. Ghose which the learned Judge has accepted. But apart altogether from that, the learned Judge's judgment apparently goes to the length of saying that, if the client is in Court even although he is not known to the Counsel, unless the client consents, the Counsel's ostensible authority is non-existent. I do not understand why this proposition should be laid down. If any right is to accrue to the client from the fact of his being in Court, he must at least make his presence known to the Counsel in order that the Counsel may act accordingly, and it is monstrous to suppose that, because he keeps quiet in a back seat and does not even instruct his Counsel as to who the client is or take any steps to inform the Counsel of his presence, the Counsel has got to carry on upon the footing that he has no authority to deal with the case as circumstances may require. It seems to me that this case is amply and sufficiently governed by the very pertinent observations which are quoted by the learned Judge of Lord Esher M. R., in Mathews v. Munster (1):

"If the client is in Court" and Lord Esher is not talking of concealed or unknown client "and desires that the case should go on and Counsel refuses, if after that he does not withdraw his authority to Counsel to act for him and acquaint the other side with this he must be taken to have agreed to the course proposed."

That is all the law which, in my judgment, need be considered in this case.

Mr Mukherjee has in addition to defending the principle of the decision of the learned Judge, contended before us that, apart from that, he has in this petition made out a case of an entirely different character. What he says is that it is quite true that his client gave Mr. B. O. Ghose no time to appreciate his case and Mr. B. O. Ghose had very little chance of judging accurately what the fortune of the case would bear the point that would turn out to be material and accordingly, when Mr. B. O. Ghose saw the Nagri letter, he failed to appreciate that it was not so fatal to his client as he obviously thought. The contention is that, if he had looked at that letter carefully never mind that it is perfectly true that that letter was written by Haribux he would have seen that it did not help the plaintiff very much and it did not hurt defendant No. 1 very much and it is said that Mr. B. O. Ghose made a mistake in judgment in thinking that this letter was likely to be fatal to his clients. It is said that on that there was a misapprehension and consequently the case comes under the principle that, if learned Counsel gives his consent on a misunderstanding, that would be a good reason for the Court refusing to enforce the agreement. If Mr. Ghose had come before the Court and stated that he had acted upon a misunderstanding, it might be that that was a case worth considering. But why should we assume that Mr. Ghose who has never complained of having acted on a misunderstanding and has never confessed to any misunderstanding acted on a misunderstanding? The only reason is that his clients were hopelessly neglectful in giving proper instructions to him. Mr. Ghose acted to the best of his judgment and, even if it be shown that his judgment was not very sound because he had no good opportunity of appreciating the situation I should be very sorry indeed to regard that as a reason why the party on the other side should be told that the agreement which has been come to ought not to be enforced. In my judgment, the appeal should be allowed, the order of the learned Judge should be discharged and the decree as against both sets of defendants must be restored. The costs before us and before the learned Judge must be paid by the applicants.

It would appear that the decree was by mistake set aside as against defendant No. 2 also. There appears to be no excuse as to this and the decree is restored as a whole.

The plaintiffs' case is that the suit land originally belonged to one Abedul and his co-sharers who were jotedars in respect of the land. There were three money decrees against them in favour of the plaintiffs in the present suit. The parties were brothers and when each of these persons executed the decrees there were some questions of ratable distribution of assets amongst them. Then on 19th of Kartik 1328 B. S. there was an agreement between them that the plaint lands would be purchased in auction in the name of Ram Kumar Roy for Rs. 120 if there were no other bidders for more value and that Ram Kumar Roy would have 8 annas share, Haran Roy 4 annas share and Ananda Roy 4 annas share in the plaint lands so purchased and that subsequently the purchase money, costs of sale certificate and delivery of possession would be paid by them in proportion to their aforesaid shares by the three brothers and in that case Ram Kumar, was to be made to execute and register deeds of relinquishment in respect of their shares in favour of the plaintiffs in the present suit. It is said in the plaint that after the confirmation of the sale the plaintiffs demanded the execution of the deeds from the defendants which was not responded to with the result that the present suit had been brought. The defence of the defendants was that the suits were barred by the Statute of limitation. It was further contended that the contract was vague and cannot be given effect to. The Court of first instance negatived the defence and decreed the suits of the plaintiffs. Against this decision an appeal was taken to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh and the Subordinate Judge has reversed these decrees of the Munsif in both the suits and has dismissed the plaintiffs' suits. He rested his decision in the two suits on two grounds: first that the suits were barred by s. 66, Civil Procedure Code, and secondly that the suits are barred by the Statute of limitation having regard to the provisions of Art. 113, Sch. I, Limitation Act.

In second appeal by the plaintiffs it has been contended by Mr. Das who appears for the appellants in both the cases that the Subordinate Judge has gone wrong on both the points. It is said that s. 66 was never taken as a ground of bar of the two suits in the written statement of the defendants and, therefore, should not have been allowed to be raised before the lower Appellate Court. The answer to this contention is this: that the plea of bar under s. 66 which goes to the root of the suit does not depend upon disputed facts and may be allowed to be taken at any stage and the Court is bound to give effect to this plea. It appears that the agreements were made either before the sale or before the confirmation of the sale. In a case of this kind it is difficult to say that s. 66 does not apply. Mr. Das sought to spell out of the plaint an agreement after the sale and asked me to apply the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ramathai Vadivelu Mudaliar v. Peria Manicka Mudaliar (1) which approved of the Full Bench decision in the case of Venkatappa v. Jalayya (2). An examination of the decision of the Judicial Committee will show that their Lordships held that where the contract is subsequent to the purchase such a purchase is not affected by the provisions of s. 66. It is necessary to quote a portion of the judgment delivered by Lord Cave in that case to show that if the contract was, as in the present case, before the sale, the provisions of s. 66 can be attracted to the case. At page 649 * In Ramathai Vadivelu Mudaliar v. Peria Manicka Mudaliar (1), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say:

"It was argued by Counsel for the appellant that the agreement relied upon by the plaintiffs even as found by the High Court amounted in substance to an agreement that the appellant should purchase as to certain parts of the property on behalf of the respondents or of the persons whom they represent and he was able to point to certain expressions both in the plaint and in the evidence of some of the plaintiffs' witnesses which supported that view of the transaction. If the agreement entered into before the auction stood alone there would be considerable force in this contention. The object of s. 66 was to put an end to purchases by one person in the name of another and the distinction between a purchase on behalf of another and the purchase coupled with an undertaking to convey to another at the price of the purchase is somewhat narrow. But whatever doubt might be caused by the character of the original agreement is removed by the events which happened after the sale. It was decided in Venkatappa v. Jalayya (2), that an agreement subsequent to a purchase is not affected by the section and there can be no question as to the correctness of that decision. In the present case agreements were entered into after the sale."

It will appear, therefore, from the earlier passage in the quotation just made from their Lordships' decision that if the agreement is regarded as one which was made before the purchase, in that case s. 66 would apply. Of course these are the observations which were not necessary for the decision in the particular case. But an obiter dictum of their Lordships is entitled to very great weight. In the circumstances it appears that there being no statement in the plaint to show that there was an agreement subsequent to the sale, s. 66 bars the suits on the question of limitation; the Subordinate Judge has also come to a right conclusion. From the receipts which have been executed prior to the sale or confirmation of the sale it appears that the intention of the parties was that the agreement should be given effect to after the confirmation of the sale, that is to say, that the deed of relinquishment mentioned was to be executed after the confirmation of the sale which took place on 10th January, 1922, and none of these suits are filed within three years from that date.

The result is that both the points raised by Mr. Dass fail and the appeals fail and must be dismissed.

There will however be no order as to costs having regard to the relationship of parties.

Civil Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Lort-Williams, dated the 22nd May 1930.

Messrs. N. K. Bose and B. B. Sarkar, for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General and Mr. S. N. Banerjee, for the Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order made by my learned brother Lort-Williams, J., on an application made by the attorneys with reference to the taxation of their bill against their clients for whom they had acted in the course of a partnership suit. The partnership suit appears to have proceeded to a stage at which a reference was being conducted in this Court. The bill was carried on and the taxation before the Taxing Officer arrived at a stage at which the officer was about to complete the taxation. It appears that certain learned Counsel had been employed from time to time in connexion with the suit and the reference and the attorneys acting for the clients were objecting to this taxation to the allowances of sums which had been paid to Counsel on account of Counsel's fee. Thereupon the Taxing Officer having come to the end of his duties recorded an order and said that he would deal with Counsel's fee finally at the next meeting and that he understood that the attorneys were applying to the Judge for an order which would authorize allowance of Counsel's fee. The Taxing Officer intimated with regard to the different fees charged in the bill which of them he considered he was entitled under r. 32, Chap. XXXVI, of the Rules of this Court to allow and which of them he considered should not be allowed by him, at all events, without a further order from the Court. Thereupon the attorneys moved the learned Judge and obtained from him an order directing the Taxing Officer to allow all fees paid to Counsel including the charges incurred in preparation of briefs to Counsel and all other charges and expenses incurred herein and set out in the applicant's bill of costs. The intention of the summons is not entirely clear; but when we come to consider the affidavits and the materials, it is not difficult to see what is intended by the order of the learned Judge. The fact is that on all the questions as to which Counsel's fee which has been paid, were disallowed or about to be disallowed by the Taxing Officer the attorneys had given specific and detailed information in their affidavit. They had given several pages of items of Counsel's fees which the Taxing Officer as at present advised was not prepared to allow on the ground that it was not within his power. By that affidavit they claimed to show partly by the oath of the defendant and partly by letters received from the clients and from Counsel that in each case the amount of the fees had been agreed upon by the clients, and that the clients knew and intended that these fees should be paid. There was a question in some cases whether one Counsel or two Counsel should have been employed and in these matters also the affidavit of the attorneys is of very great detail and, speaking for myself, very convincing. In my judgment, the learned Judge was minded to make an order that in view of the client's consent although in some cases the consent was not in writing the amount paid to two Counsel with the client's consent should be allowed and the first question logically for our consideration is whether, in these circumstances the learned Judge had any power to allow the fees.

It is anything but clear to me that it was argued before the learned Judge that the Court had no power at all to allow fees above the maximum mentioned in r. 32 in the absence of a written consent. The contention seems to have been that the application was premature rather than that the application asked for something which the Court had no power to allow. It seems to me that while it is quite true that the words referring to the order of the Court or a Judge were in 1924 left out of r. 32 when that rule was redrafted that was not because the absence of these words could effect or was intended to effect a total destruction of the power of the Court in any case to permit the maximum to be exceeded. The position is that the Taxing Officer himself can allow fees to any extent in excess of the maximum not that he is obliged to but he may allow fees to any extent in excess of the maximum on production of a written consent of the client or his representative or recognized agent. When we look at Chap. XXXVI, we find that that Chapter leaves a certain amount of discretion to the Taxing Officer and in certain respects leaves further discretion to the Court. In particular we see by r. 9 that:

"where in the opinion of the Taxing Officer the maximum fee allowed by these rules is insufficient or a fee ought to be allowed for any matter not provided for in the rules or table of fees he may, upon the application of a party, refer the matter to the Court stating what amount in his judgment ought to be allowed and by whom the same ought to be paid and the Court shall make such order thereon as to the allowance of the whole or any part of the amount proposed by the Taxing Officer as it shall think fit."

and it is quite clear that the Court can make an order authorizing the maximum to be exceeded. In the same way when we look at the rules which deal with the proper procedure for a review of taxation when taxation has been completed we find that the Judge may make such order as to him may seem just. It appears to me that the omission of an express reference to an order of the Court in r. 32 is not because in the absence of such reference the rule by itself would bind the hands of the Judges but because the matter is left to the general principle which is that the limits marked out by r. 32 are meant to be provisions defining the power of the Taxing Officer and are not intended to take away and cannot by implication to take away the power of the Court in a proper case to allow fees greater than the maximum authorized by the rules. I therefore hold that just as the Taxing Officer has jurisdiction to allow fees in excess when a written consent is produced, the Court has jurisdiction to allow fees in excess where consent is proved although it is not proved in every instance by a consent in writing.

I now come to the next question. It was contended that the procedure was wrong because the attorneys should have waited until the completion of the taxation and applied for a review of the taxation under rr. 71 to 73, Chap. XXXVI. In many cases of course it is only reasonable to wait till the very end and apply in that manner because it is a way which provides that the Taxing Officer shall if specific objections are brought before him, deal with these specific objections, and then the matter goes to the Judge on proper materials. That is quite right as regards many questions, but in a matter where the decision is not vested in the Taxing Officer at all as in the present case it seems to me that there is no objection whatever and it is more convenient to approach the Court at a stage before the taxation is finally concluded. There is no reason to think that it is not open to the learned Judge to entertain the application in the circumstances.

Then comes the question of the merits of the application. I am satisfied that as regards the payment of the fees to Counsel in excess of the maximum which is laid down (the attorneys have shown thoroughly and to the hilt that they were acting throughout with the consent of the clients, that the clients knew that the fees paid were in excess of the usual and that the clients were from time to time discussing with the solicitors what fees should be paid and knew what fees would be paid and satisfied themselves that they were no more than what was desirable. In these circumstances, it seems to me that as regards the specific fees of Counsel which are mentioned in the affidavit in support of this application they should all be allowed and it seems to me further that this is equally so as regards those cases where two Counsel's fees were paid. These matters of Counsel's fees have I think been most satisfactorily cleared up in the application.

There remains only the question of incidental charges for preparation of two briefs instead of one and matters of that sort. As long as it is understood that the Court has satisfied itself that the fees mentioned in the affidavit were consented to and that where two Counsel were employed the employment of these Counsel was consented to any matter of detail must be left to the Taxing Officer. It is quite evident that there is no difficulty in carrying out properly the consequences of this order. If any question does arise in consequence of this order in that respect then it is better that the matter should come again before the Court on a proper reference under rr. 71 to 73, Chap. XXXVI.

I think that in substance the order of the learned Judge is right. It is however somewhat loosely drawn up and I think it should be altered so as to read as follows:

"It is ordered that the Taxing Officer be directed in taxing the bill of costs of the said Messrs. Orr, Dignam and Co., to allow all fees to Counsel and the proper charges incurred in preparation of briefs to Counsel and other incidental charges and expenses found to be proper."

But it is not intended that the order is to be an order enquiring the Taxing Officer to allow the whole bill as it stands. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 261—Assessment of license-fee—Suit for declaration of illegality of assessment—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

A suit for declaration that a certain sum of money which has been assessed as license-fee by a Municipality in respect of a yard or depot for trade is not legally recoverable from the plaintiff inasmuch as the entire area in respect of which the fee was levied was not used as a yard or depot for trade and as such the levy was ultra vires, can be entertained by a Civil Court.

Appeal against appellate decree of the District Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 10th April, 1930.

Messrs. Sachindraprasad Ghose and Bibhutibhushan Lahiri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Debendranarayan Bhattacharya and Phanindramohan Sanyal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The question involved in this appeal is whether the Civil Court has jurisdiction to try the suit, in which the appeal had arisen. The suit, as laid, was for declaration that a sum of Rs. 326 was not legally recoverable from the plaintiff as license fee. The allegation made in the plaint was that:

"the Chairman of the defendant Municipality while illegally measuring the jute godown of the plaintiff, had wilfully measured all the places outside the godown, where no jute business was effected, and could not be effected; and inside the godown also (measured) places, where on account of press, etc., being located, no jute was stacked and could not be stacked, and had not given allowances for all these places."

The defendant's case, as made in the written statement, filed in Court, was that:

"the defendant Municipality measured the plaintiff's godown, and all the places for stacking jute in presence of properly authorized agent on behalf of the plaintiff."

The defendant further pleaded that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable.

The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the amount of license fee assessed by the Municipality was in question, and that the case was not one in which the Municipality had acted illegally or one in which the action of the Municipality could be said to be ultra vires. There can be no doubt that the Municipality purported to act under s. 261, Bengal Municipal Act, in the matter of levying of the license-fee in question; and the position cannot be disputed that the plaintiff, the licensee, could not challenge the action of the Municipality, unless it was found that such action was illegal or ultra vires of the statutory provision as contained in the Bengal Municipal Act. The Courts below have proceeded upon the footing that only the amount of assessment of the license fee was in question in that suit. The question before the Court in the present case was whether, on the facts stated in the plaint, and upon those stated in the written statement in the suit, it could be said that the entire area, in respect of which license-fee was levied by the Municipality, purporting to act under s. 261, Bengal Municipal Act, was "a yard or depot for trade in jute." The action of the Commissioners of the Municipality, acting through their Chairman, complained of, was that they had exceeded their statutory powers, and as such the levy of license fee of Rs. 326, by the Municipality, was ultra vires. The suit as laid was not merely for the purpose of reducing the amount of the assessment.

The question of the principle of assessment was disputed; the basis of assessment was questioned by the plaintiff in the suit, on allegations of fact made in the plaint.

In the above view of the case, it was incumbent upon the Courts below to determine, on evidence, the question of fact whether the entire area in respect of which the license fee of Rs. 326 has been levied, was or was not used as "a yard or depot for trade in jute." If in point of fact, the entire area was so used, the principle of assessment and the basis, on which the license fee has been levied, would be correct; if, on the other hand, the entire area was not used as a yard or depot for trade in jute, the levy of license fee, as made of the Municipality, in the present case, would be ultra vires of the statutory provision referred to above, and the Civil Court would have jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiff's suit and give the plaintiff the relief he has prayed for in the suit.

The decisions of the Courts below are set aside, and the case is remanded to the Court of first instance for a fresh trial in the light of the observations made in this judgment. The parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence in support of their respective cases, as stated in their pleadings in the suit. Costs in the litigation up to the present stage, including the costs of the appeal to this Court, will abide the result.

The records of the case are to be sent down as soon as possible.

The right to obtain a probate does not ordinarily survive but in an appeal in a case where the judgment appealed against may operate as one in rem different considerations will arise. [p. 544, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 26th August 1929.

Messrs Hiralal Chakraborty and Sarat Chandra Jana, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. B. M. Sasmal and Bireswar Chatterjee, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—One Radha Krishna Maity died in 1926 leaving a will of which probate was applied for by the opposite party. His widow Chandramani Maity produced a codicil by which the original executor appointed under the will was removed and she became legatee for Rs. 10,000 due to the deceased on account of his life policy. Both the will and the codicil were subject of the suit before the lower Court and the learned District Judge granted probate of the will, and refused probate of the codicil which he found not to be genuine. Against that decision the present appeal was preferred by Chandramani and during the pendency of the appeal she made a gift of the legacy she was to receive under the codicil to the two sets of applicants before us. She died on 21st January last and the present applications are made one by Sachindra Nath Maity, a grandson of Radha Krishna Maity, and Amala Dassi his daughter and, the other by one Anilbaran Maity another grandson of Radha Krishna by another son, for substitution in place of the deceased appellant and for permission to carry on the appeal.

The applications are opposed and it is argued by the opposite party respondent in the appeal that the right to sue in the present suit does not survive to the applicants and that, therefore, they are not entitled under the law to be substituted in the place of the deceased appellant. It should be mentioned that under the codicil the first executor was a son of the testator, named Barendra Nath Maity, who predeceased him, and that the next executor was Sachindra Nath Maity, one of the applicants before us, and the executor after him, as named in the will was Chandramani the widow of the testator. When Chandramani applied for probate of the codicil, Sachindra Nath who was the executor named in the codicil before her renounced his appointment as executor and “so, in a sense opposed the application” as the learned Judge says, but it is not clear in what sense he did so. However, the fact remains that he renounced his position as executor under the codicil.

The only question therefore we will have to consider is whether the applicants are entitled to be substituted in place of the deceased appellant under O. 22, Civil Procedure Code. Under r. 3 of that order where the sole plaintiff (or appellant) dies and the right to sue survives the Court shall cause the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff (or appellant) to be made parties. “Legal representative” is defined in s. 2 as a person who in law represents the estate of deceased person and includes any person where the party sues in a representative character and on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party suing. Now one of the applicants Amala Dassi is an heir of the deceased Chandramani being her daughter and if the codicil is proved (as we will, for our present purpose assume) then she will succeed to the legacy of Rs. 10,000 given to Chandramani as to her stridhan. Then we have it that in August 1930, Chandramani executed a deed of gift of the legacy in favour of all the applicants and if the codicil is proved all these persons are entitled to succeed to the legacy to Chandramani.

mani. They are therefore, clearly within the definition of "legal representative," in s. 2 of the Code.

It is true that the right to obtain probate of a will does not survive; Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Nani Mohan Banerji (1) but in an appeal in a case where the judgment appealed against may operate as one in rem different considerations will arise. In the event of the codicil being proved the Court may pass appropriate orders for the administration of the estate of the deceased.

We are of opinion that these applications should be allowed and we accordingly direct that the substitution be made as prayed for. There will be no order as to costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s 26-F (4)
(a)—Pre-emption—Person purchasing share during pre-emption proceedings, whether can join as co-applicant—Division of shares—Principles—Unequal division—Error in exercising jurisdiction—Revision.

Under s 26-F cl. (4) (a), Bengal Tenancy Act, a person who was not a co-sharer landlord at the time when the original application for pre-emption was made is entitled to make a purchase and, therefore, to join as a co-applicant if he becomes a co-sharer at any time within two months of the service of notice under s. 26-C.

In the ordinary course co-sharer landlords applying to pre-empt should be entitled to pre-empt to the extent of equal shares, but in any case a co-sharer landlord should have a share corresponding to his interest in the superior right compared with the interest of the opposite party.

If the ordinary rule of equal shares is to be departed from it must be done on some basis or principle.

An unequal distribution without sufficient reason amounts to an irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction justifying revision.

Civil Revision against an order of the Munsif, First Court, Barisal, dated the 20th December, 1930

Mr. Bijan Kumar Mukherji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sirish Chandra Dutt, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment—This Rule has been issued on the opposite party to show cause why the orders made by the Munsif of the First Court of Barisal, dated 9th December, 1930, and 20th December 1930, should not be set aside. The orders in question are that the applicant is to be allowed to join in the co-sharer landlord's application for pre-emption of the transferred holding to the extent of 16 gandas only. The petitioner claims that he ought to have been allowed to purchase 8 annas share of the holding or at least his share in proportion to the share in the superior right, which he has purchased, as compared with the share in the superior right held by the opposite party.

It is contended on behalf of the opposite party, that the petitioner should not have been allowed at all to purchase inasmuch as he was not a co-sharer landlord at the time when the original application for pre-emption was made. But I think that, under the terms of s. 26 F. cl. 4 (a) Bengal Tenancy Act, he is entitled to make the purchase, if he becomes a co-sharer landlord at any time, within two months of the service of notice under s. 25-C, namely within the period of limitation stated in s. 26-F, cl. 4 (a). s. 26 F, does not state what share a co-sharer landlord coming in under cl 4 (a) is entitled to get and it would seem that in the ordinary course, co-sharer landlords applying to pre-empt should be entitled to pre-empt to the extent of equal shares, but in any case I think that the contention of the applicant is not unreasonable in this case, i. e., that he should have a share corresponding to his interest in the superior right as compared with that of the opposite party.

It is urged on the other hand that this Court should not interfere under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, with the order of the Court below inasmuch as there is no question of jurisdiction. It is doubtful indeed whether this Court ought to interfere. But the way in which the lower Court has ordered distribution of shares may be regarded as an irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. If the ordinary rule of equal shares is to be departed from, it must be done on some basis or principle, and the applicant appears to have been perfectly reasonable when he claimed that he ought to get a share corresponding to his interest in the superior right.

The Rule is made absolute. The order complained of is set aside and the applicant will get a share corresponding to his interest in the superior right as compared with the interest of the opposite party. Each party will bear his own costs in this Court. The application is rejected.

Customary Law (Punjab)—Succession—Bhatti Rajputs of Batala Tahsil—Mode of succession—Ohundawand or pagwand—Change of custom—Evidence—Riwaj-i-am—Record of custom contrary to general custom—Evidentiary value—Onus of proof—Agreement to give up old custom—Validity—Successive records—Later record, whether abrogates earlier.

Amongst the Bhatti Rajputs of Tahsil Batala the chundawand rule of succession has been followed from time immemorial and though at the attestation of the riwaj-i-am of the Tahsil in 1911-12, an attempt was made to make out that the pagwand rule should be followed in preference to the chundawand, no new custom of pagwand has arisen abrogating the older chundawand custom. [p. 546, col. 1.]

Where custom is the rule of law it is not open to the parties to agree that they would give up their old custom and follow a new one which they, for some reason, prefer; the parties have no power to legislate for themselves by mean of a riwaj-i-am. [p. 547, col. 1.]

Where a wajib ul-arz contains merely a record of the wishes and opinions of the parties it could not be regarded as establishing any binding custom at variance with the personal law of the parties or an old established custom Anant Singh v. Durga Singh (1) and Muhammad Ali Khan v. Ghazanfar Ali Khan (2), relied on. [p. 547, col. 2.]

The parts of a wajib ul-arz referring to a custom are not provisions intended to be in force for a limited period only, but are statements that a certain custom existed and if the statements are correct there would be a natural presumption that the custom continued to exist and it would be for those alleging that a change had subsequently taken place to prove the allegation. Though the production of a later Record of Rights containing entries opposed to the earlier ones would be some proof of such a change, there would merely be a balance of evidence on either side and it could not be said that the second record destroyed or abrogated the earlier one. Rahiman v. Bala (3), Hassan v. Jahana (4), Hira v. Molar (7), relied on. Ranjha v. Bulanda (6), not followed. [p. 547, col. 2; p. 548, col. 1.]

An entry in a riwaj-i-am is a strong piece of evidence in support of a custom even though it is against the general custom and the burden of proof of a custom contrary to the entry cannot be said to be light even in cases where the entry is against general custom. Beg v. Allah Ditta (8), Labh Singh v. Manga (9), Labha Ram v. Raman (10), relied on. Bhag Singh v. Jai Singh (11), commented upon. [p. 549, col. 1.]

First Appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 17th March, 1925.

Lala Badri Das, R. B. and Mr. Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Asa Ram Aggarwal, for the Respondents.

Addison, J.—One Khan Sahib Mian Hussain Bakhsh, a Bhatti Rajput of Batala in the Batala Tahsil of the Gurdaspur District, died on the 1st August, 1910, leaving him surviving by his first wife, Mian Fazl Hussain, aged about 31, (defendant No. 1) and two daughters and, by his second wife, Afzal Hussain, aged 21-22, Amjad Hussain, aged 18-19, (defendants Nos. 2 and 3), Tafazzal Hussain and Fazil Hussain, then minors, (plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2), and four daughters. This suit was brought by Tafazzal Hussain in 1922, when he was about 20½ years old, on his own behalf and on behalf of his brother Fazil Hussain, who was still a minor though he attained majority while the suit was proceeding. The suit was for a declaration that, according to the custom which the family followed, each son should have succeeded equally on Hussain Bakhsh's death (pagwand succession), and that defendant No. 1 was not entitled to one half and the other four sons only to one half under the custom that the son or sons of each wife were entitled to one moiety of the estate, no matter what their number was (chundawand succession). In other words, it was claimed that the distribution should have been per capita and not per stirpes the latter mode having been followed by reason of the fact that defendant No. 1 took advantage of the minority of the plaintiffs. There was also a subsidiary prayer for accounts.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who are full brothers of the plaintiffs, did not appear to plead though later they were examined as witnesses. They were majors when their father died and since then (that is, for more than twenty years) they have been receiving their share of the income from the bulk of the estate left, that is, the landed property, in accordance with the chundawand rule, and it is futile their denying that they did not know that this was so or that the distribution from the beginning was per stirpes. Defendant No. 1 pleaded that the rule of custom in their tribe was chundawand from time immemorial; that on the death of Hussain Bakhsh, one Khan Bahadur Mian Ghulam Farid, who was closely connected with their family, held this to be the case, his decision amounting to a settlement of a family dispute, which was acquiesced in by all the major members and which was binding on the two minor members; that a part of the settlement was that defendant No. 1 should have no share in the moveables and should pay half of the marriage expenses of his unmarried half-brothers and half-sisters; that accordingly the moveables were divided to the exclusion of defendant No. 1 who also arranged the marriages of the plaintiff as well as of the ladies mentioned; and that plaintiff No. 1, after becoming a major at age 18, had accepted one eighth as being his share of the income and was estopped from denying after having done so far two and a half years that he had a larger share. As regards the claim for accounts defendant No. 1 pointed out that the accounts of the property in dispute had been kept by Mian Ali Ahmad, an attorney and relative of the parties, since the death of their father and even before that, and that the property had been looked after and managed by the same person.

The Subordinate Judge, who tried the suit, held that the custom as to succession was per capita; that it had not been proved that there was a family settlement; that there was no estoppel; and that the prayer for accounts was a good one. He accordingly decreed the suit and this appeal has been preferred by defendant No. 1.

The main question in the appeal is that of custom. Apart from the mass of evidence on the record, the question appears to me to be comparatively a simple one and the answer to be in no doubt. On the record it is simply established that, amongst Bhatti Rajputs of this Tahsil, the chundawand rule of succession has been followed from time immemorial and that, though at the attestation of the riwaj-i-ams of the Tahsils of the district in 1911-12 after this succession fell in, there was an attempt to say that the pagwand rule should be followed in preference to the chundawand, it cannot be held that a new custom of pagwand has arisen, abrogating the older chundawand custom.

The extract of the riwaj-i am of Tahsil Batala for the year 1865 (page 472 of the paper-book, shows that, among the various sub-divisions of the Muhammadan Rajput tribe, including the Bhattis, succession was per stirpes (chundawand) except in the two villages of Sohala and Mari Bachchian with which we are not concerned. Various instances are also given. The mere fact that two villages were differentiated shows the care with which the document was compiled. Similarly in the neighbouring Tahsil of Pathankot in the same district the Muhammadan Rajput tribe, including the Bhattis, stated in 1865 (page 470) that the division was chundawand. Apparently the same rule was observed in the Shakargarh Tahsil, but in the Gurdaspur Tahsil in 1865, according to the riwaj-i am (page 474) Muhammadan Rajputs followed the pagwand rule. Thus in three out of the four Tahsils of the district in 1865 the rule was emphatically stated to be chundawand.

No book containing the customary Law of the district in English was prepared at the 1865 Settlement, but this was done at the Settlement of 1892 by Mr. (now Sir Louis) Dane. At page 13 of his book it is said that in the Pathankot Tahsil all tribes except one sub-division of Rajputs in one village followed the chundawand system, while in Tahsil Batala (with which we are concerned) it was said that all tribes except Gujjars and Dogars, amongst whom the chundawand rule prevailed, followed the pagwand system; but Rajputs, except those of the two villages mentioned in the 1865 document, said that their custom was chundawand. It is clear, therefore, that in 1862 as well as in 1865, there was a clear statement that Muhammadan Rajputs in this Tahsil, with the exception of the two villages noted, followed the chundawand rule.

With respect to the two Tahsils of Gurdaspur and Shakargarh, Sir Louis Dane's compilation appears to be inaccurate. He stated that Muhammadan Rajputs in the Gurdaspur Tahsil are said to follow the pagwand custom, contrary to what is quoted in the 1865 Riwaj-i am. I have already shown that according to the 1865 document, they are reported as following the pagwand, not the chundawand rule. He also said that in Shakargarh Tahsil Muhammadan Rajputs followed the pagwand rule but this is another mistake.

For, the riwaj-i am of Muhammadan Rajputs in Tahsil Shakargarh during the Settlement of 1911-12 is printed at page 709. This time they are reported as saying that the chundawand custom had been in vogue previously but now they wanted the pagwand custom (sic).

The riwaj-i am for Tahsil Gurdaspur in 1911-12 correctly records that Muhammadan Rajputs therein had followed pagwand from the beginning (page 688); while amongst those of Tahsil Pathankot it was said that there was a difference of opinion (see page 706). It is recorded in the riwaj-i am of this Tahsil in that year that, of those Muhammadan Rajputs present 23 wanted pagwand to be followed in the future though up to the present the chundawand system had been practised.

Finally, the riwaj-i-am of Muhammadan Rajputs in Tahsil Batala (with which we are more immediately concerned) for 1911-12 is printed at page 686. Apparently the first paragraph of the reply quotes the rule in vogue in 1865 and 1892, viz., the chundawand rule; while below this is written the reply then given, to the effect that the chundawand system was previously in vogue in some villages but that they all now agreed to the pagwand system. This is not strictly a correct statement as regards the past, as it is clear that in all villages except two and not merely in some villages the chundawand system had previously prevailed.

As I have referred to the original documents of 1911-12, it is scarcely necessary to quote Mr. Kennaway's compilation of the Customary Law of the district (1912), except to point out that it is not quite accurate. The sentence commencing at line 13, page 23 of his book deals with Muhammadan Rajputs of Batala Tahsil along with many others. That sentence runs:—"The remaining tribes of all the Tahsils say that the pagwand rule has been always followed among them and should be maintained." This is, of course, not what they said (see above).

As the succession opened out in 1910, before the riwaj-i-ams of the various Tahsils had been compiled in 1911-12, I have no hesitation in holding that the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs to displace the presumption arising from the riwaj-i-ams of 1865 and 1892, and in this respect I disagree with the trial Judge. It may be that the statements contained in the riwaj-i-ams of 1911-12 and instances arising after the succession opened out in 1910, may have some evidentiary value but, in my judgment, this value would be very low; for, after all we have to find what was the custom existing in 1910 and not in subsequent years. It seems to be recognised that customs in the Punjab may change, but, when it is remembered what a custom is, that change should be slow and imperceptible, and should be completed by the time that the changed custom is relied on. Otherwise, a riwaj-i-am would tend to become not a statement of existing customs, but a means of legislation; and surely, this would be the most uncertain and unstable mode of law making.

Further, it is clear from the way the riwaj-i-ams are worded that, in all three Tahsils of Batala, Shakargarh and Pathankot, the Muhammadan Rajputs were conscious that they were legislating and that they then agreed that they would give up an old custom and follow a new one, which they, for some reason, then preferred. Where custom is the rule of law, this cannot be permitted. As held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Anant Singh v. Durga Singh (1), where it seemed probable that the entries recorded in a riwaj-i-am connoted the views of individuals as the practice they would wish to see prevailing, rather than the ascertained facts of a well-established custom, weight must be attached to the circumstance that there was no evidence of an instance of the alleged custom. Again, it was held by the Oudh Judicial Commissioners in 60 Ind. Cas. 147 Muhammad Ali Khan v. Ghazanfar Ali Khan (2), that, where a wajib-ul-arz contained merely a record of the wishes and opinions of the parties, it could not be regarded as establishing any binding custom at variance with the personal law of the parties. In the case before us, it is not a question of custom versus personal law but a case of an alleged new custom versus an old established custom but that makes no difference in principle. The plaintiffs would get no more than they have at present if Muhammadan Law was followed as the numerous sisters would then share; and it is in evidence that, when plaintiff No. 1 demanded his share in accordance with his personal law, he was told that he could take it. He did not pursue this claim further as he later discovered that it was not to his advantage. For the reasons given the new riwaj-i-am of 1911-12 have little or no value as pieces of evidence and certainly do not suffice to change the burden of proof.

Further, even if the riwaj-i-ams of 1911-12 were not subject to the above objections, their value is well defined by Roe and Frizelle, JJ., in Rahiman v. Bala. They said that the parts of a wajib ul arz referring to custom were not provisions intended to be in force for a limited period only; they were statements that a certain custom existed. The statement might or might not be correct but, if it was correct, there would be a natural presumption that the custom continued to exist and it would be for those alleging that a change had subsequently taken place to prove the allegation. Thus the production of a later Record of Rights containing entries opposed to the earlier ones would no doubt be some proof of such a change but there would then merely be a balance of evidence on either side and it could not be said that the second record destroyed or abrogated the earlier one. With the opinion of these learned Judges I am with all respect in full agreement. The subsequent riwaj-i-am can never by itself destroy the effect of the first. While there is always the difficulty in cases where it is alleged that an old custom has been abrogated by a new one that, when it is held that the old custom has gone, it becomes a very difficult question whether the parties should not then be held bound by their personal law, rather than by an alleged new custom which has arisen recently. It might be mentioned here that there was no dispute before us that chundwand was the original rule.

It was again said at page 221 of Hassan v. Jahana (4) by a Division Bench as follows:—

"Custom is said to be in a fluid condition in the Punjab, capable of adapting itself to the varying conditions, views and opinions of the community among which it prevails, but no custom can be recognised as of binding authority unless it is generally, if not universally, recognised, and this is especially true where an old established custom is alleged to be replaced by a new one. It is obvious that the attempts of the agnates among the Phapras to abrogate the old custom have been few and their success still less and that sonless owners among them are still going on making alienations under the old established rule. It cannot be said, therefore, that the old custom has been set aside or has fallen into disuse," (see also pages 88, 89 of Natha Singh v. Harnam Singh (5)).

It is true that another Division Bench at page 34 of Ranjha v. Bulanda (6), said that a late record was quite as valuable as the earlier riwaj-i-am if not more so and they did not see why it should be an inflexible presumption that the previous riwaj-i-am correctly recorded the custom. With great respect I think that the other authorities quoted contain the correct rule; but in any case this decision cannot influence the present case as admittedly the prior documents were properly and correctly recorded.

A very similar case; to the present is Hira v. Molar (?) in which it was held that the change in the statement of custom merely showed that a previous custom was in the process of abandonment and not that it had been abandoned. This is the highest value which can be attached to such subsequent statements. It may be the case that it is not necessary to prove that a custom in the Punjab is ancient, as has once been held, though as to this I prefer to offer no opinion; but it is certainly necessary at least to establish that it is being invariably or very generally followed at the time in dispute and has been so followed for some time in the past; for, otherwise, we would have to find some other name than custom for such a variable process.

Nor can it now be contended in face of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Beg v. Allah Ditta (8), that the burden of proof should be on defendant No. 1 as he succeeded against the general rule of custom in vogue in the Punjab. Prior to that judgment, the rule followed (which was given in Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law and still finds a place there) was that, if a custom was more generally followed in the Punjab it was called the general custom and the burden was placed on any one alleging a contrary custom even though the riwaj-i-am was in his favour. In effect this often resulted in spreading the custom of the majority as it was frequently held that the riwaj-i-am and the instances proved were not sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the fact that the majority of people scattered throughout the Punjab followed another custom; and it appears obvious from a perusal of the Punjab Records that the chundwand custom was helped to become less prevalent by this means. At that time it was lost sight of that a small body of people might have as well established a custom, which they were entitled to follow, as the generality, and that it was the essence of custom that each tribe or community, however small, should be allowed its own peculiar customs. This process of legislation, however, was partially put an end to in 1917 by their Lordships of the Privy Council who laid down in Beg v. Allah Ditta (8) that the entry in the riwaj-i-am in favour of the succession of a daughter's son in preference to collaterals was a strong piece of evidence in support of such custom which it lay upon the plaintiffs to rebut, even assuming that there was a general custom of collateral succession to the contrary. The Chief Court did not for some time give full effect to this far reaching decision in favour of minorities. It might here be observed that in the case of the riwaj-i-am before their Lordships of the Privy Council there were no instances quoted as would appear from the third paragraph of the report at page 172 of the Punjab Record. By the time Labh Singh v. Mango (9), was decided, however, Beg v. Allah Ditta (8) was being followed. In Labh Singh v. Mango (9), a Division Bench held, following Beg v. Allah Ditta (8), that it cannot be said to be an established rule that a statement in a riwaj-i-am opposed to general custom and unsupported by instances possesses little evidentiary value and that an entry in a riwaj-i-am recording a special custom is prima facie proof of that custom and places the onus of rebuttal upon the party disputing the correctness of that entry. The same view was taken in Labha Ram v. Raman (10).

It was contended, however, that the Judges who decided Bhag Singh v. Jai Singh (11), did not go so far as had been done in the previous judgments which followed the Privy Council decision. It is true that in it Beg v. Allah Ditta (8) and Labh Singh v. Mango (9) were followed to the extent that it was held that an entry in the riwaj-i-am in favour of a so-called special custom like chundawand was an important piece of evidence in support of it and was sufficient to shift the onus to the party challenging it. Apparently, however, it then went on to lay down the burden of proof would be comparatively light in view of the general custom in the province being opposed to the chundawand custom. If this is the correct meaning of the judgment, I am with all respect unable to agree with it; for the words used by their Lordships in 1917 were that such an entry was a strong piece of evidence even though it was against the general custom and in Labh Singh v. Mango (9), it was held that it could not be said that such an entry was of little evidentiary value. Even in Bhag Singh v. Jai Singh (11) it appears to have been said that such an entry was an important piece of evidence. In these circumstances how can it be said that the burden of proof would be light as it was against general custom when their Lordships of the Privy Council said that that such an entry was a strong piece of evidence though against the so-called general custom? There would thus appear to be a contradiction in terms. Such a decision in reality would mean a return to the old state of affairs before their Lordships' decision of 1917, and to go against what was laid down then.

In these circumstances it seems unnecessary to discuss the remarks in certain judgments of the Chief Court that chundawand is a dying system and a barbarous rule, and that it must always be established by the person setting it up as it is against general custom. It is no concern of mine to condemn it or to praise it; but merely to see whether it existed in 1910 as the custom amongst this tribe. As to its being a dying rule that may or may not be the case; but if it is, the process has been greatly helped by the fact that the burden of proof has in the past been frequently wrongly laid when this custom came before the Courts, and also because certain Settlement Officers and Judges seem to have held the view that it was a barbarous custom.

There has been some speculation as to the origin of the rule of chundawand but without any success. The rule is a tribal one in vogue in several districts; but it has sometimes happened that a large number of sons by one wife have been able to enforce the opposite pagwand rule against the one son of another wife. That does not militate against the custom; nor does it make it a family custom. It remains essentially a tribal custom. In fact family customs are not common amongst persons who follow Customary Law in the Punjab, though, amongst persons following their personal law in whole or in part, family customs against their personal law are frequently pleaded. The parties in this case follow custom and what is meant is, as usual, their tribal custom. Though defendant No. 1 who started as a Barrister, has now reached a position of some importance in India, the family remains rooted in the customs of its tribe and place of origin.

It will now be possible to proceed to a discussion of the instances, it being first postulated that the burden is heavy on the plaintiff to establish the pagwand rule in view of the entries in the riwaj-i am of 1865 and 1892 which must be considered strong pieces of evidence in favour of the chundawand rule. The question has never apparently arisen in the family of the parties and there is no record or tradition that any of the ancestors of the deceased had families by different wives. It would be futile to inquire into what has happened in the families intermarrying with the parties as they only form part of the tribe and require no special discussion.

I shall first take the period prior to 1892 in Tahsil Batala as was done by the trial Judge. In his judgment at page 148 of the paper-book, eight instances of chundawand succession amongst Muhammadan Rajputs, many of them being amongst the Bhatti sub division are given during this period. We have gone carefully into these and all have been established. Two further instances of chundawand have also been proved in this Tahsil during this period in this tribe. These are instances 9 and 10 at the top of page 149 of the paper-book. No. 9 was wrongly rejected by the trial Judge. It had nothing to do with instance No. 4 on the preceding page. Similarly, No. 10 is a good instance of chundawand, the only son by one wife holding more than the two sons by the other wife to the extent of 31 ghumaons described as being additional to his ancestral (half) share (See page 464 of the paper-book). There were thus at least ten instances of chundawand in the period in question. In the same period there were only two instances of pagwand, the trial Judge wrongly including Sher Muhammad's instance here as well as in the subsequent period. The first of the pagwand instances was in 1878 and the second was a judicial instance of 1888, see Ex. P. 33 at p. 203. That case was tried by an Honorary Subordinate Judge. As already pointed out as being nearly universally done, the onus was wrongly put on the party who pleaded the chundawand rule, as it was against Rattigan's General rule. It was merely held that the proved instances did not establish the custom, and no reference was made to the riwaj-i am. This wrong decision though acquiesced in, cannot be treated as a true instance for at that time the chance of an appeal succeeding was very slight for reasons already given [Compare Durga Devi v. Ramzan (12)]. In fact the Honorary Subordinate Judge states that pagwand was the rule generally accepted by the higher authorities. This is, therefore, an instance forced on one of the parties by the Courts and should be discounted. The instances in favour of chundawand were thus up to 1892 at least ten, while there was only one true instance in favour of pagwand.

I take next instances among Muhammadan Rajputs in Tahsil Batala from 1892 to 1911 when the last *riwaj-i am*s were recorded in (Mian Hussain Bakhsh having died in 1910). The trial Judge refused to accept as instance of chundawand cases where a childless step-mother succeeded to a half share along with two or more stepsons of deceased. These are in this district true instances of chundawand as is apparent from page 20 of Kennaway's Customary Law of the District where it is noted that all the tribes with a few exceptions stated that the sonless step mother was allowed a share in the presence of her stepsons, her share being in accordance with the chundawand rule where that rule was followed and equal to that of a son where the rule of succession was pagwand. This is natural and in view of the Customary Law of the district there was no necessity for the trial Judge to try to find other explanations. A step mother is generally an heir in this district, though with a limited estate, along with her stepsons. Where, therefore, a step-mother succeeds to one-half along with two or more step sons, this is an instance of chundawand. When she does so along with one step son, it cannot be said whether it is an instance of chundawand or pagwand as each takes one-half under either rule. For this reason we have had to reject as inconclusive a fairly large number of instances of the latter kind though they were recorded as being in accordance with the chundawand rule. Similarly in this district where the whole blood excludes the half-blood, that is an instance of chundawand succession. This is laid down at page 34 of Kennaway's Customary Law, where it is added that no regard is paid to association but only to the chundawand and pagwand rules. See also para. 26 of Rattigan's Customary Law.

The first instance of chundawand quoted for the second period in Tahsil Batala amongst this tribe at page 150 of the paper book (12) 10 Ind. Cas. 330; 91 P. R. 1911; 127 P. L. R. 1911; 217 P. W. R. 1911.

book is admitted. The second instance is inconclusive as being the case of a step-mother and one step son. The third instance was dropped. The fourth instance at page 151 is a good instance where a step-mother took half against four step sons. The fifth and sixth instances are inconclusive for the same reason as the second. The seventh instance is a curious one. Umar died in 1909. One son Sirdar, by one wife, succeeded to one-half while his four step brothers succeeded to the other half according to the mutation at page 680. This mutation was contested. In the Revenue Record of 1921, however, Sirdar is recorded as owning one-third and his two surviving step-brothers two-thirds. The mutation which brought this about has not been produced. Sirdar was examined as a witness (pages 58, 59). He still claimed that the succession was chundawand but stated that there was a compromise when partition was applied for. That was about 1920, after the later riwaj-i-ams had been compiled. In these circumstances I would count this as a case in 1909 of chundawand succession. No. 8 was also wrongly rejected by the trial Judge. This was an instance of the whole blood succeeding to the exclusion of the half-blood in 1909 where long before the original succession had been chundawand. Obviously this is an instance of chundawand distribution being maintained.

No. 9 at page 152 is another good instance of chundawand succession, a step-mother taking a half as in the presence of her two step sons. Similarly, the tenth instance is a good instance of chundawand, the evidence being ample to establish it. There are thus at least six instances proved of chundawand succession among Muhammadan Rajputs in Batala Tahsil between 1892 and 1911.

Instances of pagwand in the above period in this Tahsil held proved by the trial Judge are given at pages 152—154. Instance No. 2 must be rejected as it relates to the year 1912. Instance No. 6 is, in my opinion, an instance of chundawand succession. A Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had failed to prove the rule of pagwand (though the burden was the other way) (page 241). The District Judge remanded the suit for re-trial and the parties then compromised it, the plaintiff getting eight out of the sixteen bighas extra which he claimed under the chundawand rule. This instance makes the chundawand instances up to seven in this period.

Instance No. 7 is a curious one. The land was mutated according to the chunda- wand rule (page 561), all the three sons admitting before the Revenue Officer that this was correct, though it must be noted that one was a minor. Apparently, however, there was a suit later, and a copy of the compromise in the suit has been put in, to the effect that the distribution should be pagwand (page 214). The final result was thus pagwand in spite of the earlier admission of chundawand. I think that this instance should not count either way.

Instances Nos 1, 3 and 4 are instances of pagwand in cases of one son against five sons, one son versus four sons, and one son versus three sons. The fifth instance was disputed before the Revenue Officer, the chief lambardar asserting the chundawand rule (page 236). Pagwand was, however, held to be the rule by the Naib Tahsildar who stated that chundawand was the rule in 1865 but that there was no mention of this in the papers for 1892. These last words were a misstatement as already shown. The matter was not taken further perhaps owing to the tendency already alluded to, or perhaps because it was a case of two sons versus three sons and the difference was thus not great. It can be counted as a pagwand instance.

Instance No. 8 is a case of pagwand where there were two sons by one wife and three by the other and all the land was under mortgage, while instance No. 9 is a good instance. Between 1892 and 1911, therefore, there were at the most six proved instances of pagwand in Batala Tahsil in this tribe as against seven proved instances of chundawand. Taking into account the two riwaj-i-ams of 1865 and 1892 and the fact that the proved chundawand instances up to 1911 are 17 and the proved pagwand ones only seven, I have no hesitation in holding on this material that parties followed in 1910 their tribal custom of chundawand.

I have already shown that little, if any weight can be attached to the riwaj-i-ams of 1912 and instances after the succession opened out. The following chundawand instances in Batala Tahsil after 1911 have been clearly proved namely Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5 and 8 given at pages 154 and 155 of the paper book. No. 4 (see p. 756) is also another instance of chundawand, so that there are six proved after 1911.

The trial Judge found six pagwand instances proved in the tribe in Batala Tahsil during this period. Instances Nos 3 and 6 must be rejected because in the first case there is no proof that the parties were Rajputs (p. 393) and in the second the parties were not Rajputs, but Gulshahi Awaans (p. 392).

Instance No. 5 must also be rejected (see p. 338). The deceased left five sons by one wife and one by another. There was a dispute which was settled by the village elders as follows. The five sons by one wife got five shares. The one son and his mother got two shares, while the mother of the deceased also got a share. The share of the mother of the one son would go on her death to her own son so that he in reality got an extra share. Usually, of course, the mother of the deceased would get nothing. All that this instance shows is the heavy pressure which a large number of sons by one wife can bring to bear on one son by another wife in order to break down the chundawand rule of succession. There are thus only three proved instances of pagwand succession after 1910 in the Tahsil as against six chundawand instances. If the three periods are added together there are 23 chundawand instances as against 10 pagwand instances.

The trial Judge has referred to certain decided cases (see p. 157) in disputes of this nature amongst other tribes and castes. Obviously they are of no value. His case No. 3 Ida v. Rahim Bakhsh (13) he cites as a case of Muhammadan Rajputs of Gurdaspur Tahsil. This is not correct. It was a case of Musalman Jats and is of no use in this inquiry. His instance No. 6 was amongst Salaria Rajputs of Shakargarh Tahsil. It was decided by the District Judge in 1916 (p. 353). He held that it had not been proved that the chundawand custom had been invariably followed and that, therefore, it was not a legal custom. More than that could have been said as to the pagwand rule, which is also a customary rule, excluding the daughters who share with the sons according to Muhammadan Law. Here again is the old idea that the general custom so-called is the proper rule.

Case No. 7 has been discussed already.

Many instances of chundawand among Muhammadan Rajputs in Tahsils Pathankot and Shakargarh, where the riwaj-i ams were similar to Tahsil Batala, have also been proved. These three Tahsils are in the same Revenue District and adjoin each other. These instances are, therefore, not without value. I do not propose to detail them though we were taken through all of them by the learned Counsel for the appellant. There were in Tahsil Pathankot 25 chundawand instances among Muhammadan Rajputs proved by documentary evidence and ten in Tahsil Shakargarh. There were even two in Tahsil Gurdaspur where the rawaj-i am was in favour of the pagwand custom. Further, there are about fifteen instances in these Tahsils and also seven instances in Batala Tahsil not included in the instances already given for that Tahsil which are established by oral testimony.

On the record, therefore, there is no doubt that the custom of chundawand succession has been proved to prevail amongs Muhammadan Rajputs of the Batala Tahsil in spite of an attempt to substitute the rule of pagwand succession and I would so hold.

This takes me to the second question, namely, whether, after the death of the parties in 1910, Khan Bahadur Mian Ghulam Farid, deceased, settled a dispute between the parties as regards succession to the effect that the division of the land would be according to the chundawand rule but Mian Fazl Hussain, who in this way got a one-half share should give up all claims to the moveables and also agree to bear half the expenses of the marriage of his step-brothers and step sisters. The trial Judge apparently found some difficulty in giving his decision on this question. He said:—

"The material thus bearing on the point is so discrepant and uncertain that it is not possible affirmatively to say whether Mian Ghulam Farid did decide their question of succession or whether on account of the threat held out by defendant No. 1 Afzal Hussain and Amjad Hussain kept quiet and the chundawand rule was acted upon in the mutations which were effected in the two village where the land was situated."

Again he said:

"My finding, therefore, is that the alleged settlement by Mian Ghulam Farid was not positively made out; but, assuming that he did settle the question of succession, I am of opinion that the same was not binding on the plaintiffs who were admittedly minors at the time."

He also found that there was no question of estoppel.

It seems to me that the statement of Mian Fazl Hussain on this point must be accepted in its entirety and the statements of his two step-brothers, who are the pro forma defendants, namely, Afzal Hussain and Amjad Hussain, must clearly be rejected. Although both these brothers must know that mutations are effected by Revenue Officers when a proprietor dies and though both have been enjoying the income of the land, which has been managed by a Mian Ali Ahmad, their relative, according to the shares accruing to them under the chundawand rule of succession, yet both have had the audacity to state in the witness-box that they did not know up to 1924 that the land had been entered in the revenue papers according to the chundawand rule of succession. This they did in spite of the fact that they had signed the register kept by Mian Ali Ahmad whenever they received their income from the land, those registers clearly showing on the pages where they had signed the shares which came to them as being according to the chundawand rule. Further, the mutation proceeding as regards the land in Batala is printed at page 694 of the paper-book. An order was passed by the Revenue Officer to issue interrogatories to inquire the rule of succession from the interested parties. In a later order it is noted that,

"In reply to the interrogatories issued the heirs admit and support the custom of chundawand"

This is strong evidence that both Afzal Hussain and Amjad Hussain were examined on interrogatories. In fact the person who did so, namely, the then Tahsildar of Lahore, Mian Altaf Hussain Khan, (see pages 71 and 72 of the paper-book) has stated that he examined both those persons on interrogatories in the Tahsil Court at Lahore after he had examined Mian Fazl Hussain at his house. He did not examine them at the time he examined Mian Fazl Hussain as they were not then present. He asked Mian Fazl Hussain to send them to the Tahsil and this was done.

The mutation as regards the land in the other village is printed at page 690. In this case Mian Fazl Hussain petitioned that the land should be mutated in accordance with the chundawand rule, and his petition was supported by a written communication from Khan Bahadur Mian Ghulam Farid Khan. Interrogatories issued in this case also but, as they did not return in time, they were dispensed with and mutation effected in accordance with the chundawand rule as stated in the petition of Mian Fazl Hussain and as supported by Khan Bahadur Mian Ghulam Farid Khan.

This Khan Bahadur Mian Ghulam Farid Khan was closely connected with the family of the parties. His sister was the mother of defendant No. 1 and one of his sons had married the real sister of defendant No. 1. On the other hand, the wife of Afzal Hussain, defendant No. 2, was his daughter while his son Mian Ahmad Said Khan was married to the eldest sister of the step-brothers of Mian Fazl Hussain. It cannot, therefore, be said that he was more interested in Mian Fazl Hussain than in his step-brothers. He was a man of good position who had been for many years an Extra Assistant Commissioner in the Punjab. There is no doubt that he was present and approved of the chundawand rule at the time of the death of the father of the parties. The question is whether it can be said that he at that time effected a family settlement with regard to this question. It might be noted that on the death of his own father Din Mohammad (page 333) the sons of three wives succeeded in accordance with the chundawand rule.

The evidence of Mian Fazl Hussain starts at page 127 of the paper-book. He said that there was a talk among the ladies as to how the property should be inherited and it was the contending ladies who referred the matter to Mian Ghulam Farid Khan who mentioned it to him. The witness said that he told Mian Ghulam Farid that he was prepared to abide by his decision. Thereupon Mian Ghulam Farid told him that he must agree to bear half the expenses of the marriage of his half-brothers and half-sisters and also to agree to the moveables being given over to his half-brothers and sisters to his own exclusion. Now it has been established that he did pay half the expenses for the marriages of his step-brother and sisters. It has also been proved that all the moveables, apart from money and mortgages, went to the step-brothers and sisters. He went on to say that defendants Nos 2 and 3, the elder full brothers of the plaintiffs, interested themselves on behalf of the plaintiffs and on their own behalf. Mian Ghulam Farid ultimately decided that the inheritance should be according to the chundawand rule subject to the above modification, Afzal Hussain and Amjad Hussain, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 being aware of this decision.

Later, however, in his statement Mian Fazl Hussain said that Mian Ghulam Farid Khan mentioned his decision to him a fortnight after his father's death when no one else was present. Barring the fact that Mian Afzal Hussain asked him about 15 or 20 days after his father's death as to what had been decided none of his brothers even suggested that the inheritance should be divided according to the pagwand rule or gave him to understand that there was a dispute on that point. He could not say whether any male members went to Mian Ghulam Farid along with the ladies of the family because he himself was not present at that time.

This is, I have no doubt, a correct statement of what occurred, but can it be said that this was a settlement of a family dispute? According to Mian Fazl Hussain, the parties did not appear as such before Mian Ghulam Farid. There was not a solemn family conclave where the contesting parties put forward their views and their elders settled the matter, so as to save the family being involved in unnecessary litigation and expense. Apparently, the major step-brothers did not even suggest that the inheritance should be divided according to the pagwand rule and the matter was only agitated by the ladies of the family who were not interested except indirectly. On the whole, therefore, I am inclined to hold that a family dispute was not referred to Mian Ghulam Farid for settlement but that the question was informally agitated by the ladies of the family and he informally told them that the old established custom of chundawand should prevail subject to the modification that Mian Fazl Hussain should help his half-brothers and sisters to the extent indicated. This was known to the two major step-brothers and Mian Afzal Hussain must be held to have lied when he said in the witness-box that Mian Ghulam Farid did not approve of succession according to the chundawand rule, but, on the contrary, told him to contest the claim of Mian Fazl Hussain to follow that rule. Both the major brothers undoubtedly knew what had been informally discussed and decided and they also further knew that the land was mutated in accordance with the chundawand rule and that they were receiving their share of the income from the land in accordance with that rule. Since, however, the contesting parties did not come face to face, it cannot be held to be a family settlement in the proper sense, and it is for this reason alone that I would support the decision of the trial Judge on this point.

There is no ground for the insinuation that at that time Mian Fazl Hussain took advantage of the youth of his step-brothers in order to bring about a division in accordance with the chundawand rule. The chundawand rule was the tribal rule and the step-brothers who were majors then agreed to it or rather perhaps did not contest it. The direction of Mian Ghulam Farid given to Mian Fazl Hussain has been fully carried out.

It is further true that Tafazzal Hussain, plaintiff No. 1, when he came of age, received his share of the income in accordance with the chundawand rule for two and a half years before he brought the present suit, knowing during that time that he was receiving his share according to that rule. He had, however, three years in which he could bring a suit after attaining majority and as he did so no question of estoppel arises against him. It was suggested by the appellant's Counsel that the suit was brought merely because defendant No. 1 had failed to help him with money. It appears to me unnecessary and unprofitable to go into this question.

This practically disposes of the appeal, as, on my finding there is no need to order an account. Mian Ali Ahmad was managing the property in the lifetime of the father of the parties. He continued to do so after his death and, though for the first three years Mian Fazl Hussain took a larger part in directing him, the fact still remains that Mian Ali Ahmad was the agent of the two major step-brothers as well as of the two plaintiffs who were then minors. There is a lease upon the record which is signed by Mian Fazl Hussain and the two major step-brothers. Nobody was competent to sign on behalf of the minors. After 1313 separate accounts were opened by Mian Ali Ahmad for each son and each son used to draw from Mian Ali Ahmad his share of the profits. That, however, does not make Mian Fazl Hussain liable to account to his brothers. It cannot be said that he managed the estate on their behalf.

I would accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout to defendant No. 1.

The entry in the riwaj-i-am of the Gurgaon District provided that if a widow was unchaste or re-married she forfeited all right to her husband's estate :

Held, that the onus of rebutting the entry was upon the widow who disputed its correctness even though the entry was opposed to the general custom of the Punjab. Beg v. Allah Ditta (1), Labh Singh v. Mango (2), Kahan Singh v. Gopal Singh (3) and Labha Ram v. Raman (4), relied on. [p. 555, col. 2.]

Held, further on the evidence that the onus was not discharged. Bhurian v. Puran (5), not followed.

Second Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon at Hissar, dated the 17th December, 1929, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Gurgaon, dated the 12th August, 1929

Mr. Nanwa Mal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Respondent.

Judgment—The parties are Ahirs of Tahsil Rewari, District Gurgaon. One Man Singh died without issue and without a widow. His mother Musammât Bheoli claimed to succeed to his estate and so did his minor cousin Bhajna. The Collector, relying on the riwaj-i-am, mutated the land in favour of Bhajna. Musammât Bheoli then sued Bhajna for possession. The defendant pleaded that she had re-married one Nahar by karewa, that she was, in any case, unchaste and that, according to custom, she thus had forfeited her right to succeed to the estate of her deceased son, whether it was established that she had re-married by karewa or whether it was established that she was only unchaste. The trial Court, holding that she was unchaste, gave effect to the riwaj-i-am and dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge, also holding that she was unchaste, decreed the suit and the defendant has preferred this second appeal having obtained a certificate under s. 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act.

The entry in the riwaj-i-am is quite clear and is not challenged. It is to the effect that if a woman is unchaste or remarries then she forfeits all rights to her husband's estate. The District Judge admitted that this entry placed the burden upon the plaintiff to rebut it but he stated that that burden was a light one as the rule expressed in the riwaj-i-am was opposed to general custom and was adverse to the interests of females. Further he considered that the burden upon the plaintiff was discharged by three decisions of certain Subordinate Judges in Gurgaon District to the effect that unchastity in a widow did not cause forfeiture of her life-estate. He did this although he had to point out that the riwaj-i-am was not followed in those three cases (two of which were decided in 1922 and one in 1913) on the ground that there were no instances in support of the rule in the riwaj-i-am.

The general rule for the Punjab is given in para. 31 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, 11th edition. It is to the effect that unchastity of a widow sometimes causes a forfeiture of her life-interest but the onus is on those who assert the existence of such a custom. On the other hand, the riwaj-i-am is clear that in the Gurgaon District unchastity does cause a forfeiture of the life-estate. It was at one time held that a riwaj-i-am which was not supported by instances or which was opposed to general custom, should be considered unreliable but since the Privy Council judgment Beg v. Allah Ditta (1), this can no longer be held to be good law. Their Lordships were of opinion, that an entry in the riwaj-i-am was a strong piece of evidence in support of an alleged custom which it lay upon the other side to rebut even assuming that the rule laid down in the entry was against the general custom in the Punjab. The Privy Council judgment was considered in Labh Singh v. Mango (2) where it was said that in view of the Judicial Committee's clear exposition of the law it could no longer be held to be the established rule that a statement in the riwaj-i-am opposed to general custom and unsupported by instances was of no judicial value. Such an entry was prima facie proof of the custom and placed the onus of rebuttal upon the party disputing the correctness of that entry. The same view was taken in Kahan Singh v. Gopal Singh (3) and Labha Ram v. Raman (4). It follows that it was for the plaintiff in this case to rebut the entry in the riwaj-i-am which is against her.

It was held in Bhurian v. Puran (5) that amongst Ahirs of Delhi District no special custom had been proved whereby unchastity worked a forfeiture of the life-estate of a widow. I have been carefully through that judgment and nothing is said in it about any entry in the wajib-ul-arz or riwaj-i-am. This case, therefore, cannot affect that decision in the present case.

It remains to be decided whether the widow has rebutted the presumption arising from the entry in the riwaj-i-am of 1879. It is true that in three cases the Subordinate Courts have decided against this entry but they did so on the ground that the rule in the riwaj-i-am was not supported by instances. Having regard to the decisions quoted above, I must hold that these decisions were bad in law and cannot, therefore, be taken to be instances rebutting the entry in the riwaj-i-am. That being so, effect must be given to that entry.

For the reasons given I accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

It was also contended before me that the finding of fact of the Courts below that the plaintiff had not re married by karewa should be set aside. There is no question that the widow is living with Nahar and has given birth to three children by him. The District Judge has said that only one witness from the village swore that he was present at the re-marriage and that this was strange. He also added that no pandit was there. Now, in karewa marriage no pandit can be there and this remark of the District Judge is unintelligible. A karewa marriage is not a religious ceremony. Further, three witnesses from the village have given evidence that they were present at the re-marriage, and not one. One of these witnesses was Nahar's own brother. I have no doubt myself from the evidence which has been misread by the District Judge, that there was a karewa marriage but this question is not important, seeing that I have held above that unchastity causes a forfeiture in the life-estate of the widow. This matter need not, therefore, be pursued further.

Held, that the clause for payment of simple and compound interest on the entire sum advanced was on the face of it unconscionable and that under s. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act the Court had ample jurisdiction to decline to enforce the contract as to interest and to grant only such relief as was just and equitable. Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (1), distinguished. [p. 557, col. 2.]

First Appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, dated the 9th November, 1925.

Messrs. Shuja-ud-din and Mohammad Monir, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. L. Ghulati, for the Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On the 1st June 1915, Bakhu, the ancestor of the defendants, granted a mortgage of immoveable property to the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs by way of security for Rs. 280 which he borrowed from them. The property mortgaged comprised two plots of land, measuring 21 bighas, 2½ kanals and 8 bighas ¾ kanal respectively; and, though the mortgage was with possession, it is common ground that the mortgagor delivered possession of only the first plot of land. As regards the second plot, the mortgage-deed contained the following stipulations:

The mortgagees "will be put into its possession afterwards and till the time of giving possession thereof, the interest will be paid at the rate of Rs. 2-2-4 per cent. per mensem. But when the possession of 8 bighas, ¾ kanal of land is delivered by me to the mortgagees, the interest will cease to be paid. In case the possession of 8 bighas, ¾ kanal is delivered, the entire money will carry no interest."

There was a clause in the deed providing for the payment of compound interest in the event of the failure of the mortgagor to pay simple interest within one year.

It appears that the mortgage was intended to be a usufructuary one; but as the mortgagor did not deliver possession of the second plot of land, he promised to pay interest on the whole of the debt at the rate mentioned above. It is not explained why interest was agreed to be paid on the entire mortgage money when admittedly possession of the larger plot was delivered to the mortgagees and has remained with them all along. One would expect that interest would be allowed to the mortgagees only on a part of the mortgage money, in order to compensate them for the loss of the rents and profits of the smaller parcel of land.

It is, however, beyond dispute that the possession of 8 bighas $\frac{3}{4}$ kanal was never delivered to the mortgagees, and they resist the mortgagor's claim for redemption by demanding a sum of money which exceeds enormously the amount advanced by them. The question for determination is what amount should be paid by the mortgagor in the redemption of the property. The learned Counsel for the mortgagees contends that the contract as entered into by the parties should be enforced by the Courts, and he places his reliance on certain judgments in support of his contention. The leading case on the subject is Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (1), in which their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down the rule that,

"the mere fact that the principal sum now claimed exceeds enormously the amount originally advanced will be no ground for holding the transaction unconscionable. It must also appear that there was something unconscionable either in the original dealings or in the subsequent stages of the transaction."

As regards compound interest, their Lordships made the following observation:—

"There is nothing inherently wrong or oppressive in a lender's securing for himself compound interest after the borrower has for a considerable time neglected to pay the debt he owes or the interest accruing due upon it which he has contracted to pay. The borrower cannot acquire merit simply by breaking his contract. Bankers are, in fact, in this country in the habit, in the ordinary course of their business of capitalising the interest accruing on overdrawn current accounts every six months, as long as a debit balance against the customer remains due."

The propositions of law enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council do not admit of any dispute; but the clause providing for simple interest and compound interest on the entire sum advanced to the debtor in the event of the latter failing to deliver about one-fourth of the mortgaged property appears, on the face of it, an unconscionable stipulation. It is not disputed that s. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918, confers ample jurisdiction upon the Court to go behind the terms of a contract, when the Court has reason to believe that the interest is excessive, and that the transaction was as between the parties thereto, substantially unfair. Both these conditions are satisfied in the present case, and the Court is fully authorised to decline to enforce the contract entered into between the parties, and to grant such relief as may appear to be just and equitable.

The mortgagor did not, as pointed above, deliver possession of 8 bighas, $\frac{3}{4}$ kanal of land, but the mortgagees had no right to demand interest on the whole of the money advanced by them. They could claim interest only on a proportionate amount of the loan. There is no evidence to show that the quality of the smaller plot of land was different from that of the first plot, and it is, therefore, reasonable to assume that the two plots were of the same quality. The principal sum proportionate to the parcel of land, of which possession was not given to the mortgagees, roughly amounts to Rs. 75, and the mortgagees may be allowed simple interest on that sum at the rate of Re. 18-0 per cent. per mensem from the date of the mortgage-deed up to the date of redemption.

For the aforesaid reasons I would accept the appeal and grant the plaintiffs a decree declaring that they are entitled to simple interest as stated above. I would leave the parties to bear their own costs in both the Courts.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 15th August, 1927, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class Delhi, dated the 28th April, 1927.

Mr. Kishan Dayal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Noor-ud-din and Mohammad Amin, for the Respondent.

Hilton, J.—Plaintiff sued the first and second defendants claiming specific performance of two agreements for the sale of certain house property by these defendants to the plaintiff. The plaintiff averred in his plaint that a khancha was included in the property which the defendants had agreed to sell. The defendants denied having undertaken to sell this khancha. The third defendant is the father of the first and second defendants and was impleaded as a person claiming to be the owner of the khancha. The relief for which the plaintiff asked in his plaint was that "in case the khancha cannot be included in the sale, the plaintiff claims for it Rs. 500 as damages from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, besides the sale deed of their house."

The trial Judge found as a fact that the first and second defendants had not promised to sell the khancha along with the house to the plaintiff and that the contract was to sell the house only for Rs. 3,500. The judgment then continued as follows:—

"The plaintiff has not proved that he was ever ready and willing to pay the balance of the price and get a sale-deed of the house only. In his letters of 2nd July 1926 and 22nd July 1926 the plaintiff clearly wanted the sale of the house as well as of the khancha and thereby himself repudiated the real contract. But in spite of all this it was essential for the plaintiff to show for the suit to succeed that he himself never repudiated the contract. At any rate the plaintiff has never from the date of the contract up to this date shown willingness to have the house alone for Rs. 3,500.

In the result the plaintiff obtained a decree for refund of Rs. 2,000, already paid under the agreement, and the parties were ordered to bear their own costs. The plaintiff appealed and the learned District Judge gave the following finding:

"My conclusions so far, then are that the plaintiff agreed to buy, and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to sell the house in dispute, including the kothri but not including the khancha. It is conclusively proved that the plaintiff had money ready to pay the balance of the purchase-money. It is also not denied that time is not of the essence of the contract in the sale of immoveable property (and it is clear that the plaintiff did not unduly delay his suit).

In these circumstances I do not see why the contract as found by the lower Court and myself, should not be enforced. The mere fact that the plaintiff contended that the khancha was included in the contract does not take away his right to have the alleged contract enforced with respect to that part (practically the whole) which really was, as found, the whole of the contract. There is no question, as far as I can see of a breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiff".

The appeal was accepted. The plaintiff was given a decree for specific performance of the sale of the house (but not the khancha) for a sum of Rs. 3,500. The claim for damages with regard to the khancha was dismissed. The plaintiff was awarded three-fourths of his costs. The defendants have preferred this second appeal.

The sixth ground of appeal before the learned District Judge was that the trial Judge had erred in holding that the plaintiff was not prepared to pay the full price of the house leaving out the khancha. It is important to note that the District Judge in his judgment did not endorse the contention of this ground of appeal nor did he expressly dissent from the finding of the trial Judge that the plaintiff had never from the date of contract up to the date of hearing shown willingness to have the house alone for Rs. 3,500. This finding of the trial Judge is one which goes to the root of the case and I am of the opinion that it was justified by the evidence on the record including the correspondence that had passed between the parties and that it must be taken as representing the true facts of this particular matter.

For the defendant-appellants Mr. Kishan Dayal has relied upon s. 51 of the Indian Contract Act and has argued that it is the duty of the plaintiff, before he can obtain relief by way of specific performance, to allege and prove that he was willing and ready to perform his part of the contract as it really was and not as he thought it to be.

An authority very apposite to the facts of the present case is Bindeshri Prasad v. Jai

Ram Gir (1). In that case there was a contract for the sale of the proprietary right in certain lands and the intending purchaser had unjustifiably insisted on a right to compel the vendor to give an absolute warranty of the title, and when suing for specific performance of the contract he required a guarantee of this character from the vendor, until it appeared that the judgment of the Appellate Court was about to be given against him on the ground that he was not entitled to the guarantee which he claimed. In the course of the judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked as follows:—

"He distinctly claimed to have the contract performed by having this warranty of title; and when he says that he was ready to have the contract completely performed as far as he himself was concerned it must be taken that he was ready to have it performed in that way."

In the present case it must, also, in my judgment, be taken that the plaintiff was ready and willing to have the contract performed only in the way upon which he himself was insisting, namely, that the khancha should be included in the property of which he required the conveyance.

In Ardeshtir H. Mama v. Flora Sassoon (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with a case that was somewhat different in its facts from the present case but while remarking (at page 622 *) that:

"although there is no express statement so far as the Specific Relief Act is concerned that [the averment of readiness and willingness is in an Indian suit for specific performance as necessary as it always was in England. It seems invariably to have been recognised, and, on principle, their Lordships think rightly that the Indian and English requirements in this matter are the same."

They also laid down a rule (at page 619*) that:

"in a suit for specific performance the injured party had to allege, and if the fact was traversed he was required to prove, a continuous readiness and willingness, from the date of the contract to the time of the hearing, to perform the contract on his part."

That rule prescribes a course of conduct which the plaintiff has certainly not followed in the present case, regard being had to the finding of the trial Judge (from which the District Judge did not dissent, as pointed out above) namely, that the plaintiff had never from the date of the contract up to the date of hearing shown willingness to have the house alone for Rs. 3,500 and regard being also had to the nature of the prayer which the plaintiff made in his plaint that "in case the khancha could not be included in the sale he should be awarded Rs. 500 damages in addition to the sale-deed of the defendants' house".

On the above view of the case I would hold that the plaintiff was not willing and ready to perform his part of the contract as it really was and that he is thereby debarred from obtaining the relief of specific performance of the contract as it really was. I would accept the appeal and, setting aside the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge dated the 15th of August, 1927, would restore the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, dated the 28th of April 1927. I would grant the defendant-appellants their costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court but would leave the parties to bear their own costs in the trial Court as was ordered by the Subordinate Judge, First Class.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kishan Dayal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs respondents instituted a suit against the defendant-appellant for recovery of arrears of rent and for ejectment from certain plots of land.

The defendant pleaded (1) that the relationship of landlord and tenant had ceased to exist between the parties, (2) that, in any case, before the plaintiffs could eject the defendant they were bound to pay a sum of Rs. 10,000 as compensation for improvements as fixed in a certain prior litigation between the parties and (3), that enhanced rent was not payable by the defendant to the plaintiffs.

The trial Court heard the evidence on all the points and found, firstly, that the relationship of landlord and tenant still subsisted between the parties. Secondly, that the amount of compensation, payable by the plaintiffs to the defendant before the latter could be ejected, had been fixed at Rs. 10,000 in the previous litigation between the parties and that this point was res judicata. On the third question it held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to rent at enhanced rate. In the result it passed a decree for ejectment on payment of Rs. 10,000 as compensation in addition to Rs. 48-7-9 as arrears of rent.

On appeal by the defendant, the learned District Judge upheld the finding that the relationship of landlord and tenant had ceased to exist, but he disagreed with the trial Court on the second point and held that the decision in the previous suit fixing the amount of compensation at Rs. 10,000 did not operate as res judicata. He did not go into the third point relating to enhanced rate of rent, but accepted the appeal, and setting aside the decree of the trial Court he remanded the case to it for a "fresh decision on the merits." The provision of the law under which the remand was made was not mentioned in the order.

Against this order a miscellaneous appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u) has been preferred by the defendant in this Court. A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondents that the appeal is not competent as the order of the learned District Judge was not passed under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, but had been passed under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code.

I have heard lengthy arguments on the point and have no doubt that the order of remand could not have been made under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code. It is obvious that the decree of the trial Court did not proceed on a preliminary point. The learned trial Judge had decided all the issues which arose for decision in the case. On appeal the learned District Judge upheld the finding on the first question, namely, that the relationship of landlord and tenant was subsisting between the parties at the time of the suit, but he disagreed with the trial Court on the second question and held that the finding in the previous litigation as to the amount of compensation was not res judicata and remanded the case to assess the present value of the improvements. Now, it is settled law that no order of remand can be made under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, unless the trial Court had disposed of the whole suit upon a preliminary point. That rule authorises a remand only where the entire suit, and not only a portion of it, has been disposed of by the Court below on a preliminary point. Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant does not controvert this proposition but he urges that in this case though no order of remand under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, could be legally passed, the District Judge must be taken to have acted under that rule in so far as he has ordered the refund of the court-fee on appeal. But a Court remanding a case under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, is equally competent to order a refund of court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal. I hold, therefore, that the order of remand was not passed under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, and is not appealable to this Court.

Mr. Shamair Chand as a last resort asked me to treat the memorandum of appeal as a petition for revision. But no adequate ground for interference on the revision side has been disclosed. The appellant has got another remedy open to her inasmuch as she can agitate the points, now decided against her, in an appeal to this Court against the final decree if one is eventually passed against her.

For the foregoing reasons I uphold the preliminary objection and dismiss the appeal, but leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

In the case of an agreement for transfer of immoveable property a suit under s. 77, Registration Act, is not the exclusive relief open to the purchaser and the mere failure of a suit under s. 77 or its infructuous termination cannot operate as a bar to a suit for the specific performance of the contract by executing a new and a fresh document and for recovery of actual possession. Second Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 14th of April, 1928.

Dr. K. N. Malaviya, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. Sanyal, K. Verma and Gaithar Prasad, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for specific performance. Under a registered agreement dated the 18th May, 1921, the defendant accepted earnest money and undertook to sell certain immoveable property to the plaintiff. A sale deed was executed and was presented for registration by the vendee but the defendant did not turn up on the day when it was to be registered. An application was afterwards made to the Sub-Registrar for the registration of the sale deed, but that was refused as the defendant did not again appear. An appeal to the District Registrar was also dismissed because the defendant did not appear to admit the document and the document was proved. The plaintiff then brought a suit under s. 77 of the Indian Registration Act for the compulsory registration of that particular document. The case was fought out and the finding was in favour of the plaintiff. The decree however was in the form directing the defendant to get the sale deed registered within thirty days. If the correct form had been adopted the learned Munsif should have allowed the plaintiff to take it to the Registration Office for registration. The defendant, however, appealed to the District Judge, but after the period of thirty days expired he withdrew his appeal on the ground that the decree had become a nullity as the sale deed was not produced for registration within thirty days. As a matter of fact he himself had made default as the Munsif's decree had directed him to get it registered. The plaintiff had made an application to the Munsif within the thirty days for the return of the document in order that he might present it for registration. This application was dismissed as the decree of the Munsif did not direct him to get the document registered. An infructuous appeal was filed to the District Registrar but it also failed. In the result the plaintiff did not obtain the relief which he might have got under s. 77 of the Registration Act. He then instituted the present suit for the specific performance of the original contract. Various defences were raised but all the issues were found against the defendant and the suit was decreed by both the Courts below.

It is contended before us that the only remedy which the plaintiff had was the one allowed to him under s. 77 of the Indian Registration Act, and that that suit having failed, his remedy was exhausted and he no longer had any further cause of action against the defendant. In support of this contention reliance is placed on certain Madras cases among which Satyannarayana v. China Venkatarao (1) may be mentioned. This case dissents from the view taken in this High Court in the case of Amar Chand v. Nathu (2). The view of this High Court has been followed by the Calcutta High Court as well as by the Patna High Court. 44 Ind. Cas. 361 Nasir-ud-Din Midda v. Sidhoo Mia (3) and Uma Jha v. Chetu Mandar (4).

It seems to us that the original contract substantially was for the sale of the immoveable property by the defendant to the plaintiff and not for the mere signing of a particular document or of its presentation for registration. It cannot be said that the defendant has fulfilled his contract completely by merely signing the sale deed without getting it registered. The property admittedly is still in his possession and has not legally passed to the plaintiff. It is, therefore, impossible to hold that the contract entered into by the defendant has been fully carried out.

(1) 100 Ind. Cas. 385; 49 M. 302; 23 L. W. 277; A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 530; 50 M. L. J. 674.

(2) 7 Ind. Cas. 408; 7 A. L. J. 887.

(3) 44 Ind. Cas. 361; 27 C. L. J. 538.

Section 77 of the Indian Registration Act permits a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered. That obviously refers to a relief for the registration of that particular document which had been executed and the registration of which was refused. Under that section no other relief can be claimed. This has been clearly held by this Court in Kanhaiya Lal v. Sirdar Singh (5) and Ram Ghulam v. Menda (6). It is, therefore, obvious that the mere failure of a suit under s. 77 or its infructuous termination cannot operate as res judicata in a suit brought for the specific performance of the original contract and for recovery of possession of the immoveable property. This suit is based on the original cause of action which was independent and separate from the cause of action arising from the refusal of the purchaser to register it. It is also quite clear that the remedy which the plaintiff claims in the present suit is for the specific performance of the contract by executing a new and fresh document and for recovery of actual possession. Such reliefs could not have been claimed in the previous suit. We are unable to hold that s. 77 provides the only exclusive relief to the plaintiff, who has paid consideration and earnest-money to the defendant who has promised the transfer to him of the immoveable property. There is absolutely no reason why he should not be able to enforce the contract specifically and obtain actual possession.

The only point that remains for consideration is whether there has been any thing in the conduct of the plaintiff which would disqualify him from obtaining the equitable relief of specific performance. No doubt such a relief is discretionary, but the ordinary presumption is that a contract for the transfer of immoveable property can not be compensated for by damages. The finding of the lower Appellate Court makes it quite clear that it was the defendant himself who was to blame throughout. On two occasions he did not appear before the Sub-Registrar and he did not turn up before the District Registrar. He also frivolously resisted the plaintiff's suit under s. 77 and then although the decree was against him he did not obey that decree. The plaintiff has been knocked about from Court to Court but it cannot be said that he was in any way negligent. The Munsif had passed a decree in his favour and against the defendant, and although the form of it was not proper the plaintiff submitted to it hoping that defendant would be bound by it. In view of all the circumstances we agree with the view taken by the Court below.

We accordingly uphold the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, rr. 3, 11—Guardian—Neglect to protect minor's interests—Removal—Duty of Court—Right to retire—'Interest adverse to minor', meaning of.

A guardian appointed by the Court has no absolute right to remove himself from the litigation and force the hands of the Court at his own sweet will. Narendar Singh v. Chatrapal Singh (1), referred to. [p. 564, col. 1.]

But if the interests of a minor are in the hands of a person who has neglected to protect those interests it is the duty of the Court to remove him from the guardianship, if he had already been appointed, or to decline to appoint him guardian, if there was no formal order for his appointment. [p. 564, col. 2; p. 565, col. 1.]

"Claiming an interest adverse to that of the minor" does not mean that the minor and guardian were fighting or were actually on inimical terms. The expression is an expression of law, and it means that the interest of the minor cannot be safe in the hands of the guardian. [p. 564, col. 2.]

Second Appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 1st July, 1929.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and B. N. Sahai, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the minor defendants Nos. 4 and 5.

(5) 29 A. 284; 4 A. L. J. 171; A. W. N. (1907) 46.

(6) 60 Ind. Cas. 669; 19 A. L. J. 224.

The facts briefly are these. A suit for sale was brought by one Lala Bithal Das against the mortgagors, and two persons, Baidy Ram and Munni, as subsequent transferees. When Baidy Ram died, his sons Ram Kishen and Lachman, the present appellants, were brought on the record. The plaintiff applied that Ohunna Ram, the paternal uncle of the minors, Ram Kishen and Lachman, should be appointed their guardian for the suit.

A notice was issued to Ohunna Ram to state to the Court whether he was willing to accept the appointment or not, and he was to appear on the 15th August, 1927. The notice was served on Ohunna Ram on the 5th August, 1927, but he did not appear on the 15th August, 1927. On the latter date, the Court directed that the case should proceed ex parte against the minors, Ram Kishen and Lachman. There is no formal order appointing Ohunna Ram as the guardian for the suit of the minor defendants.

On the 15th August, 1927, it was reported to the Court that the original plaintiff, Bithal Das, had died leaving a will, and it would require some time to bring his legal representatives on the record. The learned Judge granted time, and the case was adjourned for three months.

On the 8th November, 1927, an application was made to the Court to substitute the names of two persons as the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff, Bithal Das. On this application being made, an order was passed to the effect that two notices should issue to the defendants one was a notice asking the defendants to say if they objected to the bringing on the record of the two persons as the legal representative of the plaintiff, and the other notice was to the effect that the 23rd January, 1928, had been fixed for the hearing of the case.

On the 23rd January, 1928, Ohunna Ram appeared before the Court of first instance and made an application (No. 65-C) asking the Court to make him a party. He said that the mortgage, by virtue of which Baidy Ram had been made a defendant, was the joint family property of himself and Baidy Ram, that he had an interest in the bond and that on that ground he should be made a party. This application was rejected on that very day, on the ground that the application had been made too late.

Thereupon, Ohunna Ram made an application to the Court saying that so far no guardian had been appointed for the minors, that he did not want to act as the guardian of the minors and some other person should be appointed. The learned Munsif rejected this application on the ground that the notice of appointment of guardian had been served on the applicant on the 5th August, 1927, and if a second notice had been issued to Ohunna Ram, it was issued by mistake of the office.

Thereupon a third application was made by Ohunna Ram on behalf of his minor nephews, and this time it was for adjournment. He said that he had been appointed a guardian against his will, that he had no previous information of the case, that he applied for summoning a record (on 18th January, 1928) in the impression that he was a party to the suit and that in the interest of the minors an adjournment should be granted. The learned Munsif rejected this application and proceeded to hear the case.

The case was heard, and a few days later judgment was pronounced. It was found that the minor defendants, Ram Kishen and Lachman, had failed to prove that they held any priority over the mortgage in suit. We may mention here that this was the only point taken on behalf of the minors that really affected the case. Their case was that the mortgage in favour of their father, although of a date subsequent to the date of the mortgage in suit, had been executed to pay off a decree (No. 131 of 1916) passed on a mortgage of 1905, and that, therefore, they had priority over the plaintiff's mortgage.

Ohunna Ram filed an appeal before the learned District Judge, and it was heard by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Muttra. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal. He was of opinion that the allegations of Ohunna Ram that his interests were adverse to those of the minors was without force, that the repeated applications and the allegations made in them by Ohunna Ram were made and done with the sole object of obtaining an adjournment and that the Munsif was right in refusing to allow an adjournment. The learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the contention of the minors before him that there could be no appointment of a guardian against his will, but he observed: "But the question is, if he fails to object to his appointment within 15 days of the service of notice on him, and the Court passes orders behind his back, is he competent to return at his own sweet will and force the Court to stop proceedings at any time he chooses to do so". These observations are very pertinent, but they would be good only if they tallied with the circumstances of the case.

As we take it, it is the duty of the Court to protect the interests of a minor. A guardian is appointed for that purpose, and for that purpose alone. If the Court finds that the guardian is not acting properly, it would be the duty of the Court to remove him and to see that the interest of the minor is protected. When a person who has been properly appointed guardian of a minor, has taken proper steps to safeguard the interests of the minor, and then, for some reason or other, wants to force the hands of the Court by preferring a resignation, it would be the duty of the Court to see whether the resignation should be accepted or not. If the minor concerned is not likely to be prejudiced thereby, the Court may decline to remove the guardian. Such a case arose in Narendar Singh v. Chatrapal Singh (1). It was laid down in that case that a guardian appointed by the Court for the protection of a minor's interest has no absolute right to remove himself from the litigation and force the hands of the Court at his own sweet will. The learned Judges who decided the case took considerable pains to discover whether the minor's interest was suffering or not. They came to the conclusion that the minor's interest did not suffer, and that the only object of the application on the part of the guardian asking for her retirement was to delay the trial of the suit.

That being the principle, we have to see whether, in this particular case before us, the Court should have accepted the application of Ohunna Ram either to let him retire from the office of guardian, or to grant him time to prosecute the interest of the minors.

We are not laying any particular stress on the fact that there is no order for the appointment of Ohunna Ram as the guardian of the minors. We assume that a formal order will not be important, if the minors' interests have been duly protected. But we find in this case that the written statement disclosed a case which, on the face of it, has some force. At least, it is a case which was well worth being put before the Court. When the applications of Ohunna Ram were rejected, he filed a written statement and he filed certain documents, but these could not be proved because he did not summon any witnesses for the minors' case. The documents produced required formal evidence in order to be proved. In the circumstances, the learned Munsif could have easily seen that the interest of the minors had not been protected. The man who had been appointed guardian had filed a written statement but had taken no steps to summon witnesses. We may note that there was no hearing at all before the 23rd January, 1928, the date of the hearing, when Ohunna Ram appeared and declined to act. He said that his interest was adverse to that of the minors. It has been argued that if he was a member of a joint Hindu family with the minors, it would be to his interest to prosecute the defence on behalf of the minors. The question whether Baidy Ram was joint or not with Ohunna Ram has not been gone into, and we need not express any opinion on the point. But it is clear that when Ohunna Ram claimed a half share in the property which stood in the name of the minors' father, on the face of it, at any rate, he was claiming an interest which was adverse to that of the minors. "Claiming an interest adverse to that of the minors" does not mean that the minors and Ohunna Ram were fighting or were actually on inimical terms. The expression is an expression of law, and it means that the interest of the minors cannot be safe in the hands of Ohunna Ram. There was the assertion on the part of Ohunna Ram that his interest was adverse to that of the minors. The trial Judge ought to have accepted this statement as correct in the interests of the minors, even as a matter of precaution and extra care for the benefit of the minors. Then Ohunna Ram definitely declared that he was not going to act for the minors. It was not a case like the one already quoted by us, in which the guardian had taken every step to protect the interest of the minors. So far Ohunna Ram had done nothing whatsoever to protect the interest of the minors. As we have said, he did not file a written statement, till the eleventh hour and he had not summoned witnesses. It has been argued that he was taking all the interest that was possible for him to take in the minors, but was neglectful of his duty and that he had neglected to summon witnesses, and that was why he was asking for time. If that was so, the interests of the minors were in the hands of a man who had admittedly neglected to protect those interests. In the circumstances, it was the duty of the Court below to remove Ohunna Ram from the guardianship, if he had already been appointed, or to decline to appoint him guardian, if there was no formal order for his appointment. We are clearly of opinion that the interests of the minors have suffered in the present litigation at the hands of Chunna Ram. We are, therefore, of opinion that the appeal should be allowed.

It has been argued on behalf of the plaintiffs respondents that if the Court be inclined to allow the appeal, the costs which have been thrown away should be paid by Chunna Ram personally, because, after all, he alone is responsible—at least mainly responsible—for all that has happened. We think there is force in this contention. Chunna Ram was twice served with a notice, and it was his obvious duty, if he was not going to act as the guardian of his minor nephews, to come before the Court and say so.

The Counsel for respondent No. 6, Munni, has argued that he should have his costs, because there is no contest between him, on the one hand, and the appellants on the other, and he was unnecessarily brought before this Court.

It was argued on behalf of the appellants that the appeal had arisen out of a mortgage suit, and it was necessary that all the parties to the suit should be before this Court. If that was so, the plaintiffs made the respondent No. 6, Munni, a party in their own interest, and, therefore, they are bound to pay his costs.

In the result, we allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of first instance for trial according to law. The learned trial Judge will now appoint a fresh guardian for the appellants and pass a proper order for the appointment. The costs here and hitherto as between the plaintiffs, on the one hand, and the minor defendants Nos. 4 and 5 (Ram Kishan and Lachman), on the other, will abide the result. The costs will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale. As Chunna Ram has been mainly responsible for the throwing away of so much costs, the plaintiffs will be entitled to recover their costs, excepting the Court-fee paid by them, from Chunna Ram, including costs in the Courts below and in this Court. If the plaintiffs recover their costs which have been thrown away, from Chunna Ram, they will not be entitled to recover the same from Lachman and Ram Kishan again, in case the plaintiffs succeed after trial.

Therefore, the provisions of ss. 214 and 381, Succession Act, are not applicable to the Crown where the property vests in the Crown by reason of escheat and it is not necessary for the Secretary of State to obtain a succession certificate for the realisation of the debt due to the person dying heirless. *Collector of Masulipatam v. Civil Revision against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 28th of June, 1930.

Mr. Sankar Saran, for the Applicant.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and Baij Nath Sahai, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for civil revision by the Secretary of State for India in Council who figures as plaintiff in the action. The suit was to recover interest on five hundis of various dates which were drawn by the firm Girdhari Lal-Shambhu Nath on the firm Ram Narain-Chunni Lal. The hundis were payable 61 days after the date of execution.

The firm of Ram Narain-Chunni Lal was owned by Chunni Lal. He died in April, 1925, before the hundis had matured. He is said to have died without leaving any issue.

Upon his death, three rival claimants appeared on the scene; one claimed to be the collateral heir of Chunni, the second claimed under a will and the third in the right of escheat. A triangular dual is going on between these three and I am informed that litigations are pending in appeal before this Court.

On the 14th of July, 1925, Rai Bahadur Seth Soorajbhan, Government Treasurer of Agra, sent a notice on behalf of the Collector of Agra to the defendant calling upon him to pay up the principal and interest due on the hundis. The defendant did not make the desired payment.

On the 21st of April, 1927, the defendant appears to have to a certain extent changed his mind, for, on that date, the defendant deposited the principal amount due on the hundis in the Imperial Bank of Agra to the credit of the Collector of Agra.

The Collector served a notice upon the defendant asking him to pay the interest due on the hundis from the date of their maturity up to the 21st of April, 1927, when the principal sum was paid. The defendant did not respond to this notice; hence the suit.

The suit was instituted on the 5th of March, 1929.

Various points were raised in defence but the one which was seriously pressed was that, in view of the provisions of ss. 214 and 381 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) the plaintiff was not entitled to claim interest without obtaining a succession certificate. It may be noticed that this plea had not been taken in the written statement as originally filed. At a later stage, the defendant applied for the amendment of his written statement by the inclusion of this plea. His written statement was allowed to be amended.

On the 20th of December, 1929, the Court passed an order directing the plaintiff to obtain a succession certificate. Thereupon the plaintiff applied for and obtained the required certificate on the 2nd of June, 1930. This certificate was duly filed in Court. The Court, however, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the following ground:—

"The present plaintiff obtained succession certificate on the 2nd of June, 1930, after the filing of the present suit. Evidently up to 2nd of June, 1930, there was none who could give a valid discharge and so the defendant cannot be held liable for interest for the period in question."

Where there is a vacant inheritance, the property lapses to the Crown by the rule of escheat. The escheat to the Crown is not due to any rule of succession. The right of escheat is a prerogative of the Crown and the said prerogative is recognized universally in every system of civilized jurisprudence. I would emphasise the fact that upon the death of a person without leaving any heirs his estate devolves upon the Crown under its general prerogative and not by reason of any rule of succession. Escheat is the vanishing point in the law of inheritance. Where succession ends, escheat begins. The law on the subject has been discussed in a number of cases and reference may be usefully made to the Collector of Muslipatam v. Cavalry Vencata Narainpāh (1), Cavalry Vencata Narainpāh v. Collector of Muslipatam (2) and Sonet Koer v. Himmat Bahadur (3).

Section 214 of the Indian Succession Act provides that:

"no Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming on succession to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or to any part thereof..... except on the production by the person so claiming of . . . (iii) a succession certificate granted under Part X and having the debt specified therein."

Where the property descends to the Crown by escheat it could not be said that the Crown was claiming the property by right of succession within the meaning of s. 214 of the Indian Succession Act. Section 381 of the Indian Succession Act provides that:

"the succession certificate granted by the District Judge with respect to the debts and securities specified therein will be conclusive against the person owing such debts or liable on such securities and, shall afford full indemnity to all such persons as regards all payments made, or dealings had, in good faith in respect of such debts or securities to or with the person to whom the certificate was granted."

No authorities have been cited in support of the proposition that the provisions of ss. 214 and 381 of the Indian Succession Act are applicable to the Crown where the property vests in the Crown by reason of a vacant inheritance. This case, therefore, is one of first impression. Upon general principles, I am of opinion, that the Indian Succession Act is not applicable to the Crown, when it takes the property upon escheat. The ground, therefore, upon which the judgment proceeds cannot be supported.

An important plea was raised by the defendant in para. 9 of written statement which runs as follows:—"Neither were the hundis presented to the contesting defendant on the due date nor did there appear any person entitled to take the money." The question, therefore, which still remains for determination is whether the plaintiff could claim interest on the hundis without presenting the hundis after their maturity.

I allow the application, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court for disposal of the case with reference to the issue indicated above. Costs here and heretofore shall abide the event.

One C after mortgaging two houses, house No. 1 and house No. 2, in favour of the plaintiff sold house No. 1 to defendant No. 2. Later on the mortgagee sued for sale of both houses on the foot of the mortgage. After written statements had been filed the mortgagee's Counsel made a statement admitting that the house No. 2 did not belong to the mortgagor in the mortgage in suit and that it belonged to one K predecessor-in-interest of defendant No. 3 who had mortgaged it to defendant No. 4 and that it might be excluded from claim. In consequence of this statement Counsel for defendant No. 4 remitted costs:

Held, that the action of the mortgagee did not amount to a release and he could ask that his entire claim under the mortgage be satisfied out of house No. 1. [p. 587, col. 2.]

Held, further, that the owner of house No. 1 could file a suit for contribution directed against house No. 2 under s. 82, Transfer of Property Act. [p. 568, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. P. L. Banerji (for whom Mr. Ambika Prasad Dube, and Mr. Ram Nama Prasad), for the Respondents.

Judgment—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit on a mortgage.

On 17th January, 1917, Ohhotey Lal the deceased husband of Musammatt Bundia, defendant No. 1 executed a simple mortgage in favour of Keshab Das, the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs, of three items of property, the house No. 1, house No. 2 and some zemindari. Defendant No. 5 was impleaded simply as a donee of part of the zemindari, and defendant No. 6 as having attached one of the houses in execution of a decree.

On the 5th September, 1921, the mortgagor sold house No. 1 to Pandit Bala Prasad, defendant No. 2.

There is an allegation in the suit, the truth of which has not yet been decided, that on the 17th January, 1927, one Khunnun, claiming to be the owner of the house No. 2 mortgaged it to one Hazari Lal, who is now defendant No. 4, Khunnun being represented by his son Jagannath.

The plaintiffs directed their suit at the outset against both the houses Nos. 1 and 2 but after the written statements had been filed they proceeded through their Counsel on the 15th February, 1928, to state that they admitted that house No. 2 did not belong to Ohhotey Lal, the mortgagor in the mortgage in suit, but that it belonged to Khunnun, and they agreed, therefore, that the said house might be excluded from the claim against all the defendants.

When the plaintiffs' Vakil had made the statement the Vakil for Hazari Lal, defendant No. 4 stated on behalf of his client that as the claim had been withdrawn in respect of house No. 2, defendant No. 4 was also prepared on his side to remit his costs. The trial Court held that house No. 1 was only rateably liable and not liable for the whole amount of the mortgage. The judgment declared that the amount for which house No. 1 was liable was Rs. 250 whereas in the decree the amount was stated to be Rs. 300. The plaintiffs appealed, and defendant No. 2 filed a cross-objection. The plaintiffs' appeal was dismissed, and on the cross-objection the error in the decree was corrected by substituting Rs. 250 for Rs. 300. Except for this modification the decree of the trial Court stood. The plaintiffs have come up here in second appeal, asking us to hold that the house No. 1 should have been made liable for the whole amount due under the mortgage, Rs. 1,278 8 3. We have heard not only Counsel for the plaintiff-appellants and for Pandit Bala Prasad defendant No. 2 but also Counsel on behalf of Hazari Lal, the mortgagee in the mortgage alleged to have been executed by Jagannath, the son of Khunnun. We have had much argument addressed to us as to the consequences of the mortgagees action in declaring that he was prepared to exclude the house No. 2 from his suit. We have had cases quoted to us and it has been argued on the basis of this case or that case that the plaintiffs' action amounted to or did not amount to a release. In our view there is no particular magic in the word 'release'. The circumstances of each case must be regarded in order to determine which of the parties in suit may be bound by particular action taken. We may illustrate this by noting that the lower Appellate Court has relied mainly on the decision in Jugal Kishore v. Kedarnath (1) which it has described as being on all fours with the present case. In our view that case is plainly distinguishable. When the mortgagor sold the property which the mortgagee subsequently exempted from his suit he left Rs. 500 with the vendee, which was to be paid to the mortgagee, which was paid to the mortgagee and which the mortgagee eventually accepted in full payment of the liability of that portion of the property. In the present case the mortgagee did not receive any money in consideration of their exempting house No. 2 and least of all did they receive any money from the mortgagor. The mortgagor, so far as the evidence goes, was in no way privy to the transaction between the mortgagees and the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 more particularly defendant No. 4. In our view the case may be decided by reference to two very normal principles. It was open to the mortgagees to proceed by their suit against both the items of property, house No. 1 and house No. 2 and having obtained a decree in reference to them both it was open to them to proceed to recover the whole of their mortgage money if they could, by sale of either, and subsequently by sale of the other if the sale of the first did not satisfy their decree. On the other hand, it was open to them to include in their suit only one of the items of the property, if they so chose, but in this case if that item proved insufficient to cover all that was due under the mortgage they would be unable, of course, to proceed by another suit against the other two properties. But in either of these cases there was nothing whatever to prevent them from asking for the whole of their mortgage money from the one property. It has been contended that defendant No. 2 the present owner of house No. 1 would be gravely injured if his property was made liable for the whole of the amount of the mortgage, because as it was suggested on his behalf he would not be able to file a suit for contribution directed against the other property, house No. 2. While, however, this assertion was made both on behalf of defendant No. 2 and by Counsel for defendant No. 4 no authority was shown to us to suggest why a suit for contribution should not lie. We were repeatedly referred to what the mortgagees had said and done, but nothing that the mortgagees said or did possibly binds the owner of house No. 1 unless he or his predecessor-in-title was in some way privy to the statements or actions of the mortgagees. This is not suggested. Reading the terms of s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is certainly not apparent why a suit for contribution should not lie. There is nothing in it to the effect that a suit will not lie unless the property has been included in the original decree. It will of course be for the defendant No. 2 if he files such a suit to establish that Ohhotey Lal and not Khunnun was the real owner of the property. That is a matter that has not yet been gone into owing to the fact that the mortgagees exempted house No. 2.

The result is that we allow the appeal and setting aside the decrees of both the lower Courts decree the suit of the plaintiffs in full as regards house No. 1. The plaintiffs will get their full costs from defendant No. 2 throughout. The defendants including defendant No. 4 will pay their own costs. The decree will be prepared under O. XXXIV, r. 4, six months being allowed to the defendant No. 2 counting from 16th June, 1931, for payment.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Order setting aside award—Revision—'Case decided'.

An order setting aside an arbitration award is not a case decided within the meaning of s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore no revision lies from such an order.

Civil Revision against a decree of the Munsif, Haveli Saharanpur, dated the 14th May, 1930.

Dr. K. N. Malavaiya, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Opposite Parties.

Sulaiman, Acting C. J.—This is a plaintiff's application in revision from an order of the Munsif of Saharanpur setting aside an arbitration award. A preliminary objection to the hearing of this application is taken and it is urged that no case has been decided and, therefore, no revision lies under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Advocate for the respondent relies on the case of Rudra Prasad v. Mathura Prasad (1) decided by a Bench of which I was a member. It was pointed out in that case that there had been a recent decision in the case of Shah Muhammad Fakhr-ud-din v. Rahimullah (2).

in which exactly the same point had been decided against the applicant. Following that decision we held that no revision lay.

In the case of Shah Muhammad Fakhar-ud din v. Rahimullah (2), another Bench had held that no application in revision would lie from an order setting aside an award. The Bench considered that they were following the pronouncement of the Full Bench in Budhu Lal v. Mewa Ram (3). But in this Full Bench case the opinion of Ryves, J. which turned the scale was simply this, that "no revision lies from a finding on an issue relating to the question of jurisdiction". There is however an earlier case of Chattar Singh v. Lekhraj Singh (4), in which also it was held that no revision lay from an order setting aside an award. On the other hand, in Bhola Nath v. Raghunath Das Mithan Lal (5), it was held that an application in revision would lie from an order superseding a reference to arbitration before the award was delivered. That case also was decided by a Bench of which I was a member. The case of Chatar Bujh v. Raghubeer Dayal (6), which was exactly on all fours with the case before us was cited and followed by us. We held that the termination of the proceeding relating to the supercession of the arbitration amounted to a case decided within the meaning of s. 115 Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Advocate for the respondents has urged before us that the two last mentioned cases can be distinguished on this ground that an application for the supercession of the arbitration proceedings before the award is delivered is not expressly provided for anywhere in the Code and the proceeding started by such an application may be treated as a separate proceeding. A case within the suit, resulting in the supercession of the arbitration, may amount to "a case decided" with in the meaning of s. 115, Civil Procedure Code. On the other hand, the order setting aside the award is an order contemplated by Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, and is a part of the proceeding in the suit itself.

I must admit that the distinction sought to be drawn is very thin and that to some extent there is unfortunately a want of harmony. Bhola Nath's case can be distinguished only on the ground that if the Court allows a new proceeding to be started, which the law does not contemplate and which is outside the scope of the suit, resulting in the interruption of its normal course, and passes an order not warranted by law, the proceeding is deemed to be a 'case' in itself.

As the facts of the case before us are identical with the facts of the first three cases quoted above, it must be decided in accordance with the view expressed in those cases. I would therefore dismiss this revision.

King, J.—I concur. The order setting aside the arbitration award disposed of a proceeding during the pendency of the suit and, in my opinion, the decision of the question whether the award was valid or invalid did not amount to the decision of a "case" within the meaning of s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The rulings in Chattar Singh v. Lekhraj Singh (4), Shah Muhammad Fakhar-ud din v. Rahimullah (2) and Rudra Prasad v. Mathura Prasad (1) are exactly in point and I think that they, should be followed.

By the Court.—The application is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 28th April, 1930.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—This, though an appeal under O. XLI, r. 11, we have heard at considerable length, because while we are of opinion that we are in this case invited to consider a finding of fact, we are also of opinion that a finding of negligence or a finding that there was or was not default is not necessarily in all cases a finding of fact, if the finding has not been approached from the proper legal standpoint.

The plaintiff has proved that on the 17th February, 1925 he sent a registered and insured cover to a consignee in Calcutta, which cover is said to have contained a currency note of the value of one thousand rupees.

In the ordinary course the plaintiff's doubts might have been expected to be aroused within a few weeks at the utmost if he did not receive either from the Post Office or his consignee on intimation that the insured letter had been duly delivered. The plaintiff has asked the Court to believe that his suspicions were not so aroused until a year later, when he received a copy of his accounts with his consignee and found that he had not been credited with one thousand rupees. This question of the plaintiff's statement as to when he acquired knowledge of the loss of the thousand rupees is only of importance in a case of this description in second appeal in weighing the question of the burden of proof. Had he taken any proper steps at all to satisfy himself, he would have been able to make a claim for his money from the Post Office at any time within three months.

Even in June, 1926, when he learnt of the alleged loss of the money, he did not bring a suit, but contented himself with, at some date during the next two years—we have no more precise information—bringing a criminal case against the Post Master at the Despatching Office. As a result of that trial, the Post Master, the present defendant-respondent, was acquitted.

Now, when the period of limitation was on the point of expiry or, as the District Judge says, on the last day of limitation, the plaintiff brought the present suit. Again, most of these facts are only of importance in considering the question of the burden of proof.

To succeed in this suit, the plaintiff had to prove that the Post Master had been guilty of causing the loss of the insured letter "fraudulently or by his wilful act or default (Act No. VI of 1898 s. 6)". The only fact proved against the defendant is that, when he sent the list of insured articles to the sorter in the ordinary course of his duties, he mentioned in that list only two articles, whereas he should have mentioned three, the third being apparently the missing letter which has led to this suit.

The learned District Judge has weighed the evidence carefully and has found that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the loss was "caused by" the default of the defendant. It is to be noticed that the Legislature has, presumably deliberately, avoided using the word 'negligence' and the word 'default' is manifestly or somewhat stronger import. We should be inclined to hold that in s. 6 of the Post Office Act it bears the 4th meaning given to it in 'Murary' or the 'Oxford' dictionary:—"Failure in duty, care, etc., as the cause of some untoward event". The use of the word 'cause' both in this definition and s. 6 of Act VI of 1898 (The Post Office Act) is noticeable.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found in fact that there are causes to which the loss might have been attributed other than the default of the defendant. In his view, while an omission on the part of the defendant has been proved, that omission might only be one link in the chain of circumstances and might not have been the cause of the loss. For instance, he suggests that it might have been lost or stolen before ever the list was written. It is not necessary for us to speculate but so far as the evidence goes, there are manifestly circumstances which might have led to the loss of this insured letter without the loss being attributable directly to the omission in the list. Just as a finding of negligence is a finding of fact, so ordinarily speaking is a finding as to whether a default was or was not the cause of a loss. This, of course, does not mean that a finding as to default can never be attacked as a finding on a point of law. But if the question has been approached from the proper legal standpoint, then we are of opinion that it is a finding of fact. In the present case, we see no reason to believe that the Judge has not approached the case entirely in the right way. We hold his finding, therefore, in the present case to be a finding of fact; and, we may add, we see no reason to disagree with him. The appeal is dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11. Civil Procedure Code.

Criminal trial—Procedure—Offence covered by special as well as general law—Law applicable.

It is not a general rule of law that if an act is an offence under a special law providing penalties for such an act, the application of the general law would be repelled. It is possible that an act may be an offence both under special law as well as under general law both laws being applicable simultaneously. In such a case the offender may be prosecuted under either law though it would be more appropriate to prosecute the offender and to convict him under the special Act if the offence falls strictly within the purview of a section of the special Act and does not go beyond it. [p. 571, col. 2.]

The Assistant Government-Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. S. B. L. Gaur, for the Accused.

Judgment.—This is a Criminal Reference by the Sessions Judge of Aligarh recommending that the conviction of the accused under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, be altered into one under s. 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act, and the fine be reduced from Rs. 200 to Rs. 100.

The applicant was driving his motor lorry in a wrong direction, keeping to the right side of the road. From the opposite direction Lieutenant Colonel Pengelley was coming in his car, and he very properly kept to the left side of the road. He blew his horn when at a distance of 40 yards, but the accused Jawa Ram, did not turn back to the left side of the road, but moved on, compelling the complainant to leave the road and move on to its left side. Even then he did not escape safely but his car was hit at right angles and was dashed against a tree and was smashed. The complainant received a few bruises also. The Magistrate found that although the accused applied his brakes he could not, in spite of his efforts, avoid the accident. This implied that he was going at a fast speed and through a dusty atmosphere when the visibility was not good. He distinctly found that Jawa Ram's negligence and failure to observe the rule of the road were responsible for the collision.

As the case was tried summarily there was no appeal; but the accused filed a revision before the Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge did not, of course, overrule these findings, but considered that the conviction under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, was illegal. He relied on the case of In re Oudh Bar Association, Lucknow, Emperor v. Mohan Lal Saksensa (1) and concluded that where there is a special law making a particular an offence and providing penalties, the general law is inapplicable. He has accordingly referred this case to the High Court because he considers that the conviction under the general law is illegal.

It is not necessary for me to express any opinion on the decision in the Oudh case because in that case the question considered was whether a person could be convicted of abetment under s. 117 Indian Penal Code, when the offence also fell under s. 9 of the Salt Act of 1882. I may, however, remark that that case has not been followed by a Bench of this Court in Joti Prasad Gupta and Baijnath v. Emperor (2) decided on 23rd February, 1931 and has also been doubted by the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Ganesh Vaman Joshi (3).

I am only concerned with the observation made by the learned Judges of the Oudh Chief Court on which reliance has been placed by the learned Sessions Judge. With great respect, I am unable to hold that it can be laid down as a general rule of law that where there is a special law making a particular act an offence and providing penalties for such an offence, the general law must be held to be inapplicable. It is possible that the same act may be an offence under two different Acts, and both may be applicable simultaneously and the offender may be prosecuted and convicted under either Act. It may, however, be conceded that where the offence falls strictly within the provisions of a section of a special Act and does not go beyond it, it would be more appropriate to prosecute the offender and convict him under that special Act, rather than fall back upon a more general law which prescribes a heavier penalty. In such a case it may be assumed that the Legislature in prescribing the smaller penalty has considered recourse to the special law as the proper course.

The fault of the accused in the present case did not lie merely in not observing the rule of the road by driving the lorry on the right side of it. If he had done nothing worse than that, I would have felt inclined to alter his conviction as recommended by the Sessions Judge. But on the finding of the Magistrate he was negligent in continuing to drive on the wrong side of the road in spite of due warning and in going fast. The case undoubtedly fell within the scope of s. 279, Indian Penal Code.

Section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act has not any necessary ingredient of rashness or negligence in it. Rule 27 of the Motor Act Rules merely lays down the rule of the road, and a breach of it need not necessarily involve rashness or negligence. When the ingredient of negligence entered into the offence, the conviction under s. 279, Indian Penal Code, was not only proper but more appropriate.

I accordingly decline to interfere. Let the papers be returned.

Criminal Revision No. 267 of 1931.

LACHMI NARAIN—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 244, 256—Warrant cases—Accused, whether entitled to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before charge.

In the trial of a warrant case the accused has no absolute right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses before the framing of the charge, but Magistrates would generally be exercising a proper discretion if they permit some cross-examination at least, at that stage. Ashirbad Muchi v. Maju Muchini (1), Queen Empress v. Sagal Samba Sajo (2) and Ramyad Singh v. Empress (3), referred to. [p. 514, col. 2.]

When a Magistrate has "to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" he has to record not only the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses, but also their cross-examination and re-examination (if any), if no express provision is made for cross-examination. But when express provision for cross-examination is made, as in s. 256 or s. 208 (2), then the phrase mentioned cannot be construed as giving a separate and independent right of cross-examination [p. 573, col. 2.]

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment—This is an application in revision against an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Bareilly confirming the order of a Magistrate of the First Class refusing to allow the applicant to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses before the charge had been framed.

The complaint was instituted on the 26th of January, 1931, alleging that the accused had committed offences under ss. 420 and 467 Indian Penal Code. When the complainant had been examined on the 1st of April, 1931, an oral request was made to the Magistrate to permit his cross-examination at once. The Magistrate rejected this request. When the next witness had been examined the defence put in a written request that the Magistrate should permit the witness to be cross-examined before the framing of the charge. This request was rejected by the Magistrate in a written order. The Magistrate took the view that s. 256 of the Code of Criminal Procedure did not indicate that prosecution witnesses are to be cross-examined twice, and he could not find any justification in the Code or in the Evidence Act for the proposition that the accused has a right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses both before and after the framing of the charge. After the prosecution witnesses had been examined the Magistrate framed a charge under s. 420 Indian Penal Code.

The accused applied to the Sessions Judge of Bareilly asking that the Magistrate's order refusing to allow cross-examination of prosecution witnesses before the framing of the charge, be set aside. The learned Sessions Judge discussed the point and recorded his opinion that the Magistrate was probably incorrect in his procedure, and that the accused was entitled to cross-examine a witness immediately after he had been examined and before the framing of the charge. Nevertheless, in view of the facts that all the prosecution witnesses had been examined in chief and the charge had been framed and some of the witnesses had already been cross-examined after the charge had been framed he rejected the application.

The question for determination is whether an accused person is entitled to cross-examine a prosecution witness, in the trial of a warrant case, before the charge has been framed.

Section 138 of the Evidence Act merely lays down the order of the examination of witnesses, namely that they should be first examined-in-chief, and then (if the adverse party so desires) cross examined, and then (if the party calling them so desires) re-examined. This does not indicate a right of cross-examination immediately after the examination-in-chief when express provision has been made for exercising the right of cross-examination at a later stage. It is perfectly clear that under s. 256, Criminal Procedure Code the accused has the right of cross-examining a prosecution witness after the charge has been framed. So s. 138 of the Evidence Act does not seem to be of much assistance. It merely lays down that cross-examination shall be allowed at some stage after the examination-in-chief and s. 256 may well be construed as indicating the proper stage for cross-examination in the trial of warrant-cases. Section 138 certainly does not indicate that the adverse party shall be entitled to cross-examine a witness more than once.

Section 252 of the Code is the section under which prosecution witnesses are examined in warrant-cases. This lays down that the Magistrate,

"shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution."

It has been argued that the word "evidence" in this phrase must include not merely the examination-in-chief of a witness, but also his cross-examination and re-examination if any. In support of this contention reference has been made to s. 244. This section lays down the procedure in the trial of summons cases, and enacts that the Magistrate,

"shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution -- -- --".

The phraseology in ss. 244 (1) and 252 (1) is identical. It is argued that under s. 244 when the Magistrate proceeds to "take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution", he must certainly allow the witnesses to be cross-examined as well as examined-in-chief and that, therefore, the word "evidence" in this phrase must include not only the examination-in-chief but also the cross-examination and re-examination if any. Section 244 does not contain any express provision for cross-examination. Cross-examination must certainly be allowed at some stage, and as no express provision is made for exercising this right in the trial of summons cases, we must hold that the right is exercisable under s. 244.

It is argued that as the phrase cited gives a right of cross-examination under s. 244, therefore, the same phrase must be held to give a right of cross-examination under s. 252. There is some force in this argument, but it is far from conclusive. One cannot lose sight of the fact that no express provision for exercising the right of cross-examination has been made in the trial of summons cases, whereas in the trial of warrant cases such express provision is to be found in s. 256.

It must moreover be noted that when the same phrase occurs in s. 2(8) (1) which lays down the procedure in taking evidence in inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session we find it expressly stated in sub-s. (2) that "the accused shall be at liberty to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution." Sub-s. (1) enacts that the Magistrate shall "proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take in manner hereinafter provided all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution....."

Once again we find the same phrase. If that phrase is construed as conferring a right of cross-examination wherever that phrase may occur, then it must be conceded that sub-s. (2) is wholly redundant. But it must be presumed that the Legislature does not enact wholly redundant provisions. The inference is that the phrase in question cannot be construed as necessarily conferring or including the right of cross-examination. I conclude that when a Magistrate has "to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution", he has to record not only the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses, but also their cross-examination and re-examination (if any), if no express provision is made for cross examination. But when express provision for cross examination is made, as in s. 256 or 208 (2), then the phrase mentioned cannot be construed as giving a separate and independent right of cross-examination.

The language of s. 256 supports the same conclusion. That section requires the accused to state "whether he wishes to cross examine any, and if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken". If the Legislature had intended to confer an absolute right of cross-examination before the framing of the charge, then we should expect it to lay down explicitly that the accused should be required to state whether he wishes further to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses. The omission of the word

"further" seems to indicate that the cross-examination is to be deferred, as a matter of right, until after the framing of the charge.

It must also be remembered that under s. 254 the Magistrate can frame a charge as soon as a prima facie case is established against the accused. It is not necessary to record the whole of the prosecution evidence before framing a charge. Hence, although there may be 12 prosecution witnesses, it is frequently possible and even desirable to frame a charge after only one or two witnesses have been examined. In such a case it is clear that all the "remaining witnesses" can only be cross-examined once under s. 256. I doubt whether the Legislature intended that witnesses examined before the charge should be cross-examined twice, as a matter of right while those examined after the charge should only be cross-examined once. Section 257 gives a right of second cross-examination if the Magistrate thinks it necessary in the interests of justice. The interests of the accused, therefore, are fully protected even if no cross-examination is permitted as a matter of right before the framing of the charge.

Sections 286 (2) and 289 (1) have also been referred to as showing that the examination of witnesses must include cross-examination and re-examination. This is no doubt the correct interpretation of the expression "examination of the witnesses" in s. 289 (1) and of the expression "examine his witnesses" in s. 286 (2), but that is not of much assistance in construing the language of s. 252 which is different. Moreover, there is no express provision for the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses in trials before High Courts and Courts of Session.

The only ruling relied upon by the learned Advocate for the applicant is the case of Ashirbad Muchi v. Maju Muchini (1). The judgment was very briefly expressed, but the learned Judges observed that the Magistrate should at once give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, if they should so desire, even though the charge may not be framed.

This ruling does not purport to lay down the proposition that the accused has an absolute right of cross-examination before the charge is framed in the trial of a warrant case. I think the ruling goes no further than laying down that a Magistrate would be well advised to permit cross-examination before the framing of the charge and does not support the contention that he is bound to permit cross-examination at that stage.

Reference may also be made to the case of Queen Empress v. Sagal Samba Sajao (2) in which the learned Judges remarked that s. 256 does not prohibit cross-examination before the charge has been framed. I quite agree. In Ramyad Singh v. Empress (3), a single Judge of the Patna High Court observed: "The accused have got the right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses once before the charge is framed, and secondly, after the charge is framed under s. 256". This observation certainly supports the applicant's contention, but it is a mere obiter dictum and no reasons are given. There is, therefore, no clear judicial authority, so far as I am aware, for holding that the accused is entitled as a matter of right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses in the trial of a warrant case before the framing of a charge, and I am unable to interpret the relevant sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Evidence Act as giving the accused such a right.

As a matter of practice or discretion I think that Magistrates would be well advised to permit some cross-examination before framing a charge, otherwise, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, s. 253 would practically become a dead letter. It is unlikely that a Magistrate could discharge an accused person on the strength of the evidence of prosecution witnesses whose credit has not been impeached by cross-examination. Ordinarily the examination-in-chief of prosecution witnesses does make out a prima facie case against the accused, and it is only after the witnesses have been shown by cross-examination to be untrustworthy that the Court would be justified in discharging the accused.

In my opinion, although the accused has no absolute right of cross-examination before the framing of the charge, I think that Magistrates would generally be exercising a proper discretion if they did permit some cross-examination at least at that stage.

It has been contended that no prima facie case has been made out against the accused, but I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that on the facts alleged a criminal offence would be established against the accused.

As the Magistrate has not committed any irregularity, in my opinion, in refusing to permit cross-examination before the charge, and at the most might be held to have failed to exercise a proper discretion, I see no grounds for interference at this stage. On the materials before me I cannot express any opinion whether the Magistrate should, in the exercise of his discretion, have permitted cross-examination in this case before framing the charge.

BAGLA OF ALIGARH.

Income-Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 34, 66—Income escaping assessment—Re-assessment—Jurisdiction of Income-tax Officer—Whole assessment cannot be revised.

The words "assess or reassess such income, profits or gains", in s. 34, Income-Tax Act, must be taken to refer to the income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax which have escaped assessment referred to in the prior part of the section. Accordingly in a proceeding under s. 34 the Income-tax Officer and after him the Assistant Commissioner are only dealing with the extra income which has not been assessed to income-tax. No jurisdiction is given to either of these officers by s. 34 to make a new assessment for the purposes of taxing the whole of that assessment under the Income-Tax Act. Palanippa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income Tax (1), followed.

Section 34 does not confer on the authorities a power to grant relief to the assessee on the ground that the previous assessment under s. 23 (4) was too high.

The question of the exercise of his discretion by the Commissioner is a matter solely for the Commissioner and not a matter for the High Court to consider in a reference.

Reference submitted by the Commissioner of Income Tax U. P. as per his letter No.—O. No. 60829 I. T. dated the 13th January, 1930.

Mr. M. N. Kaul (with him Dr. K. N. Katju), for the Applicant.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax on the application of an assessee who is a minor of unsound mind under the guardianship of his mother. On the 2nd February, 1927, the Income-tax Officer made an assessment under s. 23 (4) of the Indian Income Tax Act, acting under that section because no return of income had been filed. The assessment was on an income estimated at

Rs. 1,17,600 and the minor was assessed to income-tax and super-tax, the assessment being based on the income estimated for 1925-26. On 11th March, 1928, the Income Tax Officer came to the conclusion that some income had escaped assessment and accordingly he issued a notice to the minor under ss. 22 (2) and 34 for the same year's income. Accounts were filed and the Income-tax Officer assessed the income as Rs. 1,31,875. Against that assessment of extra income an appeal was made to the Assistant Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner held that the actual income was less than the Rs. 1,17,600 which had been originally assessed on the 2nd of February, 1927. It is admitted that he did not proceed to find what in his opinion the total income was, but he treated the matter before him as confined to the appeal against an assessment on additional income and he accordingly allowed the appeal.

The assessee has now asked that an opinion should be given as to whether the Assistant Commissioner was precluded from granting relief to the assessee against the original assessment under s. 23 (4). This is the main point in the case. Now s. 34 under which the second notice was issued states as follows:—

"If for any reason income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax has escaped assessment in any year, or has been assessed at too low a rate, the Income-tax Officer may, at any time within one year of the end of that year, serve on the person liable to pay tax on such income, profits or gains, or, in the case of a company, on the principal officer thereof, a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under sub-s. (2) of s. 22, and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income, profits or gains, and the provisions of this Act shall, so far as may be, apply accordingly as if the notice were a notice issued under that sub-section."

We consider that the words in a later part of the passage quoted, "Assess or reassess such income, profits or gains" must be taken to refer to the income profits or gains chargeable to income-tax which have escaped assessment referred to in the prior part of the section. Accordingly in a proceeding under s. 34 the Income-tax Officer and after him the Assistant Commissioner are only dealing with the extra income which has not been assessed to income-tax. No jurisdiction is given to either of these officers by s. 34 to make new assessment for the purpose of taxing the whole of that assessment under the Income-Tax Act. Accordingly our answer to the first question "do the provisions of s. 34 limit the action of the Income-Tax Authorities to the assessment of income which has previously escaped assessment or which has been assessed at too low a rate" is in the affirmative. We hold that the Assistant Commissioner of Income-Tax was precluded from granting any further relief to the assessee than allowing his appeal against the assessment of extra income-tax. We may note that this opinion is in accordance with an opinion of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in O P. No. 168 of 1928 decided on 14th October, 1929, Palaniappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income Tax (1) in the petition of P. L. M. P. L. Palaniappa Chettiar, Pudukkottai, Ramnad District.

The second question is whether s. 34 confers on the authorities "a power of revision of a previous assessment and if the revision results in showing that the assessment under s. 23 (4) was too much can relief be granted to the assessee." As already stated we consider that this question must be answered in the negative.

A further question was put forward by the assessee as to whether the Commissioner could exercise his discretion in his favour under s. 33 of the Act. The question of the exercise of his discretion by the Commissioner is a matter solely for the Commissioner and not a matter for this Court to consider in a reference.

No further question arises on this reference. Accordingly we direct that the reference be returned with these answers.

As the applicant has not succeeded in his application, we direct that he should pay his own costs and the costs of the Government including the fees of the Government Advocate assessed at Rs. 100.

Execution Second Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 21st December, 1929.

Messrs. Harbans Sahai and Sri Narain Sahai, for the Applicant

Mr. Zafar Mehdi, for the Respondents.

Judgment—The only question to decide in this appeal is whether a grove belonging to the judgment debtors can or cannot be sold in execution of a decree. The judgment-debtors are ex-proprietary tenants and the grove is situated on their ex-proprietary tenancy. Under the Agra Tenancy Act of 1926 the interest of a grove-holder can be transferred in execution of a decree of a Civil or Revenue Court, and "a grove-holder" is defined in s. 196 of the Act. The various classes of grove-holders mentioned in that section include one who has planted a grove on land held by him as a tenant, and it was for the judgment-debtors to show that this grove planted by them on their tenancy land is a grove which for some reason is exempt from the provisions of s. 197 of the Act. The Courts below appear to have overlooked the new Act and decided the case on the basis of a decision of this Court reported in Revenue Cases for 1927, page 123 Hafizan v. Chhoko Lal. We find that that case refers to the Agra Tenancy Act, No. II of 1901, and is no authority for the rights of a grove-holder under the new Act. In our opinion, this grove can be sold in execution of a decree. We, therefore, allow this appeal with costs, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the objection with costs.

If a decree passed by a Court cannot operate as res judicata owing to incompetency of that Court to try the subsequent suit, the fact that the decree was based upon an award cannot render the matters decided in that decree or the award itself res judicata. Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basu (1) and Krishna Panda v. Balram Pande (2), distinguished. [p. 581, col. 2.]

The Evidence Act itself does not draw a distinction between a judgment which is not inter partes and a judgment which is inter partes, except where the judgment is clearly res judicata. [p. 582, col. 2; p. 583, col. 1.]

A judgment other than a judgment referred to in ss. 40 to 42 may be admissible to prove that a right was asserted or denied under s. 13 of the Evidence Act or to explain or introduce facts in issue or to explain the history of the case. But unless a judgment is relevant under ss. 40 to 42 of the Evidence Act, it is not evidence at all so far as regards the matter which it decides. [p. 583, col. 1.]

Case-law discussed.

Under the Hindu Law though a declaration of intention to separate must be made in definite and unambiguous terms it does not follow that where there is no evidence of an express declaration of intention, separation cannot be proved. The question is really one of intention and all that the law requires is that the intention should be clearly and unequivocally expressed whether it be by explicit declaration or by conduct. [p. 588, col. 1.]

In the absence of an explicit declaration, the evidence of conduct as well as of the surrounding circumstances is material for the purpose of judging whether the member intended to separate or not. [p. 588, col. 2.]

Though certain circumstances when taken individually do not furnish conclusive evidence of separation, yet they may point to a different conclusion when taken collectively or with reference to the particular facts of any individual case. [p. 588, col. 1.]

Though cessor of commensality may not be conclusive yet it may properly be considered in determining the question whether there was a partition of the joint family or not [p. 588, col. 2.]

When a partial partition is proved or admitted to have taken place, the presumption is that there has been an entire partition both with reference to rights and properties. [p. 589, col. 1.]

The rule giving protection to pardanashins is not strictly applicable to cases where the pardanashin is not a contracting party and the case is one of fraud not undue influence. [p. 591, col. 2.]

First Appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 30th November, 1927.

Mr A. K. Roy (with him Messrs. R. S. Chatterji and S. S. Prashad Singh), for the Appellants.

Messrs A. B. Mukherjee and B. B. Mukherjee, for the Respondents.

Fazl Ali, J.—These appeals arise out of two suits which were tried together by the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum and which were instituted under circumstances which will presently appear

One Bechan Ojha had two sons, Baijnath Ojha and Biswanath Ojha. Baijnath Ojha died leaving behind a widow Musammat Rashooni and a son Ramlal Ojha and Biswanath died leaving a son Nandlal. It is common ground that Nandlal and Ramlal remained joint till the year 1245 B. S. or 1888. It is further fully established that the two cousins not only separated in mess in the year 8-8 but also divided their moveables as well as nij jote lands which they began to cultivate separately. The only properties which were not divided were those in Mauza Tilai and Sirkabad. Between 1845 and 1900 a fresh property which is referred to in Sch. IV of the plaint filed in Suit No. 3 and which may be called the Jerka property was acquired in Ramlal's name by three separate deeds, one of which was virtually a kabala or a sale-deed and the other two leases. In Baisak, 1314, or April, 1907, Ramlal died leaving behind him two widows Umamayi and Purnima and a daughter by Umamayi named Amodbala and it is hardly necessary to say that under the Hindu Law, if Ramlal died in state of jointness with Nandlal, the latter became entitled to the entire property by the rule of survivorship; but on the other hand, if he had separated from Nandlal before his death, his two widows were entitled to succeed to his property. In September, 1908, Umamayi settled Ramlal's share in Manirambad lands in village Sirkabad with one Kartik Mahto who executed a registered kabuliyat in her favour and the boundaries given in the documents show that the lands of Nandlal in this chak were quite separate from those of Ramlal. In November, 1903, Umamayi and her co-widow Purnima describing themselves as the heirs of Ramlal Ojha brought a suit against Mugal Baumij and Amar Singh Sardar for the possession of certain lands in village Jerka and the suit was this suit, was no other person than the proprietor of Jerka from whom Ramlal had acquired the Jerka property. In February 1909, Umamayi and Purnima brought a Small Cause Court suit against Nandlal Ojha for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the allegation that he had realised not only his share but their share of the rent also from certain tenants in village Tilai. The suit was contested by Nandlal on various grounds, one of which was that he was entitled to the entire property left by Ramlal as survivor. The matter was referred to the arbitration of three Pleaders of Purulia and by their award they upheld the claim of the widow and overruled the plea that Ramlal was joint with Nandlal and the latter was entitled to the property by way of survivorship. This award being accepted by the Court a decree was passed accordingly. In execution of the decree Umamayi proceeded to attach Nandlal's share in village Tilai but Nandlal paid the decretal amount and a petition of satisfaction was filed. From 1909 onwards up to her death which took place in the year 1916 Umamayi continued to possess and deal with the properties as if she and her co-widow were the heir of Ramlal and no step appears to have been taken by Nandlal either to question her rights or to get an adjudication as to his claim of survivorship. In August, 1909, Amar Singh Sardar who had granted the previous leases to her husband gave to her and not to Nandlal a fresh patta in respect of certain lands in village Jerka which she had purchased from one Kuna Laya and thereby recognised her as a tenant in respect of those lands. In 1913 she and her co-widow Purnima applied for and obtained a succession certificate from the District Judge of Manbhum-Sambalpur. In June, 1914, she granted a lease to Kartik Mahto in respect of Manirambad lands for a further period of five years. In 1915 Amar Singh Sardar, the proprietor of Jerka, sued her and obtained a decree against her for arrears of cess in respect of village Jerka. The documentary evidence filed by Nandlal also supports the case that Umamayi was in undisturbed possession of at least Tilai and Jerka so long as she was alive and in fact he attempts to explain her possession by setting up a story that she was allowed to remain in possession in lieu of maintenance. It is impossible, however, to accept this explanation in view of the fact that Umamayi had been asserting throughout that she was holding the property as an heir of Ramlal and also because no such case as is now set up by Nandlal was set up either in his plaint in Suit No. 3 nor in his written statement in Suit No. 50. It is true that Nandlal did contend, though unsuccessfully, before the Settlement Court in the year 1921 that Umamayi was in possession of Jerka in lieu of maintenance; but what was contended before us was that she was in possession of not only Jerka but also of Tilai in the aforesaid capacity. Again, if Umamayi was allowed by Nandlal to be in possession in lieu of maintenance, there seems to be no good reason for his not showing similar indulgence to Purnima, who was equally entitled to maintenance. On the other hand, what we find is that soon after Umamayi's death Nandlal attempted once more to secure for himself the entire property.

It appears that when Umamayi died Purnima was still quite young, for even according to the estimate of her age given by Nagendra Nath Chakravarty, a witness for Nandlal, she must have been about 14 or 15 years of age at the time, while according to the other witnesses she was still younger (vide P. W. No. 3). The settlement operations were also to commence shortly in the District and in fact they actually commenced about the year 1920. Thus we find that in January, 1918, Nandlal obtained two kabuliyats in his favour in respect of certain lands in Sirikabad (Exs. 11 and 20). Again on the 31st January, 1918, he got an ekrarnama from one Dharup Singh Sardar by which the latter was given the right to fish in a tank appertaining to Jerka for a period of four months. We also find that in the same year he obtained certain rent receipts in respect of village Jerka, Exs. 14 (c), (d), (e) and (f), though it is to be noted that he has not filed any receipts in respect of this village of a date prior to the year 1325 or 1918 and the other receipts which he has filed relate to the year 1332. There were also two rent suits brought against him in respect of land in village Sirikabad and both the suits were allowed to be decreed ex parte though curiously enough the period for which the two suits were brought to some extent overlapped each other. Meanwhile about the year 1920 settlement operations began and once more it was asserted by Nandlal that Ramlal had died in a state of jointness with him and so he was entitled to the entire property of the family by survivorship. Thus a dispute arose before the Settlement Officers in charge of Khanapuri and attesta-tion work as to whether the name of Nandlal or that of Purnima and Amodebala Debya, the daughter of Ramlal, should be entered in respect of village Jerka and Ramlal's share in village Tilai and Sirkabad. Nandlal wholly failed with regard to Tilai and Jerka and ultimately khewats were prepared in the name of Purnima in respect of these villages [D (1), D (2), Z, 31]. With regard to Sirkabad, however, Nandlal was partially successful and on the 30th July, 1921, he preferred an objection under s. 83, cl. (1), and s. 111, cl. (1), of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act praying that

"after striking off the name of Sreemati Purnimamai Debya the khatian may be amended by preparing the 6-annas khewats in the name of Nandlal Ojha."

This objection was decided in his favour on the 5th September, 1921, on the ground that one Sashi Bhusan Ojha, who was the agent and brother of Purnima had admitted the objector's claims and stated before the Settlement Officer that his sister Purnima had got no share and that according to Mitakshara she was not entitled to any share. Relying upon this admission the Settlement Officer cancelled Purnima's khewat and recorded an order that the khewat should be prepared in the name of Nandlal. In connection with this entry it was pointed out in this Court on behalf of Purnima that Ex. 24 which purports to be a general power of attorney given by Purnima to Sashi Bhusan Ojha (who is not her brother but only a cousin) is not a registered document and that curiously enough the alleged signature of Purnima on this document purports to have been written by Sashi Bhusan Ojha himself. On the other hand it has been urged that Sashi Bhusan Ojha should have been examined on behalf of Purnima to deny that he had appeared before the Settlement Officer and made the admission which is attributed to him. However that may be, it is clear that the admission in question was not made by Purnima directly but is said to have been made by her through another person and it has not been proved that this other person, whoever he may be, had really been authorised by Purnima to make any admission on her behalf. Besides, it appears that Nandlal had by this time succeeded in winning over Purnima to his side with the result that Purnima began to live in Nandlal's house and Amodebala, the daughter of Ramlal (whose husband Kali Kinker Misser had died while the survey operation was going on), was left alone to carry on the struggle with Nandlal.

In this fight Nandlal was decidedly in a position of some advantage, because he could successfully urge, and on certain occasions did urge, that during the lifetime of Purnima, Amodebala had no interest in the properties of Ramlal even on the assumption that Nandlal and Ramlal had separated. It appears, however, that Amodebala also had some influence over the tenants because we find that on 28th September, 1922, Nandlal was forced to bring a rent suit against certain tenants of Sirkabad—Alai Mahta and others for the recovery of Rs. 48 on the allegation that though the defendants had delivered to him his share of the paddy, they had removed the entire straw. The suit was contested by the first defendant who pleaded that he held the land under Umamayi and afterwards under her daughter Amodebala and he also contended that the suit could not proceed in the absence of Amodebala and Purnima. Both Amodebala and Purnima were accordingly made parties to the suit but the suit was contested mainly by Alai Mahta and Amodebala. The suit was finally dismissed on the ground that the kabuliyat of 1918 which had been executed in Nandlal's favour shortly after the death of Umamayi was a collusive document. Nandlal appealed from this decision to the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, but his appeal also was dismissed on the 15th February, 1923. Meanwhile Nandlal brought a suit (Suit No. 48 of 1923) against Purnima for a declaration that Tilai and Jerka properties belonged to him, that the defendant had not right to the said properties and that the Record of Rights had been incorrectly prepared. This suit was instituted on the 13th March, 1923, and was decreed on the 31st May, 1923. As the circumstances under which the decree was obtained have to be investigated in this appeal, it is sufficient to say that the decree purports to have been passed on the admission of Purnima as contained in her deposition which was recorded by a Commissioner Babu Pashupati Mukherji. In the same year Nandlal Ojha once more instituted a rent suit against Alai Mahta for the recovery of produce rent for the years 1328 and 1329 in respect of the land held by him in Sirkabad. Alai Mahta again challenged the title of Nandlal and pleaded having made a bona fide payment of rent to Amodebala, and the latter was, therefore, impleaded as a pro forma defendant. This suit also was dismissed with costs and the decision of the trial Court was upheld on appeal by the Judicial Commissioner of Manbhum, the judgment of the Appellate Court being delivered on the 16th January, 1925. On 6th January, 1926, Nandal instituted Suit No. 3 of 1926 (out of which Appeal No. 142 arises) upon the allegation that Ramlal Ojha had died in a state of jointness with him; that neither his two widows nor Amodébala could, therefore, inherit his property and that defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 (against whom the two rent suits had been unsuccessfully brought by Nandal) were liable to pay rent to him and not to any other person. The reliefs that he prayed for in his plaint were as follows :

"(a) That it may be declared that the plaintiff has got panchak brahmottar right, mentioned in the plaint to the land specified in Sch. III and that defendant No. 1 has no right whatever thereto.

(b) That after declaring the plaintiffs' right to get bhag paddy from defendant No. 2 in respect of land in the possession of Alai Mahata within the land, covered by Sch. III, a decree for khas possession thereof may be passed in favour of the plaintiff

(c) That if defendant No. 1 has realised bhag paddy for the years 1330, 1331 and 1332 B. S. from defendant No. 2 in decree for Rs. 201 (two hundred one) on account of the price of the said paddy may be passed against her.

(d) And that costs in Court and interest may also be awarded."

Written statements were filed in this suit by all the defendants, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 admitting the claims of the plaintiff and the other defendants contesting it. The main ground on which the suit was contested by Purnima and Amodébala was that Ramlal had separated during his lifetime from Nandal and that, therefore, Nandal was not entitled to any property by way of survivorship. It was further contended that the matter was res judicata in view of the decision in the Small Cause Suit No. 215 of 1908 and there was also a plea of limitation raised. Alai Mahta, defendant No. 2, alleged that the kabuliyat of 1918 was collusive, inoperative and invalid and had been obtained by Nandal in order to create evidence on his behalf and that the decision in the previous suit as to the collusive nature of the kabuliyat was binding on the plaintiff. It was also alleged by him that he and his brothers formerly held their land under Ramlal Ojha and subsequently under Umamayi and then under defendant No. 1 Amodébala. In May, 1929, Purnima brought Suit No. 50 of 1926 (which is the subject-matter of Appeal No. 142) for setting aside the decree obtained in Suit No. 48 of 1923 on the ground of fraud. Her main allegations have been set forth in paras. 8, 9 and 10 of the plaint and were in substance these: (1) that she had no knowledge of the suit; (2) that she had not appointed Babu Brajendra Nath Mazumdar (the Pleader who acted for her in the suit) as her Pleader; (3) that she never authorised him to ask for Commission or to take the other steps which were taken in the suit; (4) that the deposition recorded by the Commissioner did not represent her statement, nor had she made a voluntary statement before him; and that in fact she had been made to say "yes" or "no" to every question put to her; (5) that the defendant instead of disclosing the real facts before the Court had suppressed them and had obtained the decree by practising fraud upon the Court.

The defence of Nandal on the other hand was that he had not practised any fraud upon the Court and that the decree obtained by him was binding upon Purnima. Upon these allegations a number of issues were framed in both suits and by consent of the parties the two suits were tried together.

Two main questions arose at the trial—(1) whether Ramlal had separated in estate from Nandal during his life time; and (2) whether the decree in Suit No. 48 of 1923 was vitiated by fraud. It need not be stated that the first issue was considered to be the most material issue so far as Suit No. 3 of 1926 was concerned, while the second was the chief issue in Suit No. 50. The learned Subordinate Judge held that Nandal was entitled to the declaration prayed for by him in his plaint as he was of opinion that Ramlal had died in a state of jointness with him. With regard to Jerka property, however, he found that it was the self-acquired property of Ramlal and, therefore, Nandal had no valid claim to it. In Suit No. 50, he held that the decree obtained by Nandal was vitiated by fraud; but in view of his finding that Nandal was entitled to all the properties excepting Jerka, he vacated the decree only with regard to Jerka.

From this decision two appeals have been preferred one by Amodébala and Purnima and another by Purnima alone. In Appeal No. 141, which arises out of Suit No. 50, the grievance of the appellant is that when the decree was found to have been vitiated by fraud, it should have been vacated in its entirety, whereas the main question raised in Appeal No. 142, which arises out of Suit No. 3, is that it should have been held that Ramlal had been separate from Nandal and that the suit of Nandal should have been dismissed on certain legal grounds. The cross-objection of Nandal in Appeal No. 141 relates to the finding that the decree in Suit No. 48 had been procured by fraud, whereas the cross-objection in the other appeal relates to the finding as to Jerka being the self-acquired property of Ramlal.

Both the appeals and cross-objections have been argued at great length in this Court and the arguments were mainly directed to the two important questions in the case to which I have already referred.

I shall first take up the question as to whether Ramlal died in a state of jointness or separation with Nandlal because that was the first question argued before us although logically the second question, namely, whether the decree in Suit No. 48 was obtained by fraud, should have been dealt with first.

The learned Advocate for the appellant in discussing this question has referred us to a large number of documents but before dealing with them in detail, I would like to dispose of two preliminary points raised in course of the argument. It was said in the first place that the decree in the Small Cause Court suit of 1908 in which the identical question had been raised by the parties and decided by the arbitrators operates as res judicata. It is conceded that the Small Cause Court which tried the previous suit was not competent to try the present suit and, therefore, one of the conditions laid down by s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is not satisfied. It was, however, urged that what we have to look is whether the arbitrators who gave the award were or were not competent to try the present suit and as there is no limit to the jurisdiction of the arbitrators, the award given by them would operate as a res judicata. In support of his argument the learned Advocate for the appellant relied upon Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Behari Lal Basu (1) and Krishna Prasad v. Balram Pande (2). Neither of these cases, however, appears to me to help the appellant. In Bhajahari's case (1) Mookerjee, J. simply pointed out that certain rights may be created under an award even though it has not been enforced either by an application under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code or by a regular suit. Similarly in the case decided by the Madras High Court although both parties having objected to the award, it had never been carried into effect, it was held in a subsequent suit for partition that such an award was equivalent to a final judgment and was binding on the parties in the absence of positive evidence that both parties had agreed that the former state of things should be restored. It is not disputed here that the award was final so far as the claim in the Small Cause Court suit is concerned; but it does not follow that the award by itself will have any greater value than the decree of the Court which is based upon the award. If, therefore, a decree passed on contest in the Small Cause Court suit could not operate as res judicata, I do not see how a decree based upon an award in the same suit or the award itself, if it is possible to treat it as something apart from the decree, can operate to make any matters decided thereby res judicata.

The next point urged was that the decisions in the Small Cause Court suit as well as in certain other proceedings which followed it including the proceedings before the Settlement Officers, even though they might not operate as res judicata, should be treated as evidence in the case and some stress was laid on the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge had in the face of so many decisions, come to a finding that the two cousins were joint at the time of Ramlal's death. Here again, I am afraid the learned Advocate for the appellant is attempting to place his case too high. The question as to whether a certain judgment pronounced in another case is or is not relevant is to be governed by ss. 40 to 42 of the Evidence Act. It is conceded that these judgments would not come under ss. 40 to 42 and s. 43 clearly provides that such judgments as are not relevant under these sections are irrelevant unless the existence of such judgment is a fact in issue or is relevant under some other provisions of this Act. The question as to whether there are any other provisions in the Act which would make such judgments relevant has been debated in a series of cases in this country. In Gujju Lal v. Fatteh Lal (3) it was held by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, Mitter, J., dissenting, that a former judgment which is not a judgment in rem, nor one relating to matters of public nature, is not admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit either as res judicata or as proof of the particular point which is decided, unless between the same parties or those claiming under them. A question arose in this case whether such a judgment was admissible under s. 13 of the Evidence Act and Garth, O. J., expressed an opinion that the former judgment was not a transaction and that the right claimed in the particular suit was not a right within the meaning of s. 13. On the other hand in Collector of Gorakhpur v. Palakdhari Singh (4) a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court came to a different conclusion and held (Brodhurst, J. dissenting) that such judgments were in many cases admissible under s. 13. The view that was put forward in this case was that the majority of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court had put too narrow a construction on the word "right" as used in s. 13 and that the terms 'right' includes not only incorporeal rights, but a right of ownership. It was further held that though the judgment itself was not a transaction, the suit or the litigation in which it was pronounced might be treated as a transaction or an instance in which a right may have been asserted, acknowledged or denied. The point has been considered so exhaustively in these two judgments that I do not think it is necessary for me to deal with it at any great length. It appears, however, that although in many cases the Judges have expressed the view that the decree if not conclusive evidence is not evidence at all.—[See Mahendra Lal Khan v. Rosomoyi Dasi (5), Surendra Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry (6), Krishnasami Ayyangar v. Rajagopala Ayyangar (7), Ramasami v. Appavu (8) and Subramanyan v. Paramaswaran (9).] There are on the other hand, a large number of cases where the Courts have shown their inclination towards the view propounded by Mitter, J. in Gujju Singh v. Fatteh Lal (3). In Abinash Chandra Chatterjee v. Paresh Nath Ghose (10) Ghose, J. observed—

"I am disposed to hold that the Judicial Committee in Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh (11) and Bitto Kuar v. Kesho Prasad Missir (12), rather adopted the views expressed by Mitter, J. in Gujju Singh v. Fatteh Lal (3), wherein the learned Judge held that a judgment though not inter partes may be received in evidence under s. 11 or s. 13 of the Evidence Act."

Kondan* (17) (here the judgment was held to be admissible to prove the result of an admission). It appears that in certain special circumstances the Judicial Committee also has not questioned the admissibility of such judgments. In Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (18), Sir R. P. Collier observed—

"Although the judgment in the rent suit is not conclusive still their Lordships cannot help attaching some weight to the decision of the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge both natives, who heard the same case as that now before us, and a good deal of the same evidence. It may be added that the judgment in the certificate suit in which the plaintiff set up the same case was the same; it was the same, also, and the case and evidence much the same, in proceeding before a Magistrate requiring the plaintiff to enter into recognizance to keep the peace. All the native Judges who have heard the case—and it has been heard by them four times—have concurred in their judgment upon it."

Similarly in Bitto Kuer v. Kesho Prasad Missir (12) it was held that a prior judgment was admissible though not conclusive evidence in the case. In one case [Midnapur Zamindari Company, Limited v. Naresh Narayan Roy (19)] it was observed that a previous decision was entitled to some weight as the facts of the case were nearer to the ken of the Court which decided it. See also Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh (11), Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhurani (20).

In some cases again a distinction has been made between a judgment which is inter partes and one which is not so, a distinction which has not been lost sight of even in Gujju Singh v. Fatteh Lal (3) (and sometimes it has also been emphasised that although a judgment given in a different case will not be generally admissible under the English Law, it should not be supposed that Indian Evidence Act is a mere servile copy of the English Law. Apart, however, from the case law on the subject, it appears to me that the Evidence Act itself does not draw a distinction between a judgment which is not inter partes and a judgment which is inter partes except where the judgment is clearly res judicata. The logical view, therefore, seems to me to be that unless a judgment is relevant under ss. 40 to 42 of the Evidence Act, it is not evidence at all so far as regards the matter which it decides. It is true that s. 43 provides that a judgment other than that mentioned in ss. 40 to 42 though otherwise inadmissible may be admissible if it is relevant under some other provisions of this Act. Also in view of the numerous decisions of the various High Courts in this country as well as the decision of the Privy Council in Dinomi Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhurani (20). It is now, in my opinion, too late to say that a litigation or a suit is not a transaction and that the word "right" as used in s. 13 must be interpreted in the somewhat narrow sense in which it was construed in Gujju Singh v. Fatteh Lall (3). Taking this view as I do, I am inclined to think that a judgment other than a judgment referred to in ss. 40 to 42 may be admissible to prove that a right was asserted or denied under s. 13 of the Evidence Act or to explain or introduce facts in issues or to explain the history of the case. In some cases it has also been held that it may be used to prove an admission made by the ancestor of one of the parties (though the decisions on this point are not unanimous) or to show how certain property was dealt with in the past. I must confess, however, that I have not been able to discover any provision in the Evidence Act which would warrant the view that the actual decision or the findings arrived at in a previous judgment can be used as evidence to decide the points which are in issue in a particular case. Such a decision may by virtue of specific provisions operate as res judicata or be relevant as a pronouncement on matters of public nature, but otherwise it is not better than a mere opinion expressed on the issues involved in a particular case and the Evidence Act is clear that "opinion" will be relevant in those cases only which are specifically referred to in the Act and in no others. I am of opinion, therefore, that although, as observed by Sargent, C. J. in Ranchhodas Krishnadas v. Bapu Narhar (21) one might have wished that the door had been opened somewhat wider for this class of evidence yet under the law as it stands the actual decision or the findings arrived at in a judgment pronounced in a different case are inadmissible except in cases referred to under ss. 40 to 42 of the Evidence Act and except perhaps in the special type of cases which have been referred to by the Judicial Committee. This being my view, although I would not go so far as to hold that the judgments which are on the record of the present case were inadmissible, I would proceed to decide this case not upon the findings which have been arrived at in favour of the appellant in those judgments, but upon the other evidence adduced in the case.

Now, the most important evidence in this case is an old document, Ex. M of Baisak, 1295, corresponding to April, 1888. It purports to be a receipt given by Nandlal Ojha to Ramlal Ojha and runs thus:—

"This receipt is executed to the following effect. That your father late Biswanath Ojha and my father late Shrinath Ojha were two brothers, of whom you are the son of the eldest and I am the son of the youngest. I lost my mother while I was a child. Your mother has brought up both the brothers. We both the brothers having proposed to separate from each other in mess, we appointed Raghmani Adhikari, Mukhtear of Purulia Court, and Fachu Malla of Raghunathdih, Parganas Kansaipur and Muchiram Mahata of Keraya and Goor Dutta of Ghatbera and sixteen annas tenants of the village, as panchayat; and we having agreed to the partition and division made by them, we receive in our respective shares movables and immovables articles, etc., as per schedule herein below. Hence, after having received all (?) the things detailed in the schedule, I execute this receipt in your favour for the purpose of a memorandum.

Then follows a Schedule in which a list of properties allotted to the two cousins is given and then appear the signatures of certain persons. We have examined this document carefully and in my opinion there can be no question as to its genuineness. It has been proved to be in the hand-writing of one Raghmani mukhtar who even Nandlal admits used to act as his mukhtar in the old days and who has been long dead. It appears to have been filed in the suit of 1908 and the admission made in the plaint of Nandlal that he separated in mess and began to cultivate some lands separately in the year 1295 also goes to support its genuineness. The question, however, is whether this document proves that there was an effective severance of joint estate in the year 1295. The learned Advocate for the respondent tries to show that there was only a separation in mess then and the only reason for the separation was that Nandlal was asked to cook food even after Ramlal had married a wife. It is urged by him that a mere separation in mess which was induced by an ordinary quarrel like this could not be regarded as sufficient to cause a disruption of the joint family. Stress is also laid upon the words "we both the brothers having proposed to separate from each other in mees" and it is argued that this clearly indicates that the intention was to separate in mess only. The learned Advocate for the appellant on the other hand contends that the document should be read as a whole and that the Bengali expression which has been translated as meaning "separation in mees" does not really carry that meaning but means in ordinary parlance an effective partition. As this view is not accepted on behalf of the respondent I shall proceed on the assumption that the document has been correctly translated, though I agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant that it will be most unsafe to isolate any particular passage in the document from its context for the purpose of discovering what the intention of the parties was when this document was written. We must also bear in mind that this document does not claim or purport to be a complete and self-contained formal agreement entered into between parties but merely evidences to some extent what actually happened and should, therefore, be considered along with the evidence as to the surrounding circumstances and other matters. We have, therefore, to examine not only the language of this document but also the Schedule which is an integral part of it and also consider the extent and kind of properties partitioned and those left undivided. As to the recital in the document itself, it is true that it is said in one place that the cousins had proposed to separate in mess, yet in the very next sentence it is made clear that they had also agreed to the partition and division made by the panches. It is significant that the writer had not only used the words partition and division here, but also referred to "their respective shares in movable and immovable articles as given in the schedule." It is needless to emphasise that a mere agreement to hold separate properties for the sake of convenience is quite different from getting one's share in the joint property by means of a division or partition; and that the latter was the case is fully confirmed by a careful perusal of the schedule attached to this document. It is fully established by evidence that the parties divided on this occasion all their movables and nij-jote lands and on this point there has been no serious controversy. It is also apparent from the schedule that in many cases and where it was possible the division was made in equal or half shares. What is most significant is that each party got an equal number of ploughs and bullocks as well as buffaloes and cows. As to the extent of this division though the learned Advocate for the respondent has tried to belittle it, it is enough to point out that although Nandlal was not yet married and had to support no other member of the family excepting himself, yet he was given half the number of cattle possessed by the family, namely, eight buffaloes, eight bullocks and 13 cows. This matter has an important bearing upon the contention of the respondent that Ramlal got more land on this occasion than he himself, a contention which seems to have been favoured by the learned Subordinate Judge. It appears to me that the actual evidence in the case does not necessarily lead to that conclusion. The learned Subordinate Judge has laid some stress on an admission made by Lochan Mahto D. W. No 2 that Ramlal cultivated with 12 ploughs and Nandlal with 5 or 6 ploughs. This statement, however, must be taken along with the statement made by the witness that this was because Nandlal was alone and that there were several members in Ramlal's family and it is clear that merely because Nandlal chose to cultivate a lesser area of land, it does not follow that the two cousins had received unequal quantities at the partition. I have already stated that they had received an equal number of bullocks and ploughs by the partition and it was open to them either to cultivate the entire lands themselves or to cultivate only a part of the land and make some arrangement regarding the rest. One cannot in this connection altogether ignore that Nandlal himself stated that he began to plough with 5 ploughs and Ramlal with eight ploughs and that his witness P. W. (Jaichand Rajwar) made the following statement—

 "Nandlal and Ramlal cultivated separately and they took food separately. For 16 to 20 years they are in separate cultivation. I am seeing them cultivating them in equal shares."

Then says—

"Nandlal had cultivation of 4 or 5 ploughs and Ramlal of 8 or 10."

The nij-jote lands which Ramlal and Nandlal possessed separately since 12½ Fasli have been recorded separately in survey papers and if Nandlal seriously contended that he had got an unequal share in these lands it was easy enough for him to prove this. In my opinion, it is difficult to hold on the evidence as it stands that Ramlal got more land than Nandlal by the partition of 1295 or whatever we may choose to call it.

Turning now to the properties which were left undivided we find that they were only those lands in village Tilai and Sirkabad for which the family was entitled to receive rent from tenants. There appears to be no special significance in the fact that these lands were left undivided because all that had to be done was to realise rent from the tenants and it is not uncommon to find even members of different families holding such properties in common. Another fact which is to be borne in mind is that according to evidence the income of Tilai was only about Rs. 150 and although we have no evidence as to the income of Sirkabad, yet under the original sanad of 1864 by which it was granted, a moguli rent of Rs. 4 only was payable in respect of this property and the kabuliyats relied on by Nandlal show an income of Rs. 300 a year whereas the khewat Ex. 6 records only an area of 35.23 acres. On the other hand, each share of the lands actually divided yielded according to the evidence on the records annually 300 to 600 or 700 maunds of paddy. It is again in evidence that both Ramlal and Nandlal used to live in separate houses and used to pay their chaukidari taxes separately (vide Ex. Q series). Even as regards the property which was left undivided, the thokas of village Tilai (Exs. N to N-7) some of which have been proved to be in the hand-writing of Ramlal who died in the year 1907 show that he was realising only his half share in this mauza. The learned Subordinate Judge has without assigning any reason whatsoever dismissed these documents on the ground that he is not satisfied with their genuineness, but I regret I cannot agree with him in this finding. These documents were produced in Court as long ago as in 1908 and were used in various litigations against Nandlal. I have already stated that some of them have been proved to be in the handwriting of Ramlal and as this evidence stands un rebutted their genuineness is established beyond doubt for they could not have been manufactured after the death of Ramlal. In my opinion the thokas written by Ramlal are admissible under s. 32 (2) of the Evidence Act and it is clearly noted in one of these papers that they related only to a half share in the mauza. There is also internal evidence to support this statement, because we find that the rent realized from Sarban Mahatra was exactly half of what had been fixed by the patta Ex. 9 (a) executed jointly by Nandlal and Ramlal in his favour during the life-time of Ramlal. It is also to be noted that after 1895 the Jerka property was acquired in the name of Ramlal alone and even the learned Subordinate Judge had to hold on the evidence before him that this was the self-acquired property of Ramlal. I have already stated that this property was acquired during the life-time of Ramlal by three documents and Nandlal states that he was present on all the occasions on which the consideration was paid to the former proprietor of Jerka. It is curious, however, that although in every other document, which related to the property which was admittedly common, both Ramlal and Nandlal joined, the Jerka properties were allowed to be acquired only in the name of Ramlal. It is true that such a transaction is possible even in a joint family; and where the family is joint, the mere fact that a certain property has been acquired in the name of one of the members only, does not necessarily make it the sole property of that particular member. In this particular case, however, it has been proved by D. W. No. 1, and his statement is supported by Ex. D-1, that about the year 1304 Fasli of 1897 there was a criminal case between Ramlal and Nandlal in which the complaint was that one of these persons had encroached upon the land of the other. It is, therefore, a matter to be considered as to whether in such circumstances Nandlal who was older than Ramlal would allow the acquisition to be made in the name of Ramlal only. Again what we find is that in 1909 the very proprietor of Jerka who had executed the three previous documents in favour of Ramlal executed a fourth document in favour of Umamayi, the widow of Ramlal, and not Nandlal. I do not suggest that any of these matters taken by itself is conclusive; but one will have to take into consideration the cumulative effect of all these transactions. The criminal case to which I have referred has not only an important bearing on the question as to whether the Jerka property was acquired by Ramlal for himself alone or for himself and Nandlal but also on the general question as to whether Ramlal and Nandlal were joint at the time when this case was instituted. It is needless to say that it is not usual to find one member of a joint family bringing a case of trespass against another in respect of property which is still in law joint but which is held in separate possession only for the convenience of enjoyment by individual members of the joint family.

A joint Hindu family again has certain peculiar features of its own, but the evidence in this case, so far as it goes, discloses that those features are singularly wanting in this case. Generally one would expect a karta or a manager in the family and some sort of a joint fund or family chest or till as it is sometimes called which is drawn upon on such occasions as the marriage of a daughter or a member of the joint family or the shraddh of a deceased member. In this particular case Nandlal was admittedly the older member and it is stated in para. 1 of his written statement in Suit No. 50 of 1925 that "When the defendant and Ramlal Ojha were members of one family and joint in mess they all lived under the care of Rashmoin Ojhain, mother of Ramlal. The property described in Sch. III of the plaint was acquired at that time out of the income of the joint property and the defendant formerly as karta of the joint family and thereafter alone is in possession thereof."

Here there is a clear suggestion that Nandlal was the karta of the family after the death of Rashmoin and was the sole owner of Jerka after the death of Ramlal. The case about Nandlal being a karta seems to have been abandoned at the trial and in evidence an attempt was made to suggest that Ramlal being the more intelligent of the two cousins was entrusted with the collection of the joint property though it is not expressly stated as to who was the karta. However that be, there is nothing in the whole of the evidence before us to show that Nandlal took any part in marrying the daughter of Ramlal or that Ramlal took any part in Nandlal's domestic affairs. On the other hand, in his own plaint Nandlal accuses Ramlal Ojha of having married his daughter in saprabara sagotra and adds that for that reason he (Ramlal) gave up connection with the said daughter and

"for fear of being outcasted, he never brought her in his own house."

Again in his evidence he referred to his own concubine and the daughter begotten by her and adds that

"Ramlal was alive when Nagendra was married... .. Ramlal did not participate in the marriage."

It is true that merely because a member of the family did not participate in the marriage of a natural daughter, it does not follow that he was not a member of the joint family; but this passage as well as the passage in the plaint to which I have referred would give some indication of the relations between the two cousins as well as the condition of the so-called joint family.

I have already given a brief history of the family and shown that beyond the abortive attempt of Nandlal to put forward a hostile claim in the Small Cause Court suit of 1909 he did nothing so long as Umamayi was alive to seriously question or contest the right of the widows of Ramlal to succeed to those properties which they claimed to have inherited from him. I have referred to the succession certificate taken by Umamayi as well as the pattas executed in her favour. Besides these, thokas of Tilai and Jerka have been filed to show that collections were made on behalf of the widows during the life-time of Umamayi. I have also referred to the unsatisfactory explanation of Nandlal that Umamayi was in possession of Tilai and Jerka in lieu of maintenance. If, therefore, it is possible to draw any inference from the conduct of the parties as to the true import of an incident which took place as long ago as in 1295 Fasli, and regarding which much direct evidence cannot be now easily available, I think that inference must be in favour of the case of the appellants that there was a complete disruption of the joint estate in that year. I think that it will be legitimate to say that the parties themselves could understand better than any one else whether there was a real separation in 1295 falsi or not and if they acted for some considerable time in such a way as to show that the fact of separation was not seriously challenged, that fact cannot be wholly excluded from consideration, even though it may not be conclusive and may have to be considered along with such explanation as may be furnished by the acquiescing party for the attitude adopted by him.

The documentary evidence adduced on behalf of Nandlal is, to say the least, entirely inconclusive and by no means inconsistent with the case of the appellant. Exhibits 9, 9(a) and 9(b) are three kabuliyats executed by Ramlal and Nandlal jointly in respect of certain lands in Tilai in 1893 and are easily explained by the fact that Tilai is one of the villages which had not been divided in 1295 Fasli. Exhibits 5 and 5(a) are two ex parte rent decrees obtained by Ambica Charan Manjhi, the superior landlord of Sirkabad against Nandlal after the death of Umamayi and it is to be noted that while on the one hand the periods for which the two suits were brought overlap each other, on the other hand that very proprietor obtained a decree against Amodebala in 1921 and subsequently gave a receipt to her for the amount decreed in that suit (Exs B-1 and S 4). Exhibits 11 and 12 were two kabuliyats executed in favour of Nandlal in respect of Sirkabad properties shortly after the death of Umamayi; but some of the very tenants who executed the kabuliyats turned against Nandlal and the bona fides of these kabuliyats were seriously brought into question in the two rent suits of 1921 and 1923 which compelled Nandlal to bring the present suit. Between 1918 and 1920, that is to say, after Umamayi's death and just before the survey operation, Nandlal got two ekrarnamas and one kabuliyat (Exs. 22, 23, and 21) relating to the properties in Jerka executed in his favour. By one of these one Dharup Sardar was allowed to fish in a tank for a period of four months and by the other two certain plots were let out to one Baidnath Rai for the purpose of rearing lac. These documents are no less suspicious than the kabuliyats relating to Sirkabad and were not given effect to by the Survey authorities. The most important documents filed by Nandlal are the thokas Exs. 16 series, certain counterfoils of rent receipts, chalans and rent receipts (Exs. 17, 8 and 12 series). The thokas are for a period extending from 1919 to 1926 and apart from the fact that the statements made in these documents cannot be used by Nandlal in his own favour, as there are clear indications that he was creating evidence for the purpose of advancing his claim before the Survey authorities, the statements made in the thokas in support of his claim are entitled to very little value. Besides, these documents do not necessarily prove that Nandlal was in exclusive possession of the properties. The same remarks apply to the counterfoils of rent receipts Exs. 17 series and the rent receipts Exs. 12 series as printed in the paper-book are of very little use because we do not know to which particular year they relate. The learned Advocate for the respondent gave us certain notes about the receipts of Jerka and Sirkabad and we are told that so far as the receipts of Jerka are concerned they are for the years 1325 and 1332 only whereas those of Sirkabad relate to the years 1312, 1315, 1316, 1318

and 1332. It is clear that the few stray receipts of Jerka which have been filed far from supporting Nandlal's case confirm the suspicion that he was creating evidence, while the receipts of Sirkabad also do not show that he was in exclusive possession of the properties throughout. Exhibit 8 series are the chalans of Tilai and although they go further than any other evidence produced by Nandlal, yet they can be explained by the fact that this mauza being admittedly common property, Nandlal was as much entitled to pay rent as any one else. On the other hand, some of the receipts which were granted in the lifetime of Ramlal show that Nandlal while depositing the rent described Ramlal as his co-sharer [vide 8x (1) and 8x (2)] an expression which is certainly not a very happy one and is not generally used to describe a person who is still a member of the joint family.

It was urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant that Nandlal has a better case with regard to Sirkabad property; but I am unable to accept this contention. There are no documents before us of the period when Ramlal was alive and, as I have already said, soon after Ramlal's death Umamayi settled some of the Sirkabad lands by kabuliyats, Exs. R and R (1); I have already referred to the two ex parte decrees obtained by Ambica Charan Manjhi against Nandlal after Umamayi's death as well as the decree obtained by the same person against Amodebala in 1924. I have also commented on the thokas filed by Nandlal for the years 1919 to 1926. It is moreover to be remembered that the two rent suits of 1921 and 1923 related to certain lands in Sirkabad and in both of them the tenants successfully pleaded payment to Amodebala instead of Nandlal. The sheet anchor of Nandlal's case is the entry in the Record of Rights. But that entry is wholly in conflict with the Record of Rights prepared in respect of villages Tilai and Jerka and was based solely on an admission said to have been made by a person who has not been proved to have been authorised by Purnima and whose authority was based on an unregistered document the execution of which is denied by her. Besides if, as I am inclined to hold, the evidence adduced in this case is sufficient to prove that Ramlal and Nandlal had separated during the life-time of Ramlal and that Nandlal was never in exclusive possession of Sirkabad, it is also sufficient to rebut the survey entry in respect of Sirkabad. I may mention here that while some of the witnesses examined by the appellants definitely prove the possession of Umamayi and Amodebala with regard to Sirkabad property, not a single witness has been examined on behalf of Nandal who belongs to Sirkabad and it is only some of the Tilai witnesses who have also casually made statements regarding Sirkabad. The evidence in the case, in my opinion, does not show by any means that Nandal was either joint with Ramlal or was ever in exclusive possession of the properties in Tilai, Jerka and Sirkabad or any of them in its entirety after the death of Ramlal.

Once the facts are fully ascertained there cannot be much difficulty in my opinion in applying the law. The learned Subordinate Judge has reviewed a series of authorities in his judgment and a number of cases have also been cited in the course of the elaborate arguments advanced in this Court. It appears to me, however, that the learned Subordinate Judge was too much obsessed with the case law on the subject and that he has not correctly appreciated the facts of the case. There is no doubt that the summary of the law given in his judgment cannot be found fault with, but the case law cannot provide us with a ready made formula and each case has to be judged on its own facts. It may well be that certain circumstances when taken individually do not furnish conclusive evidence of separation, yet they may point to a different conclusion when taken collectively or with reference to the particular facts of any individual case. It is to be remembered that separation in status is not quite the same thing as "partition" as used in common parlance. It is possible for the members of a joint family to sever themselves in estate without there being a formal partition or an actual division of the properties by metes and bounds. In law a severance of the joint estate is effected as soon as an intention to this effect has been clearly and unequivocally expressed. It is also to be remembered that although it has been emphasised in many cases that a declaration of the intention to separate must be made in definite and unambiguous terms, it does not follow that where there is no evidence of an express declaration of intention, separation cannot be proved. The question is really one of intention and all that the law requires is that the intention should be clearly and unequivocally expressed whether it be by explicit declaration or by conduct—[See Makund Dharman Bhoir v. Balkrishna Palmanji (22)]. Thus in the absence of an explicit declaration, the evidence of conduct as well as of the surrounding circumstances is material for the purpose of judging whether the members intended to separate or not. In this connection the Courts have always pointed out that mere cesser of commensality or separate enjoyment of distinct portions of the properties or separate definition of shares in revenue or survey paper or mere proof of separate transactions entered into by the co-parceners with strangers will not be conclusive to prove separation in estate. It does not, however, necessarily follow that even though all these elements may be present in a case and no matter what special significance any of these various circumstances may have having regard to the facts of a particular case, they can under no circumstances be sufficient to prove separation. Even as to the cesser of commensality the Privy Council has pointed out that though it may not be conclusive, yet it may properly be considered in determining the question whether there was a partition of the joint family or not—[See Anandi v. Khedu Lal (23) and Ganesh Dutt v. Jewach Thakurain (24)]. Similarly any one or more of the other circumstances referred to above may have a special significance or bearing on the intention of the parties and, therefore, decisive in a particular case having regard to its peculiar circumstances though the same circumstances or set of circumstances may not be quite conclusive in another case. In the present case my view is that the separation of 1295 must have caused a serious breach in the union and it was by no means such a trivial or ordinary incident as to have left the joint family wholly unaffected. What is significant is that the parties did not take for themselves only so much of the properties as would have been sufficient for their maintenance but they divided everything which could be conveniently divided and received their "share" of such properties by what they called

"partition and division" brought about through the intervention of certain punches. In Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (25) it was held that when a partial partition is proved or admitted to have taken place, the presumption is that there has been an entire partition both with reference to rights and properties and this view was re-affirmed in 26 Ind. Cas. 514 Sundarama v. Kanakotiah (26) and in 31 Ind. Cas. 674 Subha Hiddi v. Alagammal (27). I have already discussed the matter at some length before and all I need say here is that even apart from this presumption the conclusion which I have arrived at on a consideration of the oral as well as the documentary evidence adduced in the case is that Ramlal and Nandlal separated in estate in the year 1295 and that Nandlal was not, therefore, entitled to succeed to any of the properties in dispute. The learned Subordinate Judge relying on an isolated passage in the evidence of Defence Witness No. 2 has held that so long as Rashmoni Debi lived she managed the properties and her orders were carried out; but when I refer to this passage in the evidence of this witness I do not find anything in it to show that the witness was referring to the common property of Nandlal and Ramlal and not to the separate property of Ramlal, having already said in the examination-in-chief that the two cousins had separated.

I shall now pass on to consider the next important point in the case, that is to say, whether the decree in Suit No. 48 of 1923 was obtained by fraud. The circumstances under which this suit was brought were no doubt peculiar. It is not disputed that at the time when the suit was brought Purnima was living with Nandlal and that there was no quarrel or friction whatsoever between her and the latter. It appears strange, therefore, that it should have been considered necessary to bring a suit against her in the absence of any dispute. This matter by itself would not perhaps have had much significance if it had stood alone; but there are many other suspicious features in the case. One of these is that the Pleader by whom Purnima is said to have been represented was one who had certainly acted for Nandlal on previous occasions and who curiously enough appeared as a Pleader for him both in Suits Nos. 3 and 50 of 1926. The story as to how he obtained the vakalatnama from Purnima is an extraordinary one. According to Nandlal this Pleader was approached by Shashi Bhushan, a cousin of the lady in the first instance, but he did not accept the vakalatnama. This story appears to have been finally abandoned and has not been supported by any other evidence. The story has been definitely put forward is that one Rajwar went to the Pleader with a vakalatnama but as a matter of precaution, the latter deputed his clerk one Ajodhya Nath Ghosh to go and obtain the thumb impression of Purnima on the document. Ajodhya Nath accordingly went to Purnima's house and took the thumb impression and so the vakalatnama was accepted. Ajodhya Nath says in his evidence that Nagen (P. W. No. 2), a son-in-law of Nandlal, is his friend and he calls Nandlal his father-in-law as he calls Nagen his brother. On this point Ajodhya Nath is supported both by Nagen and Nandlal who says that Ajodhya Nath is like a son to him. It is admitted that Purnima is a pardanashin lady and Ajodhya Nath himself states in his cross examination that Purnima did not talk to him and yet his case is that he went to Purnima, talked to her and obtained her thumb impression. The most astonishing part of the case is that although Purnima's father was alive and it is said that Purnima's cousin Sashi Bhushan held a general power-of-attorney for her, neither of them took any part in the appointment of the Pleader. The Pleader having thus been appointed, appeared and applied to the Court on 12th April, 1923, for her examination on commission and stated—we do not know on what authority—that her evidence so given would take the place of the written statement. Purnima definitely states that she never authorised this step and her evidence stands almost wholly un rebutted. On that very day the Court ordered the plaintiff to deposit Rs. 15 as the cost of the commission but curiously enough it was Brajendra Babu, the Pleader for the defendant who deposited this money and no explanation has been given why the defendant should have deposited this sum although the plaintiff had been called upon to do so. It is suggested by the appellant that as Brajendra Babu was in fact acting for Nandlal though ostensibly he appeared for Purnima, he was anxious to conceal that he was handling any money which had been really supplied by Nandlal and so he made this blunder in depositing the sum of Rs. 15 on behalf of Purnima when the money should have been deposited on behalf of the plaintiff.

iff. This is mere speculation, but it is certainly curious that having deposited the money, the Pleader allowed the very amount to be charged in the decree as part of the cost awarded against his client, although it is said that the money had been deposited on behalf of the defendant (see Ex. 3). The learned Advocate for the appellant has laid some stress on the fact that it was rather unusual for the Pleader to say that no written statement was necessary and to apply for evidence on commission at once. There is nothing to show that evidence by commission was absolutely necessary because in the present suit Purnima herself appeared in Court to give her evidence. As to her examination by the commission there is no doubt that this took place when Purnima was living under the roof of Nandlal and, as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, the statement of Purnima that she merely said "yes" or "no" to certain leading questions put to her receives support from the statement of the plaintiff's own witness Nagendra Nath Ohakravarty. The commissioner also is not in a position to deny that leading questions were put to her and she merely answered "yes" or "no" to them. Besides, as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out neither Purnima's father nor her cousin was present at the time of the examination because it appears that she was identified before the commissioner by men who were complete strangers to the family and in fact apart from Purnima's evidence, we do not know how she was situated behind the pardah and to what extent she understood the question put to her. All this lends support to her testimony that the statement recorded by the commissioner did not truly represent her statements. It is true that the commissioner says that the statement was read over to her but as she was pardahnashin lady and did not appear before the commissioner, it is contended that it cannot be said with certainty how much of the evidence she actually heard when it was read out or whether it was actually read out within her hearing. There is again evidence to the effect that the summons in the case was not served upon her personally but that a copy of it was merely stuck up at the house of Nandlal where she lived. Nandlal says in his evidence that he was present at the time of the service of the summons but he also says that he did not inform Purnima of the suit he had brought against her. In this connection I cannot refrain from observing that the Pleader

Brajendra Babu would have been a most material witness in the case because there are so many things which could be explained by him alone, but curiously enough he accepted the brief for Nandlal in both these suits even though Purnima had clearly stated in her plaint that he had no authority to appear for her in the previous suit and the decree in that suit had been obtained by fraud.

Now the main question in this case is whether Purnima has established a case of fraud. It is said that although there may be suspicious features about the case, yet that is not enough so long as definite particulars of fraud are not set forth and they are not established beyond doubt. As to the particulars of fraud I have already said that the case of Purnima in substance was that the decree had been obtained by keeping her in ignorance of the suit, by representing to the Court that Babu Brajendra Nath was her Pleader although as a matter of fact he was not, by taking various steps in the suit on her behalf although she had never authorised those steps to be taken and by using before the Court a deposition which did not contain her full and free statement. All these allegations are fully supported by her in her evidence and the question is whether her evidence should be taken to be sufficient in this case. The learned Subordinate Judge before whom she gave her evidence has apparently believed her and in my opinion he has rightly done so. The circumstances of the case to which I have referred fully lend support to her statements and there seems to be no reason why they should be rejected. It is true that her statements are to be taken with caution and in one or two instances for example where she says that her thumb impression had been obtained not on the record of deposition but on a blank piece of paper it may not be safe to accept her statement; but the statements in other respects, specially where they are fully supported by the probabilities and the circumstances of the case, seem to have been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge and I see no reason to differ from his conclusions. I cannot disbelieve her evidence that Brajendra Babu was never appointed by her: that she never authorised him to say to the Court that no written statement was necessary or that she was to be examined on commission. This fact by itself would be a serious fraud upon the Court, because if it is believed it means that the decree was obtained by setting up a person as a Pleader for the party where as a matter of fact he had no authority to act as such. I am also of opinion that her statement as to her being wholly ignorant of the suit and as to the manner in which the deposition had been recorded cannot also be easily discarded. These facts in my opinion are quite sufficient for the purpose of upholding the decree of the lower Court independently of the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant on the score of her being a pardahnashin lady and not having had any free and independent advice at any stage of the suit. In my opinion this question could directly arise only if there was a contract or an agreement entered into by the lady which was sought to be impugned or if the decree passed in this case had been a compromise decree. The learned Advocate for the appellant, however, refers to the evidence of Nandlal in which he speaks of the decree as if it was one based on a compromise. He says

"After the compromise Purnima went to her father's house" and then again—

"He (Brajendra Babu) appeared for me in my case with Urma and Debi I cannot say whether it was before or after the compromise in Suit No. 48."

The learned Advocate for the appellant thus refers us to the case of Nistarini Dassi v. Nundolal Bose (28) where Mr. Justice Stanley after referring to the fact that the plaintiff there was a pardahnashin lady living with the defendant Nundolal Bose who had exercised considerable influence over her and that while she was living under his care, he had induced her to put her name to documents which were not explained to her, referred to the following passage of Phear, J., in Kanailal Jawhari v. Kamini Debi (29):—

"I may remark that I have more than once felt myself obliged to hold that a Hindu pardahnashin is entitled to receive in this Court that protection which the Court of Chancery in England always extends to the weak, ignorant and infirm, and to those who, for any other reason, are specially likely to be imposed upon by the exertion of undue influence over them. The undue influence is presumed to have been exerted unless the contrary be shown. It is, therefore, in all dealings with those persons who are so situated, always incumbent on the person who is interested in upholding the transactions to show that its terms are fair and equitable. The most usual mode of discharging this onus is to show that the lady had good and independent advice in the matter, and acted therein altogether at arm's length from the other contracting party".

As I have however already indicated, although the youth of the lady and her being a pardahnashin Hindu widow and her living with Nandlal at the time the decree was obtained may be circumstances tending to show that she could be easily imposed upon, I do not think that the principle laid down in the decision relied on by the learned Advocate exactly applies to this case because this is not a case in which Purnima was strictly speaking a contracting party and a case of undue influence is not quite the same as a case of fraud. In my opinion, however, the case of fraud has been fully established and her suit has been rightly decreed.

The only thing which I cannot understand is why the learned Subordinate Judge having found that the decree had been obtained by fraud should have partially decreed the suit only with regard to Jerka property. In my opinion Appeal No. 141 should be allowed with costs and Suit No. 50 of 1926 should be decreed. As to Suit No. 3 as I have held that Ramlal had separated from Nandlal during his life-time, the plaintiff has failed to establish his title upon which his suit is based and, therefore, his suit must necessarily fail.

It may be mentioned that it was urged on behalf of the respondent that Suit No. 3 was purely one under s. 177 of the Ohota Nagpur Tenancy Act and the question as to whether Ramlal and Nandlal were joint or separate need not be gone into. On the other hand it was urged on behalf of the respondent that if the plaintiff's suit was one under s. 177 it was barred by limitation because it was brought more than one year after the decision of the Rent Suit No. 1400 of 1921-22. In my opinion, however, on the plaint as framed it cannot be held either that the question of title cannot be gone into or that the suit is wholly barred by limitation.

The result is that Suit No. 3 of 1926 must be dismissed and Appeals Nos. 141 and 142 must be allowed with costs throughout.

Application against an order of the Sessions Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 13th January, 1932, upholding that of the Deputy Magistrate, Bhagalpur, dated the 2nd December, 1931.

Mr. G. N. Mukherjee, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioners have been convicted by a Second Class Magistrate of offences under ss 430, 325 and 323, Indian Penal Code, and an appeal from the conviction has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge. They have moved this Court in revision, and the application has been ordered to be heard as regards the correctness of the conviction under s. 430, Indian Penal Code. The substantial grounds taken in the partition with reference to s. 430 are grounds Nos. 1 and 2, which ran as follows:—

"1. For that the conviction of the petitioners under s. 430, Indian Penal Code, is bad in law inasmuch as there was no malicious object on the part of the petitioners.

2. For that the evidence of the complainant being that if the bandh had not been cut the whole paddy crop of the petitioners of about 1 to 1½ bighas would have been destroyed the conviction under s. 430, Indian Penal Code, is not sustainable."

The learned Advocate for the petitioners has referred to three cases which it is said support the principle that where a dam erected by the complainant was cut by the accused not to take a supply of water but to save their own crops this would not amount to an offence under s. 430 of the Penal Code. The earliest of these cases Nafar Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Helaluddin Mondal (1) was decided ex parte by a Judge of the Calcutta High Court sitting singly; and each of the other cases relied on is the decision of a single Judge. No doubt these decisions and the opinion of these learned Judges are entitled to the greatest respect. But whatever may have been the views expressed by individual Judges, there is an authoritative ruling on the essentials of the section in the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Ramkrishna Chetti v. Palaniyandi Kudambar (2) where the Judges observe:—

"It is not part of the definition of the offence that the act of the accused should be in common language a mere wanton act of waste. Under s. 430 of the Penal Code the physical requisites of the act are the doing of an act which causes or to the doer's knowledge is likely to cause a diminution of supply. He also fulfils the mental requisites when he does this with intent to cause wrongful loss, and the intention is properly held to be such when he takes it without any sort of right, and it matters not that he claims to set up such a right if the facts are so clear that the claim is manifestly only an additional wrong. It is for judicial tact to distinguish where the case is sufficiently doubtful to prevent the inference of a wrong intent."

In the case before me there is no doubt that the bandh in question was the property of the complainant, that it held water which he required for the irrigation of his fields, that the accused by cutting the bandh let out some of the water and it would violate the most elementary principles of mathematics to hold that the supply of water was not thereby diminished.

The result is that the Rule is discharged.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 20, 56 (1) —Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Receiver, whether representative of debtor—Objection by Receiver to execution against debtor's property, whether falls within s. 47—Second appeal, maintainability of—Ad interim Receiver, powers of.

The question whether a Receiver in insolvency is or is not a representative of the debtor for the purposes of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, depends upon the purpose and nature of the application made by the Receiver. For some purposes he would be entitled as representing the judgment-debtor to litigate matters under s. 47 of the Code; but where he comes to the executing Court for the purpose of saying that as the judgment-debtor's property now belongs to the Receiver the Court cannot sell for the judgment-debtor's debt that which is the property of another person because it has vested in the Receiver for the benefit of the creditors, then, for that purpose, the Receiver is not a representative of the judgment-debtor, but a third party making a claim, and no second appeal lies from an order made on such an application. Kashi Prasad v. Miller (1) and C. E. Grey, Official Assignee v. Hazari Lal (2), and other cases referred to. [p. 594, col. 1.]

An interim Receiver cannot represent the debtor and make an application under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. Miller v. Lukhi Mani Debi (5), referred to. [ibid.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, 24 Pargannas, dated the 29th April, 1929.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Surendra Nath Bose (Sr.), for the Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—This case raises some interesting questions. It is a case where the judgment-debtor had suffered a money decree and it seems that in September, 1927, an application to adjudicate him an insolvent under the Provincial Insolvency Act was presented to the appropriate Court. Before any order was made, the decree-holder on 13th February, 1928 applied for execution. On 12th April sale of certain property was held and on a day in May that sale was confirmed. On 8th May the insolvency Court appointed an interim Receiver, that is to say, a Receiver in whom nothing vests but who has the powers of a Receiver under the Civil Procedure Code. On 10th May, this interim Receiver applied to set aside the sale. He appears to have made a case under O. XXI, r. 20, Civil Procedure Code, but he also made a case to the effect that, as there were proceedings in insolvency, the sale should be set aside. I pause here to observe that he was too late on any possible view to take advantage of s. 52, Provincial Insolvency Act, which is applicable only where notice is given to the Court in time and before the sale. On 26th June an order of adjudication was made and the interim Receiver was appointed Receiver in the full sense of the word and the insolvent's property vested in him under the Statute for the benefit of the creditors. Originally, the application of the interim Receiver made on 10th May was allowed and the sale was set aside on 25th July. In September, the decree holder applied for a review of this order and the learned Munsif set aside the order and restored his previous order confirming the sale. From this, there was an appeal by the Receiver to the District Judge and there was a certain amount of objection to the effect that no appeal lay against an order granting a review to which the answer which prima facie seems to me to be a good one was that it was not an appeal against the order granting a review but against the order made upon the review, namely, confirming the sale setting aside the previous order. However the learned District Judge also dismissed the appeal on merits. From that order the present appeal is filed. As a matter of fact, leave has been given under s. 5, Limitation Act, extending the time for an appeal in view of what was said by the Division Bench before whom an application under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, was made. We have however to consider whether the order of the District Judge refusing to interfere with the order discharging the order setting aside the sale is correct.

Now the first question which arises is whether or not there is any second appeal. In so far as the Receiver's application was an application by a person interested under r. 90, O. XXI, it is clear that there is no second appeal. We have therefore to see whether the Receiver's application to set aside the sale can be looked at in any other view.

A good deal has been said upon the question whether the Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act is a representative of the judgment-debtor for the purposes of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. There is a good deal of authority in cases exactly like this to the effect that he is not a representative and the matter has been dealt with in the cases of Kashi Prasad v. Miller (1); C. E. Grey, Official Assignee v. Hazari Lal (2), Sardarmal Jagonath v. Aran Vayal Sabhapatty (3); Chandmull v. Ranee Soondary Dasi (4), Miller v. Lukhi Moni Debi (5), Frederick Peacock v. Madan Gopal (6) and the Official Assignee, Madras v. Aiyu Dikshithar (7). It appears to me that any general statement to the effect that a Receiver is or is not a representative for the purposes of s. 47 of the Code is necessarily misleading. It all depends on the purpose and nature of the application made by the Receiver whether he is a representative of the judgment-debtor or not. For some purposes, he would be entitled as representing the judgment-debtor to litigate matters under s. 47 of the Code; but where he comes to the executing Court for the purpose of saying that as the judgment-debtor's property now belongs to the Receiver the Court cannot sell for the judgment-debtor's debt that which is the property of another person because it has vested in the Receiver for the benefit of the creditors, then, for that purpose, the Receiver is not, in my judgment a representative of the judgment-debtor and the cases which I have referred to are, in my judgment, correct in that respect. The Receiver in such a case, if he is not acting under s. 52 of the Act, but acting under the usual provisions of the Civil Procedure Code is really a third party making a claim.

He is saying that while there is no objection to the judgment-debtor's property being sold for the judgment-debtors debt the property attached is no longer the judgment-debtor's but belongs to a third person. I am therefore of opinion that the application to set aside the sale made by the interim Receiver was not an application competently made by him under s. 47 of the Code. If it was nevertheless brought under s. 47 of the Code, then the second appeal must be dismissed. If the true view that it is not under s. 47 of the Code, then it does not seem to me there is any second appeal. It may or may not be that where a sale has taken place, in certain circumstances, the Receiver could by bringing a suit get the sale set aside independently of O. XXI, r. 90. In this case, the Receiver has not done so. I need not, in these circumstances, enlarge upon the fact that at the time this application was brought the Receiver was only an interim Receiver because in that view, it was quite impossible for him to take the attitude that he could represent the judgment-debtor for the purpose of having the property escape execution. I would here refer to the observations of Banerjee, J., in the case of Miller v. Lukhi Mani Debi (5), at page 421* :—

"The question whether the point in this case comes under cl. (c), s. 144, Civil Procedure Code, has to be determined with reference to the nature of the objection raised by the Official Assignee".

In my view there are no merits in this case and the appeal must be dismissed with costs: hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Co-tenants—Partition between subordinate interest holders—Maintainability—Defendant holding fractional interest of landlord, effect of.

The sole basis upon which a claim to partition is founded is the joint possession of the parties. Hence a suit for partition can be brought by a person holding a subordinate interest in land against others holding a similar interest though a partition at the instance of a subordinate interest holder among persons holding other subordinate interest will not be binding upon the superior interest holder and will enure till the interest of the party seeking partition lasts. [p. 596, col. 2.]

The fact that one of the defendants happens to be a fractional landlord of the jote does not make any difference. Hobson v. Sherwood (4), Baring v Nash (5), *Sundar v. The plaintiff's claim for partition is based on the following facts: There was a howla called Jadu Nandan which was held by five persons; Rup Ohand and Sreenath Das had a 4 annas share and in the remaining 12 annas Taranath and Prionath had $9\frac{1}{2}$ annas share and Kali Kumar $6\frac{1}{2}$ annas share treating the 12 annas interest in the howla as 16 annas. About 60 years ago, according to the defence, the predecessor of defendant No. 1 took a jote settlement of the 4 annas of Rup Ohand and Sreenath. In 1300 B. S. the plaintiff took a jote settlement of 6 annas of the howla from Taranath, Prionath and Kali Kumar and about that time the defendants also took a jote settlement of the remaining 6 annas from these persons. In 1315 B. S. the defendants took mirash settlement of Kali Kumar's $6\frac{1}{2}$ annas share in the 12 annas of the howla reckoned as 16 annas. In 1327 B. S., they purchased the maliki interest of Kali Kumar in that share. At the date of the institution of the suit, the position therefore was that the plaintiff had a jote right to 6 annas of the howla and defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 the same right to the remaining 10 annas. But they had also maliki right in about 5 annas of the howla. The plaintiff by the suit claimed partition of the jote from the defendants in respect of his share in it by metes and bounds. The defendants mainly contended that the suit was not maintainable, as there had been a previous partition under which the parties were in possession of different portion of the homestead, and that as the defendants had become co-sharer landlords, the suit was not maintainable in law. The defendants also pleaded limitation and abandonment under the terms of the lease to the plaintiff.

The trial Court overruled the defendant's objections and decreed the plaintiff's suit. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal has concurred in the decree. Both Courts have found that the defendants have failed to prove previous partition. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have appealed and several points have been raised on their behalf.

It is contended in the first place that the present suit is not maintainable, inasmuch as the plaintiff has only a temporary interest in the land in suit and as such is not capable of maintaining a suit for partition. The plaintiff's lease appears to be a yearly lease for no definite period. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on the Full Bench decision in

Himadri Nath Khan v. Ramani Kanta Roy (1) and on the case of Bhagwat Sahai v. Bipin Behari Mitter (2). The Full Bench Case was one between the patnidar and the zemindar. In a previous decision of this Court in Mukunda Lal Pal v. Lehuraux (3) it was held that in order to maintain a suit for partition the plaintiff must be of equal status with the defendant. The Full Bench decided that it was not necessary that parties should have equal rights in the joint property. In that case the suit was by a co-sharer zemindar against a patnidar. In Bhagwat Sahai's case (2), the suit was brought by a proprietor of a mukarrari interest in the properties in suit against the owners of shares of the zemindari interest therein, and their Lordships approving the decision of the Full Bench in Himadri Nath Khan's case (1) held that the suit was competent. But the contention before us is that those cases lay down that the holder of a permanent interest only is entitled to maintain a suit for partition against the holder of a different permanent interest. It so happened that in those cases the parties were holders of permanent interests though of different kinds. But I do not think that they are authorities for the view that a suit for partition can only be maintained by one who has some sort of permanent interest in the property in suit. It appears from the judgment of Banerji, J., in Himadri Nath's case (1) page 582*, that it was urged before the Full Bench that partition could be enforced only as between co-owners whose interests were co-ordinate in degree, for otherwise parties having permanent interest might be put to frequent and needless expenses and trouble by having to watch the partition proceedings instituted at the instance of a holder of a temporary interest. The objection was not, however, considered because there both the parties had permanent interests in the property in suit and hence "there was no apprehension of the division effected not having an enduring effect." Beaverly, J., expressed an opinion that "the right to partition can only exist as between co-partners holding similar interests in the property. But how "similar interests" could be defined the learned Judge felt difficult to say, though he opined that they should probably be transferable permanent interests. In Bhagwat Sahai's case (2) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have left the question expressly open but they "agree with the opinion of the Full Bench in the case referred to, Himadra Nath v. Ramani Kanta (1), that the right of partition exists when two parties are in joint possession of the lands under permanent titles, although these titles may not be identical."

They proceed to observe:

"It is not necessary for their Lordships to consider whether the right to partition exists in any other case and they are desirous to avoid indicating any view upon such subject."

The question as to whether a suit for partition can be brought by a person not having a permanent interest in the property, has therefore not been authoritatively decided. It appears that in English Law such right exists and it has been asserted and accepted from a long time. In Hobson v. Sherwood (4), the plaintiff was tenant for life in one-fifth of the estate, which life-tenancy was subject to extinction on his marrying. The suit was demurred on the ground that the plaintiff had such an unstable status that he was not entitled to maintain a suit for partition against persons having right to the estate and the remainder. The Master of Rolls in giving the judgment of the Court observed:

"As tenant for life, I apprehend there can be no question but that he is entitled to a partition. The question is whether circumstance of his life estate being determinable on his second marriage makes any difference. As at present advised, I think it does not. But I will further consider it."

On further consideration the Master of the Rolls ordered partition to proceed. In Baring v. Nash (5) the plaintiff was owner of a tenth share and the defendants of the remainder of the term of 500 years. They were also owners of inheritance of the other nine-tenth shares. On demurrer it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit, however small his interest in the joint property might be. There would be no objection due to minuteness of his interest, inconvenience or reluctance of other tenants, if there was no objection taken to the plaintiff's title, partition being a matter of right whatever might be the inconvenience or difficulty. In Sundar v. Parbati (6), the Judicial Committee held that a suit for partition would lie between two Hindu widows having life interest in the property on the basis of possession alone. In Doman Pandey v. Panchu Koley (7) it was held that between two mal raiyats whose interest was not permanent partition could be effected, but it would not be binding upon the superior landlord and would only be subsisting during the currency of the settlement. In Lalit Kishore Mitra v. Girdhari Singh (8) a Patna case the plaintiff was a lessee for a term of the underground mines and minerals in a village. The term was for a period of 999 years. But the trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the lessee for a term was not a joint owner of the minerals with the other owners of the village and was, therefore, not entitled to claim partition of the mines and minerals. The learned Chief Justice held referring to the Full Bench case and the decision of the Judicial Committee above referred to that the plaintiff had the right to claim partition on the ground that he was in joint possession with others. The claim or right to demand partition is one of the rights of ownership. Right to partition as right to possession is a right of property and such right depends not upon the co-ordination of interests of parties concerned, but on the fact of their being in joint possession.

Partition at the instance of a subordinate interest holder among persons holding other subordinate interest will not be binding upon the superior interest holder and will enure till the interest of the party seeking partition lasts. But the fact that such partition is not binding upon the landlord is no reason why it cannot be effected among the tenants. The sole basis upon which claim to partition is founded is the joint possession of the parties. In Mahomad Baksh v. Mana (9) it was held that a joint occupancy tenant was entitled to sue for partition of the joint occupancy holding though the zemindar was not made party to the suit. The view which apparently is in conflict with that taken in the Allahabad case is expressed in Anath Bandhu Dutt v. Aisali Namadas (10) but the decision in that case proceeded upon other grounds.

In some cases it has been suggested that partition under certain circumstances will result in great hardship, loss of time and money and in some cases, that it will not have an enduring effect. In the English cases I have cited this question was condered. In Hobson's case (4) referred to above the Master of the Rolls observed :

"I cannot help regretting that this suit should ever have been instituted. The plaintiff alone who is a tenant for life determinable on his second marriage, desires a partition ; the other parties desire to keep the estate together. If however, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief he asked for, he must have it however inconvenient it may be to the other owners."

A similar observation was made in Baring's case (5) where the Vice Chancellor observed :

"Partition being a matter of right, whatever may be the inconvenience and difficulty it must be ordered at the instance of the petitioner that partition be effected" : see also Sundar's case (6).

In my judgment the plaintiff in this case is entitled to maintain the suit for partition against the defendants who hold similar interest in the property. I may observe here that the objection to the maintainability of the suit on the ground that the plaintiff has a temporary interest in the lands in suit was not taken in any of the Courts below and was not even suggested in the grounds of appeal in this Court except by means of an additional ground placed before us at the hearing of the appeal. I am not sure that the question now raised by Mr Roy Choudhury is a pure question of law. It may involve an investigation into facts on evidence. We do not know what is the status of the defendants with reference to the lands of which they have taken jote settlement. It may be that they have a right similar to that of the plaintiff. It is also possible that the plaintiff by virtue of being a settled raiyat of the village has acquired a right of occupancy in the homestead under s. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act. Though this point has been raised for the first time, I have allowed it to be raised and discussed as a question of law.

The next question urged by Mr. Roy Choudhury on behalf of the appellants is that the defendants being maliks of certain sharers of the howla, the plaintiff cannot maintain a suit for partition against them. The plaintiff claims partition against the defendant not in the latter's capacity as maliks, but as they are jote holders of the land in suit jointly with the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge has considered this point and he observes :

"The mere fact that the appellant who is a co-sharer of the plaintiff in the jote under partition, happens to be a fractional landlord of the jote in question does not in my opinion alter the situation in any way."

I think the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is right. The effect of this partition will in no way be binding on the defendants in their capacity as maliks. It will still be open to them to claim partition as maliks against their co sharers in the howla.

Mr. Roy Choudhury has raised a ground also upon which the lower Courts decided against him and that is that on the terms of the plaintiff's lease it should have been held that this jote has come to an end. The kabuliyat says that if the lessee goes elsewhere in that event, he should have no claim or interest in the land or in the jama mentioned in the patta. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the plaintiff has still been in possession of the disputed plot through his bargdars and that the plaintiff went to his father-in-law's place after the cyclone of 1326. Similar findings were entered by the trial Court which held that the defendants' story of abandonment had no legs to stand upon and that in the settlement record the defendant and the plaintiff had been recorded as tenants in possession of O. S. Plot No. 950 in suit. If there has been a forfeiture, it is the landlord who can claim or waive it. It is evidence that the plaintiff's landlord is still receiving rent from him.

Lastly, it has been contended that the plaintiff is interested only in one of several plots of which the howla is composed. It will be extremely inconvenient if a person interested in a portion of a property is allowed to claim partition of that portion, for it will set the defendants to a number of suits at the instance of other parties who are interested in other portions of the land and in support of the contention, reliance has been placed on Parbati Charan Deb v. Ainuddin (11). I am not quite sure whether the observation made by Garth, C. J., in that case can be held to be good law now. But this point also was not taken at the trial. We have got no findings of the Courts below as to whether the land of which partition is claimed by the plaintiff is a portion of a bigger plot. So far as the plot in suit is concerned it is the case of both parties that they have shares in it as claimed by them. There can be no objection that this plot held jointly by the parties under similar title should not be partitioned.

In the view I have taken in this matter the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Graham, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. Two main points were, as I understand, urged on behalf of the appellant: firstly, that the plaintiff being merely a temporary tenant could not sue for partition and secondly that such a suit would not lie where the defendants, as here, have rights as co sharer landlords. As to the first point it may be observed that no such case was made in the Courts below, nor was there any issue upon it in the precise form in which it has now been sought to be raised. No doubt it is a question of law and such questions may be raised at any time. But the decision of the matter would involve an investigation of facts. That being so, we ought not to allow it to be raised for the first time in second appeal.

With regard to the second contention, Mr. Roy Choudhury for the appellants referred to certain authorities in support of the proposition that there can be no partition in view of the fact that the defendants are co-sharer landlords. None of the cases however are on all fours with the present case and I do not see how the fact that the defendant happens to combine in himself a dual status of raiyat and landlord can deprive the plaintiff of his right to partition. Nor does it appear that defendants' interest will suffer in any way if partition be made. As a matter of fact we have been informed that partition has already been finally made.

of 1931.

May 22, 1931.

RANKIN, O. J. AND PEARSON, J.
SASHADHAR ACHARJYA—PETITIONER

versus

SIR CHARLES TEGART—
OPPOSITE PARTY.

Letters Patent (Cal), cls. 24, 29—Crown Side Rules Chap. XXXVII, r. 2—Offence committed outside British India—Complaint before High Court, competency of—Jurisdiction of Appellate Side—Jurisdiction of Original Side over Europeans.

The petitioners complained to the High Court against certain Police Officers of British India in respect of certain acts done by them in the French territory of Chandernagore. The petitioners did not obtain the certificate of the Political Agent or Local Government or sanction under s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code :

Held, (i) that neither the Extradition Act nor the British Foreign Jurisdiction Act had any application to the case;

(ii) that neither cl. 24 nor cl. 29 of the Letters Patent, Calcutta, had any application to the case and the High Court in its appellate side had no jurisdiction to entertain the application;

(iii) that so far as the Indian subjects complained against were concerned, they could not be proceeded against without the certificate of the Political Agent, or the sanction of the Government;

(iv) that as regards the Europeans who were resident within the ordinary original jurisdiction, if any application lay at all, it must be made on the Original Side.

Mr. Jitendra Chandra Banerji, for the Petitioner.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an application to this Court by two persons against certain named opposite parties with an indication that other unnamed opposite parties whose names the petitioners have not yet discovered are to be included. The petitioners complain against certain officers of the Calcutta Police in respect of certain acts done by them at Chandernagore in the territory of France where to put the matter shortly, a raid was conducted upon a house of which the first petitioner and the second petitioner appear to be tenants or sub-tenants.

The prayers in the petition are numerous; but the first matter is this, it is alleged that the first opposite party Sir Charles Tegart, the Commissioner of Police, who had been unsuccessfully prosecuted by the petitioners before the Chief Presidency Magistrate gave an undertaking to this High Court when dealing with an application in revision which undertaking he has broken and thereby made himself amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court in contempt. Upon examination, this charge appears to be altogether unfounded. It appears that at the argument in the revision case before the High Court, the petitioners' Advocate stated that Sir Charles Tegart was proposing to leave the jurisdiction of this Court and he was assured by the Advocate-General that he (Advocate-General) would not have been appearing for Sir Charles had there been any question of his evading the jurisdiction of the Court by going away. On the night of 5th March, it seems Sir Charles left Calcutta for England and, on the afternoon of the 6th, the application of the petitioners was altogether dismissed. In these circumstances, in May, a petition was presented complaining, as I understand it, not that Sir Charles Tegart was obliged to wait until the petitioners should bring another petition or another six petitions against him. They complain as we now know that whereas it would have been quite right for Sir Charles Tegart to leave Calcutta on the evening of the 6th, it was contempt of Court for him to leave Calcutta on the evening of the 5th. It seems to me that this mere statement is sufficient to show that this Court cannot possibly think it a fit case in which to take any proceeding in contempt against the Police Commissioner.

The next matter is this: the petitioners have been unable apparently to prosecute their complaint in Ohandarnagore under the French law; they have been unable to get their Political Agent or the Local Government to give any certificate for the prosecution of anybody in British India. They have been unable to get the sanction of the Local Government under s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code. They know perfectly well that the Advocate-General or any other officer on behalf of the Government is not willing to commence a proceeding under cl. 24 of the Letters Patent. In order to get over this difficulty, an application is made to this Court to recommend to the Local Government that the petitioners' Advocate should be clothed with the powers of the Advocate-General or other person appointed on behalf of the Local Government. Before us this somewhat remarkable application has been started by a contention that as the Advocate-General appeared in defence of this officer of the Government—the Commissioner of Police—at the hearing of the application in revision before the High Court, he has ceased to be the Advocate-General and, therefore, this Court ought to recommend to the Local Government to do something superseding him. That seems to me to be a confused and extravagant application which may be dismissed without further comment.

Another matter which may be stated by way of keeping out of this case certain of the confusions which have been introduced is that, on no view of the case has the Extradition Act or the British Foreign Jurisdiction Act of 1890 any application to this case.

I come now to consider the case as being an application under r. 2 of the Crown Side Rules of the Original side. By that rule, any application made under cl. 24 or cl. 29 of the Letters Patent is to be made in the first instance, at the Appellate Side and this Bench is now sitting to hear this petition in so far as one of its aspects is an application of that character. When we look to the Letters Patent it is abundantly evident, and indeed it is now conceded that cl. 24 has no application at all. Clause 24 is a clause which gives power to this High Court to remove from some Court in the mofussil a criminal trial and have it before this Court itself and it can do that upon charges preferred by the Advocate-General or by any Magistrate or other officer specially empowered by the Local Government in that behalf. The present case is not a case for removing a prosecution which would normally be competent in a mofussil Court to the High Court. This is a case of totally different character. The provision referred to has nothing to do with this matter. Clause 29 has equally little to do with the matter. As has been pointed out by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in the case of Queen v. Nabadwip Chandri Goswami (1) cl. 29 is a clause under which, if a criminal case or appeal is proceeding or is about to be begun in the mofussil, the High Court has power to remove it and to direct any other Court of sufficient jurisdiction to hear the criminal case or appeal and in that connexion there is an ancillary power that this applies not only to a criminal case or appeal but applies also to inquiries. The High Court has power to direct a preliminary investigation or trial of any criminal case by any officer or Court otherwise competent to investigate or to try it though such a case belongs in the ordinary course to the jurisdiction of some other officer. We are not concerned with any question of transfer of a case from the mofussil to Calcutta or vice versa, nor is any case made out before us why we should transfer this case from any officer whose duty it would be to deal with it to any other officer or Court.

There is a further point so far as regards the Indian subjects of His Majesty—names unknown—whom the applicants in this case desire to proceed against. There is a provision in the Penal Code, for the trial of an Indian subject of this country for a criminal act that he may have done in any foreign country. That is a matter which is governed by the Penal Code, and in the Code of Criminal Procedure, there is an express qualification which says that that can only be done on the certificate of the Political Agent, if there is one, or otherwise of the Local Government. The position of an Indian subject of His Majesty accused of an offence in a foreign state is perfectly clear and plain. He can be tried in an Indian Court and he cannot, in any view, be tried except on a certificate of the Political

(1) 1 B. L. R. Cr. 15.

Agent or with the sanction of the Local Government.

A large number of English Statutes have been mentioned in this petition apparently by way of suggesting that there is power in this Court, so far as Europeans are concerned, to put them on their trial for an offence committed outside British India. As against residents within the ordinary original jurisdiction of this Court, any such application as that would appear to be an original side application and if it lies at all it must be made upon another petition presented in proper course according to the rules of the Original Side. Any such petition when presented will no doubt be dealt with. So far as the present petition is concerned, we must treat it as an application to this Court on the appellate side and it must be altogether dismissed.

Pearson, J.—I entirely agree.

Civil Revision in the matter of the Court-Fees Act.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)
—Suit for partition—Plaintiff in possession—Court-fee—Prayer for unnecessary relief in trial Court—Right to confine to proper relief in appeal

If a person is out of possession on his own allegation he cannot sue for partition without suing for possession also and he would have to pay court-fee on the market value of his share. But where the plaintiff sues for partition on the footing that he is in actual possession it is unnecessary for him to pay court-fee upon a claim for recovery of possession. He need not do so even if the defendants deny his title. Kirty Churn Mitter v. Annath Nath Deb (1) and Rajani Kanta Bag v. Rajabala Dasi (2), referred to.

Where the plaintiff had claimed unnecessary relief such as declaration of title and injunction in a partition suit, is it open to him on appeal to confine his relief to the proper reliefs and to pay court-fee on such relief alone.

Messrs. Panchanan Ghose and Hira Lal Ganguly, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sarat Chunder Basak and Nasim Ali, for the Government.

Judgment—In this case, the plaintiff brought his suit alleging that he and defendant No. 1 were brothers. As regards the property Sch. I it was alleged that that was their ancestral property and that the two brothers were in possession thereof in equal shares. That property was said to be of the market value of some Rs. 16,000. As regards Sch. II property the plaintiff's case was that it was acquired by the joint family fund when defendant No. 1 was the karta. This appears to be a residential house in the suburbs of Calcutta and its value is put down as Rs. 84,000. The plaintiff's case is that he had been actually living in that house when the events which I am about to mention happened. He says that defendant No. 1 mortgaged the whole of Sch. II property—I omit all reference to the property of Sch. I—to defendants Nos. 2 to 4 on the footing that defendant No. 1 was the sole owner of the house and he also executed a subsequent encumbrance in favour of defendant No. 5.

The first mortgagees brought a suit to which defendant No. 5 was made a party and got a mortgage decree for sale and, in the mortgage sale, the property was purchased by defendant No. 6 brother of defendant No. 5. Now, when the plaintiff brought his suit, he alleged that these mortgages by defendant No. 1 were all fraudulent—apparently fraudulent—on the part of the mortgagor and the mortgagees, and he said that the suit and the execution sale and everything else he could think of were fraudulent. He further alleged that the sale in execution had thrown a cloud upon his title and that he was threatened with being evicted from possession of the house by process under the mortgage sale; and, as is usually the case in the mofussil he asked for various forms of relief, particularly, declaration of title and permanent injunction restraining the mortgagee defendants from taking possession of the plaintiff's share. That suit has been dealt with by the trial Court. As regards Sch. I property, the trial Court has declared the plaintiff's title to an eight annas share and has decreed that the plaintiff is to get possession of it after partition. So far as that part of the decree is concerned, the plaintiff makes no complaint at all.

As regards Sch. II property, the plaintiff's claim has been simply dismissed and the plaintiff brings this appeal. The appeal is clearly concerned only with Sch. I property. The grounds mentioned in the body of the memorandum of appeal are all grounds concerning the question whether this Sch. II property was really joint property in which the plaintiff had an interest or was the sole property of defendant No. 1. But, under the cause title, the plaintiff put the following:—

"Appeal valued at Rs. 100,000 for declaration of title and partition and at Rs. 100 for injunction."

Accordingly the Stamp Reporter and the learned Registrar have been occasioned a great deal of difficulty in finding out the proper court-fee payable on this appeal. Before me the learned Advocate for the appellant very clearly says that it would be quite sufficient for his purpose to get a decree for partition in respect of Sch. II property. It matters nothing to him, he says whether defendant No. 1 has or has not validly parted with his own half-share. Defendant No. 1 and also defendant No. 6 are parties to this suit. Declaration of title is a pure empty thing in the circumstances and a claim for injunction is a pure empty claim and the learned Advocate comes in with the suggestion that if this appeal is limited to a complaint against the decree of the Court below only in so far as it refuses to the plaintiff partition of Sch. II property it seems perfectly clear that the court-fee already paid is sufficient. I have therefore to see whether there is any objection to the appellant having leave to amend his memorandum of appeal and taking the course which he proposes.

Now, if this were a case in which the plaintiff was according to his own showing out of possession I do not suppose that it would be right to allow him to appeal merely upon the question of partition. A person is not entitled to partition unless and until he is in possession of his share. But, if he is out of possession of his share, the Court does not require him to bring two suits. He can bring a suit in which he may claim to recover possession of his share and he may also claim to have that share partitioned by the same decree. If it appears that he is out of possession according to his own showing then he has to bring a suit to get possession of his share; and it is perfectly true that, in that case he would have to pay court fee on the market value of that share. It is not a question of declaration or declaration with consequential relief. He would have to pay court-fee as in a suit for possession. That I take to be the meaning of what was said by Garth, C. J., in the case of Kirty Churn Mitter v. Annath Nath Deb (1) and also by Chakravarti, J., in Rajani Kanta Bag v. Rajabala Dasi (2).

In the latter case the principle applicable seems to be laid down with great clearness.

(1) 8 O. 757; 11 O. L. R. 95.

(2) 85 Ind. Cas. 870; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 320; 52 O. 128; 29 O. W. N. 76.

The present case, in my judgment, is a case where the plaintiff is now claiming partition of a residential house on the footing that he is actually sitting there and living there and has been doing so for sometime. That being so it is entirely unnecessary to make him pay court-fee upon a claim to recover possession. In my judgment, it is a clean case of partition and is not converted into a case of claim to possession because the defendant brother or the defendant mortgagees went to set up that the house is not joint property and that the plaintiff has no title to it. It is quite true that these considerations would not be applicable to a plaint drawn as this plaint was drawn because whatever reliefs the plaintiff required to ask for he did ask for various reliefs declaration, injunction and so forth. But when the case is disposed of and he comes before the Court again as an appellant, he is not obliged to appeal against any part of the decree that he does not want to appeal against and, in my judgment he is quite entitled to say in this appeal:—

"I made all sorts of unnecessary claims (they may be wrong claims) in the Court below; but one claim of mine was right namely; that I was entitled to partition and I shall confine my appeal to that."

The learned Advocate for the appellant taking that view and being willing to confine his appeal purely to the question whether or not he is entitled to partition, I am of opinion that he ought to be allowed to do so and on the memorandum of appeal being amended in the sense which I have referred to, it is quite clear that the Court-fee already paid is sufficient. That is the order which I propose to make upon this matter.

Civil Appeal No. 2568 of 1929.

April 23, 1931.

RANKIN, O. J. AND PEARSON, J.
RAM CHARAN TRIPATHI AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

MADAN MOHAN JANA AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3, s. 184—Suit for ejectment—Plea of special limitation—Onus of proof—Lease—Construction—Raiyati holding—Burden of proof—Bhag chashis, status of.

Where the plea of special limitation under the Bengal Tenancy Act has been on the record from a comparatively early stage and the matter has been investigated, the Appellate Court should not set aside the question merely on the ground that it was not pleaded so early as it ought to have been. [p. 602, col. 2.]

A lease of 99 bighas of land was given to a Brahman pensioner; the patta was both mourasi and mokarrari; the landlord took a salami of one thousand rupees; no rent was payable for the first year and for some years rent was payable on an increasing scale; about 20 bighas were cultivated by the tenants themselves and about 75 bighas were cultivated by bhag-chashis. The lease provided as follows: 'You go on enjoying and possessing the said land by dwelling on the same, by cultivating it, by planting trees etc., by cutting them down, by excavating tanks, by erecting pucca buildings etc., generation after generation with power to transfer by gift, sale etc.'

Held, that the lease was not a rayati lease. [p. 603, col. 2.]

In a suit by the plaintiffs for possession of land on the allegation that they are lessees and that they had been dispossessed by the defendants landlords the burden of making out the plea of special limitation is on the defendant. [p. 602, col. 2.]

A bhag chashi is a person somewhere between a hired servant and a partner in those cases, at all events, where he has not been given an interest in the land so as to make him a tenant. [p. 604, col. 1.]

Appeal against the appellate decree of the District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated the 3rd May, 1929.

Mr. Brojo Lal Chuckerburty (with him Mr. Nasim Ali), for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. C. Maity (with him Messrs. Apurba Churn Mukherji, Saroj Kumar Maity and Biraj Mohan Majumdar), for the Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the plaintiffs brought a suit upon the basis that in 1909, defendant No. 1 gave a lease to their father of some 99 bighas of land in the Sunderbuns and that in 1917, after the plaintiffs' father had died, defendant No. 1 dispossessed the plaintiffs from this land so far as regards 50 bighas of it and in 1920 leased out the same again to defendant No. 2. The suit was brought in 1927 and it has engaged the attention of several Courts: but the actual position at which it has now arrived is that it has been found upon a local inquiry that a quantity of land which was taken possession of by defendant No. 2 in 1920 did belong to the land let out to the plaintiffs' father.

When the matter came before the learned Subordinate Judge on the last occasion, the main point for his determination was whether the suit on that footing was barred by the special limitation provided by the schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act. That question depends upon whether or not the plaintiffs are rayats under the lease which their father obtained in 1909. The Subordinate Judge was for the defendants to make out their plea of special limitation and he held, upon a consideration of the patta and of the incidents of the transaction, that he was not satisfied that the defendants had shown that the plaintiffs were rayats. Accordingly he held that the suit was within time and decreed it.

On first appeal before the learned District Judge of the 24 Pargannas, the learned Judge pointed out that the only question apart from the question of the quantum of damages was whether it was open to the defendants to take the plea of special limitation and he considered the question whether or not under the patta the plaintiffs were rayats. He came to the conclusion that the lease was a rayati lease because it granted a right to hold the land for purposes of cultivation and, on that basis, he gave effect to the plea of special limitation and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

We have in this appeal been invited to hold, first of all, that the plea of special limitation is not open to the defendants. On this point it appears to me that the learned District Judge was entirely right in view of the express terms of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It does not seem to me to be possible to say that with the matter investigated, as it has been investigated, it would be open to this Court under s. 184 to shut its eyes to the question of limitation merely on the ground that it was not pleaded so early as it ought to have been. In addition to that fact the plea of special limitation has been on the record though not from the beginning from a comparatively early stage and I have no doubt at all that that plea of limitation must be dealt with.

The question is whether the learned District Judge was right or wrong in holding that the plaintiffs' father took a rayati lease. The terms of the patta are before us and it may be observed, to begin with, that the tenant Ananta Ram Tripathi was a Brahmin and a pension-holder residing in Midnapur. The patta is both maurasi and mukarrari. It recites that the condition of the land is that jungles have been cut and embankments have been made, that the embankments require to be maintained and that there is a good deal of underwood or bushes which require to be cleared. The lease is not in the full sense a reclamation lease because the rough work of reclamation has a good deal to do before the land was fit for ordinary purposes of cultivation. We notice that the amount of land is 99 bighas, that the landlord took a selami of Rs. 1,000 and it was provided that the rent should not be payable at all for the first year and that for some years after that the rent should be on an increasing scale. There was a provision as to road-cess etc., which I do not lay any great stress upon and it was provided that, if the tenant did not maintain the bund and clear the small bushes and the landlord or other tenants of his sustained any loss the lessee was to be responsible for the same. The main clause of the patta, however, according to the translation with which we have been furnished by the learned Advocate for the appellants is this:

"You go on enjoying and possessing the said land by dwelling on the same, by cultivating it, by planting trees etc., by cutting them down, by excavating tanks, by erecting pucca buildings etc., generation after generation with power to transfer by gift, sale etc."

There is a provision that, if the land or any part of it is compulsorily acquired by Government, the tenant is to get 10 annas and the landlord 6 annas share of the compensation money. There is also a provision to say that the landlord maintains the right to minerals and a provision preventing the tenant from setting up any market, ghat and so on. These are the circumstances which are to be found in the document itself.

Apart from the circumstances disclosed by the document the position is fairly clear. It seems that some 20 bighas or so have been cultivated by the tenants themselves and that the bulk of it, 75 bighas have been cultivated by bhag chashis. It does not seem as one would expect that the plaintiffs or their father settled tenants upon the land in the sense that people who came there made their living out of that land and settled on it and took an interest in the land. What seems to have happened is that cultivators having some land of their own in the neighbourhood were given some more land by the plaintiffs and they cultivated some of the plaintiffs' land at different periods and gave the plaintiffs a share in the profits. The question is not an easy one in these circumstances to decide and we thought it fair to take time to have it examined in order that the Court might carefully look at the decided cases and consider the various elements which required to be considered.

In this case there are good many elements which tell against the plaintiffs being rai-yats. Without going outside of what is said by the decided cases and even by the Privy Council, we have the fact that the lessee was a pension-holder, a Brahmin and a resident of Midnapur. We find that he paid a selami of Rs. 1,000. Of course a rai-yati may be mukar-rari. On the other hand in this case he took a permanent lease on fixed terms with the very largest right in the property. The clause which refers to cultivation also refers to dwelling houses being built, tanks being excavated and interest granted from generation to generation with power to transfer by gift or sale. While the lease is not a reclamation lease still it is a lease of land which is in a somewhat primitive condition. In one year, there is not to be any rent and the rent is to be graduated after that.

Now the learned District Judge on reading the main clause says: "It grants a right to hold the land for the purpose of cultivation." But the learned Judge does not seem to have applied his mind to the real question under s. 5, Bengal Tenancy Act. There can be no doubt that the purpose of the tenancy was cultivation. The question is whether it was cultivation by the tenant himself or by the members of his family or hired servants or with the aid of partners or whether the method to be employed to bring it into cultivation was that the plaintiffs' father should let it out by establishing tenants on the land. In my judgment it would be wrong to read the main clause in the lease as showing that the primary object of this grant was that it was to be cultivated by the grantee himself or his family or hired servants. The clause is really directed to give to the grantee the largest rights; the right to erect dwelling houses, cultivate, excavate tanks and so on. In my opinion it was left entirely to the discretion of the grantee whether he would cultivate it himself or whether he would let it out to tenants. It must here be observed that while the presumption under cl. (5), s. 5, Bengal Tenancy Act does not arise in the sense that where the holding is under 100 bighas there is no presumption that it is a rai-yati interest, nevertheless we do know that where the holding is over 100 bighas there is a presumption that it is a tenure because so large a holding as that it is not practicable to work by the tenant himself or his family or servants. In the present case, the holding is 99 bighas and it hardly seems convincing to suggest that a pension holder from Midnapur is intending to cultivate 99 bighas by himself or his family or hired servants. In the case of Secretary of State v. Govind Prasad Barik (1), both Fletcher and Teunon, J.J., pointedly observed that bagh-chashis were no hired servants. I think that too much might be made of this point as the definition of a raiya is not absolutely exhaustive and a bagh-chashi is a person somewhere between a hired servant and a partner in those cases, at all events, where he has not been given an interest in the land so as to make him a tenant. But the economic meaning of the transaction which we are discussing is not, it seems to me, that this Sunderbuns land was to be occupied by the grantee or his family or servants. The point is that such land was hardly in a condition that a tenant could make a living by it to begin with. Very probably there was not a supply of land less labourers on the spot but there were people with a certain amount of land of their own who could do with more land if they could get it. Accordingly we find that the plaintiffs' father being able to pay a selami of Rs. 1,000 fulfilled the function of a very useful middleman because he got a right to these 99 bighas and proceeded to give a certain amount of these lands to each of a number of cultivators on the footing that they were bagh-chashis and in that way the cultivators got more land than they would be able to get otherwise for their own cultivation. We have here to remember that it was for the defendants who wanted to defeat the plaintiffs' claim to recover a large quantity of land which the defendants had taken from them to satisfy us that the plaintiffs were *raiya*s. That is laid down in the case of 11 Ind. Cas. 164 Tara Nath v. Iswar Chundar Das (2). In my opinion the true result upon this document and upon the facts disclosed in the evidence is that it is not made out that the holding was a raiya holding. In this view it appears to me that this appeal ought to be allowed, the decree of the learned District Judge should be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge ought to be restored with costs before the District Judge and of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Jurisdiction of Court—Prior adjudication by Munsif—Same property claimed along with others in later suit—Valuation of suit—Competency of former Court to try subsequent suit—Tests.

The plaintiff sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to recover one-half of certain lands by inheritance from U and the other by inheritance from S and also by adverse possession. The suit was valued at Rs. 2,100. It appeared that as regards the claim against S there had been a prior adjudication by the Munsif regarding two of the plots which were valued at more than Rs. 50:

Held, (i) that to decide whether the Munsif was entitled to try the later suit, only the value of that half which was claimed under the same cause of action, namely inheritance from S, had to be considered; [p. 605, col. 1.]

(ii) that from the value of this one-half, viz., Rs. 1,050, the value of the two plots (which exceeded Rs. 50) must be deducted and the suit would therefore, come within the jurisdiction of the Munsif and was barred by res judicata. Drupad Chandra Nashkar v. Bindumoyi Dasi (1), followed, Shibo Kant v. Baban Kant (2), distinguished, Bhugmanpati v. H. Forbes (3), referred to. [p. 605, col. 2.]

JACK, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for possession of certain lands on a declaration of the plaintiff's title thereto and for mesne profits. The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance on the ground of res judicata but was decreed in the lower Appellate Court on the finding that the suit is not barred by the principle of res judicata and that the plaintiff's title to the disputed portion of the land in suit was established by adverse possession.

In this appeal it is urged that the suit is barred by the principle of res judicata and that the learned Officiating Additional District Judge was wrong in holding that the suit is not so barred on the ground that the Munsif who tried the previous suit was not entitled to try the present suit. The present suit is valued at Rs. 2,100. This valuation includes Rs. 500 claimed as mesne profits the lands claimed being valued at Rs. 1,600. Now it appears that half of the lands are claimed by inheritance from Uma Charan, grandson of Raj Narain; whereas the other half is claimed by inheritance from Sashi Bhusan, another grandson of Raj Narain and also by adverse possession as against his widow. There being different causes of action as regards these two halves of the lands in suit, in deciding whether the Munsif was entitled to try the present suit we have only to consider that portion which is claimed under the same causes of action, namely, inheritance from Sashi Bhusan and adverse possession as against his widow. A sum of Rs. 800 represents the value of the lands of this portion and this taken with a sum of Rs. 250 which represents the claim for meane profits of these lands makes the value of the suit Rs. 1,050. But as regards two plots included within this land, namely, plots Nos. 148 and 842, the plaintiff's claim had already been the subject-matter of the previous suit and on the authority of Drupad Chandra Naskhar v. Bindumoyi Dasi (1) these plots should be excluded from the present suit, the previous suit as regards these two plots being between the same parties and the causes of action being the same. These two plots and another plot, namely plot No. 119 were valued in that suit at Rs. 100 and the value of plots Nos. 148 and 842 would be more than Rs. 50. Deducting the value of these plots from Rs. 1,050 the value of the land in suit would come to less than Rs. 1,000 and the suit would therefore come within the jurisdiction of the Munsif. In this view the Munsif who tried the previous suit might have also tried the subsequent suit and therefore the decision of the previous suit was res judicata as regards the present suit.

The case of Shibo Kant v. Baban Kant (2) on which the lower Appellate Court relies in holding that the two plots should not be excluded from the present suit is distinguishable inasmuch as that suit was held, not on valuation but on other grounds, to be beyond the Munsif's jurisdiction, and there the plaintiff in the second suit was a defendant in the first suit while in this case the plaintiff in both suits was the same person. In that case also the decision that the land should not be excluded was made under peculiar circumstances: the learned Judge states that he might have omitted the land which was the subject-matter of action before the Munsif and it might be argued that it was not land that the plaintiff was entitled to claim. But this argument was not of sufficient force to induce him to extend the principles of the decision in Bhugwanpati v. H. Forbes (3) to a case the facts of which differed so essentially. I think therefore that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in not accepting the decision of the case reported as Drupad Chandra v. Bindumoyi Dasi (1) and in not excluding these plots in the calculation of the value of the present suit. In the previous suit it was decided that Debnath defendant No. 9 is a first cousin of Sashi Bhusan and the owner of the two annas share which the plaintiff has claimed by inheritance from Sashi Bhusan. The contesting defendant No. 4 claims by purchase from Debnath.

It was decided in that suit on the question of adverse possession that the adverse possession of the plaintiff Kali Charan began only from the date of the death of the widow of Sashi Bhusan which occurred within 12 years of the suit, namely, in 1318. This decision as regards adverse possession is also res judicata in the present suit.

Another point raised is that as regards the remaining share of the lands in suit claimed by inheritance from Gange Jiban the plaintiff's title was not disputed. On this point the lower Appellate Court has found in favour of the defendants inasmuch as defendant No. 4 states in his evidence that he is in possession of two annas $17\frac{1}{2}$ gandas share by virtue of his purchase, that share being included in the purchase deed. Sashi had only two annas share so that a portion of the plaintiff's share was claimed by defendants. In the plaint also the plaintiff stated that the defendants were obstructing the realization of rent from the tenants holding at a money rent in respect of schedule ka (2) share. On this point the lower Appellate Court seems to be correct. The plaintiff had cause of action also as regards this portion of the claim. But his claim by inheritance and adverse possession of the land of schedule ka (1) of the plaint must fail on the ground of res judicata.

The result is that the decree of the Court of Appeal below as regards the land of schedule ka (1) of the plaint is set aside and this portion of the claim is dismissed. The plaintiff's suit is decreed as regards the lands of schedule ka (2) of the plaint. He will get half his costs throughout with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum and his possession of the lands described in schedule ka (2) of the plaint will be confirmed.

—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 109—Whether retrospective—Applicability to pending suits—Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective effect—Right of suit, whether vested right.

Section 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, does not relate to a mere matter of procedure but confers a substantive right and the amendment introduced to the said section by Act IV of 1928, has no retrospective operation. The amended section is not therefore applicable to suits instituted before the amendment came into force. Purna Chandra v. Narendra Nath (1), Raja Rishee Case Law v. Satish Chandra Pal (2), Sardar Ali v. Dalimuddin (3), Delhi Cloth & General Mills Co. Limited v. Income-tax Commissioner Delhi (4) and Colonial Sugar Refining Co. Ltd. v. Irving (5), referred to.

Appeal against the appellate decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 21st March 1929.

Mr. Gopendra Nath Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Suresh Chandra Mukherji, for the Respondent.

Suhrawardy, J—The only question of importance to be determined in this case is whether s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, before its amendment bars the plaintiff's suit or whether the section as amended in 1928 has retrospectively removed the bar. There were other questions raised, such as limitation, which have all been decided in favour of the plaintiff by the Court of appeal below. The trial Court found two main issues against the plaintiff and held that the suit was barred by limitation and also by the operation of s. 109 before its amendment.

The suit was instituted on 14th April 1927. The decision of the first Court was pronounced on 16th April 1928. The amended Bengal Tenancy Act came into force on 21st February 1929 and the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was delivered on 21st March 1929, that is, after the new Act came into operation. The decision of the trial Court was undoubtedly correct according to the law as it stood at the date it was pronounced. The learned District Judge is of opinion that as s. 109 which relates to a matter of procedure only has since been amended, the law as it stood when he gave his decision should apply.

It appears that the defendant was recorded in the Record of Rights as a tenant under the plaintiff and his tenancy was recorded as "no rent paid, liable to assessment of rent."

In 1918 the plaintiff applied under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for settlement of fair and equitable rent payable by the defendant in respect of the land held by him. Soon after he withdrew the application with liberty to bring a fresh suit. On these facts the trial Court on the authority of the Full Bench decision in Purna Chandra v. Narendra Nath (1) and also the decision of the Privy Council in Raja Rishee Case Law v. Satish Chandra Pal (2), held that the present suit could not be maintained. The learned District Judge on appeal holds that s. 109 relates to a matter of procedure only, and according to the well-known canon of interpretation of statute relating to procedure only, applies to all proceedings pending at the time when it comes into force. Section 109 as amended by the Act of 1928 entitles the landlord to maintain a suit in the ordinary Civil Court even if his application under s. 105 has failed provided it has not been decided on the merits. The learned Judge admits that if the new law has no retrospective effect or does not apply to pending proceedings he is bound to follow the Full Bench decision. But he is of opinion that though the amended section does not say that it will function retrospectively there can be no objection to allowing this point of procedure to be decided by the new law. In my judgment this view of the law is not correct. It is not necessary to go in detail into the rule of interpretation of Statutes relating to the matter in issue which is to be found in Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, Edn. 7, pages 192 and 197.

The matter has been fully threshed out in the Special Bench decision in Sardar Ali v. Dalimuddin (3). There the question was whether the amended Letters Patent, which took away the right of appeal from the judgment of a single Judge of this Court except with the permission of the Judge had retrospective effect and should be applied to suits instituted before the amendment of the Letters Patent. It was held that the law applicable with regard to the right of appeal was the law which was in force at the time when the suit was instituted. But it may be argued in this case that the position here is just the reverse. At the time when the present suit was instituted the plaintiff had no right to bring a civil suit; but when the matter came up for consideration before the lower Appellate Court he had been given such a right by change in the law. Such a question too is covered by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. v. Income tax Commissioner, Delhi (4), where no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council existed under s. 66, Income-Tax Act, when the proceedings were instituted, but such right of appeal to England was given by subsequent amendment of the Income Tax Act. The Judicial Committee relying upon the decision in the case of the Colonial Sugar Refining Co. Ltd. v. Irvin (5), held that the right of appeal is a substantive right and if it is given or taken away by subsequent amendment of the law the law as it stood at the initiation of the proceedings will apply.

The question therefore that falls for consideration is whether the provision of s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act as it stood before its amendment related to procedure only or conferred in certain circumstances a substantive right to the other party. There seems hardly room for doubt that s. 109 did not merely lay down the procedure but by taking away the ordinary right of suit of the plaintiff conferred a very valuable right on the defendant in some cases. The immunity from a civil suit thus gained by the defendant is a substantive right inasmuch as it enabled him to hold the property in the right mentioned in the Record of Rights without further litigation. In essence it is difficult to distinguish such a right from a right of appeal. If no right of appeal is given by Statute at the date of the suit the successful party acquires a certain right under the decision of the suit which is not open to challenge in appeal. In a case under s. 109 of the old Act where an application is made and withdrawn the defendant obtains the right to hold the property as recorded in the Record of Rights without further risk of litigation. I accordingly hold that the right which the defendant in this case obtained under s. 109 of the old Act is a substantive right which cannot be affected except by express words by subsequent alteration of the law. This view seems to be in accordance with s. 8

(a), General Clauses Act X of 1897 and s. 6 (a), Bengal General Clauses Act, 1896. The result is no doubt unfortunate and the plaintiff is not so much to blame for it as the conflicting decision of this Court on the question, but the result is inevitable and the only relief I can give to the plaintiff in this suit is not to allow any costs to the defendant.

In the result the appeal is allowed. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and those of the Court of first instance restored.

Each party to bear its own costs throughout.

Graham, J.—I agree. In my judgment s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, as it stood before the amendment of 1928, was applicable to the case and operated as a bar to the present suit. I am also of opinion that the learned District Judge erred in holding that the matter related to one of procedure only.

Appeal against the appellate decree of the District Judge, Khulna, dated the 29th September 1928.

Mr. Bijan Kumar Mukherji (with him Mr. Rajendra Nath Das), for the Appellants.

Mr. Brojo Lal Chakravarti (with him Messrs. Hemendra Chandra Sen, Jitendra Nath Roy and Nakuleswar Some), for the Respondents.

Judgment—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiffs and arises out of a suit in ejectment. The plaintiffs' case is that they have got a raiya interest in the lands in dispute; that the father of Radha Nath Sardar held it as an under raiyat under the plaintiffs and that he Radha Nath, died in Aswin 1326 B. S. It is also said that the huts which were on the land fell down in the cyclone in the year 1326 B. S. and that as the under-raiyati interest of Radha

Nath is not heritable under the law, defendant No. 8 has no right to retain possession of the same. The plaintiffs have, therefore, acquired right to enter into possession. The plaintiffs went to take possession of the land in Baisak 1330 B. S. when they were resisted not only by defendant No. 8 but also by defendants Nos. 1 to 7. Hence the present suit. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 8 filed separate written statements, that is, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed one written statement and defendant No. 8 filed another. The defence of defendant No. 8 is substantially this that the land in dispute formed the homestead of Radha Nath and that as Radha Nath is a raiya of village Sarai where the lands in dispute are situate with respect to other lands he has acquired the right to resist eviction having regard to the provisions of s. 192, Bengal Tenancy Act. It is further said that having regard to the terms of the lease by which this tenancy was created defendant No. 8 certainly had a heritable interest in the disputed land and consequently the suit must fail. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by their separate written defence raised the same contention. The Munsif accepted the defendants' defence so far as it was based under the provisions of s. 182 Bengal Tenancy Act. He also accepted the other defences that under the terms of the instrument under which the tenancy is held it was heritable. In this view the Munsif dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

Against this decision an appeal was taken to the Court of the District Judge of Khulna. The learned District Judge agreed with the Munsif on the question that the tenancy was heritable and that it was governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, but disagreed with the Munsif on the question namely, that the defendant was not entitled to fall back on the provisions of s. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act seeing that on the evidence the District Judge was not satisfied that defendant No. 8 held some other lands in village Sarai as a raiya or in other words, that it was not established to his satisfaction that Radha Nath was a settled raiya of of the village with reference to the other lands in the village Sarai.

Against the decision of the District Judge affirming that of the Munsif the present appeal has been brought and it has been contended by Dr. Mukherjee who appears for the appellant that from the terms of the kabuliyat it would appear that the lease was given to Radha Nath and in the absence of any term in the instrument it must be regarded that it endured during the lifetime of Radha Nath and that with the death of Radha Nath the kabuliyat spent its force. Consequently the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession. The terms of the lease are set forth in substance in the judgment of the learned District Judge at page 10 of the paper book. Therefrom it will appear that the lease was given for residential purposes. That being so it appears on the authorities which have been relied on by the District Judge and which have also been cited by Mr. Brojo Lal Chakrabarty for the respondent before me that in the absence of an intention to the contrary the lease-hold interest must be regarded as heritable. Reference may be made in this connexion to the decision in the cases of Kiserilal Roy v. Kishna Kamini (1) and Harilal Singha v. Rupa Manjari Barman (2). These cases which have been placed before me undoubtedly support the contention of the respondents and also support the view taken by the learned District Judge in this behalf. The appeal therefore should fail on this ground. It has been argued for the respondent that this Court should not rest its decision on the other finding which has been arrived at by the District Judge with reference to the applicability of s. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act. I am unable to agree with this contention. The learned District Judge has analyzed the evidence and he has come to the conclusion on the findings that he is not satisfied that Radha Nath or his successor held as a raiya under the Malik Nur Mahmud. He has considered the evidence of the plaintiff and also the evidence of D. W. 6 and has come to the conclusion on the question of fact as to whether the raiya interest of Radha Nath under Nur Mahmud has been established or not. He has found that all that appears from the evidence is that Radha Nath had a karsa right in the land and the witness who speaks about the karsa right meant a right held under a kaimi right. The dakhilas are also not conclusive on this question. In these circumstances I think that the decision cannot be rested only on the ground that the interest of Radha Nath was heritable.

The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

V, r. 20—'Duly served,' meaning of—Substituted service, defendant's right to challenge propriety of—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164.

Where a person against whom an ex parte decree has been passed by a Court of Small Causes, without formally applying for the court's direction as to the nature of security to be furnished applies to such court for setting aside the ex parte decree and furnishes security with it and the court directs a notice to issue to the other party the court must be taken to have directed the applicant to furnish security of the kind actually furnished by him. [p. 612, cols. 1 & 2.]

The provisions of s. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, are not merely directory but imperative and mandatory. [p. 615, col. 1.]

The rule that substituted service is to be taken to be as effectual as personal service only means that the court hearing the case may proceed with the suit as if the summons had been personally served on the defendant. Therefore, when an order for substituted service is made by a court on the representation of plaintiff, it is open to the defendant when he makes an application for setting aside ex parte decree to challenge the propriety of the order and to show that the method employed was not calculated to effect the purpose, namely of informing the defendant of the institution of the suit. If the court having regard to all the circumstances of the case comes to the conclusion that there was no due service, limitation would be computed from the date of applicant's knowledge of the decree. [ibid]

Civil Revision against a decree of the Munsif of Kanauj, at Farrukhabad, dated the 19th October, 1929.

On 23rd April 1931, Bajpai, J., made the following Order of Reference to a Full Bench.—This is an application in revision against an order of a Small Cause Court Judge, dated the 19th of October, 1929, restoring a case which was decreed ex parte.

The order of the court below against which this revision is directed has not been placed upon my paper-book, and I direct that a copy of the said order should be placed upon the paper-book.

It appears that on the 31st of July an ex parte decree was passed against the defendant. Attempts had been made to effect personal service, but they were evidently infructuous, and in the last instance service by publication in a local newspaper was ordered. Some time in 1929 the defendant applied to the court below for setting aside the ex parte decree on the ground that he had no notice whatsoever of the suit, and he came to know of the decree only four days back when execution was levied. The application was accompanied by an affidavit and by a surety bond. On the 19th of October, 1929, when this application came for hearing, the learned Judge of the court below was of the opinion that the security was sufficient for the decretal amount and that the ends of justice required that the case should be disposed of on the merits. As I said in the beginning, the present application in revision is directed against this order, and the points raised are that the provisions of s. 17 of the Small Cause Courts Act have not been satisfied and that substituted service in law being sufficient service, the learned Judge had no jurisdiction after three years to set aside the decree. These two points have been developed in argument before me. It is stated that it is necessary to obtain the direction of the Small Cause Court Judge before filing a security bond as to whether such a security bond would be accepted or not, and a failure to obtain such a direction is fatal to the application for setting aside the ex parte decree, and in support of that contention the case of Jhabboo Misir v. Hawaldar Tewari (1) is cited before me. The learned Judges, who decided that case, although they are not agreed on all the points, are undoubtedly agreed upon one thing, viz., that when anything but cash deposit is sought to be put in, the direction of the court must be obtained previously, and Mr. Justice Niamat Ullah at the end of his judgment says that an omission to obtain such direction is fatal to the success of the application. Upon the basis of this observation it is argued before me that inasmuch as there was no application for any such direction before the security bond was filed, the court below had absolutely no jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree. On the other hand, it is argued by the opposite party that failure to obtain such a direction does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the court, but the applicant takes the risk of having his application dismissed on that ground alone, but if the court is not prepared to take that stringent step and considers the security sufficient, the court has still the jurisdiction to entertain the application. I am inclined to agree with the latter view. It is desirable that the court's direction should be obtained by a separate application, but if it has not been done and if the other provisions of s. 17 have been complied with, then the court's jurisdiction to proceed with the application is not ousted, and I do not think that the learned Judges, who decided the above mentioned case, have gone to the extent to which the Counsel for the applicant says they have gone. As to the other question, that the substituted service must be deemed to be sufficient, I am in some difficulty by reason of the indefinite finding of the court below. The learned Judge says: "Application supported by affidavit. Reasons sufficient." This would mean that the court below was satisfied with the reasons given by the defendant and was of the opinion that the case should be restored. He later on says: "Service on applicant was effected (sic) by publication." He does not say whether he deems such service as due service, but the trend of his order shows that he did not consider it as sufficient. He, however, makes the defendant pay Rs 5 as costs to the plaintiff which goes to show that the defendant was to blame, and the learned Counsel for the plaintiff argues that this shows that the learned Judge of the court below considered the service to be not invalid. There is some force in his argument. Both these points (especially the first one) raise questions of some importance, and I think it desirable that they should be decided by a Bench of two Judges.

I, therefore, direct that the case be laid before a Bench of two Judges.

Opinion.

Mukerji, J.—This reference to the Full Bench has arisen out of an application made by Ganga Singh, the opposite party to this revision, to set aside an ex parte decree made against him on 30th July, 1926, in favour of the applicant before us, Ram Bharose.

The application filed on 22nd August, 1929, for setting aside the ex parte decree, which had been made by a Munsif exercising the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, in his Small Cause Court jurisdiction, was accompanied with a security bond furnished by one Sadho Singh for the sum of Rs. 175, which was large enough to cover the decretal amount. The Judge before whom the application was made directed a notice to issue to the plaintiff, Ram Bharose, on the same day that the application was made. The application was heard on 19th October, 1929, and was allowed, subject to payment of Rs. 5 costs to the plaintiff.

The petition of revision came before a learned single Judge of this Court. He referred it to a Bench of two Judges, and the learned Judges before whom the matter came eventually referred the case to a Full Bench, in order that the law on two points might be settled.

These two points are, (1) relating to the effect of substituted service on an applicant for setting aside an ex parte decree, and, (2), what are the rules that a defendant in an ex parte Small Cause Court decree against him must comply with, in order to be able to have the ex parte decree set aside.

It appears that when some attempt had been made to serve Ganga Singh with a summons of the suit, the plaintiff applied that a substituted service should be effected as against him. This was done, and the service having been effected, the ex parte decree was made.

It has been urged on behalf of the applicant before us (the plaintiff) that under Art. 164 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act, 30 days are allowed for making an application by a defendant for setting aside an ex parte decree, and two dates are furnished from which this period of 30 days runs. These periods are, (1), the date of the decree, and, in certain other circumstances, (2) the date of the knowledge of the applicant of the decree. The circumstances in which the second date is the starting point is "Where the summons was not duly served." It is further argued that under O. V, r. 20, sub-r. (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, "service substituted by order of" the court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally", and, therefore, where substituted service has been ordered and effected, according to the directions of the court, there is due service of the summons within the meaning of Art 164 of the Limitation Act, and the application for setting aside the decree must be made within 30 days of the decree.

I am unable to accept this argument. The object of issuing a summons is to inform the party, against whom a suit has been instituted, of the fact that there is a suit against him, and if he so chooses he may come and defend it. If that be the object of a summons and if, for no fault of his own, a defendant was never put in a position to know that a suit had been instituted against him, whatever steps may have been taken for serving the summons on him, these steps can never be accepted as amounting to "due service". When an order for substituted service is made by a court, on the representation of a plaintiff, only one side is present before the court and it acts on the representation of one party. Obviously it should be open to the defendant, when he appears, to show that the method employed was not calculated to effect the purpose, which the court had in view, namely, informing the defendant of the institution of the suit. If this is so, the court has to consider, in view of all the circumstances of the case, for example, the place where the defendant was when the summons was issued to him, where and how the summons was served, and so on, in order to see whether there was due service. For example, if a man has gone to Burma to earn a living and he has relations at home with whom he is in constant touch, and the summons is served on the defendant by affixation of a copy of it on the outer door of his house, it may be open to the court to infer that the service was good, it being expected that the defendant's close relations, living jointly with him, in the same house, would inform him of the case. Again, where it is found that the defendant knew that a suit was likely to come and, in order that a summons may not be served on him, he leaves the place, it may be open to the court to hold that there was due service by substitution. On the other hand, if the defendant went, say, to Burma to earn a living and left no one at home, which remained vacant, and at the instance of the plaintiff a substituted service was ordered by publication of the fact of the institution of the suit in a paper published, say, at Aligarh, where the suit was instituted, the court would be in a position to hold that there was no due service.

The rule that substituted service is to be taken as effectual as personal service only means that the court hearing the case may proceed with the suit as if the summons had been personally served on the defendant.

The result is that, in my opinion, whether there has been 'due service' or not is to be considered by the court to which an application has been made for setting aside an ex parte decree, having regard to all the circumstances of the case as described above. If the conclusion is that there was due service, then, if the applicant has not come within 30 days of the decree, he is barred by time. If the conclusion is that there was no due service, the limitation would be computed from the date of the applicant's knowledge of the decree. The mere fact that a substituted service had been ordered is immaterial by itself.

In this particular case before us the court was satisfied, on the affidavit furnished on behalf of the applicant, that there was no proper service and the ex parte decree should be set aside. It is true that the Judge, Small Cause Court, does not give his reasons in detail; but that is because his orders are final, subject to the High Court's power of interference in revision, and the learned Judge was not bound to give reasons in extenso for his opinion. I would hold that the application was within time.

Now I come to consider the second point. On a plain reading of s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act the applicant for the setting aside of a judgment has to do these things. To start with, he ought to apply to the court to which he proposes to make an application to tell him what kind of security, in the circumstances detailed in the applicant's application, the court would require of him to furnish. Usually the court would ask for a cash security, but it may be satisfied on the applicant's representation that a cash security may be dispensed with. In rare cases, as in the illustration given by me in my judgment in Jhabboo Misri's case (1) cited below, the court may refuse to take a cash security and may insist on other kind of security being taken and may insist on the moveable property in dispute being itself produced. When the court gives its direction, namely, whether the applicant is to furnish cash security or is to give some other kind of security, the applicant should present his application for setting aside the decree, together with the security demanded. Then his duties are over. The security filed will then be scrutinised by the court, and the court shall see whether the security is to its satisfaction. Then presumably, a notice would go to the plaintiff to show cause why the decree should not be set aside. This was also the view which I took in the case of Jhabboo Misir v. Hawaldar Tewari (1).

Although the rule (s. 17, Small Cause Courts Act) requires that the security is to be furnished at the time of presenting an application for setting aside an ex parte decree it has been held in this court in Ramchandra Das v. Durga Prasad (2) that the security may be furnished even after the application has been made, provided the security is forthcoming within the period of 30 days of limitation. To this decision I was a party. This view was taken by other High Courts also. [See V. M. Assan v. M. E. Rahim (3), Jneu Muchi v. Budhiram Muchi (4) and Narain v. Pudan (5)] The reason of this decision is that the previously made application may be taken as made on the date on which the security was furnished, as the period of limitation has not yet expired, and it would be a mere formality which may be safely dispensed with, to direct the applicant to file a fresh application on the day when he furnishes the security. Having regard to the principle of these decisions, it has been urged that the giving of directions by the court, as required by s. 17 of the Small Cause Courts Act, may also be postponed to any time within 30 days of the period of limitation allowed by Art. 164 of the Limitation Act. I think this contention is correct.

Where an applicant, without formally applying for the court's direction, makes an application for setting aside an ex parte decree and furnishes security with it, and the court directs a notice to issue to the other side, it must be taken the court is cognisant of the fact that the applicant has furnished security as required by s. 17 of the Small Cause Courts Act. The order that notice should issue may be taken as an approval by the court of the security furnished, and in the circumstances disclosed by the applicant in his application and affidavit (if any). We may also take it that, the court, by implication, gave the applicant a direction that he should furnish security of the kind actually furnished by him. This is not a mere attempt to get over what may be believed to be rather hard directions of the law. If the court, instead of issuing a notice in the case just mentioned, rejects this application because its direction has not been obtained, and if limitation has not already expired it would be open to the applicant to make a fresh application and to furnish such security as the court may direct. A party cannot suffer by the act of a court and, therefore, we must accept the position that the court has given the direction, according to law, to the furnishing of the security actually furnished, where the court instead of rejecting the application of the defendant directs that a notice should issue.

Where the court rejects the application because its direction has not been obtained or because it considers that the kind of security furnished is not to its mind, and, if in the meantime limitation has expired, the applicant has no remedy. By not complying with the rule of the law he took a risk and he has nothing to complain of.

The court may and should always exercise its inherent powers to set wrongs committed by itself right, and if, for the fault of the court, directions are not given at the right time, it will see that a party does not suffer.

The conclusion that I arrive at, therefore, is that the proper course is for a party to make an application to the court to obtain its directions as to the nature of the security, and then to apply with the security of the nature directed by the court for setting aside the ex parte decree. The security furnished must comply with the directions of the court, and the court will see that the security is to its satisfaction, i. e., sufficient. But where the court accepts a security without question and directs a notice to issue, it by necessary implication gives a direction that the security should be of the nature directed by it and that the security furnished is sufficient to its mind.

Applying this rule to the present case before me, the procedure adopted by the defendant is within the law.

In the result I would dismiss the application in revision.

Boys, J—This application under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure was referred by the Single Judge, before whom it first came, to a Bench of two Judges, and at their request it has been referred by the direction of the Acting Chief Justice to the present Full Bench. There are two questions for consideration: the first dealing with the proviso clause to s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act; and the second with the words "duly served" in Art. 164 of the Limitation Act.

The facts are simple. The present applicant Ram Bharose, filed a suit in the Court of Small Causes against the present opposite party, Ganga Singh. After an endeavour to serve notice personally on Ganga Singh, and notice by registered post, had as alleged, failed, the court upon the application of Ram Bharose, directed substituted service, not in the manner provided in the earlier portion of O. V, r. 20 but by publication in a local newspaper, and (etc) by a further effort to serve the summons by a peon of the court. There is material even on the present record to show that the notice was published in a paper as directed. There is nothing to show whether or not any endeavour was made to serve the notice personally or otherwise by a peon, or if, such effort was made, what was the result. The incident is five years' old, and it would appear that many of the papers have been weeded out.

On July 31st, 1926, the applicant got a decree ex parte. On 22nd August, 1929, i e., rather more than three years later, Ganga Singh came into the Court of Small Causes with an application under s. 17 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act asking for an order to set aside the decree. This application was supported by an affidavit of Ranjit, the brother of Ganga Singh, which briefly stated that he and his brother had only learnt of the decree four days previously. Further a bond executed by one Sadho Singh as surety for the payment of the decree, if eventually it was maintained, was also filed. The court on that same day, August 22nd, ordered notice to issue. Nothing further occurred until 19th October, 1929, when the court set aside the decree on payment by Ganga Singh of Rs. 5 costs. From this order Ram Bharose has come up in revision.

The points urged by Mr. Malik on his behalf are two-fold. He contends that the direction of the court referred to in the last five lines of the proviso to s. 17 should have been taken before security was furnished, and that no direction was in fact given within 30 days of the decree, and, therefore, the subsequent order was invalid. Secondly, he was contended that Ganga Singh did not in his application under s. 17, or in his affidavit, challenge the power of the court to order substituted service, nor challenged the details of that order or the facts relating to its execution; nor did the Judge suo motu consider the existence of any such defects and therefore the service must be regarded as good, and therefore the application was barred by limitation. These objections on behalf of the applicant Ram Bharose are not as stated in the memorandum of appeal but as dictated by his Counsel in response to a question of the court at the conclusion of the argument. In substance they amount to this that the literal directions contained in the proviso to s. 17 were not complied with by Ganga Singh, and that the notice on him must (be taken to have been duly served. At this point the immense amount of trouble taken by Mr. Malik with the case may receive full recognition.

He has placed before us a very large number of cases, particularly in reference to the first point. It is not, however, necessary to enter into a detailed consideration of all those cases. It suffices to say that there is a general consensus of opinion that the proviso to s. 17 is incapable of literal application. Some learned Judges holding the words to mandatory and some holding the words to be merely directory, none have been able to apply the proviso literally as it stands. No other view is possible. It is incapable of literal application.

According to the proviso as it stands, an applicant for an order to set aside an ex parte decree must, at the time of presenting the application, deposit the amount or give security. The choice is in our view clearly not with him, but as the court may direct. Therefore reading the words literally he must get this direction before he makes his application, for he must furnish the cash or security at the time of presenting his application, and he cannot know which he has to furnish, unless he has got a previous direction. How then is he to get his previous direction without making an application? He cannot make an oral application, for manifestly the court would ask him what it was all about, and to present a written application. He cannot present a written application to get the order set aside without furnishing cash or security, or his application would have to be dismissed. The only course which it would seem distantly possible for him to take to comply with the section, if he desires to be allowed to file security, would seem to be:

(a) to file preliminary application setting out the facts, not asking for the decree to be set aside but merely stating that he intends to file an application asking for an order to set aside the decree, and asking for the moment only for a direction that he may adopt the course of filing security; (b) having got his direction, to present a second, the principal, application with the security bond for an order to set aside the decree, and, in the case of a security bond pledging immoveable property, after getting it executed, registered and verified.

And all this he must get done within 30 days. It is impossible to think that this is what the law intended. The matter is a Small Cause Court matter, and the Legislature could never have intended to multiply proceedings thus unnecessarily.

"Where the main object and intention of a Statute are clear, it must not be reduced to a nullity by the draftsman's unskilfulness or ignorance of the law, except in a case of necessity, or the absolute intractability of the language used." (Maxwell, 7th Edn., p 198).

Now, despite the obscurity of the language used, the main object and intention of the Statute are clear. "It is clear.

(1) that there must be an application for an order to set aside the decree:

(2) that the court must be satisfied either by the deposit of cash or security that the decree-holder will be able to get his money if the decree is upheld;

(3) that these matters must be complete before the expiration of the 30 days' limitation provided by Art. 164 of the Limitation Act."

The first two requisites are essential on the face of the proviso. The third is an inevitable deduction from the use of the words "at the time of presenting his application" and from the fact that this proviso exists at all. If it was not the intention of the Legislature to secure promptness by securing a complete and properly supported application before the expiry of the 30 days, it would have been unnecessary to have this proviso at all, and it would have sufficed to rely upon the Code of Civil Procedure. In our view, then, it must be held that the application is sufficient if it fulfils the above three conditions. The conclusion from this, then, is that no initial defects in the making of the application must be allowed to stand in the way of the applicant getting a notice issued to the decree-holder, provided that an application has been filed and further that cash has been deposited, or, if the court has so permitted, security has been given, all before the expiry of 30 days. A reasonable and practical interpretation of the section is, therefore, as follows:—

(1) The applicant must within 30 days file his application either with cash or with a statement that he is prepared to give security (and in the latter case he may, of course, tender the security he proposes) and ask for the direction of the court.

(2) In the case where he wants to give security, if the court refuses to direct security, he must deposit cash within the 30 days, or his application will be rejected.

(3) If the court agrees to direct security, then (a) it will consider the security already offered, if it has been so offered; or (b) name security to its satisfaction which must be filed within the 30 days.

(4) If the applicant does not in fact ask for a direction or if, though the applicant does ask for a direction, the court does not in fact give any direction, but in fact the court does issue notice, the court shall be taken to have approved the deposit of cash or the security offered as the case may be.

(5) If filed within the 30 days and accepted by the court expressly or impliedly by the issue of notice the application is a good application, though it will be open to the decree-holder to challenge the nature and sufficiency of the security and to the court under O. IX, r. 9 to make such further conditions as it thinks fit.

In the course of the argument it has been suggested that difficulty might arise if the court delayed in giving its direction, or approving expressly or impliedly the security already tendered, so long that the period of limitation had expired before the applicant had fair opportunity of complying with the direction. It is not a case which we have now to consider, but in a suitable case it would be open to the court itself to consider and exercise its inherent powers reserved to it by s. 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The next question we were invited to consider was the scope of the words "duly served" in Art. 164 of the Limitation Act. These words appear capable of only one interpretation. It is open to the applicant to satisfy the court that there was no real ground for allowing substituted service at all; that he was not "keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service"; that there was no reason why the summons should not have been served upon him in the ordinary way; that the order for substituted service was not carried out by affixation in the court-house and upon any conspicuous part of the defendant's house etc.; that it was not carried out in any alternative method directed by the court that the alternative method directed by the court was not a proper method such as was reasonably calculated to secure that notice should reach the defendant, etc.

Now, applying what has been said above to the present case, it is clear that rightly or wrongly the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was satisfied that the notice had not been properly served. The applicant decree-holder, before us, has not been able to satisfy us either that the method of substituted service which was ordered by the court was a reasonable and proper method; nor that even such substituted service as was ordered was actually carried out.

Further we are satisfied that the three essential conditions which we have laid down above were fulfilled in reference to the application itself. The application was filed within the 30 days. There was within the 30 days a deposit of security which was approved by the Judge, and all the requisites were complete within the 30 days. This being so, the application should be dismissed with costs.

Sulaiman, Actg. C. J.—I concur in the conclusions.

Under Art. 164 of the Indian Limitation Act, an application by a defendant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte must be made within 30 days of the date of the decree, or where the summons was not duly served, when the applicant has knowledge of the decree. The expression "duly served" obviously means served as required by law. The procedure for the service of summonses is laid down in O. V., Civil Procedure Code. Where the service is not personal, it may be substituted. Under O. V, r. 20 (2) service substituted by order of the court is as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally. But as at the time when the substituted service is ordered the proceedings are ex parte, it would be open to the defendant when he appears later to challenge the propriety of the order and ask the court to re-examine its fitness. If in view of any additional circumstances which he is able to place before the court he can satisfy it that he was not keeping out of the way and that there was no sufficient reason why the summons could not be served in the ordinary way or that the manner of service decided upon was not fair and just to him, he would have discharged the burden of showing that there was no due service.

As to s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, I have no doubt in my mind that its provisions are not merely directory but that they are imperative and mandatory. Discretion to impose terms before setting aside an ex parte decree is given to the court under O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code. The procedure prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure has been made applicable to a Court of Small Causes with a proviso. The whole object of the proviso is to introduce a variation in a Small Cause Court suit. If the proviso was not meant by the Legislature to be indispensable there would have been no need for the proviso at all, as the court has ordinarily discretion in the matter.

As Small Cause Court cases are petty cases arising out of mere money claims without any real dispute as to the title to any immoveable property, the Legislature apparently intended that the procedure regulating the setting aside of an ex parte decree should be strict, and a defendant should not be allowed to harass the decree-holder by such a proceeding without the penalty of furnishing adequate security for the decretal amount which can be conveniently availed of by the decree-holder if the application is dismissed.

Notwithstanding a few cases, there is an overwhelming preponderance of opinion in favour of the view that the proviso is mandatory. Both on the language of the section and on the principle of stare decisis I would hold that it is not merely directory.

No doubt the language of the proviso is very unhappy and there is some apparent inconsistency between the expression "at the time of presenting his application" and the expression "as the court may direct." If we take the two expressions literally, the two things cannot happen exactly simultaneously. But the direction of the court may be obtained before the application is presented or just after presenting the application.

It is quite clear to me that an application cannot be presented after the prescribed period, nor can cash or security be deposited after the expiry of that period. The court is not given any discretion at all to extend the time. If the security deposited within the time is discovered afterwards to be defective or unsatisfactory in any way, the court has no power to direct a fresh security to be substituted for it after the expiry of the period.

It also seems to me that the expression "as the court may direct" does not relate to "to the satisfaction of the court" but to the nature or character of the security, that is to say, whether it is to be cash or other security. The application has no absolute choice as to the kind of security, but it has to be subject to the direction of the court.

It however seems to me that if no security is deposited at the time of the presenting of the application or no direction of the court as to its nature is obtained before or at the time, even then the proviso would be substantially complied with if before the expiry of the fixed period the defect is cured. It is open to an applicant to file a complete application accompanied with the necessary security up to the last day of the period. If previously he filed an applicant which is either irregular or defective, there is nothing to prevent him from filing within the time a fresh application which is not so defective. There is, therefore, no justification for not treating the previous application as having been properly presented on the date when it was every way complete.

I have therefore no hesitation in holding that no matter what the defects might have been in the application or in the security or in obtaining the direction of the Court at the time when the application was first presented, if that defect is absolutely cured before the expiry of the fixed period, the application becomes a proper one and fulfils the requirements of the proviso.

I felt somewhat inclined to hold that as the expression used is the present tense viz, "court may direct" and not the present perfect tense 'the court may have directed' the direction may be given even after the expiry of the period, provided that the security had been deposited in them and was sufficient. In this view the applicant would be bound to file the application and make the deposit in time, taking the risk of the security not being accepted; but there would be nothing to prevent the court from accepting it afterwards. My learned brethren rightly point out that the word is 'direct' and not 'approve' and accordingly a subsequent acceptance would not be direction but approval. I, therefore, do not wish to differ from their opinion.

In the present case although the security was deposited without obtaining any previous direction the court ordered notice to issue before the period expired. It must accordingly be deemed to have by implication given the necessary direction.

Of course, the question whether the security is sufficient and satisfactory need not be finally determined during the period of 30 days. Indeed, the plaintiff-decree-holder may come in afterwards and challenge its sufficiency. The mere fact that it is found afterwards that the security was sufficient, would not make the deposit of the security within the time in any way defective.

Pre-emption—Building sites in Benares City—Proof of custom as to buildings—Evidentiary value.

The burden of proving the existence of a custom of pre-emption with regard to building sites is on the party who alleges the existence of such a custom and he cannot succeed by merely establishing that there is a custom of pre-emption with regard to houses. But ordinarily the same principle of exclusion of strangers would apply to building sites as applies to houses and if a custom of pre-emption with regard to houses is proved slight evidence ought to be sufficient for establishing that the same custom applies to building sites. *Ejnash Koeri v. First Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 18th February, 1928.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Dr. K. N. Katju and Messrs. B. Malik, Nanak Chand and Govind Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and N. Upadhaya, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption based on an alleged custom, of the sale of a building site in the city of Benares. The plaintiff alleged that there was a custom in Benares applying to all residents under which any person wishing to transfer any house or building site or land was bound to offer it to his co-sharers in the property to sharers in the appendages and to adjoining neighbours. The plaintiff also alleged that he had performed the two demands which were in accordance with the rules of the Muhammadan Law. The contesting defendant admitted that there were certain customs prevailing within the said part of the city of Benares, but pleaded that 'the custom of pre-emption that prevails in Benares relates to residential houses only, and there is no custom of pre-emption regarding house sites and lands in Benares.' It was further pleaded that the plaintiff had not in fact made the necessary demands. The allegation of the plaintiff that the property sold consisted of a house was also repudiated. Under the sale deed in dispute the defendant purports to have purchased the site of this plot only without the materials of the structure which stands upon it. It is admitted that this is a par-jotdari plot; the ownership of the land vests in the proprietor who is the vendor. There was some dispute as to whether there was any structure upon it which could be called a house and as to whether this structure belonged to the vendor and was actually sold by him. A photograph of the shed standing upon it is on the record and it shows that it is a fairly large shed of which the roof is of tiles and corrugated iron sheets. There is evidence to show that certain coolies and workmen live in it and cook their food. There is also a sort of almirah which serves the purpose of a store-room. We do not think that it can be said that this structure is not a place of human habitation so as to make the custom relating to houses inapplicable to it.

At the same time we are of opinion that the evidence on the record falls short of establishing that the materials of this structure belonged to the vendor. The plaintiff led practically no evidence to show that the vendor owned the materials of this construction. On the other hand the defendant produced the occupier Govind who stated that he was the owner of the materials and had put up the chapper himself. There was also the evidence of the witness Ali Jawwad to the effect that the shed had been put up by the tenant of the land some years ago. The evidence being uncontradicted we must assume in favour of the defendant that the materials of the structure do not belong to the vendor and that they have obviously not been acquired by the vendee. We may, therefore, take it that the plot is a building site on which admittedly many many years ago a pucca house stood which was subsequently replaced by a tiled house which stood for some years. Later on this was pulled down by the occupier who proceeded to build a pucca construction upon it. He laid the foundation but a suit by the proprietor was promptly instituted which continued for several years with the result that the construction was stopped. This suit was decreed and the occupier was ejected. Since then it has been let out to other people who have put up another structure upon it. The land is undoubtedly in the nature of a building site on which a structure stands even now. It is not merely a plot of waste land or an agricultural plot.

The court below was held that the custom of pre-emption even with regard to building sites has been established by the evidence in the case. The learned Advocate for the appellant rightly argues that the burden of proving the existence of the custom is on the plaintiff and that he cannot succeed by merely establishing that the custom of pre-emption applies to houses in the city of Benares. The learned Advocate for the respondent replies that the custom of pre-emption with regard to building sites and small parcels of land, where a custom of pre-emption with regard to houses is admittedly proved, is quite common and that small evidence ought to be sufficient for establishing that the same custom applies to such building sites. Our attention has been drawn to several cases where the same rule has been applied to small parcels of land as applied to houses. We may refer to the cases of Ejnash Koeri v. Sheikh Amzudally (1), Deendayal v. Saja (2), Joogal Kishore v. Pooch Singh (3), Nusrat Raza v. Umbul Khyr Bibi (4), Abdul Aziz v. Khondkar Hamid Ali (5), Ram Gobind Roy v. Syud Kushuffudoza (6) and Gobind Chand Mon Mohan (7) as also to a recent case of the Patna High Court 97 Ind. Cas. 618 Sheoradni v. Munshi Lall (8).

It seems to us that ordinarily the same principle of exclusion of strangers would apply to building sites as applies to houses.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has relied strongly upon the case of Ram Chand v. Goswami Ram (9) where a Division Bench of this Court held that the custom of pre-emption for a piece of land which was an orchard or a fruit garden in Benares had not been established in that case. The learned Judges pointed out that the custom of pre-emption was based upon the idea of preventing the intrusion of strangers into the co-parcenary body and in their opinion no such consideration applies to a case like the one before them where people congregated together in cities. The plot in dispute in that case was not a residential plot of land and obviously the question of excluding strangers was not of the same paramount importance as in cases where a house or building site has been sold. There is no doubt that the cases quoted before us do show that the same rule which applies to houses has been applied to building sites and small parcels of land which can be used as such. The question before us is whether there is any evidence in this case and whether that evidence is sufficient to prove that the same rule applies to building sites in Benares.

It cannot be disputed that the right of pre-emption as regards the houses is established and extends to the sites covered by the houses. This was expressly held in a judgment dated the 16th of May, 1887. The learned Munsif in that case went so far as to suggest that the right of pre-emption was really derived from the ancient Hindu custom and applied to immoveable properties in general including gardens. In a judgment dated the 8th of January, 1894, the learned Munsif referred to an earlier case of pre-emption which had been decreed with regard to a grove in Ramapura. The value of this judgment however must be discountenanced in view of the pronouncement of this court in Ram Chand Khanna's case (9). But a judgment of the Munsif of Benares dated 23rd of December, 1908, in a case in which the defendants were absent, shows that the suit related to a portion of land in Benares. The judgment does not show that it was a house at all. The claim does not appear to have been contested and it was decreed. The mere fact that the defendants did not choose to contest the suit would not necessarily destroy the value of the judgment, for the custom might be so well established that the defendant might not think it worth while to resist the suit. This judgment does show that the custom was in force with regard to a mere piece of land though it was not absolutely covered by structure. There was another litigation which resulted in a decree dated the 22nd of March, 1919. The defendants in their written statement had pleaded that the plaintiff's share in the so-called house was a mere piece of waste land. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff's house was nothing but a house in ruins which had fallen down and that only the gateway of the house remained standing. The case was a converse one because the point was whether the plaintiff who did not own any house could claim pre-emption on the ground of vicinage. As the right of pre-emption is a reciprocal right the same rule would apply to that case as would apply to a case where the property in dispute is a house in ruins. "The learned Judge came to the conclusion. The right is founded on vicinage and it matters little whether there is a good house or a falling house or a fallen house standing." He held that the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt.

It seems to us that the common usage of extending the right applicable to houses to building sites was adhered to in the cases referred to above which are clear instances, of the exercise of the right of pre-emption based on custom with regard to mere building sites as distinct from houses. There was also some oral evidence of a general nature in the case. The learned Subordinate Judge on a consideration of the entire evidence came to the conclusion that even if the house had not been transferred to the vendee, the custom relating to khandhars (ruined house sites) and house sites had been established. We think that we should not differ from this finding.

The next question is whether the plaintiff made the necessary demands as are required by the rules of the Muhammadan Law which are applicable to such a custom in Benares. So far as the first demand is concerned we have oath against oath and there is no other evidence. The rival versions of the story are as follows:—According to the plaintiff the defendant came to his house on one evening and taking him aside mentioned to him in a clear way that he had purchased the plot in dispute and was in need of the adjoining plot of the plaintiff and asked him whether the plaintiff would part with it at a reasonable price. The plaintiff suggests that the way in which the matter was put to him was to divert his attention from the main point. According to the plaintiff he promptly made the first demand and then the defendant told him that he would return in a few days and then the matter would be settled. According to the plaintiff the defendant left the place immediately so that there was no occasion to make the second demand at the same time. The defendant on the other hand says that he called on the plaintiff that evening and taking him aside asked him whether he would sell to him the plot adjoining the one which he had purchased and the plaintiff instead of making any demand began to make calculation and then promised to give a definite reply some time later. The defendant says that they then came back to the place where they had been sitting and remained so in the company of Prof. Datta and Mr. Deb for nearly half an hour and then the defendant left the place. According to him there was no conversation in the presence of these strangers.

The learned Subordinate Judge has rather too strongly criticised the evidence of the defendant and has unnecessarily attributed to him the motive of over-reaching the plaintiff and entrapping him. At the same time as he had to choose between these two rival statements, the learned Subordinate Judge had to weigh the evidence in the case and arrive at his conclusion based on the impression which he formed of the parties in the witness-box. He has rightly pointed out that as the defendant is a legal practitioner he would be more alert than the plaintiff. Had it been a fact that the plaintiff had omitted to make the first demand and had he given to the defendant an impression that he was not aware of the necessity of making the first demand promptly, the chances are that the defendant would have brought up the matter again in the course of the conversation with the other strangers in order that he might have evidence available showing that no demand had been made. The learned Subordinate Judge was also impressed by the behaviour and the straightforward manner of the plaintiff more than that of the defendant. As the question is one of fact we find it most difficult to take a contrary view. We must accordingly hold that the first demand was made.

As regards the second demand there is plenty of evidence in support of the plaintiff's assertion and we see no reason to doubt the testimony of these witnesses. The fact that the second demand was made promptly also supports the view that the first demand must have also been made as alleged by the plaintiff.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has strenuously contended that the plaintiff being a Hindu gentleman could not have been aware of the formalities of the Muhammadan Law which were required. The plaintiff, however, has made it clear that he had been a student of a law class for two years, that he had on several occasions previously, come to know of the necessity of these demands and that he had actually appeared as a witness in a pre-emption suit. It is also clear that he had previously been negotiating for the purchase of this very plot of land and it is natural that he would have made enquiries and ascertained what formalities he would have to perform to get the land. We, therefore, think that the contention that the plaintiff was not aware of necessity of these demands cannot be accepted. When the custom is prevalent the necessity of the demand is also a matter of common knowledge.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Muhammadian Law—Waqf—Objects—Salary and pension of servants—Waqf silent as regards amount payable—Subsequent declaration of amount by waqif—Validity—Power of mutawalli to reduce amount fixed.

Under the Muhammadan Law a provision for the salary and pension of servants is a valid object of waqf. [p. 620, col. 1.]

If a provision is expressly made in the deed of waqf it is not open to the waqif to revoke it or to derogate from it, but if he has deliberately deferred making provision on a particular subject to a future date and does make such provision, such provision should be considered to be part and parcel of the deed itself. [p. 621, col. 1.]

A mutawalli has no right to interfere with the amount fixed by the waqif where the pay or pension of servants is made a valid object of the wakf. [ibid.]

Second Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 12th February, 1929.

Mr. T. A. K. Sherwani, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. M. Khawaja, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—These are defendant's appeals arising out of two suits, one brought by Musammat Sughra Begam, the respondent in Second Appeal No. 473 of 1929, and the other by Rahim Bakhsh, the respondent in Second Appeal No. 474 of 1929, for recovery of arrears of maintenance fixed by Khurshed Ali Khan who executed a deed of waqf on 1st April 1919, by which he dedicated property yielding a net income of Rs. 7,000 a year for certain charitable purposes. Khurshed Ali Khan died on the 28th of December, 1926, up to which date he acted as mutawalli. The defendant-appellant succeeded his father in the office of the mutawalli. Among other provisions contained in the deed of waqf one is in favour of the respondents who were old servants of Khurshed Ali Khan. A certain amount was mentioned in the deed of waqf to be paid as salaries and pensions of the waqif's servants whose names were not specified, nor were the amounts mentioned. It was, however, clearly stated that particulars as regards names and the amounts should be taken from the pay bills bearing his signature. Apparently the waqif had not decided as to what amount should be paid to each servant, and he reserved the power of nominating beneficiaries out of the servants and the allowance to each for a subsequent occasion. During the seven years which intervened between the date of the waqf and his death he paid Rs. 60 a month to Musammat Sughra and Rs. 30 a month to Rahim Bakhsh. It should be mentioned that the two are wife and husband. The pay bills in which these salaries are entered bear the signature of Khurshed Ali Khan. It has also been found by the lower Courts that the defendant-appellant himself paid allowances to the respondents at the above rates after the death of Khurshed Ali Khan before the period in suit. Relations between the parties became strained, and it became necessary for the respondents to institute the suits which have given rise to these appeals. The defence, so far as it is necessary to state for the purposes of the present appeals, was that, according to Muhammedan Law, it is not one of the valid objects of the waqf to make provisions for salaries and pensions of servants; that no allowances having been fixed in the deed of waqf, subsequent action of Khurshed Ali Khan should be considered the act of mutawalli who is not entitled to amend the provisions of the deed of waqf and that in any case, it is open to a succeeding mutawalli to reduce the salaries and pensions to reasonable amounts. Both the lower Courts have overruled these defences and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

The learned District Judge, who has written an excellent judgment dealing with the various questions raised before him, has held, and we think rightly, that a provision for the salary and pension of servants is a valid object of waqf. In Ameer Ali's Muhammedan Law, Vol. I, page 276, Fourth Edition, a number of valid objects of waqf are stated. One of them is the waqif's own descendants, another is kindred and neighbours. Even strangers are mentioned as objects of bounty. Dependants and servants are specifically mentioned as persons for whose maintenance provision can be made in a waqf. Tyabji in his notes under s. 457 of his book on Muhammedan Law, Second Edition has also mentioned that provisions for individuals may be a charitable object according to Muhammedan notions. We entertain no doubt that the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct and is borne out by the authorities to which reference has been made. The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that only the poor can be beneficiaries under the waqf, if they do not belong to the family of the waqif. He argues that in so far as Musammat Sughra and Rahim Bakhsh are possessed of other sources of small incomes, they cannot be classed among the indigents. He has quoted no authority in support of his contention which is opposed to the rules given by Ameer Ali and Tyabji already referred to. The words "rich and poor" are relative terms, and it cannot be stated that a person having a certain minimum income cannot be considered to be indigent in any circumstances. It is obviously a very laudable act for a Muhammedan to make a provision for his faithful servants. We may note that the pensions granted to the respondents are for their life only and that after their death, that part of the income will lapse into the general purposes of the waqf.

It is next contended that the waqf deed being silent as regards the amount payable to each servant, and the allowance having been fixed by Khurshed Ali Khan at the time when he was not the owner of the property but a mutawalli, the respondents are not entitled to the allowances claimed by them. On general grounds there is nothing to prevent a waqif from reserving to himself the power of naming beneficiaries subsequent to the execution of the deed of waqf, provided charitable intention is clearly indicated in the deed. In Ameer Ali's Book on Muhammedan Law, Vol. I, page 426, Fourth Edition, it is stated to be the rule that "the waqif can reserve to himself, at the time of the dedication, the power to alter the beneficiaries of the trust by either adding to their number or excluding some, or to increase or reduce their interest in it. He cannot do so afterwards." It is obvious that, if a provision is expressly made in the deed of waqf, it is not open to the waqif to revoke it, or to derogate from it. But if he has deliberately deferred making provision on a particular subject to a future date and does make such provision, such provision should be considered to be part and parcel of the deed itself. As regards the contention that it is open to a subsequent mutawalli to reduce the amount fixed by the waqf, we are clearly of opinion that, if the pay or pension was made a valid object of the waqf, as we think it is in the present case, it is not open to any mutawalli to interfere with it. This contention has in our opinion no force.

In the view of the case we have taken, these appeals have no force and are dismissed with costs including Counsel's fees in this court on the higher scale.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 539 (B)—'Public' and 'community' meanings of—Trade injurious to neighbours but not to community in general—Jurisdiction to make order under s. 133—Local inspection—Omission to make memorandum—Validity of trial.

Though the words 'community' and 'public' are used indiscriminately in s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, there is no reason for making a distinction between the public and the community and for holding that a man may carry on a trade or occupation that is injurious to the health or physical comfort of his neighbours or of the public without becoming liable under s. 133 merely on the ground that there may be some part of the community which is not affected. Krishna Mohan Banerji v. A. K. Guha (1), Berckefeld v. Emperor (2) and Indra Nath Banerji v. Queen-Empress (3), referred to. [p. 621, col. 2; p. 622, col. 1.]

Omission to make a memorandum of local inspection as provided by s. 539 (B), Criminal Procedure Code, will not vitiate the whole proceedings unless it has occasioned a failure of justice. [p. 622, col. 2.]

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Applicant.

Dr. N. U. A. Siddiqi, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for the revision of an order of the City Magistrate of Bareilly made under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, forbidding the applicant to work the engine of his factory from 9 P. M. to 5 A. M. The learned Sessions Judge after considering the case fully has declined to interfere with the orders passed.

The applicant owns a factory in the city, the engine of which, it appears, makes a considerable noise, but the factory has been working for a number of years. A complaint was made in March, 1930, and the evidence produced before the Magistrate showed that although the factory had been working for some years in a congested part of the town, new machinery had been added from time to time and especially an oil engine had been replaced by a steam engine within the last two years. The complaint alleged that the noise made by this engine amounted to a public nuisance within the meaning of Chap. X of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the question before the Court was whether in the circumstances of the case it could be held to be 'injurious to the physical comfort of the community'. The Sessions Judge has come to certain findings which may be summarised as follows:—

"It is impossible for the complainant to sleep at night or to concentrate on his work during the day. The factory has been in existence for a good many years and it is difficult to see how the Courts can order the removal of a well established factory merely because it is a nuisance to its neighbours. The noise of the engine may, when it is working fully, be a great nuisance to the neighbours but it cannot be said that the noise of the steam engine in these days of hideous noises is so intolerable as to make the life of the neighbours impossible."

Assuming as I must do that these findings are correct, the question is whether the Magistrate was justified in interfering with the working of the engine under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It is not necessary to show that the noise made by the working of the engine is absolutely intolerable. The finding of the Sessions Judge is sufficient to show that it is a serious nuisance to the neighbours, and not only to the complainant. If it is a serious nuisance and if it is sufficient to prevent neighbours from sleeping at night and from concentrating on their work during the day, it must undoubtedly be held to be injurious to their physical comfort. The paragraph to which I have referred in s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, does not, it is true, mention the physical comfort of neighbours, but the physical comfort of the community and I have been asked on behalf of the opposite party to hold that the terms 'neighbours' and 'community' are for the purpose of this section interchangeable. Certain decisions have been pointed to, viz :—

Krishna Mohan Banerji v. A. K. Guha (1), Berkefeld v. Emperor (2) and Indra Nath Banerji v. Queen-Empress (3) among others in which action has been taken under this section in somewhat similar circumstances, and in which, so far as can be judged from the reports, the evidence related to the physical comfort of neighbours. Moreover it has been pointed out that Chap. X, relates to 'public nuisances'; and although words in the paragraph are not the physical comfort of the public it would be very difficult to hold, after reading the whole of the section, that the Legislature really intended to discriminate between the public and the community. In s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code, a person is said to be guilty of a public nuisance 'who does any act.....which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity'. If the public nuisances referred in Chap X of the Criminal Procedure Code are equivalent to the public nuisances defined in s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code, the 'public' and again people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity', or in other word the neighbours, must be regarded as to all intents and purposes the same body of people. I can find no authority for distinguishing the meaning of the words 'community,' (which according to the dictionary is a relative term) either from the 'public' or the 'neighbours'. It is certainly curious that the word 'community' is used in the third paragraph of s. 133, whereas references in other parts of the section are to the public or persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood etc., but after considering the matter to the best of my ability I do not think that there is sufficient reasons for making a definite distinction, and for holding that a man may carry on a trade or occupation or keep goods or merchandise that is injurious to the health or physical comfort of his neighbours or of the public without becoming liable to an order under s. 133 merely on the ground that there may be some part of the community which is not affected.

Another point that has been taken in support of the application is that both the Magistrate and the Judge made a local inspection of the factory, but failed to record a memorandum of the relevant facts observed at the inspection in spite of the mandatory provisions of s. 539-B of the Criminal Procedure Code. If there was a formal inspection under this section after due notice to both parties, as I understand there was, it was necessary to record the memorandum, and as none was recorded there was an irregularity in the proceedings. This however would not be sufficient to vitiate the whole of the proceedings unless it occasioned a failure of justice by prejudicing the accused. All that the Judge appears to have done was to go to the spot and observe the position of the factory. The Magistrate has given a full account of his inspection in the course of his judgment, and the mere fact that a separate note was not recorded can hardly have prejudiced the applicant, who had a full opportunity of drawing attention to any inaccuracies in the Magistrate's description when he made his application to the Sessions Judge.

In these circumstances I do not think that there is any occasion for me to interfere with the orders passed. If the Magistrate could act under the section, as it seems to me he was justified in doing, no fault can be found with the nature of the order passed for regulating the conduct of the applicant's trade or occupation in such a way as to interfere as little as possible with the comfort of the neighbours. The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed.

Messrs. A. P. Dube, S. N. Seth and Brij Narain Mahotra, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the defendants against a decree of a lower Appellate Court. The facts are that the plaintiff sued as zemindar of an entire mahal against the two defendants for certain acts of trespass alleged to have been committed by the defendant. The Court of first instance granted a relief in regard to para. (c) of the plaint only which was the removal of a brick kiln from plot No. 322 area 2 bighas 9 biswas. The plaintiff filed an appeal, and that appeal was argued by Pleaders for the parties on 28th of March, 1928. The case was then adjourned to 30th March, 1928 for judgment. On the 30th March, 1928, the Pleaders for the parties appeared before the Appellate Court accompanied by the plaintiff and a statement was taken down by the Court at the dictation of the Pleaders for the parties to the effect that the parties had come to terms and the terms were set forth. This statement was signed by the Pleaders for each party and by the plaintiff and by the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court then proceeded to pass a decree in the terms of this compromise. The proceedings of the lower Appellate Court were taken under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code. In second appeal various grounds have been taken to the effect that the defendant-appellants never intended to confer upon their Pleader Pandit Mangali Prasad any authority to compromise the appeal, and that their vakalatnama had no such authority, and that he could not bind the defendants by a compromise which went beyond the subject matter of the suit and the appeal. There is nothing on the record to sustain these allegations of the defendants. The defendants rely on an affidavit which they filed in certain proceedings by way of application for review of judgment, and that application was made on 10th April, 1928. In the first place we are not sitting in appeal from the order refusing review of judgment. Secondly, if we were sitting in appeal from that order, it is obvious that the mere affidavit of a defendant would not be sufficient material for us to come to a finding contrary to the finding of the lower Appellate Court under O. XXIII, r. 3 that this suit had been adjusted by a compromise between the parties. It was open to the defendants to examine Pandit Mangali Prasad to prove the contention of the defendants that they did not intend to confer authority on him to compromise or that they did not give him instructions that the suit had been compromised. In view of the fact that the defendants made no attempt to examine their Vakil on this point, we consider that the mere affidavit of the defendants would be altogether insufficient to establish these allegations of fact. When a Pleader, who is authorised by his vakalatnama to appear for a party, does appear and makes a statement of fact on behalf of that party the mere allegation of that party to the contrary is not material sufficient to contradict his Pleader.

The next point which was argued was in regard to the authority which is contended in the vakalatnama of Pandit Mangali Prasad. This vakalatnama clearly states in cl. 2 that authority is given "ya moqadma men tasfia karen." It was argued that this only applies to original suits, but the word "moqadma" is very much more general and should be translated by the word 'case' and applies not only to an original suit but to an appeal. Further in cl. 2 of the vakalatnama it is also stated "ya pairavi moqadma ki karen". If the argument was correct, then the Vakil would not have been authorised by his power of attorney to argue the appeal before the lower Appellate Court. We consider that the vakalatnama clearly gives power to compromise cases to Pandit Mangali Prasad. Some reference was made to the various rulings, but the circumstances of these rulings were entirely different and do not throw any light on the present case. As regards the allegation that the compromise went beyond the subject-matter of the suit, it is founded on a statement in the terms of the compromise that the defendants should continue to pay Rs. 20 a year to the plaintiff for taking the produce of the trees. We do not consider that this matter travels beyond the subject-matter of the suit and in any case the compromise does not purport to be one which was made by the Vakil but it purports to be one which was made by the party. Under these circumstances we consider that there is no force in this appeal and we dismiss it with costs.

Second Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 30th January, 1929.

Messrs. Panna Lal and Vishwa Mittra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. M. Roy and S. N. Seth, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal in a suit for sale on a mortgage of the 12th of August, 1910, executed by Qadam Singh. On the 18th of January, 1915, Qadam Singh executed another mortgage in favour of Shib Shankar. On the 26th of May, 1920, Shib Shankar sued on his mortgage of the 18th of January, 1915, and obtained a decree which was made final on the 2nd of February, 1921. Shib Shankar then sold the decree to Roshan Lal, respondent No. 1.

On the 21st February, 1923, Net Ram, the plaintiff-appellant, instituted a suit for sale against Qadam Singh, his sons and grandsons to enforce his mortgage of the 12th of August, 1910. In this suit he did not implead either Shib Shankar or Roshan Lal. He unsuccessfully tried to implead the subsequent mortgagee or his representative in the execution proceedings but failed. On the 26th of June, 1925, Roshan Lal, in execution of his decree on foot of the mortgage of the 12th of January, 1915, purchased the property now in suit and obtained possession thereof on the 11th of November, 1926.

Net Ram finding that he could not obtain possession of the property mortgaged to him instituted a second suit for sale on the mortgage of the 12th of August, 1910, impleading Qadam Singh, his sons and grandsons and Roshan Lal the purchaser of the property in execution of the decree obtained under the subsequent mortgage. The plaintiff was met with the plea that the claim was barred by limitation as the time for suit expired on the 13th of August, 1922. This the plaintiff admitted but pleaded that Roshan Lal had acknowledged his liability on the 17th of June, 1921, in a statement made in an affidavit of that date.

The Court of first instance disallowed the plea of the defendant and decreed the suit. On appeal the learned Judge has dismissed the suit; hence this second appeal before us.

We have heard the learned Advocate for the parties and have examined all the cases that have been laid before us carefully. We have come to the conclusion that the case must be decided on what the defendant Roshan Lal must be deemed to have said in the affidavit of the 17th of June, 1921, and if that amounts to an acknowledgment of liability, i e., an admission of any liability by himself or liability on the property the claim cannot be held to be barred by limitation.

Under O. XXI, r. 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure every application for an order for sale was to be accompanied by a statement signed and verified in the manner prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings and containing "so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by the persons making the verification the matters required by sub-r 2 to be specified in the proclamation." Clause (c) of sub r. 2 says "any encumbrance to which the property is liable is to be stated."

An examination of the statement of Roshan Lal dated the 17th of June, 1921, in our opinion shows that all that Roshan Lal informed the court was that upon an examination of the Registration Office he found that there was a mortgage-deed of the property of which the sale proclamation was to issue which had been registered on the 17th of August, 1910.

This in our opinion is not an acknowledgment of any liability affixed to the property for personally to Roshan Lal. It cannot be taken to be an acknowledgment of a liability within the meaning of s. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act.

For the above reasons we are of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed and we dismiss it with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Adverse possession—Long possession of share proved—Absence of evidence to identify such share—Effect—Burden of proof of identity of land.

Where in a suit by the plaintiff who was the recorded proprietor of a 12-annas share in a mauza for ejectment of the defendants who were entered as mokarraridars in respect of four annas comprised within the said twelve annas on the ground that the entry was wrong and the defendants were mere trespassers, the defendants were found to have been in possession of some interest in the mauza for a long time but there was nothing to identify the land of which they had been in possession for so long with the four annas in dispute:

Held, that it could not be presumed that the defendants were in possession of the shares in dispute and the failure of the defendants to identify their interest with the four annas share in dispute was of itself sufficient ground for rejecting the plea of limitation and adverse possession raised by them. [p. 627, col. 2]

Mr. S. Hyam, for the Appellants.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Patna, dated the 1st July, 1927, which varied a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 29th August, 1923.

The present suit was instituted on the 30th November, 1921, by Mohunt Dalmir Puri in whose place the present respondent was substituted on the 2nd August, 1922, against eight defendants. Defendant No. 1 having died, his interest passed to his sons, who were defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and on the 14th August, 1923, the defendants were renumbered. Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 are now represented by the present appellants, and defendant No. 7 was Babu Nageshwar Prasad, but service of the summons on him was not proved and he did not appear to resist the suit, and his name was removed from the record under the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

The respondent is the proprietor of a 12 annas share in Mauza Baghore, District of Gaya, the remaining four annas being the property of one Kameshwar, who gave a mokarrari of his four annas to one Gyani Lal. Nageshwar formerly defendant No. 7, succeeded to the mokarrari interest of Gyani Lal, and is in possession as mokarraridar under Kameshwar. In the Record of Rights, which was published on the 2nd December, 1915, the respondent was recorded as the proprietor of 12 annas of the mauza and defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were recorded as mokarraridars in respect of four annas comprised within the respondent's 12 annas under a "verbal" mokarrari.

In the plaint the respondent challenged the correctness of the entry in the Record of Rights and alleged that the defendants had no legal right to possession and that their possession was against right and as of "trespassers." The prayer of the plaint was for possession and for mesne profits, and, in the alternative, that a proper and fair rent might be assessed upon the lands, if the court found that the defendants had any tenancy rights in the lands in question. He alleged that his 12 annas share was let in oral thika to Nageshwar from 1902 to 1915, and that Nageshwar paid rent up to 1914 at the annual rate of Rs. 1,955; that he had recently learned that Nageshwar, in league with the appellants, had joined them in four annas out of the twelve annas oral thika without the respondent's knowledge or consent; that the appellants had got themselves recorded as holding such four annas as oral mokarrari in the Record of Rights in 1915 and that the respondent first came to know of the matter after the publication of the Record of Rights.

The appellants, in their original written statements, in addition to certain defences no longer in question, claimed that the four annas out of the respondent's twelve annas was their permanent bafarzandan mokarrari, and that it had been in their possession for over twenty years and was never in sir possession of the respondent; that the jama was fixed in perpetuity at Rs. 159, which, by arrangement was payable at Rs. 158 to revenue and cesses by them. They further claimed that the suit was barred by limitation as they had been openly and adversely in possession for over twelve years to the full knowledge of the plaintiff, and denied that they were in league with Nageshwar.

In a set of additional written statements, the appellants stated that the four annas in suit had been held by their ancestors since 1857, that in 1871 Gossain Lachman Puri, predecessor-in-interest of the respondent, brought a suit against Din Dayal Lal, a predecessor of the appellants, and against Dalchand Ram, brother-in-law of Din Dayal Lal for recovery of khas possession of eight annas share of Mauza Baghore, in which the plaintiff repudiated any mokarrari, and that the mokarrari set up by Din Dayal was confirmed by the High Court of Calcutta; and that this constituted res judicata as between the present parties.

Among the issues framed by the Subordinate Judge were the following:—

- (3) Is the suit barred by limitation?
- (4a) Is the suit barred by res judicata?
- (5) Have the defendants no title to the share in dispute, and is the survey entry recording them as mokarraridars incorrect?
- (6) Have the plaintiffs any right to get the mokarrari jama assessed? If so, how much?
- (7) Is the plaintiff entitled to get sir possession over the property in dispute by evicting the defendants?

The learned Subordinate Judge found against the appellants on issues Nos. (3), (4a) and (5). He held on the evidence that there was no proof of mokarrari right, and that the survey entry was without foundation and incorrect.

In support of the plea of res judicata, the appellants had produced a copy of the judgment of the High Court of Calcutta in the suit of 1871, from which it appeared that the plaintiff, as owner of eight annas of Mauza Baghore and two annas thirteen dams of Mauza Bhandajore, sought a declaration that a mokarrari deed for, inter alia, the whole sixteen annas of Mauza Baghore, set up by one Girwardhari Singh was forged, fraudulent and collusive. The deed was dated 28th July, 1857, and was in favour of Girwardhari Singh. The High Court upheld the deed. The appellants' case was that Girwardhari Singh was a benamidar for Din Dayal Lal, and that he was the same man as Girwardhari Singh, a former tehsildar of the present appellants. The Subordinate Judge held that this identity was not proved, and that any way Girwardhari could not be benamidar for Din Dayal Lal, as the judgment of the High Court of Calcutta observes: "It should be noticed that the real lessee was Repal Singh, the name of his son Girwardhari being used." He further pointed out that there was absolutely no evidence worth the name that Repal Singh's mokarrari came down to the appellants. He, therefore, rejected the plea of res judicata. He also rejected the plea of limitation in respect that, having failed to prove a mokarrari right, the appellants had not proved any adverse title, or non-payment of rent, or any overt act which would show adverse possession.

The learned Subordinate Judge, however, expressed the view "that the defendants are found to have been in possession of some interest in the mauza since a very long time and for want of better explanation, the presumption relates to the share now in dispute which is in present possession of the defendants," and stated, "The plaintiff is not anxious to evict the defendants and has conceded the long possession of the defendants and is quite willing to treat them as tenants"; he, therefore, assessed Rs. 183 besides legal cesses as the rent for the lands from 1919.

From this decree the present appellants appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna, and the present respondent filed cross-objections, denying that he had made the concession stated by the Subordinate Judge, and claiming khas possession. The High Court, in their judgment dated the 1st July, 1927, concurred in the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the defendants had failed to establish any mokarrari, and in his finding as to res judicata. As to the question of limitation and assessment of rent, the judgment states, "It is the common case that the learned Subordinate Judge was not entitled to assess a rent payable by the defendants to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation, the learned Subordinate Judge should have dismissed it; but that, if it was not barred by limitation, there was no escape from the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for khas possession. I am of opinion that this view which has been presented before us by both the parties is right and that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained. Either the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for khas possession or his suit should be dismissed." The learned Judges held that the defendants had failed to identify the land of which they had been in possession for so long with the four annas in dispute, and they declined to accept the presumption of identification which the Subordinate Judge had applied in favour of the defendants; they also held that the evidence showed that the plaintiff was in sir possession of the entire twelve annas in 1800 and that the plaintiff was clearly in possession of the entire twelve annas from 1802 to 1915 through Nageshwar as thikadar, so that the suit must be regarded as in time. They, therefore, agreed with the Subordinate

Judge in rejecting the plea of limitation, and awarded khas possession to the plaintiff.

The present appeal is taken by the defendants from the decree of the High Court. It may be noted that, defendant No. 3 having died shortly before the date of that decree, appellants Nos. 3 and 4, his widows, had been substituted in his place. In September, 1931, before the appellants' case had been filed, a petition was presented by the respondent on the narrative that appellant No. 4 had died, that appellant No. 3 was the proper person to be substituted in her place on the record, and that appellant No. 3 had made a compromise with the plaintiff respondent, under which she renounced all claim to her alleged one anna and four pie share out of the disputed four annas share in Baghore; he accordingly asked that the compromise should be recorded and that the appeal might stand dismissed to the extent of the interest of the third appellant.

In the case of appeal subsequently presented by the remaining appellants only two grounds of appeal were stated, viz : (1) Because the plaintiff's suit for khas possession was barred by limitation, and (2) because the plaintiff gave up his claim for khas possession before the Subordinate Judge recognised the defendant's tenancy and only asked for a fair assessment of rent.

On the 19th January, 1932, the appellants presented a petition for admission of further documents as evidence in the appeal and for the amendment of their case by the addition of four further reasons of appeal. These documents all formed part of the record in the 1871 suit, which the appellants had discovered to have come up on appeal to this Board, who, on the 21st January, 1879, affirmed the judgment of the High Court of Calcutta. The case is reported in Sutherland's Judgments of the Privy Council, Vol. III, 581. This petition was first dealt with at the hearing and their Lordships refused the admission of the documents, but allowed the amendment of the appellants' case by the addition of another ground of appeal, viz : "3. Because in the circumstances of the case the respondent's claim is barred as res judicata."

The appellants did not seek to maintain their second ground of appeal, but, as in the argument before the High Court, they accepted the position that, if the suit was not barred by limitation or res judicata the respondent was entitled to decree for khas possession.

On the question of limitation, their Lordships see no reason to differ from the conclusions of both courts below, but they would point out that the failure of the appellants to identify the "some interest in the mauza," of which the learned Subordinate Judge found they had been in possession "since a very long time," with the four annas in dispute is of itself sufficient for rejection of the plea of limitation, and that, if the Subordinate Judge had not erroneously given the appellants the benefit of a presumption, he would evidently have agreed that the appellants had failed in that identification.

In their Lordships' opinion the appellants equally fail to establish their plea of res judicata. They are entitled, of course to refer to the judgment of this Board of 1879, and, in so far as it may be necessary for elucidation of that judgment, to refer to the record in the appeal. A perusal of the judgment makes clear (a) that the plaintiff in that suit, as owner of an eight annas share in Baghore, challenged the genuineness of a mokarrari grant of 1857 of the entire sixteen annas; (b) that the only issue raised or decided was the genuineness of the deed and that the right of the defendants inter se was not in issue or decided; and (c) that Din Dayal Lal was made a defendant as the purchaser of a share in the mokarrari. The appellants no longer maintained that Girwardhari was benamidar for Din Dayal Lal, and there is no evidence to show that any share Din Dayal Lal had has come to the appellants and, even if that were assumed, there is no evidence to identify such share of Din Dayal Lal with the four annas share in dispute in the present suit.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the compromise between appellant No. 3 and the respondent should be recorded, that the appeal should be dismissed and that the respondent should be paid his costs in the appeal up to the 14th September, 1931, by appellants Nos. 1 to 3 and 5 to 7, and his costs thereafter by appellants Nos. 1, 2 and 5 to 7.

Central Provinces—Inferior proprietor—Rights over village waste and forest produce—Burden of proof —Absence of entry in wajib-ul-arz—Inference.

There is no presumption that the inferior proprietors of a district in the Central Provinces possess the same rights and privileges which are possessed by the inferior proprietors of the other districts of the Province. [p. 629, col. 1]

Therefore, where the inferior proprietors of a mauza claim right in respect of the village waste and forest produce they can only succeed if they show either that they acquired their rights by custom or those rights were granted to them when the settlement of the mauza was made with them or their predecessors. [ibid.]

Further, where there is no proof of the existence of these rights before a particular settlement the absence of any entry in the wajib-ul-arz prepared for the settlement cannot be interpreted as a negation of any such right. [ibid.]

Messrs L. DeGruyther K. C., and J. M. Trikhi, for the Appellant.

Sir Dinshah Mulla.—The appellant is the zemindar and superior proprietor of Mauza Deosur in the Ambargarh Chowki zemindari situated in the Drug District in the Central Provinces. The respondents are inferior proprietors of the mauza.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the respondents in the Court of the Additional District Judge of Raipur against the appellant for a declaration that the respondents as inferior proprietors were entitled to all rights over the forest and banjar within the boundaries of the mauza as the zemindar himself had over the rest of his estate subject only to the annual payment of Rs 90, and that the entries in the wajib-ul-arz of 1925 which declared the zemindar to be entitled to those rights were not correct, and they prayed that those entries should be cancelled.

The trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces reversed the decision of the trial Court, and decreed the respondents' claim. From that decree the zemindar has brought the present appeal to His Majesty in Council. The respondents did not appear before their Lordships at the hearing of this appeal.

Ambargarh Chowki zemindari was formerly in the Ohanda District, and was transferred to the Drug District in 1907.

The first regular settlement of the zemindari was made in 1862—1869, but no inferior proprietors were created at that settlement.

The next settlement of the zemindari was in 1902-1904. At that settlement the respondents' predecessor-in-title was recorded in the Khewat as inferior proprietor of the mauza, and a sub-settlement was made with him. A wajib-ul-arz of the mauza was prepared which consisted of several clauses each with a distinct heading. Clause XIX of the wajib-ul-arz is headed "Rights of inferior proprietors over the village waste and the forest produce." There are no entries under that heading, but there appears the mark—X—below the heading of that clause in the official copy filed by the respondents and the mark in the official copy filed by the appellant. It appears from the evidence of respondent No. 1 given in this suit that his predecessor claimed at that settlement the rights which are now claimed by him, but his claim was rejected.

The last settlement was made in 1924-1925, and a fresh wajib ul arz of the mauza was prepared which recorded that the zemindar was entitled to sell the timber growing in the mauza and to the grazing and mahua dues and to all other rights which are now claimed by the respondents. The respondents objected to these entries before the Settlement Officer, but the objection was disallowed. They then appealed to the Settlement Commissioner, but the appeal was dismissed.

The respondents then instituted the present suit in January, 1926. The ground of their claim was that they and their predecessors had been in enjoyment of the rights claimed by them in this suit long before 1864, and that they were entitled to those rights by custom. They also claimed that the very status of inferior proprietors implied those rights, that those rights were not taken away by the wajib ul-arz of 1904, and that the entries in the wajib ul arz of 1925 in so far as they declared the zemindar to be entitled to those rights were incorrect and should be cancelled.

The trial Judge found that the respondents had not enjoyed the rights claimed by them before 1903, and that even after 1903 they enjoyed them only occasionally, and they were therefore not entitled to them by custom. He held that the status of inferior proprietors did not carry with it the rights claimed by them, and that the absence of entries in cl. XIX of the wajib ul arz of 1904 showed that inferior proprietors had no rights in respect of the village waste and the forest produce, and he dismissed the suit.

This decree was reversed by the Judicial Commissioner on appeal. The Judicial Commissioner in his judgment said that an inferior proprietor in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories and in the Bilaspur District had all such rights over the forest and banjar in his village as the zemindar himself enjoyed over the rest of the zemindari, and that an inferior proprietor in the Ohanda District must be presumed to have the same rights and privileges as were enjoyed by an inferior proprietor in the other districts of the province. Starting with this presumption he proceeded to inquire whether those rights were cut down or curtailed by the wajib ul arz of 1904, and he held that they were not, and decreed the respondents' claim. As to the marks in the wajib-ul-arz of 1904 he observed that if the Settlement Officer wanted to say that the inferior proprietor had no such rights, he could have easily used the word nahi (nil) instead of leaving the entry blank and not writing anything under that heading.

Their Lordships are unable to adopt this view. There is no presumption that the rights which an inferior proprietor enjoys in other districts of the province are enjoyed by an inferior proprietor in this mauza. The respondents therefore can only succeed if they show either that they acquired those rights by custom as alleged by them or they were granted to them in 1902-1904 when the sub settlement of this mauza was made with their predecessor. As regards custom, their Lordships see no reason to differ from the finding of the trial Court that it has not been proved. They also think that no such rights as are now claimed by the respondent were conferred upon them at the settlement of 1902-1904. Further, there being no proof of the existence of these rights before that settlement the absence of any entry in wajib-ul arz of 1904 cannot be interpreted as a reservation of any such rights.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the respondents have failed to establish their case, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the Judicial Commissioner reversed, and the decree of the Additional District Judge restored. The respondents must pay the appellant's costs throughout.

—RESPONDENT

Surety—Stay of execution of mortgage-decree—Bond by surety—Construction—Suit to enforce bond—Limitation—Cause of action, whether arises from date of appellate decree or sale of property in execution—Practice—New point in appeal.

During the pendency of an appeal from a decree for sale to enforce a mortgage the Appellate Court ordered stay of execution of the decree for a period of 1 year on the appellant furnishing security for Rs. 1,12,000 and, if the appeal was not decided within one year, for a further period of one year for a similar sum of Rs. 1,12,000. In pursuance of this order a person stood surety and executed a bond which provided as follows: "I of my own free will stand security to the extent of rupees seventy-seven thousand out of rupees one lac and twelve thousand as therein ordered and covenant that if the decree of the first Court be confirmed or varied by the Appellate Court within one year from the 1st April, 1919, the said defendants shall duly act in accordance with the decree of the said Appellate Court and they shall pay the sum of rupees seventy-seven thousand or whatever may be payable under the said High Court order not exceeding rupees seventy-seven thousand, but if they should fail to pay the sum of rupees seventy-seven thousand, then any amount so payable as aforesaid shall be realised from my person and my legal representatives shall be personally liable to pay the same. If the judgment-debtors fail to furnish security to the extent of rupees one lakh and twelve thousand on the 1st April, 1920, in case the appeals be not decided within that date then the decree-holders according to the order of the High Court shall be able to execute their decree with interest and shall be able to realise rupees seventy-seven thousand from me and my representatives the money secured by this bond." The appeal was heard on the 19th July 1921 and dismissed. On 26th January 1925 the property was sold and there was a deficit of Rs. 93,000. The decree was confirmed on appeal on 16th December 1925 and on the 25th January 1927 the decree-holders made an application to enforce the bond against the surety. The High Court held that the sum of Rs. 77,000 had become payable on the 1st April 1920 and that the claim was time-barred:

Held, (1) that the security bond did not put upon the giver of the bond an obligation to make an immediate payment in cash but only gave the decree-holders a realisable security up to Rs. 77,000 for the balance of the sum, if any, remaining unpaid

after the mortgaged property had been realised. [p. 632, col. 1.]

(2) that until the property was sold the liability of the surety could not be enforced, and the application made in January 1927 was within time inasmuch as under the Indian Limitation Act it must either be within three years if the application was properly an application in the suit, or within six years if the application should have been made by independent suit: [p. 632, cols. 1 & 2.]

Held, further that it was not open to the defendants to take the plea that the application should have been made by an independent suit, having regard to the fact that the point had never been taken before, and that if it was allowed to be taken in appeal and succeeded the appellants would be barred by lapse of time, although their original application was in time. [p. 632, col. 2.]

A security bond must be construed in the light of the order directing the security to be given. [p. 631, col. 2.]

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. O. and W. Wallach, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne K.O. and Hyam, for the Respondent.

Lord Tomlin.—On the 22nd December, 1917, a decree was obtained in a suit to enforce a mortgage against the mortgagor and a puisne mortgagee, who is respondent here. The decree was in the ordinary form of such decrees in India; that is, six months were given for redemption, and at the end of that time in default of redemption the property was to be sold. The decree did not contain, and having regard to O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code could not contain, a personal judgment against the mortgagor for the mortgage money. An appeal to the High Court against the decree was duly taken by the mortgagor. On the 31st August, 1918, the decree was made absolute.

On the 25th October, 1918, an application was made to the Subordinate Judge by the decree holders to bring the property to sale.

On the 2nd April, 1919, an Order of the High Court was made by consent for a stay, and the Order was in these terms: "Let the respondents' petition for execution"—the respondents means the decree-holders—"now pending be stayed for the period of one year as and from the 1st April, 1919, upon the appellant" (meaning thereby the mortgagor) "furnishing solvent security in the lower Court to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge by the 1st May, 1919, for the sum of 1 lakh and 12,000 rupees. In the event of the appellant's appeal to this Court not being disposed of within the period of one year calculated from the 1st April, 1919, let a further stay be granted for a period of one more year from the 1st April, 1920, upon the defendant's [sic] furnishing solvent security in the lower Court to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge for a further sum of 1 lakh and 12,000 rupees, such last-mentioned security to be furnished on or before the 1st April, 1920, in the event of such further or additional stay being necessary."

Pursuant to that order there was executed by the respondent here (he being as already indicated a puisne encumbrancer and as such the second defendant to the suit) a bond by way of security to satisfy in part the solvent security required by the High Court for the sum of 1 lakh and 12,000 rupees. The sum of 1 lakh and 12,000 rupees seems to have been fixed because it represented one year's interest on the mortgage money, and the object was to put the decree-holders ultimately in the position of being no worse off by reason of one year's delay in enforcing their security.

The bond so executed by the respondent, was in this form:—It recited the suit and the decree of the 22nd December, 1917, in favour of the plaintiffs in the suit and that the defendants in the suit had preferred appeals to the High Court, and it further recited that the decree-holders had applied to execute the decree and that the defendants had made an application for a stay and that they had been called upon to furnish security by the order of the 2nd April, 1919, to which reference has already been made. Then it proceeds as follows: "Accordingly I of my own free will stand security to the extent of rupees seventy-seven thousand out of rupees one lac and twelve thousand as therein ordered and covenant that if the decree of the first Court be confirmed or varied by the Appellate Court within one year from the 1st April, 1919, the said defendants shall duly act in accordance with the decree of the said Appellate Court and they shall pay the sum of rupees seventy-seven thousand or whatever may be payable under the said High Court order not exceeding rupees seventy-seven thousand, but if they should fail to pay the sum of rupees seventy-seven thousand, then any amount so payable as aforesaid shall be realised from my person and my legal representatives shall be personally liable to pay the same."

Up to this point the document provides for the case of the decree of the first Court being confirmed or varied by the Appellate Court within one year from the 1st April, 1919—an event which did not happen. The next clause, however, deals with events which did happen in the following terms: "Be it known that if the judgment-debtors fail to furnish security to the extent of rupees one lakh and twelve thousand on the 1st April, 1920, in case the appeals be not decided within that date then the decree-holders according to the order of the High Court shall be able to execute their decree with interest and shall be able to realise rupees seventy-seven thousand from me and my representatives the money secured by this bond."

In December, 1920, the application by the decree holders to bring the property to sale seems to have been struck out. The appeal against the decree in the suit was not heard before the 1st April, 1920. It was, in fact, heard on the 19th July, 1921, and was dismissed. On the 6th March 1922, there was a further application for execution of the judgment, and on that application an order was made for the sale of the property. On the 26th January, 1925, the property was sold under that order, and, as appears from the account of the proceeds of the sale, the sale did not realise by a sum of 93,000 odd rupees enough to satisfy the amount due on the mortgage.

On the 16th December, 1925, there having been an appeal from the High Court to their Lordships' Board, an Order in Council was made affirming the original decree and making an order with regard to additional costs.

On the 25th January, 1927, the decree-holders made an application in the suit, to enforce the bond against the respondent here. Upon that application the questions arose which fall for the determination of the Board to-day.

On the 18th May, 1927, a decree was passed in the suit ordering the mortgagor in the suit to pay the balance of the mortgage money. After that the application of the present appellants to enforce the respondent's bond came before the Subordinate Judge, and on 28th July, 1927, he delivered his judgment. He stated that the issues were as follows:— (1) Is the application barred by limitation? (2) As the interest due from April, 1919 to March, 1920, has already been realised by the sale of the mortgaged property, can the decree-holders realise the surety money from the applicant? (3) Is the security without consideration? (4) Is the petitioner precluded from raising this point after notice under O. XXI, r. 22? Has the said notice been served? He dealt, first of all with the point with regard to interest and their Lordships understand that the view that he took was this: Inasmuch as the one lakh and twelve thousand rupees was fixed by reference to the amount of the interest for one year, the rupees seventy-seven thousand mentioned in the bond was, in fact, part of the interest for that one year ending 31st March, 1920, and further that as the purchase money received on the sale would have been applied first in satisfaction of interest before being applied in satisfaction of capital, therefore the liability for which the seventy-seven thousand rupees had to answer had disappeared and, that being so, the giver of the bond was under no liability in respect of it. That was his answer to the second point.

The learned Judge held upon the first point, which he dealt with next, that the application was not barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Then he dealt with the points about consideration and notice which do not now arise, and he concluded that the decree-holders, the appellants here, were not entitled to realise anything in respect of the bond as the dues for which the respondent here stood surety had all been satisfied.

An appeal was taken to the High Court and on 16th August, 1928, the judgment of the High Court was delivered and the appeal was dismissed. The Judges of the High Court took a different view from that of the Subordinate Judge. They rejected the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that the bond was given for interest only and held that upon the true construction of the bond the sum of Rs. 77,000 had become payable on the 1st April, 1920, and therefore that the appellants were statute-barred and not in a position to enforce the bond against the respondent.

In their Lordships' judgment the success or failure of this appeal depends primarily upon the true construction of the bond, the material passages of which have already been stated. The bond must be considered in the light of the order directing the security to be given. It will be observed that under the terms of that order no payment had to be made immediately on the expiration of the first year for which the stay was granted, but what is said is that the stay is allowed for one year from the 1st April, 1919, upon the decree-holders furnishing solvent security in the lower Court for the sum of one lakh and twelve thousand rupees; in other words, the decree-holders are to get, in addition to the existing mortgage, further security for one lakh and twelve thousand rupees which shall put them in a position not worse than they would have occupied if the stay had not been granted.

In those circumstances what is the meaning of the language employed in the bond? In the first part of the clause which has been read this phrase occurs: "And they shall pay the sum of rupees seventy seven thousand or whatever may be payable under the said High Court order not exceeding rupees seventy-seven thousand." Although that phrase occurs in the clause which applies to the event which did not happen it is some indication as to whether or not the rupees seventy-seven thousand was an absolute sum which was to be paid in any case, and in their Lordships' judgment, it indicates that it was not necessarily such a sum. When the terms of the clause which operated in fact are looked at it is found that two things are to result in the event there mentioned; one is that the decree-holders shall be able to execute their decree with interest, and the other is that they shall be able to realise rupees seventy-seven thousand from the giver of this bond and his representatives. It is not a clause which puts upon the giver of the bond an obligation to make an immediate payment in cash; it is a clause which puts the decree-holders in the position of having a realisable security of rupees seventy-seven thousand. The question is whether that is an absolute security which the decree-holders are to be free to realise immediately on the first April, or whether it is security to the extent of rupees seventy-seven thousand for the balance of the sum, if any, remaining unpaid after the mortgage property has been realised.

In their Lordships' judgment, upon the true construction of this document having regard to the circumstances in which it was executed, this bond is a bond for securing the balance unprovided for by the proceeds of sale of the mortgage property, up to a sum not exceeding seventy-seven thousand.

Upon that view of the case it is plain that until the property was sold the liability of the giver of the bond, the respondent here, could not be enforced. The application which was made in January, 1927, was necessarily within time inasmuch as under the Indian Limitation Act it must either be within three years if the application is properly an application in the suit, or within six years if the application should have been made by independent suit.

The point was not raised below that the application should have been made by independent suit and the point was not taken by the respondent in his printed case before their Lordships' Board. Having regard to the fact that the point has never been taken before, and that if it was allowed to be taken now and succeeded the appellants would be barred by lapse of time although their original application was in time, their Lordships are of opinion that it is not open to the respondent to take the point here.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal must be allowed. There will be a declaration that the appellants are entitled to receive from the respondent, his person and property the amount now properly payable under the bond on the footing that the bond is a security up to seventy-seven thousand rupees for the deficit on the mortgage. If necessary, there must be an enquiry to ascertain what the amount is and for that purpose the case should be remitted to the High Court. The appellants must have their cost throughout. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal allowed.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Court of Appeal for the Federated Malay States (State of Perak)

February 19, 1932

LORD BLANESBURGH,

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN

AND LORD MACMILLAN.

TUAN MAN AND AN OTHER—APPELLANTS

CHE SOM AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Appellate Court—Remand for impleading new party—Indicating order which trial Judge should make—Propriety—Administration suit—Necessary parties—Legal representative.

A Court of Appeal while sending a case to the trial Judge for the purpose of having a necessary party brought before the Court should not proceed, before the new party has been joined or heard and without considering what defences may be available against him, to indicate the order which the trial Judge should make when he tries the case in the presence of proper parties. [p 637, cols. 1 & 2]

The only proper plaintiff to recover the asset of a deceased person is, in default of evidence to the contrary, the legal personal representative of the deceased and even if a beneficiary could sue in his own right making the legal personal representative a defendant his only claim would be an order for transfer of the asset to the legal personal representative to which claim all defences available against the legal personal representative would be open to the defendants. In a case of this nature the addition of the legal personal representative is not the mere curing of some technical defect not affecting the substance of the dispute between the original parties to the action but the matter goes to the substance of the plaintiff's claim. [p. 637, col. 2.]

Messrs. Wilfred Greene, K. C., and Cyril Radcliffe for the Appellants.

Sir Gerald Hurst, K. C., and F. O. Langley for the Respondents.

Lord Russell of Killowen.—This appeal is brought by the defendants to an action which was tried by Burton, J at Ipoh in the State of Perak. The action was dismissed; but an appeal by the plaintiffs to the Court of Appeal of the Federated Malay States was allowed, and an order was made by that court, which is set out hereafter, and from which the defendants have appealed to his Majesty in Council.

For the proper appreciation of the cause of action which the plaintiffs seeks to enforce, and of the methods and procedure which they adopted for that purpose, and of the relationship of the parties it is necessary to embark upon considerable detail.

Tuan Kundor was a Rajah of Raman, in the kingdom of Siam, who died in the year 1867. He was the owner of a tin mine at K'lian Hitam in Siam. He had nine children, five sons and four daughters all of whom, according to one witness, survived him. His eldest son was Tuan Timoon, who became Rajah and entered into possession of the mine on his father's death. On the death of Tuan Timoon, in the year 1875, he was succeeded as Rajah by his brother, Tuan Jagong who also took possession of the mine and kept it until his death in 1901. Tuan Timoon had left a widow him surviving, Raja Prempuan, who subsequently married Tuan Jagong. She survived Tuan Jagong, and on his death she took possession of his property and of the tin mine. She continued in possession of the tin mine until her death in 1916. Letters of Administration with her will annexed were granted in 1918 to the appellants, who assumed and continued in possession of the tin mine.

Their title to the tin mine was called in question by the present action, which was commenced on the 17th September, 1927. By that time all the children of Tuan Kundor had died. The plaintiffs in the action were (1) Tuan Balai Jawa, the son of Tuan Timoon; (2) Tuan Kalumpang, the son of Tuan Oherik (a son of Tuan Kundor), (3) Nai Tuan Tandok, the son of a daughter of Tuan Kundor; (4) Toh Nang Bayam a daughter of Tuan Jagong; (5) Toh Nang Kechik, the daughter of Tuan Timoon; and (6) Toh Nang Keboon a daughter of another daughter of Tuan Kundor. The first named plaintiff died pendente lite, and his administrator, Che Som, was substituted as a plaintiff in his stead. A few further facts as to pedigree should be stated. Tuan Jagong left another daughter, Tuan Kembang, who was married to the said Tuan Kalumpang and also a son, Tuan Leebeh, who had disappeared in the year 1902 and of whom nothing had since been heard.

One other fact of importance must be stated. The tin mine in question was until the year 1909 situate in the kingdom of Siam. In that year certain Siamese territory which included the mine, was ceded by treaty to the Government of Perak.

In view of the various contentions which have at different times been raised on behalf of the plaintiffs, it is necessary to scrutinize with some care the cause of action alleged in the plaint and the nature of the relief which is therein claimed.

As their Lordships read this document, the plaintiffs claim to be entitled to the mine, or to shares therein, as persons who are entitled to shares in the estate of Tuan Kundor, as on an intestacy. Each plaintiff is claiming to assert a personal right of ownership in regard to the mine upon the footing that it belonged to Tuan Kundor, and that it still forms part of his estate. In terms, the claim of ownership is asserted in respect of the whole estate of Tuan Kundor, moveable and immoveable, but the asset more specifically referred to is the mine. The relief claimed by the prayer is (1) an account of Tuan Kundor's estate which the Raja Prempuan held "as trustee for the beneficiaries of Tuan Kundor," and which had come to the hands of the administrators of Raja Prempuan; (2) an enquiry as to 'who are the beneficiaries of the estate of Tuan Kundor, deceased, and the shares to which they are entitled'; (3) distribution and payment to the plaintiffs of their shares; and (4) administration of the estate of Tuan Kundor.

That was the frame of the action as launched. As is apparent, it had a twofold object and asserted a twofold claim, viz., (a) to recover from the defendants assets alleged to belong to the estate of Tuan Kundor, and (b) to have those assets divided among the persons beneficially entitled to them.

By their defence the defendants called for strict proof of the allegation that the plaintiffs were entitled to share in the estate of Tuan Kundor. Further, they did not admit that Tuan Kundor had died intestate.

At the trial the plaintiffs called five witnesses; the defendant called none. It is of importance to note both what was proved and what was not proved. It will be convenient to state first what was not proved.

No evidence was called to establish any title in the plaintiffs. At the relevant dates the mine was situate in Siamese territory, but no attempt was made to prove who, according to Siamese Law, would become entitled to the property, assuming it to be a fact (which itself was not proved) that Tuan Kundor had died intestate. No attempt was made to establish by legal proof that the plaintiffs had any beneficial or other interest in the mine.

It is true that reliance was placed upon a document which was executed by Raja Prempuan in the year 1904, and it may be that the plaintiffs considered that the document sufficiently proved their case in these respects; but, as will hereafter appear, when the terms of the document are set out, it is quite insufficient for this purpose.

The only witness called who could speak as to events in Tuan Kundor's lifetime was an old man who had been in the service of the family. From his evidence it would appear that Tuan Kundor was in the habit of making payments out of the profits of mine to his brothers and sisters and to his children; that on his death Tuan Timoon had possession of the mine and made similar distributions among relations; that on his death Tuan Jagong had possession of the mine and pursued the same practice; and that when Tuan Jagong died, his widow, Raja Prempuan, received the money from the mine.

There is nothing in that evidence to assist the plaintiffs in establishing the title which they claim. Indeed, it would suggest, if anything, successive ownership of the mine in Tuan Kundor, Tuan Timoon and Tuan Jagong, coupled with some sort of benefits conferred by them upon their relatives. It would certainly appear to be inconsistent with the view that the mine still forms part of the estate of Tuan Kundor.

The matter, however, is carried a stage further by the evidence of Tuan Kalumpang (hereinafter referred to as Kalumpang), who was the only one of the plaintiffs to give evidence. He stated that, after the death of Tuan Jagong, Raja Prempuan "took charge of the property and, among the rest of the property, of the mine"; and he added, "I objected before the Kathi because Ohe Ning"—[i. e., Raja Prempuan]—"did not give the shares to the waris. We wanted the Kathi to distribute the estate according to Muhammadan Law."

This evidence refers to a lawsuit which Kalumpang instituted in 1903 before the Kathi, or Judge, but it leaves in doubt the exact nature of the litigation. In particular, it leaves in doubt who was the ancestor whose waris are referred to and whose estate is being considered. But the litigation is of importance because in the course of it there came into existence the document above referred to.

The Kathi was called as a witness, and he deposed to the following facts. Kalumpang complained to him about the Raja Prempuan, and he issued a summons to her. The Raja Prempuan settled the case by handing a letter to the court. It was read aloud and handed to Kalumpang. The case was then noted in the Judge's book as withdrawn. It is impossible to gather from this evidence the nature of the action and unfortunately the court records have been destroyed by fire.

The letter is addressed by Raja Prempuan to Kalumpang. It is dated the 8th May, 1904, and runs, according to an official translation, thus:

"This letter is from your mother, Raja Prempuan of Kota Bahru, the wife of Raja Rasadin Chawang, Raja of the State of Rahman who is now lost—may the Almighty God cause this to be sent to the presence of the assembly of my illustrious son Khun Rat Muntri Ni Ampor and his wife, my daughter, Tuan Kembang, of Kota Bahru in State of Rahman, with safety and soundness.

"I beg to inform you and your wife that as regards the rights of property left by Raja Rasadin Chawang, who is lost, I shall give you and your wife some elephants and other property, as also to my daughter Tuan Bayam for maintenance in the meantime. As to the land Klian Itam, this must be regarded as an ancestral mining land which still belongs to Toh Nek Kundor, the father of Raja Rasadin Chawang. I shall apply for a title deed (of this land) from His Majesty the King, which will be kept by me until my son, Luang Raya Phakdi, returns from Bangkok, Siam, when I will divide the land, Klian Itam, and other property and give you (your share), according to the Muhammadan Law of distribution; but so long as I hold the land, Klian Itam, I shall give you your share in hard cash from the proceeds derived from the land

"Such is my information to you. With many salaams to you and your wife".

In this letter the "Raja Rasadin Ohawang" referred to is Tuan Jagong; "the illustrious son" referred to is Kalumpang, and the son Luang Raya Phakdi referred to is the son Tuan Leebeh, who had disappeared in the year 1902.

Before considering the terms of this document (hereinafter referred to as "the letter"), it will be convenient to state shortly the subsequent history of the matter.

The letter was taken away by Kalumpang. He says that his co-plaintiffs in the present action were pleased at the letter, but nothing more seems to have been heard of it until 23 years later, when it re-appeared in the plaint filed in the present action.

The Raja Prempuan was granted a lease of the mine for 20 years, expiring in 1924. The lease is dated the 18th February, 1903, but upon the evidence must, their Lordships think, be taken to have been in fact executed subsequently to the letter of the 8th May, 1904.

According to the evidence of Kalumpang, Raja Prempuan made payments after the letter to himself "and the other beneficiaries of Tuan Kundor"—but he adds a very curious statement, viz.: "But I thought there must be some reason for her generosity, that I had a claim on her The amounts and the times of the payments she made were uncertain."

The Raja Prempuan died in the year 1916. After her death nothing seems to have been paid to Kalumpang. Letters of Administration with her will annexed were granted in 1918 to the appellants. In 1919 Kalumpang consulted his solicitor about the mine and commenced proceedings for the revocation of the above-mentioned grant, in which, however, no mention was made of the letter. The proceedings proved abortive, and the next move of Kalumpang was the institution of the present action by him on behalf of himself and his co-plaintiffs, in the year 1927.

The action was tried by Burton J, who by his decree dated the 26th November, 1928, dismissed the action with costs. The basis of this decision was that the evidence did not establish the fact that the mine formed part of Tuan Kundor's estate. The learned Judge pointed out that the letter was the sole evidence adduced of this alleged fact, but was of the opinion that it was not consistent with the previous history of the property and was not (especially in view of the fact that it was first produced after the death of Raja Prempuan who had knowledge, not possessed by the defendants, of the circumstances in which it was written) sufficient to establish the fact essential to the plaintiff's case.

The learned Judge considered, and, as their Lordships think, correctly, that the foundation of the plaintiffs' case was the allegation that the mine still formed part of Tuan Kundor's estate.

In this connection it is to be observed that the opening speech at the trial of Counsel for the plaintiffs seems to have suggested that the plaintiffs were alleging that by the letter Raja Prempuan had constituted herself a trustee for the plaintiffs, and, it was pointed out by the Counsel for the defendants that such a suggestion was inconsistent with the pleadings. Thereupon Counsel for the plaintiffs in his reply said that the letter was not a declaration, but "an admission that she was trustee for the specific purpose of distributing according to Muhammadan Law."

From the trial judgment an appeal was made to the Court of Appeal and was heard by three Judges. Counsel for the appellants, in opening the appeal, asked for a declaration that the mine still formed part of the estate of Tuan Kundor and ought to be distributed as such, and for an enquiry as to the person then entitled and in what shares, presumably upon that footing. Thereupon the defendant's Counsel pointed out that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had any interest in the mine, or that Tuan Kundor had died intestate, or how the mine had devolved. In reply, notwithstanding that no evidence as to any foreign law had been given, Counsel for the plaintiffs contended (1) that the letter was sufficient evidence that Tuan Kundor's estate devolved by Muhammadan Law, and (2) that Tuan Kundor's representative was not a necessary party to the action, because by Muhammadan Law the property of an intestate vested at once in his heirs as tenants in common. He accordingly claimed the mine as specific property, and amended the claim for relief to the following form:—

"1. Declaration that defendants as legal representatives of the Raja Prempuan hold the mine as trustees for the persons entitled by Muhammadan Law to share; in distribution of the estate of Tuan Kundor.

"2. Enquiries as to who are such persons as aforesaid?

"3. Transfer to such persons in undivided shares or alternatively sale of mine subject to incumbrances and payment into court of proceeds of sale to credit of this suit.

"4. Account of rents and profits from mine since death of Raja Prempuan.

"5. Payment into court of amount found due in pursuance of para. 4.

"6. Liberty to apply."

It was suggested in argument before the Board that this amendment showed that the letter was relied upon as a declaration of trust by which Raja Prempuan constituted herself a trustee of the mine. Their Lordships cannot accept this view. It is, in their opinion, clear that the plaintiffs' case throughout has been based upon the contention that the mine at the date of the action formed part of the estate of Tuan Kundor.

The Judges in the Appeal Court, although concurring in the order which was eventually made, do not appear to have been in agreement in their views of the case. The Chief Justice treated the letter as an admission that the mine formed part of Tuan Kundor's estate and, in the absence of evidence in rebuttal, as sufficient to establish that fact. He also added, however, that the letter was a contract of compromise, a view which suggests that the letter created a title, and was not merely evidence of a pre-existing title. The learned Judge, however, pointed out that the pedigree of the plaintiffs and their heirship to Tuan Kundor had not been proved, and that, except for the letter, no evidence had been given as to the law applicable to the distribution of Tuan Kundor's estate. As to this, their Lordships are content to observe that the letter of Raja Prempuan can in no sense be described as evidence of any law.

The learned Chief Justice, however, pointed out that it was necessary, since the plaintiffs claimed administration of the mine as part of Tuan Kundor's estate, that the legal personal representative of Tuan Kundor should be a party to the action. He appears to have overlooked the amended relief, which in the course of the hearing of the appeal had been claimed by Counsel for the plaintiffs.

Farrer-Manby, J thought that the case of the plaintiffs was based on the letter, which he treated as an admission of a pre-existing trust. He agreed with the order proposed by the Chief Justice.

Prichard, J. simply agreed with the judgment of the Chief Justice.

Later, supplemental judgments were delivered, in the course of which the Chief Justice stated that no evidence had been tendered as to "any contractual or other effect" which the letter had on the rights of the parties under Siamese Law, and that although in his view the plaintiffs' claim could be supported without resort to the contractual effect of the letter, a higher tribunal might take a different view. He thought, therefore, that the plaintiffs should have liberty to lead further evidence as to the effect of the letter by Siamese Law. The plaintiffs formally declined to avail themselves of this liberty.

The order made by the Court of Appeal must now be considered; it is, so far as material, in the following terms:—

"It is ordered that the cross-appeals of the defendants-respondents be dismissed with costs to be taxed. And it is ordered that the judgment dated the 26th day of October, 1928, of Burton, J. be reversed. And it is ordered that the suit do stand over for six months from the date of this order or for such extended time, if any, as may be allowed by the Court of first instance, to give time for the plaintiffs-appellants to remedy the defect caused by the legal personal representatives of Tuan Kundor not being a party to the suit in such manner as they may be advised. And it is ordered that if the plaintiffs-appellants do not remedy the said defect within the time aforesaid or within such extended time as aforesaid the defendants-respondents be at liberty to apply to the Court of first instance for an order dismissing the suit with costs to be taxed, and if the suit be so dismissed with costs the plaintiffs-appellants do pay to the defendants-respondents their taxed costs of this appeal. And it is ordered that if such defect be remedied within the time aforesaid, or within such extended time as aforesaid the plaintiffs-appellants be at liberty to apply to the Court of first instance for judgment in the following terms with such variations, if any, as altered circumstances may render necessary (and with the omission of Enquiries Nos. 2 and 3 hereinafter directed if in the circumstances the Court of first instance shall consider such enquiries to be unnecessary), that is to say:—

"Declare that the lease of a mining land, District of Upper Perak (Kroh), No. 1 Kroh, dated the 8th day of November, 1904, issued to Che Ning binti Che Nek in lieu of the Siamese Mining Lease in the plaint mentioned, forms part of the estate of Phya Ratana Phakdi Tuan Kundor alias Phya Ratana Phakdi, in the plaint referred to as Tuan Kundor deceased, and ought to be administered by the court accordingly."

"And it is ordered that the following enquiries be made, that is to say:—

(1) An enquiry whether there is any debt of the said Tuan Kundor remaining unpaid;

(2) An enquiry whether the said Tuan Kundor disposed of the mine now held under the said lease by will or died intestate in respect thereof;

(3) If the said Tuan Kundor disposed of the said mine by will, an enquiry as to the terms and effect by Siamese Law of the said will and who are now entitled thereunder to the said mine;

(4) If the said Tuan Kundor died intestate as to the said mine, an enquiry as to who by Siamese Law became entitled to the said mine on the death of the said Tuan Kundor, and if any of such persons have since died, who are their respective legal personal representatives or otherwise entitled to their respective shares.

"And it is ordered that an account be taken (making all just allowances) of the rents and profits of the said mine come to the hands of the defendants-respondents or any of them or to the hands of any other person or persons by the order or for the use of the said defendants-respondents or any of them as from the 21st day of September, 1921.

"And it is ordered that the said enquiries and the said account be held and taken before the Registrar of the Court and that he do certify to the court of first instance the result of such enquiries and account.

"And it is ordered that the defendants-respondents do pay to the plaintiffs-appellants the taxed costs of the suit down to and including the hearing before Burton J. and the taxed costs of this Appeal including in such taxed costs the fees of two Advocates both at the original hearing and in the Court of Appeal. And it is ordered that the further consideration of the suit be adjourned.

"And all parties are to be at liberty to apply."

"Liberty to apply to the court of first instance for the appointment of a Receiver of the rents and profits and generally as the parties may be advised.

"And lastly that the plaintiffs-appellants be at liberty to lead further evidence under s. 27 of the Courts Enactment No. 14 of 1918 by calling the witness, Haji Che Soh bin Che Nik (Katki) or by calling other expert evidence, as to the effect of Ex. 'C' by Siamese Law. In the event of the plaintiffs-appellants availing themselves of this liberty they shall notify the Registrar and the defendants-respondents at least fourteen days before the opening of the sittings of the Court of Appeal at Ipoh on the 24th day of September, 1929, in which case this appeal shall be set down for further hearing at the sittings aforesaid, and the defendants-respondents shall be at liberty to lead evidence on the same issue, and shall be entitled to their costs of such further hearing in any event."

This appears to their Lordships to be an unusual order the terms of which need careful consideration.

Certain cross-appeals by the defendants were dismissed. Upon the main appeal the judgment of the trial Judge is reversed, the result of which is that the action no longer stands dismissed. It is then ordered that the suit do stand over for a period to enable the plaintiffs to remedy the defect caused by the legal personal representative of Tuan Kundor not being a party to the suit. If the defect is not remedied within the period the defendants may apply to the trial Judge for an order dismissing the suit. If the defect is remedied the plaintiffs may apply to the trial Judge for an order to be made by him in terms set forth by the Court of Appeal. It is hardly in accordance with precedent that a court of Appeal should, after sending a case back to the trial Judge for the purpose of having a necessary party brought before the Court, proceed (before the new party has been joined or heard, and without considering what defences may be available against him) to indicate the order which the trial Judge should make when he tries the case in the presence of the proper parties.

This order cannot, in their Lordships' opinion, stand. Its only operative effect is to send the case back to the trial Judge for the purpose of dismissing the action if Tuan Kundor's legal personal representative is not added as a party, or (if he is added) for the purpose of making a cut and-dried order. But this addition of the legal personal representative as a party is not, in their Lordships' view, the mere curing of some technical defect not affecting the substance of the dispute between the original parties to the action. In their opinion, the matter goes to the substance of the plaintiff's action.

Their Lordships, as before stated, are satisfied that the case of the plaintiffs is and has been throughout that the mine formed and still forms part of Tuan Kundor's estate. They seek to recover possession of that asset from the defendants and to have that asset administered when recovered. The suggestion (faintly raised at one stage before the Board) that the letter is their root of title, cannot prevail in view of the fact that not only was no evidence given of the effect of the letter according to Siamese Law, but the opportunity of giving such evidence was declined.

The twofold relief sought by the appellants finds no foundation for either branch. The only proper plaintiff to recover the asset is (in default of evidence to the contrary) the legal personal representative of Tuan Kundor, and even if a beneficiary could sue in his own right, making the legal personal representative a defendant, his only claim would be an order for transfer of the asset to the legal personal representative to which claim all defences available against the legal personal representative would be open to the present defendants. The letter could not be used (as Kalumpang might perhaps personally use it) to ground an estoppel in favour of the legal personal representative, even though Kalumpang himself became such legal personal representative. It might be used as an admission, i.e., as a piece of evidence, and if no other evidence was given, it might be sufficient foundation for a judgment in favour of the legal personal representative for his recovery of the asset. There remains, however, for consideration the second branch of the relief claimed. No foundation has been laid for this at all. There is no shred of evidence in the case to show that any of the plaintiffs is, under Siamese Law or any other law, beneficially interested in the estate of Tuan Kundor. The letter is no such evidence; at the most it is a statement by a third person of her opinion as to the law applicable, and that under that law Kalumpang was entitled to some share.

As to the suggestion that the letter constitutes a root of title as being itself a declaration of trust, such a contention, even if raised by the plaintiffs in the courts below, is equally devoid of any foundation to support it. Whether the letter according to Siamese law creates what in this country would be called a trust, and whether it creates enforceable rights, are questions of fact which should be proved, which were not proved, and which the plaintiffs have declined to prove.

In the circumstances above indicated, their Lordships feel no doubt that the action of the plaintiffs failed, not from some technical defect capable of being remedied without hardship or injustice to the parties, but from matters of real substance, which it was not open to the Judges in the Appeal Court to adjust as they have attempted to do.

Whether a legal personal representative of Tuan Kundor if and when constituted can after all these years successfully assert in fresh proceedings a claim to the mine against the present defendants is a matter upon which their Lordships are not only unwilling, but unable to express any view; but, for the reasons given, they are of opinion that this appeal succeeds. The order of the Court of Appeal should be discharged and the order of the trial Judge restored. The respondents will pay the costs of the appellants both here and in the Court of Appeal. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), ss. 175, 179, 386 and 387—Area not excluded under s. 387—Refusal of license under s. 386—Legality—Grant of license under ss. 175, 179, effect of.

Under s. 386, Calcutta Municipal Act, the Corporation has absolute power to refuse a license to any particular premises within a particular area even though the Corporation has not excluded generally that area under s. 387. [p. 640, col. 1.]

The granting of a license under the taxing sections such as s. 175 and s. 179 does not preclude the Corporation from refusing to grant a further license under s. 386; Bepin Behari Ghose v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), referred to [p. 640, col. 2.]

Appeal against the appellate decree of the Second Sub-Judge, Alipur, dated the 19th January, 1929.

Messrs. Hira Lal Chakravarti and Nalini Kumar Mukerji, for the Respondent.

Judgment—The plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arises was the owner of certain premises situated within the Municipal limits of Calcutta. She was the owner of certain hackney carriages and horses with which she carried on the business of hire. She desired to use these premises in question as a stable for those horses and carriages and applied to the Corporation for sanction which however was refused. She continued the business nevertheless and was prosecuted before the Municipal Magistrate and fined. It appears that the Chief Executive Officer of the Corporation had refused her a license for which she applied under the terms of s. 386, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923. From his decision an appeal was preferred to the Corporation which was considered and disposed of by the Health Committee who supported the decision of the Chief Executive Officer in refusing the license. The plaintiff brought the suit against the Corporation asking for a mandatory injunction on the Corporation to grant her license to keep these horses upon the premises in question and secondly for an injunction to restrain the Corporation from prosecuting her under the provisions of s. 488 read with s. 386 and restraining them from interfering with her right to use these premises as a stable. She also claimed a sum of Rs. 50 as damages.

Both the courts below have granted a decree against the Corporation, at any rate, in regard to the injunction restraining the Corporation from taking action and as to damages. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court states amongst other things that it is not disputed that the plaintiff had her stable on the land at the time of the prosecution and had no license for it; and ordinarily, he says, it cannot be denied that an owner who is using premises as a stable without license is liable to prosecution under s. 386 of the Act. The learned Judge then says after a discussion of certain provisions of the Act that,

"having regard to the facts of the case the Corporation can hardly be said to have properly exercised its discretion in these matters."

He refers to the fact that as it transpired in evidence a license was granted before in 1922-23 for the use of the whole plot under s. 386 and that there was a cow-shed in the northern portion and the owner was permitted to use it as a cow-shed even in 1924. He then goes on to say:

"Plaintiff could rightly complain that the action was taken by the Corporation for the sake of the convenience of the owners of premises No. 18-1."

He further says that the evidence adduced in the case is sufficient to warrant the finding that the plaintiff was permitted to use the premises for the purpose of s. 386 inasmuch as there are certain exhibits which show that the plaintiff was granted a license for 1923-24 for exercising the profession of a hackney carriage owner at the premises and also a license under the Act with regard to the collection of scavenging tax in relation to her profession as a hackney carriage owner. The learned Judge goes on to say that,

"if the Corporation was unwilling to grant license under s. 386 and if it was found desirable to discontinue the user of the place as a stable, why were the other licenses issued?"

He thinks therefore that the actions of the Corporation Officers were arbitrary and that the court as a court of equity should interfere against the action of the Corporation in support of the plaintiff to the extent mentioned.

The points that have been argued by the respondent before us are these: It is contended first of all that on a true construction of ss. 386 and 387, Calcutta Municipal Act, the Corporation was not empowered to refuse license.

Section 386, sub-s. (1) runs thus:

"No person shall use or permit to be used any premises for any of the following purposes without or otherwise than in conformity with the terms of a license granted by the Corporation in this behalf, namely (a) any of the purposes specified in Sch. XIX; (b) any purpose which is, in the opinion of the Corporation, dangerous to life, health or property, or likely to create a nuisance; (c) keeping horses, cattle or other fourfooted animals for sale or hire or for sale of the produce thereof, and (d) storing for other than his own domestic use or selling timber, firewood, charcoal, coal, coke, ashes, hay, grass, straw or any other combustible thing."

It is argued that the provisions of s. 387 would be unnecessary if the powers of the Corporation under s. 386 amounted to an absolute power to refuse to grant license under s. 386. Section 387 is the section which enables the Corporation to exclude a whole area for using premises for any of the purposes mentioned in s. 386, and specific procedure is laid down in s. 387 by which that exclusion may be attained and given effect to. Once the area has been excluded then of course no business of the character in question can be carried on at all within that area and it is useless to apply for license to that effect. The argument amounts to this: that the Corporation has got no power to refuse license under s. 386 unless the area is excluded under s. 387. We are of opinion on the matter of construction that such a meaning ought not to be attributed to the plain language of s. 386. Even if an area has not been dealt with under s. 387 there is no reason why s. 386 should be utilized as applicable to particular instances. There is nothing to suggest that a license under that section can be claimed as a matter of right; nor is there any such provision as is contained in s. 169 of the Act which makes it obligatory on the Corporation to grant a license of the character dealt with in that section the moment the tax is paid. This is only to be expected when it is considered that s. 386 of this Act comes under Part V of the Act which deals with "the public health, safety and convenience." This would make it all the more necessary that the authorities should have a discretion in granting or refusing license in matters where those subjects are specially concerned.

The second point argued by the learned Advocate for the respondent was that assuming that the true construction of s. 386 of the Act was that the Corporation had a discretion in the matter of granting license, the procedure adopted by the authorities was such that from its arbitrary character and the way in which the respondent had been dealt with, the principles of natural justice had been contravened and therefore the court should interfere in favour of the plaintiff. Upon this point the learned Judge states as follows:

"The resolution of the Corporation (Health Committee) related to the appeal preferred by the plaintiff when she was refused license under s. 386 and by it the appeal was disallowed as the site was thought to be unsuitable by the Chief Executive Officer, Health Officer and the members of the Health Committee; but it does not appear that the Executive Officer and Health Officer formed their opinion after inspection of the locality. The members of the Health Committee are said to have gone to the locality but they did not go on the date fixed and the plaintiff had no opportunity to be heard if they went in her absence. She also complained that her Pleader was also not given any opportunity to be heard at the time of the appeal and if it was so, such action cannot but be called arbitrary and must be discouraged."

Now there is no finding in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff's pleader was not in fact given a hearing during the appeal. As a matter of fact from the proceedings themselves to the minutes of which we have been referred, it is clear that the plaintiff's pleader was in fact present and was allowed to make his statement and representations on the case. It can hardly be said therefore that there is any case here of the plaintiff's having been refused a proper hearing; nor is there to be found anywhere in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court anything to suggest that the proceedings at any such meeting of the Corporation were tainted in any way by fraud or corruption or any other thing which, if proved, might have given rise to other considerations.

Then again the last contention of the respondent before us is that some kind of estoppel is raised against the Corporation arising out of the fact that the Corporation had in fact granted her licenses under other chapters and sections of the Act, relating also to her business on these premises as the owner of the hackney carriage business. This matter is relied on by the learned Judge when he says that she was being granted license under ss. 175, 176, 179 and 180 of the Act, and also, it appears, under the sections of the former Act corresponding to ss. 165 and 169 of the new Act. The effect of her having been granted license under any or all of those sections, it is contended, is to preclude the Corporation from refusing to give her the further license which is necessary under s. 386. The answer to this contention rests upon the fact that those other licenses were granted to her under sections in an earlier part of the Act, namely, Part IV, which has to do with the subject of taxation, e. g., s. 175 deals with licenses to be taken out annually for fiscal purposes in respect of professions, trades and callings and taxes to be paid thereon: see the case of Bepin Behari Ghose v. Corporation of Calcutta (1).

There is no reason why the mere fact that she is called upon to take out such a license as is contemplated by s. 175 should excuse her from the necessity of taking out a license under s. 386 or should entitle her to a license under that section for those particular premises. The license under s. 175 is to be taken out by a person who exercises or carries on any of the professions, trades or callings mentioned, that is to say, the tax is payable by a person who de facto carries on such a profession, trade or calling as is liable to tax under the Act. There is no implication in the fact of such a license being granted that the licensee is in fact for all purposes legally entitled to carry on the particular profession, trade or calling. Further there is a proviso to s. 175 that the grant of a license under that section shall not be deemed to affect the liability of the licensee to take out a license under any other section of the Act. Similarly as regards the levying of scavenging tax under s. 179, that stands on precisely the same footing, as being a tax levied upon a person who is de facto carrying on and who thereby becomes liable in consequence of carrying on a particular profession, trade or calling. It cannot be called in to show that the Corporation is in any way precluded from exercising a discretion which is vested in it as guardian of the public health under an entirely different part of the Act in issuing or refusing other licenses based upon totally different considerations.

The result is that we think the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous and must be reversed for the reasons given above, and the plaintiff's suit will be dismissed. The appellant will get his costs in all the Courts.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 263
—Summary trial—Judgment—Contents—Reasons for conviction.

When a Magistrate tries a case summarily, he is not bound to record evidence but he is bound to record his reasons for the conviction and to state them in such a manner that a superior Court acting in revision may be in a position to judge whether there was sufficient material before the Magistrate to support the conviction. Jagan-nath v. Emperor (1), referred to.

Criminal Revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 12th September, 1931.

Messrs. S. S. Chaudhuri and H. D. Chandra, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ali Muhammad, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The applicant was tried summarily by a Magistrate, First Class, of the Lucknow District for the offence of keeping a brothel in his house in breach of r. 2 of the by-laws framed under s. 298-H (c), Act II of 1916, prohibiting the residence of prostitutes and the keeping of brothels in specified areas of the Lucknow Municipality. He found the accused guilty and imposed on him a fine of Rs. 30; in default one month's simple imprisonment. The accused made an application for revision to the learned Sessions Judge, but he saw no reason to interfere and dismissed the application.

Unfortunately the learned Magistrate did not make any record of the statements of witnesses examined before him. Of course, when a Magistrate tries a case summarily, he is not bound to record evidence; but, as observed by Mr. (afterwards Sir Benjamin) Lindsay in Jagan-nath v. Emperor (1), the Magistrate is bound to record his reasons for the conviction and to state them in such a manner that a superior Court acting in revision may be in a position to judge whether there was sufficient material before the Magistrate to support the conviction. The opening words of the judgment of the Magistrate show that the accused Ahmad Jan was prosecuted on the allegation that he kept a brothel in his house and had engaged one Miss Edna for prostitution.

So far as I can see from the judgment of the learned Magistrate, and the reference to the prosecution evidence contained therein, there is no evidence at all to show that the applicant kept a brothel in his house.

All that the evidence shows is that Miss Edna was living in the house of the accused, that on one occasion, namely, on the 17th April, 1931, a man identified as Khurshed Ahmad, son of the accused met one Sergeant Harrison at Valerios and brought him from there to the house in which Miss Edna was living. A woman in the house, whom Sergeant Harrison was not in a position to identify, asked him to pay Rs. 10 in order to have sexual intercourse with her, which he did. This money was handed by the woman to Khurshed Ahmad. This evidence might at best show that Khurshed Ahmad was keeping a brothel, but cannot prove that the accused Ahmad Jan was the person who kept a brothel. There is absolutely no evidence of the house having been used for the purposes of prostitution on any other occasion. Even on the occasion in question there is nothing in the evidence to connect Ahmad Jan, accused, with the transaction between the woman alleged to be Miss Edna and Sergeant Harrison. It has not even been suggested that the accused Ahmad Jan received any share in the earnings of Miss Edna. In my opinion, therefore, the charge laid against the accused of his keeping a brothel was not justified and his conviction for that offence cannot be upheld. The learned Assistant Government Advocate, realizing this difficulty, wanted to bring the case under another part of r. 2 which provides that no person shall let or otherwise grant the use or occupation of any building to a public prostitute. In the first place the judgment of the Magistrate does not show that the accused was charged with this offence. The only charge against him, so far as I can see, was that he himself kept a brothel. In the second place though it is admitted by the accused that he had let the house for residential purposes to Miss Edna, there is no evidence that when he let the house to her he knew her to be a public prostitute. In this connexion it may be pointed out that Miss Edna was prosecuted simultaneously with the accused Ahmad Jan in respect of the offence which took place on the night of the 17th April, 1931. This offence led to two prosecutions: one against Miss Edna under r. 1 of the aforesaid by-laws for her being a public prostitute and residing within one of the prohibited areas; and the other against Ahmad Jan for keeping a brothel. The charge against Miss Edna failed and she was acquitted by the learned City Magistrate. The accused Ahmad Jan was tried by another Magistrate and convicted as stated above. Under these circumstances the charge against Miss Edna herself having failed, and in the absence of any evidence to prove that she was a public prostitute, it is hardly possible to say that the accused was guilty of letting the house to a public prostitute.

I, therefore, allow the application, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine if paid be refunded.

A Muhammadan talukdar made a will which directed that if no one of his four wives had any issue, then the first wife was to adopt a son within two years of the death of the testator, that the boy to be adopted was to be a Sunni lad under ten years and was not to belong to a particular family; that if the first wife failed to adopt a son within the prescribed period then the second wife was within the space of two years to adopt subject to the "above conditions." If the second wife also failed to adopt then the third was empowered to adopt. If she too failed then the fourth was given power to adopt on the same conditions:

Held, that, on a proper construction of the will, if the first wife died after the death of the testator without making an adoption, then the second wife was at once to come into possession and become entitled to make an adoption within two years of her coming into possession subject to the condition that the boy was a Sunni lad under ten years of age and did not belong to the particular family. Maharani Indar Kuar v. Maharani Jaipal Kuar (15), followed. [p. 670, col. 1.]

Under s. 470 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 a person whose only interest in the property was that of a mere stake-holder and who was ready to render it to the rightful owner, was entitled to bring an interpleader suit to enable the Civil Courts to decide upon the rights of the rival claimants to the same property. The Court of Wards being a trustee for the rightful owner and thus a stake-holder can file such a suit and the mere fact that no such capacity to sue or to be sued has been conferred upon the Court of Wards under s. 48 of the old Court of Wards Act does not in any way oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to take proceedings under s. 470, upon a plaint filed by the Court of Wards. The word "person" in s. 470 is wide enough to cover a corporate body like Court of Wards. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Before a pedigree said to have been prepared by a deceased member of the family can be admitted in evidence under s. 32 (5), Evidence Act, it must be proved that it was either prepared by the deceased or that the deceased had that personal knowledge and belief which must be presumed in any statement of the deceased person which is admissible in evidence. [p. 661, col. 1.]

Declarations as to the existence of relationship by blood, in order to be admissible must be made ante litem motam which means not merely before the commencement of legal proceedings, but before even the existence of any actual controversy concerning the subject-matter of declaration. [p. 659, col. 1.]

The Limitation Act does not touch disqualification under s. 6 (a), Court of Wards Act; and a disqualified proprietor is not exempted from suing so long as the property remains in the hands of the Court of Wards. [p. 684, col. 2.]

Where a Muhammadan talukdar creates under his will a life-estate in favour of his widow with power to adopt, the widow is fully justified in law in refusing the life-estate as well as the power to adopt, and where she so disclaims her right, her estate is lost and the estate of another legatee entitled to succeed under the will is accelerated. [p. 696, col. 1.]

Where according to a deed of gift, a jungle without the exception of any tree is gifted away, and there is no mention of the land upon which the jungle stood, what is gifted away is the timber of the jungle and not also the land upon which the jungle stood [p. 688, col. 1.]

To test whether a gift is fictitious or otherwise the surrounding circumstances contemporaneous with the gift and subsequent conduct of parties concerned is the best guide. [p. 689, col. 2.]

Where each of the items of documentary evidence relied upon does not prove a fact in issue and has no evidentiary value in advancing a particular case, the cumulative effect of all the mass of such evidence would be of no evidentiary value Durga v. Lal Bahadur (3), distinguished. [p. 653, col. 2.]

A genuine petition of appeal produced from the Government Secretariat, even though it may not bear the signature or thumb-mark of the party, is admissible in evidence, but a statement made in it by the appellant in his own interest about his alleged relationship with a certain person cannot be admitted as relevant and admissible in evidence unless such statement has been brought home to the appellant as his own. Shrewsbury Peerage case (2) and Jagatpal Singh v. Jageshwar Bakhsh Singh (4), referred to [p. 651, col. 2.]

A childless widow of a Muhammadan talukdar can make an adoption of her daughter's son or sister's son under the provisions of s. 29, Oudh Estates Act, provided she has no natural son born to her from her husband and provided she has not already adopted a son. The expression "for the purposes of this Act" cannot very well be restricted to mean "only for the purposes of intestacy." Jutteendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (19) and Sreemutty Kishormoney Dassee v. Maharaja Bahadur (21), relied on. [p. 675, col. 1.]

In order to constitute a valid gift under Muhammadan Law it is essential to prove the taking possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee and that the donor had a bona fide intention of divesting himself in presenti of his proprietary title in the property gifted. [p. 688, col. 2; p. 689, col. 1.]

A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it might be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. Similarly a lessee is estopped during the subsistence of lease from questioning the title of his lessor. [p. 686, col. 1.]

Where a husband admits that he executed a deed of gift in favour of his wife but alleges that he had no intention of giving away the property and that in short he had no animus contra hendi when he executed the deed of gift, evidence to prove such a defence is admissible and does not violate the provisions of s. 92, Evidence Act. [p. 692, col. 1.]

Where once it is established that the source of a sale transaction flowed from the husband and that the transaction stood in the name of the wife, it follows that the transaction is a benami one and the wife was a mere benamidar. [p. 698, col. 2.]

A pedigree which had been subjected to investigation many years prior to the institution of the litigation in which it was questioned and which had been previously relied upon by competent authorities and which is supported by oral evidence can safely be accepted as correct. Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh (7), Debi Prasad Chowdhry v. Radha Chowdhry (6) and Doddawa v. Benneygawada (8), referred to. [p. 664, col. 2.]

Section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act applies only to an "estate" as defined in the Act; and non-talukdari property is not an "estate" within the meaning of the definition given in s. 3. The rule of succession to non-talukdari property is governed by s. 23 of the Act, that is, by ordinary law, modified by custom, if any, proved in the case. Regarding non-talukdari property the presumption that it is governed by the rule of single heir succession in the case of List No. 2 estate is rebuttable; but there is no presumption that the rule of male lineal primogeniture would govern such non-talukdari property in the case of List No. 2 estate. [p. 668, col. 1.]

That construction of the will should be adopted, which bespeaks a reasonable and probable intention, rejecting that which would indicate an intention unreasonable, capricious and inconsistent with the testator's view as evidenced by his conduct and by the dispositions of his will which are not open to controversy.

A child born in India must under ordinary circumstances be presumed to have his father's religion and his corresponding civil and social status. Skinner v. Orde (17), followed. [p. 672, col. 1.]

The word "khandan" denotes the descendants of one's paternal grand-father. [ibid]

Under s. 29, Oudh Estates Act, the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar is allowed to make an adoption only in those cases in which it is permissible for a Hindu to do so. The Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) is a purely secular enactment and has nothing to do with the peculiar notions of Hindus and Muhammadans on the subject of adoption. It merely lays down that in those cases in which a Hindu widow could adopt, a Muhammadan widow of a talukdar could also do so. It does not touch the question of the qualifications of the boy to be adopted. A childless Hindu widow may, with the authority of her husband, make an adoption and the same power is given to the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar by Act I of 1869. A Hindu widow who has a son born to her by her husband cannot legally adopt and similarly a Muhammadan widow if she has a son by her husband could also not adopt under Act I of 1869. Adoption like marriage in Hindu Law, is in the nature of a religious sacrament but no religious ceremony is necessary under Muhammadan Law for the purpose of making an adoption which is unknown to Islamic Law. The only condition of Hindu Law which is imposed upon a widow of a Muhammadan talukdar by Act I of 1869 is that the latter must be a childless widow and authorized by her husband to make an adoption during her widowhood. Raghuraj Chandra v. Subhadra Kunwar (18), followed. [p. 672, col. 2; p. 673, col. 1.]

Section 29, Oudh Estates Act, confers the power of adoption upon every widow of a Muhammadan talukdar and it nowhere lays down that it is necessary for the widow to be in possession for life of the estate of her husband before she can make a valid adoption under the Oudh Estates Act. This does not make the possession of a life-estate by a Hindu widow or a Muhammadan widow the sine qua non or a prerequisite condition before she can validly exercise the authority conferred upon her by her deceased husband. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Ordinarily a life-estate vests in the widow of a Hindu or Muhammadan talukdar who dies intestate, but where a childless talukdar has executed a valid will giving his widow authority to adopt and making his adopted son the absolute owner of the estate the absolute estate vests in the adopted son from the moment he is adopted but enjoyment of it may be postponed or deferred till the termination of the life-estate of the widow. [p. 674, cols. 1 & 2.]

A testator who is a Muhammadan talukdar can confer on any widow of his the power to adopt without conferring on her also a life-estate; and if the testator by his will lays down that on the adoption being effected the adopted son should come into immediate possession of the estate then the life-estate, if any, of the adopted mother would be cut off at once. [p. 674, col. 2.]

If the testator is authorized by law to make a testamentary disposition of his property he can exercise that right and legally make a will contrary to the devolution of the estate on intestacy laid down in Act I of 1869, provided his will does not offend against the rule of perpetuity incorporated in that Act [ibid.]

A person to whom any power whether coupled with an interest or not, is given may by deed disclaim the power, and after disclaimer shall not be capable of exercising or joining in the exercise of the power. On such disclaimer, the power may be exercised by the other person or persons or the survivor or survivors of the other person to whom the power is given unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument creating the power. [p. 678, col. 2.]

By the expression "falls into possession" is meant the time when reversioner or a remainderman becomes entitled to the actual possession of the estate. [p. 682, col. 2.]

Unless there is a break in the continuity of possession the true owner would be barred by 12 years' adverse possession even if that continuous adverse possession be of two or more trespassers who did not claim under one another. Ramayya v. Kotamma (50), referred to [p. 685, col. 1.]

Where the plaintiff alleges his possession over immovable property and disposes by the defendant, and where it is found that the possession of the plaintiff was discontinued when defendant entered into possession not as tenant of the plaintiff but in his own rights, the article of limitation applicable to such a suit is Art. 142 and not Art. 144, Sch. I, Limitation Act. [p. 687, col. 2.]

In cases falling under Art. 142, the claimant must prove his possession within 12 years next preceding the date of the institution of the suit and in cases of that nature an enquiry into the question of adverse possession is irrelevant. [ibid.]

In cases falling under Art. 144 where the defence is one of title acquired by adverse possession for more than 12 years it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove his possession within 12 years from the commencement of the suit. [ibid.]

Mutation does not confer title either under the Oudh Estates Act or under the general law.

Every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. *Quinn v. Messrs. St. G. Jackson and Sita Ram, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. M. Wassim, Mohammad Khalil Haider Husein, M. H. Qidwai and E. R. Qidwai, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—Suits Nos 11 and 12 of 1928 are two connected suits filed by Bhaya Mohamad Azim Khan and others against the Raja of Nanpara, the Raja of Utraula and Rani Qamar Zamani Begam since deceased and now represented by her heirs M. Abdul Hasan and others. These two suits have been tried together with the consent of both parties. In Suit No. 11 of 1928 the plaintiffs claim the talukdari estate of Nanpara as the heirs and nearest agnates of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, Talukdar of Nanpara against Raja Saadat Ali Khan defendant No. 1 in Suit No. 11 and assert that their cause of action against him arose on 3rd November, 1925, when the Court of Wards delivered possession over the estate and the cash in the estate treasury to him. They further allege that in any case the plaintiffs' cause of action arose in January, 1917, when, on the death of Rani Nasim Sabri, the widow of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, the Nanpara estate "fell into possession" of plaintiff No. 1 as the nearest agnate and reversioner of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. In Suit No. 11 of 1928 the plaintiffs also claim as against defendant No. 2, the Raja of Utraula, a six annas' share in part of the properties detailed in schedules A and B attached to the plaint, but do not specifically allege in their plaint when their cause of action for this claim against the Raja of Utraula arose. Similarly in Suit No. 11 the plaintiffs also claim against Rani Qamar Zamani Begam the property entered in schedule F attached to the plaint, of which she is said to be in wrongful possession but against her also they do not allege in their plaint when their cause of action first arose. The valuation of Suit No. 11 has been fixed at 4½ crores of rupees. The plaintiffs base their claim upon a pedigree attached to their plaints in these suits. That pedigree is as follows:

RASUL KHAN TOGH PATHAN

JEHAN KHAN

Note.

- (1) Raja Munawwar Ali Khan died in 1847.
- (2) Raja Jang Bahadur Khan died in 1902.
- (3) Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan died on 10th December, 1907.
- (4) Rani Mohamad Kaniz Begam of Utraula died on 9th August, 1919.
- (5) Rani Sarfaraz Begam died in 1821.
- (6) Nasim (Rani) died in January, 1917.

Defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan in his written statement in Suit No. 11 denied the pedigree set up by the plaintiffs and asserted that the pedigree upon which the plaintiffs founded their claim was a false and concocted one and that plaintiffs were not the agnates of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan and that the suit was not within limitation. Defendant No. 1 further pleaded that he had been validly adopted by Rani Sultana Begam the widow of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan in accordance with the will of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, that Abdul Aziz plaintiff No. 1's father and Mohamad Ali Khan, the father of plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 and the grandfather of plaintiff No. 6 had transferred a 12 annas share of their alleged right in the Nanpara estate to one Nazar Ahmad Khan on 20th January, 1913, and that thus plaintiffs could not now maintain their suit in respect of the sharesold and that plaintiffs Nos. 7 to 16 had on their own showing no right to institute this suit in the presence of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 6. He further pleaded that plaintiffs' suit as framed was not maintainable because the plaintiffs had not definitely stated who amongst them was entitled to call himself the nearest male agnate of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan and as such entitled to the Nanpara estate as being the nearest reversioner of the late Raja under the rule of single heir succession. It was further pleaded by defendant No. 1 that Ahmad Ali Khan plaintiff No. 3 and Subhan Ali Khan plaintiff No. 12 having admitted the proprietary right, title and interest of defendant No. 1 by taking leases from him were estopped from setting up their own title or questioning the title of defendant No. 1 to the properties in suit. The Raja of Utraula, defendant No. 2, in his written statement pleaded that the plaintiffs based their claim upon an imaginary pedigree which was totally denied by him and that plaintiffs should have stated which one of them was entitled to the property in suit under the rule of male lineal primogeniture set up by them. He further pleaded that the plaintiffs' cause of action, if any, against him accrued on 20th December, 1907, on the death of Raja Mohamad Siddique and that, therefore, plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation. He also urged that plaintiffs' suit was barred by Expl. 6 to s. 11, Civil Procedure Code as the decree of 9th November, 1911, in the interpleader suit filed on 28th April, 1908, gave the property in suit to defendant No. 2's wife, that decree being a bona fide decree passed between rival claimants.

Defendant No. 3 Rani Qamar Zamani Begam the first lawfully married ahl-i-biradari wife of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan also denied the pedigree set up by the plaintiffs and asserted that plaintiffs were not the nearest male agnates of her husband Raja Mohamad Siddique and, therefore, not entitled to the properties in suit, that their claim was barred by limitation, that the will of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan was neither properly executed nor legally valid, nor was it a testamentary disposition of a free man of sound disposing mind for various reasons, that Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan had died intestate, and that she defendant No. 3, Rani Qamar Zamani Begam as his only ahl-i-biradari who had not been divorced by him, was entitled to succeed to the estate under the provisions of Act I of 1869 and that in her presence plaintiffs had no right to the property in suit.

In Suit No. 12 of 1928 the plaintiffs sued the Raja of Utraula as the heirs and nearest reversioners of Rani Kaniz Begam the sister of Raja Mohamad Siddique and the wife of defendant No. 1, the Raja of Utraula. They impleaded the Raja of Nanpara as defendant No. 2, because he had previously filed in 1918 a suit (Original Suit No. 4 of 1928) against the Raja of Utraula for this very same property: see Ex. 14 of Suit No. 12, sale deed of 17th September, 1928, executed by plaintiffs in favour of Thakur Devindra Bahadur Singh. This sale deed explains the genesis of these two suits. The Raja of Utraula demanded his arrears of profits from his nephew, the Raja of Nanpara. The latter unwisely thought that he would be able to defeat the claim of his uncle if he denied the validity of the decree passed in the interpleader suit of 1908 upon the basis of the compromise filed in that case, and if he set up an absolutely brand new title in himself. Thus Suits Nos. 4, 7, 9 and 10 of 1928 came to be filed in this Court. The plaintiffs of Suits Nos. 11 and 12 thought that they might with advantage fish in troubled waters, and so, in November, 1928, they filed their present suits with the help of a financier and a smart lawyer of Bshraich, B. Sheo Gopal, and his still more smart brother Lalji, the pairokar of plaintiffs against the Raja of Nanpara and Utraula hoping to profit by the damaging evidence each Raja would bring against the other in Suits Nos. 4, 7, 9 and 10 of 1928. After a protracted trial before me Suits Nos. 4, 7 and 9 were referred by the parties, sobered by the realities of the situation, to the arbitration of the Commissioner of Lucknow, Mr. H. G. Walton, I. C. S., who had till recently been Commissioner of Fyzabad and within whose revenue jurisdiction lay the estates of Nanpara and Utraula. Decrees in terms of the award given by the arbitrator were passed by me in Suits Nos. 4, 7 and 9 of 1928, and thereafter evidence in these Suits Nos. 11 and 12 of 1928 began to be recorded. The above brief narrative of events not only explains the reason for the filing of these suits but also the delay in their disposal. It also shows that there are power and influence in the armoury of both sides, and a strong spirit of speculation and adventure on the side of plaintiffs. Defendant No. 1, the Raja of Utraula in Suit No. 12, denied the pedigree set up by the plaintiffs and asserted that the deeds of gift executed by him in favour of his wife Rani Kaniz Begam, as well as the mortgage-deed of 1890 in her favour, were fictitious and colourable transactions made with a view to prevent the estates and the jungles from being leased by the Deputy Commissioner or being attached in execution of decrees, and that Rani Kaniz Begam never obtained actual possession under these deeds of gift, but that possession of all the properties in suit always remained with the Raja and never with the ostensible donee who lost all title, assuming she had any, in consequence of his, the Raja's adverse possession long before her death and that the present suit was barred by limitation. It was further alleged that, Rani Kaniz Begam never claimed title to any of the properties in suit and that even if she was the real owner of the property standing in her name at the time of her death, plaintiffs could lay no claim to any of it because they were no heirs to Rani Kaniz Begam, and that defendant No. 1 as her husband was alone her heir-at-law and that plaintiffs were in no way related to him.

It is not necessary to set forth the substance of the written statement of defendant No. 2, the Raja of Nanpara, in Suit No. 12 as his claim in respect of this very property against the Raja of Utraula in Suit No. 4 of 1921 has already been dismissed by this Court on the basis of the award filed by the arbitrator and accepted by the parties to the suit.

Upon the pleadings of the parties in Suit No. 11 of 1928 the following issues were framed :

1. Is the pedigree attached to the plaint in Suit No. 11 correct, and is any of the plaintiffs of that suit the nearest agnate of Raja Mohamad Siddique, the late Raja of Nanpara, according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture?
2. Is plaintiff No. 1 or any one of the other plaintiffs entitled to the talukdari property in suit under cl. (10), s. 22, Oudh Estates Act, and to the non-talukdari property under the alleged custom of male lineal primogeniture?
3. (a) Is there a family custom of the exclusion of females from succession?
(b) Is there a custom of "male lineal primogeniture" in this family?
4. If the custom of single heir succession according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture does not apply to non-talukdari property, are the plaintiffs entitled to the same?
5. (a) Is the adoption of Raja Saadat Ali Khan, defendant No. 1 by Saltanat Begam invalid in law?
And is it in conformity with the will of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan?
(b) Was Saltanat Begam remarried to Hamid Husain Khan before she adopted defendant No. 1 as her son?
(c) Was she before her marriage to Hamid Husain Khan married in the "mutah" form to Mohammad Kazim as alleged by plaintiffs? If so, what is its effect on her right or power to adopt?
6. What are the properties in suit which are talukdari and what non-talukdari?
7. To what extent is the will of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan invalid in law?
8. Is the claim of plaintiffs in Suit No. 11 of 1928 within limitation?
9. Whether plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 12 are estopped from bringing the present suit as alleged in para. 28 of the written statement of defendant No. 1?
10. Is the suit as framed not maintainable on the grounds alleged in para. 27 of the written statement of defendant No. 1?
11. Did the father of plaintiff No. 1 and that of plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 and the grandfather of plaintiff No. 6 sell a 12-annas share to Nazar Ahmad Khan on 20th January, 1913? If so, is the present suit maintainable in respect of the share then sold?
12. Are the plaintiff or plaintiffs entitled to mesne profits? If so, to what amount?
13. What is the effect of the forfeiture clause in the will of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan?
14. Was any sum delivered by the Court of Wards to the defendants Nos. 1 or 3, and if so, are the plaintiffs or any one of them entitled to that sum?
15. Did Nasim Sahri by any deed of relinquishment give up her rights and interest to the property which she obtained under the will from her husband; and if so, was such a relinquishment valid?

16. Was the will of 8-23rd January, 1906, duly executed by Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan and was he of sound disposing mind at the time of execution?

The issues framed in Suit No. 12 of 1928 are as follows:

1. Is the pedigree attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 correct, and are plaintiffs the agnates of the late Rani Kaniz Begam?

2. Is plaintiff No. 1 or any one of the plaintiffs entitled to the talukdari property in suit under cl. (10), s. 22, Oudh Estates Act and to the non-talukdari property under the alleged custom of male lineal primogeniture?

3. (a) Is there a family custom of the exclusion of females from succession?

(b) Is there a custom of male lineal primogeniture in this family?

4. If the custom of single heir succession according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture does not apply to non-talukdari property, are the plaintiffs entitled to the same?

5. Is the claim of plaintiffs in this suit within limitation?

8. Was the right to the land covered by the jungle in villages Nos. 8 to 12 in List A attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928 also included in the deed of gift executed by the defendant Raja of Utraula on 12th April, 1910, in favour of his wife?

7. Had the defendant Raja of Utraula the intention to part with the property gifted by the deed of 12th April, 1910? And was actual delivery of possession made to the donee (the defendant's wife) in consequence of the execution of this deed of gift?

Was this deed of gift a fictitious and colourable transaction and was never intended to be, and was not in fact, given effect to?

8. Did the defendant Raja of Utraula intend to part with the house property entered in the deed of gift of 28th November, 1910? And was actual delivery of possession made over to the donee, that is the defendant's wife, in consequence of the execution of this deed?

or Was this deed of gift a fictitious and colourable transaction which was never intended to be, and was not in fact, given effect to?

9. Are the deeds of gift invalid and ineffectual under s. 13, Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, even if they be assumed to be otherwise valid and operative as alleged in para. 17 of the written statement of the defendant?

10. Did the defendant Raja of Utraula make an oral gift of village Katra entered in List A at item No. 1 attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928 to his wife in 1900, and has she been in proprietary possession since then till her death in 1919?

11 (a). Was the mortgage deed of 7th August, 1890, relating to the property at No. 18 (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) entered in List A attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928 fictitious?

(b). Were the sale deeds relating to the property marked Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of List B and Nos. 14, 15, 16 and 17 List A attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928 benami and acquired with the money belonging to the defendant?

12. Do the villages marked Nos. 4 and 7 and entered in List A attached to the plaint in suit No. 12 of 1928 constitute part of the Bilaspur estate within the meaning of s. 3, Act I of 1869?

13. Is the suit as framed not maintainable on the ground that the suit is brought collectively by all the plaintiffs?

14. To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?

By consent of parties Suit No. 11 has been deemed to be the leading suit and all the oral evidence adduced by parties in both suits has been recorded in that suit. The principal point for determination in both these suits is the question of pedigree. Before the plaintiffs can succeed in their claim they have to show that they come from the same stock as the Rajas of Nanpara and that Mohamad Azim, plaintiff No. 1, is the nearest male agnate of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, talukdar of Nanpara, and of his sister Rani Kaniz Begam, the wife of the present talukdar of Utraula. The history of the family of the talukdars of Nanpara, as gathered from the Gazetteer of the Province of Oudh compiled in 1877 by Mr Bennet (Vol. 1, page 23 and the following) the Bahraich Settlement Report (page 37 and the following) and Mr. Nevill's District Gazetteer of Bahraich (Vol. 45, pages 80, 81, 131 and 132) may be summed up as follows:

In 1637 A. D. Rasul Khan Togh Pathan a Risaldar in the service of Shah Jehan, Emperor of Delhi, was appointed keeper of the Fort (qiladar) at Bahraich and five villages of very doubtful value in pargana Salonabad were assigned to him for the pay of his soldiers. These five hamlets, namely, Nanpara Meharbannagar, Tahpur, Bhopatpur and Siswara were destined to become the nucleus of the Nanpara taluka. Rasul Khan lived in Kumaria in Baundi and was buried there. His son was Jehan Khan. Jehan Khan's son was Mohamad Khan who was the first to settle in Nanpara and his son Karam Khan may be said to have founded the Nanpara estate and was the first to have gained amongst the country folk by his victories over the banjaras the title of "Raja". He left a son Mustafa Khan. The latter on his refusal to pay the sum demanded by the Oudh Government was carried back to Lucknow where he died in 1777 A. D. In Nanpara, Saleh Khan succeeded Mustafa Khan, and in 1790 A. D. left the estate to Madar Bakhsh. Madar Bakhsh died in 1807 and he was succeeded by his infant son Munawwar Ali Khan. The estate was held "kham" till 1818. In 1827 Raja Munawwar Ali Khan took the management of the estate into his own hands. In 1847 in an ill-starred moment he married Umrao Begam a fashionable lady of the Lucknow Court and the daughter of Mehndi Quli Khan and he died in the same year shortly afterwards. The elder Rani Imambandi succeeded to the management of the estate on the death of Raja Munawwar Ali Khan in the name of the infant son Raja Jang Bahadur and for two years ruled peacefully. Afterwards Umrao Begam her co-widow contrived to obtain the support of the Queen mother in Lucknow and for five years waged war against Rani Imambandi. At the time of the annexation of Oudh the rightful heir Raja Jang Bahadur was of course recognized by the British and admitted to engage for the payment of land revenue and Mehndi Quli Khan and his daughter Umrao Begam and her party had to retire into seclusion. It was not long after the re-occupation of Oudh however that they again appeared in Nanpara. The title of K. O. I. E was conferred on Raja Jang Bahadur and he died on 1st May, 1902, and was succeeded by his son Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan who died on 30th December, 1907, in Mecca in Arabia.

The plaintiffs claim to be the nearest agnates of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan and of his sister Rani Kaniz Begam. Now the first thing to be noticed in this history which is culled from unimpeachable official records is that while the descent of the talukdars of Nanpara can be traced from the founder of their family Risaldar Rasul Khan from 1647 A. D. down to the last talukdar who died in December, 1907, there is not a word in this long family record extending over nearly 300 years of any junior or cadet branch of the Raja's family. If Jehan Khan, the son of Rasul Khan, had, as alleged by the plaintiffs, another younger son called Mahmud Khan besides his admitted son Mohamad Khan, there would have been no difficulty in mentioning that fact either in the Settlement Report of Bahraich or in the Oudh Gazetteer or in the Gazetteer of the District of Bahraich compiled by Mr. H. R. Nevill in 1903 or in any of the wajib ul araz of the villages of the Nanpara estate. Nowhere in the Settlement Report nor in these Gazetteers or wajib ul araz is there the slightest hint of the existence of a cadet branch of the talukdar of Nanpara, although if there had been a junior branch of the Raja's family the members of that branch would no doubt have managed to secure at some time or other, either sub-settlement for under-proprietary or brit or occupancy or even muafi rights in certain villages of the Nanpara taluka. The settlement and revenue papers of the Nanpara estate do not show the conferment of any such rights on any member of the junior branch of the Raja's family. On the contrary there is a complete absence of any entry in the revenue or settlement papers showing the undoubted existence of a junior branch of the family of the talukdars of Nanpara. The mere fact that certain ancestors of the plaintiffs are shown in the khataunis and jamabandis as tenants cultivating certain plots without paying rent will not prove the fact of their alleged relationship with the talukdars of Nanpara.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs Mr. St. George Jackson, has laid stress upon the sentence in the Gazetteer of Oudh Vol. 1, page 123, which runs as follows:

"The office of Fort Captain Qiladar had probably been relinquished when Mohamad Khan left Bahraich but the family still continued to be mansabdars and to hold their jagir somewhat increased in extent."

Mr. Jackson would like to read into this sentence that when Mohamad Khan left Bahraich his younger brother Mahmud Khan and his family continued to be mansabdars and to hold the five villages originally granted to Rasul Khan for the pay of his company of soldiers. This however is in my opinion not the natural meaning of the sentence quoted above. To my way of thinking the sentence merely means that when Mohamad Khan, the son of Jehan Khan, left Bahraich to settle in Nanpara he and his family still continued to be mansabdars, and to hold their jagir somewhat increased in extent. If Mohamad Khan had a younger brother called Mahmud Khan who with his family members became the mansabdar and held the jagir, then it would have been very easy and natural, nay imperative, for the historian who is giving this history of Nanpara to state in so many words that when Mohamad Khan left Bahraich his younger brother Mahmud Khan looked after the jagir originally granted to Rasul Khan and became mansabdar. Again, it is asserted by the historian from whom Mr. Bennett has derived his information for the compilation of the Oudh Gazetteer that these five hamlets granted to Rasul Khan

"were destined to become the nucleus of one of the finest estates in Oudh, that of Nanpara."

It is not easy to reconcile this statement of the historian with the contention advanced by Mr. Jackson that these five villages became the perquisite of the junior branch of the talukdar of Nanpara. I have, therefore, no hesitation in rejecting this theory advanced by Mr. Jackson as not being founded upon any proved fact or historical data. I cannot assume the existence of a cadet branch of the Raja's family and then read into the official history of the Nanpara estate a reference to this assumed junior branch of the talukdar's family.

It has also been urged by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that as the information about the talukdar's family was presumably supplied by the talukdar's agents and servants, the latter naturally ignored and failed to mention the junior branch of the talukdar's family. This strikes me as a very weak and unconvincing argument. There was no motive and no gain for any talukdar of Nanpara or for his agent or servant to conceal the existence of a cadet branch if there had been such a branch in existence. The existence of such a junior branch of the talukdars of Nanpara could not remain concealed for nearly 200 years from Revenue Officers and Settlement Officers who are generally admitted to have more or less an intimate knowledge of all the great land-holders residing within their jurisdiction. The writers of the Gazetteers of Oudh and Bahraich (Messrs. Bennett and Nevill) had no reason to suppress all mention of the cadet branch of the talukdars of Nanpara if such a junior line had been in existence. These considerations weigh heavily with me and incline me to accept the contention of Mr. Wasim the learned Counsel for the Raja of Nanpara that the complete absence of any mention of a cadet branch either in the two Gazetteers referred to above or in the Settlement Report of Bahraich or in the wajib-ul-arz of Nanpara or in that of any other village goes far to prove that no such junior branch, as alleged by plaintiffs was ever in existence. Even the wajib ul araz of those villages in which plaintiffs allege that their ancestors had bhayai rights do not mention the existence of the junior branch of the family or the grant of bhayai rights to them by the talukdars of Nanpara. It is significant fact having a direct bearing upon the plaintiff's contention in these two suits, that before the death of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan in 1907 neither the plaintiff nor anyone else had at any time and at any place broached the subject of the existence of a cadet branch of the Raja of Nanpara's family. No letter of any talukdar or any similar document from the time of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan right up to Risaldar Rasul Khan Togh Pathan, covering a period of nearly three centuries, has been produced by the plaintiffs to show that any talukdar had referred directly or indirectly to the existence of a junior branch of his family. This absence of any recognition of the junior branch (if for the sake of argument it be assumed that one was in existence) by the senior talukdari branch and of any correspondence between the two branches for over 250 years and more, furnishes a curious commentary on the present contention of the plaintiffs that they come from the same stock as the Raja of Nanpara and are the direct descendants of the junior branch of the talukdars of Nanpara.

The pedigree gathered from unimpeachable and trustworthy historical records, while it furnishes a complete line of descent from Rasul Khan in 1647 A. D. down to Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan who died in 1907 A. D. entirely negatives the existence of a cadet branch of the talukdar's family. The existence of not one member of this alleged junior branch of the talukdar's family has been mentioned in these historical records which learned Counsel of both sides have brought to my notice and commented upon at inordinate length. The plaintiffs, therefore, start with this initial heavy handicap that the undoubted pedigree of the talukdars of Nanpara, culled from well-known and authoritative and historical records is absolutely silent about the existence of a cadet branch of that Raja's family. Mr. Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has laid stress upon family traditions.

Undoubtedly, family traditions, if well-authenticated, are of great importance. The existence of a junior branch of the talukdars of Nanpara, if it were a fact, would have been a family tradition, and would have most certainly found a place in historical and official records like the Gazetteers and Settlement Report and wajib-ul-araiz of Nanpara and other villages. The absence of any reference to any such alleged junior branch destroys the assumption of a family tradition to that effect. In fact the absence of any mention of the junior branch in the authoritative pedigree of the talukdars of Nanpara given in historical and official records places the burden of proof all the more heavily upon the plaintiffs to establish their contention in the teeth of this authoritative pedigree which is admitted in these suits as correct by both parties. That is what I mean when I say that the plaintiffs start with an initial heavy handicap in their efforts to prove their claim. They have not only to establish that they are "ek jaddi" and come from the same stock as the talukdars of Nanpara but they have at the same time also to prove by clear and irrefragable evidence that the family pedigree in the historical and official records, though it may be taken as correct as far as it goes, is still incomplete and in that sense incorrect inasmuch as it entirely omits to make any mention whatsoever of the junior branch of the descendants of Rasul Khan and of his son Jehan Khan.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, Mr. Jackson, pointed out the great difficulties under which the plaintiffs had to labour in proving such ancient historical facts as that Jehan Khan, who lived in the middle of the 17th century, had a second son called Mahmud Khan and that the latter had a son Mahabat Khan and that from the latter were descended Badal Khan and Zabardast Khan and Basharat Khan. The lament of the learned Counsel is very genuine and true, but when his clients, the plaintiffs, choose to set up a claim in defiance of the pedigree given in official and authoritative records, then whatever the difficulties in their way, if they wish to succeed in proving their claim they must show by clear and cogent evidence that the pedigree contained in historical and official records of undoubted genuineness is incorrect and incomplete. It is not in my opinion open to the plaintiffs to graft on the genuine pedigree entered in the historical and official records a pedigree of their own family alleging it to be a junior branch of the talukdar's family and so to make themselves out to be of the same stock as the talukdars of Nanpara, and then glibly to assert that the pedigree set forth in official records had omitted to give the junior branch of the Raja's family. That is what the plaintiffs seem to me to have done in preparing their own pedigree which is attached to their plaint. The facts that the correctness of the pedigree in respect of the Raja's branch of the family as shown in the pedigree attached to the plaint is not disputed by the defendants does not in my opinion add to the weight or the evidentiary value to be attached to the pedigree prepared by the plaintiffs as the basis of their claim to the taluka of Nanpara and to the property standing in the name of Rani Kaniz Begam at the time of her death.

The plaintiffs have failed to prove by any evidence that the authoritative pedigree of the talukdars of Nanpara as given in official records was incomplete. They have given no reason as to why such an incomplete pedigree should have been prepared by the Settlement Officer in his Settlement Report and in the wajib-ul-arz of Nanpara and by the learned and disinterested writers of the Gazetteers of Oudh and Bahraich. The fact that the accuracy of this pedigree, as given by these official writers, is not questioned by the plaintiff or the defendants in any particular is another reason, it seems to me, for rejecting the purely gratuitous assumption made by the plaintiffs (without any foundation of fact that this pedigree deliberately or unwittingly omitted to mention the junior branch of the talukdars' family. So much for the historical records and the pedigree of the talukdars of Nanpara contained therein against which the plaintiffs have to contend from the very outset.

In face of this pedigree which ignores (if it does not negative) the existence of the junior branch of the talukdar's family the plaintiffs' contention that they are descended from Rasul Khan Togh Pathan who was the ancestor of the talukdars of Nanpara becomes all the more difficult to prove. This initial improbability in the contention of the plaintiffs must never be lost sight of until they have proved themselves to be of the same stock as the talukdars of Nanpara by clear, cogent and convincing evidence.

I will now proceed to discuss in detail the documentary evidence produced by the plaintiffs on the question of pedigree. In this connexion at the outset Mr. Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, pointed out that the defendants had admitted the correctness of the plaintiffs' branch of the pedigree given by them from Badal Khan downwards, although the defendants had stated that they did not know whether Badal Khan was senior to Zabardast Khan or vice versa or as to whose sons they were. The defendants further maintain that Hast Khan had children and that his descendants did not join the plaintiffs in these suits. The mere fact that the defendants' Counsel partially admitted the correctness of the plaintiffs' branch of the pedigree from plaintiffs up to Badal Khan is not tantamount to their admitting that the plaintiffs are related to the talukdars of Nanpara. The plaintiffs have got to prove by good and reliable evidence that Badal

Khan and Zabardast Khan and Basharat Khan were the sons of Mahabat Khan and that Mahabat Khan was the son of Mahmud Khan and that Mahmud Khan was the son of Jehan Khan. Until they prove these three essential links in the pedigree connecting them with the family of the Talukdars of Nanpara they have failed to establish their claim on the basis of the pedigree attached to their plaints. The admission of Mr. Wasim, the learned Counsel of defendant No. 1, that plaintiffs are descended from Badal Khan and Zabardast Khan does not in any way help the plaintiffs to establish their contention that they come from the same stock as the talukdars of Nanpara and that their common ancestor was also Kisaldar Rasul Khan Togh Pathan.

[The learned Judge referred to certain documents and proceeded:]

The next piece of evidence upon which the plaintiffs rely is Ex. 91, p. 336. This is a copy of a deposition of Mohamad Husain Quli Khan, brother of Rani Umrao Begam recorded on 28th February, 1878, by Mr. F. Lincoln, Civil Judge of Lucknow, in Original Suit No. 821 of 1877. The plaintiffs seek to prove from this deposition of Husain Quli Khan that the infant son or nephew of Raja Munawwar Ali Khan whom Rani Umrao Begam is said to have set up as the rival of Raja Jang Bahadur was Abdul Ali son of Bhaya Allast Khan. The learned Counsel for the Raja of Nanpara has argued that the statement in this deposition Ex. 91, page 339 to the effect that "Umrao Begam wanted Abdul Ali" is not admissible in evidence under s. 32, cl (5), Evidence Act. Mr. St. George Jackson, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has on the other hand contended that this statement of Husain Quli that his sister Umrao Begam wanted Abdul Ali to be placed on the riyasat or estate of Nanpara is admissible in evidence. He has invited my attention to the observations of King, J., in Krishnapal Singh v. Sri Raj Kuar (1), in which that learned Judge pleaded for a liberal interpretation being put upon the provisions of cl. (5), s. 32, Evidence Act, as otherwise much valuable evidence relating to ancient history would be excluded from evidence upon a too narrow construction of the words of that section. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs also referred me to a decision of the House of Lords in the Shrewsbury Peerage case (2), in which

(1) 104 Ind. Cas. 299; A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 278; 1 Luck. Cas. 97.

(2) (1857) 7 H. L. Case 1.

Lrod Wenselydale held that a certain document which did not bear the signature of the party

"must be received as the statement of the party making it and being found upon the files of the Court it must be presumed that it got there by proper authority; and so the document objected to was admitted in evidence in that case. The rulings relied upon by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs do not in my opinion touch the question raised by the learned Counsel for defendant No. (1). The statement which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs wants to be admitted in evidence under s. 32, cl. (5), Evidence Act, is the statement that "Umrao Begam wanted Abdul Ali." Now this statement which obviously does not relate to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption between persons as to whose relationship by blood, marriage or adoption the person making the statement had special means of knowledge. This statement of Hussain Quli Khan that "Umrao Begam wanted Abdul Ali" cannot be brought within the ambit of s. 32, cl (5), Evidence Act and the ruling of King, J. and the decision of the House of Lords in the Shrewsbury Peerage case (2) do not touch the legal question raised as to the admissibility of this statement of Husain Quli Khan to the effect that "Umrao Begam wanted Abdul Ali." I, therefore, uphold the contention of the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1, that this statement of Husain Quli Khan in Ex. 91 that his sister wanted Abdul Ali to be made Raja of Nanpara is not admissible in evidence under s. 32 (5), Evidence Act. There is no other provision of law under which that statement can be admitted in evidence. Even if it were to be admitted in evidence it would not help the plaintiffs' contention because Husain Quli Khan nowhere says in his deposition (Ex. 91) that Abdul Ali was an agnate or collateral of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan and unless that was proved, plaintiffs cannot make themselves out to belong to the cadet or junior branch of the talukdar of Nanpara. The plaintiffs want to link up Ex. 91 with Exs. 101 and 102. There is however no real causal connexion between the deposition of Husain Quli Khan made in 1878 and the letter and report of Major-General Outram to Lord Dalhousie of 1855. A. D. Major-General Outram does not mention that the boy whom Rani Umrao Begam set up against Raja Jang Bahadur Khan was named Abdul Ali and Husain

Quli does not depose in Ex. 91 that his sister wanted a cousin or nephew of Raja Munawwar Ali Khan to be made Raja of Nanpara, and that Abdul Ali was the name of this cousin or nephew of Raja Munawwar Ali Khan. In the absence of these crucial statements going to support the contention of the plaintiffs I cannot accept their mere ipse dixit for the same. Exhibit 91, also therefore, while it may throw a good deal of light upon other relevant matters does not help to prove this particular contention of the plaintiffs that they are descended from Risaldar Rasul Khan and are the agnates of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. In this connexion I may also refer to another statement of Hussain Quli Khan in Ex. 91 upon which the plaintiffs' learned Counsel relied and founded an argument. Hussain Quli deposed in Ex. 91 at page 337 l. 27 that:

"there were quarrels between the members of the family about the Riasat and Raj in which I appeared for the defendant and my sister Umrao Begam."

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs by their learned Counsel that the phrase "quarrels between the members of the family" would include Abdul Ali son of Allast Khan and would thereby impliedly make him a member of the family. This contention of Mr. Jackson's is very far-fetched and is proved by unimpeachable documentary evidence to be quite unsound. The historical records relied upon by both parties to this litigation as unimpeachable and authoritative and which I have mentioned above in the earlier part of this judgment make it abundantly clear that on the sudden death of Raja Munawwar Ali Khan in 1847 Rani Imambandi ruled over the Nanpara estate for two years peacefully on behalf of the infant Raja Jang Bahadur and then Rani Umrao Begam the junior Rani of Munawwar Ali Khan challenged her right and authority to rule the estate and with the help of the Queen-mother of the Nawab of Oudh carried on a bloody warfare for five years against Rani Imambandi and destroyed most of the villages of the Nanpara estate, and this sanguinary warfare was one of the principal causes that subsequently led to the annexation of Oudh by the British.

It is thus clear from irrefragable documentary evidence "that the quarrels between the members of the family" deposed to by Hussain Quli Khan in Ex. 91 at page 337 merely referred to the quarrels between Rani Imambandi and her co-widow Rani Umrao Begam, and if Rani Umrao

Begam set up Abdul Ali as a rival claimant to the Nanpara estate (as deposed to by her brother in Ex. 91 at page 339) he was but a pawn in the bloody warfare which Rani Umrao Begam was waging against Rani Imambandi and the rightful heir to the Nanpara estate, Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. Well might Abdul Ali have exclaimed in the words of Prince Arthur, "I am not worth this coil that's made of me." In case of clear historical records admitted by the plaintiffs themselves it is idle for them to contend that the phrase "quarrels between the members of the family" makes Abdul Ali out to be a member of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan's family. Here I may mention another ingenious argument advanced by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. It was contended by him that while each piece of documentary evidence discussed above might not amount to much, the cumulative effect of all this mass of documentary evidence would serve to establish the pedigree which the plaintiffs sought to prove in these suits, and he cited a ruling of a Bench of this Court. In Durga v. Lal Bahadur (3) to which I was a party, in support of this contention of his. Before the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs can apply that ruling to the facts of these suits he must show that each of the documents relied upon by the plaintiffs does in fact help to prove to some extent, however small, the contention of the plaintiffs concerning the pedigree of their family. If not a single document of the plaintiffs discussed above serves to advance the plaintiffs' contention as to the pedigree attached to the plaint of their suits in the slightest degree then it cannot very well be argued that the cumulative effect of all these documents proves the pedigree upon which the plaintiffs base their claim; for as wittily remarked by the learned Counsel for Utraula, zero plus zero plus zero, carried on to infinity, would still amount to zero. Since each of the items of documentary evidence relied upon by the plaintiffs has got in my opinion no evidentiary value for the purpose of proving the pedigree filed with the plaints the cumulative effect of all this evidence, useless for the purpose for which it was sought to be utilized, would still be nil.

I next come to discuss another group of documents connected with the claim made by Sarmaast for sub-settlement in respect of village Samanpur. These are Exs. 76, page 318, 81 page 320, 82 page 323, 83 page 326, 84 page 328; 85 page 33) and 80 page 334 Ex. 76 page 18 is a copy of an abstract from the register of cases relating to village Anawan Pokhar showing that Sarmast Khan had made a claim for sub-settlement in respect of village Samanpur for 1268 Fasli (i. e. 1862 A. D.) Ex. 90 is a copy of a copy prepared at the settlement and attached to file No. 17 containing the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich dated 18th September, 1861, giving the lease of village Samanpur for three years to Ram Din Kurmi on a jama of Rs. 400, and containing the statement of Raja Jang Bahadur that Sarmast Khan was at one time in the Raja's service and that during the days of disturbance in Nanpara, Sarmast Khan had sided with the junior Rani and so the Raja was not willing to give him anything. Exhibit 81 page 320 is a copy of the memorandum of appeal filed by Sarmast Khan in the Court of the Commissioner of Bahraich dated 9th October, 1861 against the decision of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich dated 18th September, 1861, in which Sarmast Khan alleged himself to be a collateral (biradar ek jaddi) of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. Exhibit 83 is a rubkar of the Commissioner's Court dated 14th October, 1861, calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich to make enquiries upon three points raised in Sarmast Khan's memorandum of appeal concerning the cutting of the jungle in the village, the lease of the village from 1266 Fasli to 1268 Fasli and the alleged dispossession of the appellant for eight years. Exhibit 84 is a copy of a copy of the Deputy Commissioner's report dated 23rd October, 1861, giving his finding on the three issues remitted to him on remand and stating that the appellant Sarmast Khan was a connexion of the Raja. Exhibit 82 is the vernacular translation of the appellate order of the Commissioner dated 30th October, 1861, dismissing the appeal of Sarmast Khan and upholding the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich. Exhibit 85 is a copy of an appeal dated 19th November, 1861, to His Honour the Chief Commissioner of Oudh against the order of the Commissioner of Bahraich Division dismissing the appeal of Sarmast. In this appeal Sarmast Khan again repeats his assertion that he is a biradar ek jaddi of the Raja and descended from the same common ancestor. The plaintiffs have not filed a copy of the order of His Honour the Chief Commissioner of Oudh upon this memorandum of appeal of Sarmast Khan to him.

Mr. Wasim the learned Counsel for the defendant Raja of Nanpara objected to Ex. 81 being admitted in evidence as it did not bear the signature or thumb-mark or any other sign or mark made by Sarmast Khan. I have carefully examined the original of Ex. 81 and I find that it bears a genuine stamp of Re. 1 prevalent in those days, as also the endorsement of the stamp-vendor Dubar Lal Khazanchi of Sadar Bahraich which is to the effect that Ghure son of Samman Khan (and brother of the appellant Sarmast Khan) purchased the stamp from the Khazanchi Dubar Lal on 23rd September, 1861. Moreover on the back of this memorandum of appeal (copy of which is Ex. 81) there is a long order of the Commissioner Mr. D. Simson in his own handwriting showing that this appeal was presented by Sarmast Khan, and that it raised certain points germane to the decision of the appeal which called for a further report from the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich, and accordingly a vernacular rubkar, copy of which is Ex. 83, along with a copy of the English order of the Commissioner was sent to the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich for a report on the points raised. There cannot, therefore, be any doubt that Ex. 81 is a copy of a genuine document and that it was in fact the petition of appeal of Sarmast Khan. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has invited my attention to the Shrewsbury Peerage case (2) decided by the House of Lords, which has been quoted above where a similar question as to the admissibility of a certain document in evidence was raised. Following the ratio decidendi in that case, I must admit in evidence Ex. 81 but the statement of Sarmast Khan in his memorandum of appeal Ex. 81, that he is a collateral and ek jaddi brother of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan is not admissible in evidence because it has not been brought home to Sarmast Khan that it was he and he alone who made that statement. Exhibit 81 does not bear the thumb mark or signature of Sarmast Khan. It only bears the signature of the petition writer. In this connexion the learned Counsel for defendant, No. 1 the Raja of Nanpara invited my attention to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jagatpal Singh v. Jageshar Bakhsh Singh (4) and he quoted therefrom the following pertinent passage which is fully applicable to the question for consideration in connexion with the admissibility of Ex. 81:

(4) (1903) 25 A. 143; 30 I. A. 27; 7 C. W. N. 209; 8 Sar. 367.

"The other document stands in a different position. Its alleged author, Rai Gurdatt Singh, had died before the trial. But the exhibit in question is merely a genealogical table filed on behalf of Gurdatt in a claim made by him for certain villages. The object of Gurdatt in those proceedings was to make himself out to be of the eldest branch of his family and this admittedly was untrue. But the fatal objection to the admissibility of the document is that it is in no way brought home to Gurdatt except as being an exhibit binding on him for the purposes of that suit. His relation to the document is, therefore, something entirely different from the personal knowledge and belief which must be found or presumed in any statement of a deceased person which is admissible in evidence. For aught that appears the genealogical table in question might never have been seen or heard of by Gurdatt personally but have been entirely the work of his Pleader."

On the same analogy and on the same reasoning the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1 has argued that this Ex. 81 may, for aught he knows to the contrary, be merely the statement of the petitioner purporting to make Sarmast Khan out to be a collateral of Raja Jang Bahadur and that it is nowhere made clear that the statement in Ex. 81 was the statement of Sarmast Khan himself, and, that being the case, I must support the contention of the learned Counsel for the Raja of Nanpara and hold that the statement in Ex. 81 to the effect that Sarmast Khan is a collateral (biradar ek juddi) of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan is not admissible in evidence because it has not been brought home to Sarmast Khan himself. Another contention of the learned Counsel for the Raja of Nanpara was that this statement of Sarmast Khan that he was a collateral of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan was a most interested statement made by him post litem motam, and, therefore, it is not admissible in evidence under s. 32, cl. (5), Evidence Act. Obviously Sarmast Khan in his petition of appeal (Ex. 81) asserted his relationship with Raja Jang Bahadur Khan as furnishing a ground for the Commissioner of Bahraich reversing the decision of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich and giving him (Sarmast) the lease of village Samanpur. In other words, when the statement as to the existence of relationship was asserted by Sarmast Khan, the question in dispute had been raised, and as such the statement contained in Ex. 81 relating to the alleged relationship of Sarmast Khan with Raja Jang Bahadur Khan is inadmissible in evidence. At best it is a most interested statement of Sarmast Khan even if it be admitted in evidence and plaintiffs, some of whom are the descendants of Sarmast Khan, cannot take advantage of this interested statement of their ancestor. Once this statement of Sarmast Khan that he is a collateral of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan is held to be inadmissible evidence and not relevant, the other statements in Ex. 81 are of no use to the plaintiffs so far as proof of the pedigree attached to the plaint is concerned. Exhibit 81, therefore, in my opinion does not help the plaintiffs in proving the correctness of their pedigree attached to the plaints in these two suits, nor in establishing their connexion with the talukdars of Nanpara.

Exhibit 84 is a copy of the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich giving his findings on the issues remanded to him by the Commissioner of Bahraich. It certainly contains a statement that Sarmast is a connexion of the Raja, and it is contended on behalf of the defendant Raja of Nanpara that this statement in the remand finding of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich is not admissible in evidence because it is only a remark by way of obiter dictum and not a finding on any of the issues framed by the Commissioner of Bahraich and in respect of which an enquiry had to be made by the Deputy Commissioner; and moreover this remark of the Deputy Commissioner was not given effect to in the order passed by the Commissioner of Bahraich on the appeal of Sarmast Khan. On the other hand the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs argued that this statement of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich must have been based upon evidence adduced by the appellant Sarmast Khan before that officer. The file of this case has unfortunately been weeded out, so it is not permissible for the plaintiffs to speculate as to what evidence, if any, Sarmast Khan produced as to his alleged relationship with Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. The issues framed by the Commissioner of Bahraich in his order remanding the case for further enquiry to the Deputy Commissioner, as can be seen from a perusal of Ex. 83, did not raise the question of Sarmast Khan's relationship with Raja Jang Bahadur Khan although such an issue on the question of relationship might very well have been raised by the Commissioner upon the grounds taken by Sarmast

Khan is his memorandum of appeal (Ex. 81).

The fact that it was not so raised seems to me to raise the presumption that the Commissioner did not think this question of relationship to be vital or necessary for the determination of the appeal and he struck three issues on the points which he thought had a special bearing on the decision of the appeal. The documentary evidence filed by parties does not show that Raja Jang Bahadur either admitted or denied the contention of Sarmast Khan raised in his appeal that he was a collateral of his. It is significant to note that before the Deputy Commissioner (as would appear from Ex. 90) there was no contention raised by Sarmast Khan that he was a relation of Raja Jang Bahadur, and all that Raja Jang Bahadur himself admitted before the Deputy Commissioner was that Sarmast Khan was at one time his servant and that in the fight between Rani Inambandi and Rani Umrao Begam, Sarmast Khan sided with the junior Rani Umrao Begam and that, therefore, Sarmast Khan was not entitled to be shown any consideration at the hand of the Raja. It may be that as Abdul Ali was, according to the evidence of Husain Quli Khan (Ex. 91, page 339 l. 31), set up as a rival to Raja Jang Bahadur, so Abdul Ali's first cousin Sarmast Khan might be expected naturally to work for Rani Umrao Begam, but that fact would not make either Abdul Ali or his cousin Sarmast Khan relations of Raja Jang Bahadur. Sarmast Khan in his appeal to the Commissioner (Ex. 81) denied having sided with the junior Rani. He stated categorically in Ex. 81: "I was not on the side of the junior Rani."

This false denial merely shows what an utterly unreliable person Sarmast Khan was. He made statements in his memorandum of appeal to suit his convenience and to win his case. This statement of Sarmast Khan is not only proved to be false from the statement of Raja Jang Bahadur to the contrary contained in Ex. 90, but it is also clearly proved to be false out of his own mouth by the report of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich (Ex. 84), in which the Deputy Commissioner writes as follows:

"It is moreover clearly proved and admitted by himself (Sarmast) that he (Sarmast Khan) was opposed to and did all in his power to prevent the present Raja (Raja Jang Bahadur Khan) from obtaining his property by fighting on the side of the Choti Rani."

I have mentioned this fact here only to point out that, in the absence of any evidence going to show upon what data the Deputy Commissioner was led to say that Sarmast Khan was a connexion of Raja Jang Bahadur, it would be quite unsafe, not to say illegal, for this Court to base any conclusion upon what appears to be a mere obiter dictum of the Deputy Commissioner that Sarmast Khan was a connexion of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. The interested statement of Sarmast Khan that he was a relation of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan in face of the proved fact that one lying statement of his in the same memorandum of appeal has been nailed to the counter, cannot be utilized for the purpose of adding weight to the casual and apparently irrelevant remark of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich that Sarmast Khan was a relation of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. The very context in which this remark appears in the report shows how inapposite and uncalled for it was. The Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich in his report Ex. 84 wrote as follows:

"He (Sarmast Khan) is a connexion of the Raja and the village has been leased to Ram Din Kurmi."

The fact of Sarmast Khan being a relation of Raja Jang Bahadur has no causal connexion with the leasing of village Samanpur to Ram Din Kurmi. Exhibit 81 is a copy of a copy and as such inadmissible in evidence. The original of the copy from which Ex. 84 itself has been copied has been destroyed and so there is no guarantee that the copy in the Commissioner's appeal file No. 34 of 1861 is a correct copy of the original. I have after hearing Counsel of both parties admitted in evidence the copy of the Deputy Commissioner's order filed in the Commissioner's Appeal No. 34 of 1861. It may be that the word "not" has been omitted from the copy of the Deputy Commissioner's order in the Commissioner's appeal file No. 84 of 1861. The insertion of the word "not" would make the whole sentence in the Deputy Commissioner's report more intelligible and connect in a natural manner the two parts of the sentence. The sentence would then run:

"He is not a connexion of the Raja and the village has been leased to Ram Din Kurmi."

The fact that Sarmast Khan was not a relation of the Raja would naturally explain and make intelligible why the village had been leased to Ram Din Kurmi. Be that as it may, I am not prepared to attach any weight to the statement concerning the existence of relationship between Sarmast

Khan and Raja Jang Bahadur Khan to be found in Ex. 84 which is a copy of a copy. The original order of the Deputy Commissioner is not before me which alone would justify the contention of the plaintiffs that the Deputy Commissioner stated that Sarmast Khan was a connexion of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. Exhibit 84, which is a copy of a copy, and the copy in the Commissioner's file from which Ex. 84 has been taken, are both liable to have mistakes made therein, and moreover this statement of the Deputy Commissioner is a mere casual remark and not a judicial finding on any issue after hearing the evidence of both parties, and there is the further consideration that no effect was given to this casual remark of the Deputy Commissioner by the Commissioner of Bahraich in deciding the appeal of Sarmast Khan.

It has been further argued by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that this statement of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich that Sarmast Khan was a relation of Raja Jang Bahadur was confirmed by the Commissioner in his appellate order of 30th October 1861. This contention of the learned Counsel is I am afraid based upon a misconception founded upon the contents of the vernacular rubkar Ex. 82. I have examined the original file No. 34 of 1861 of the Commissioner's Court very carefully and I find that the Commissioner of Bahraich Mr. D. Simson wrote at the foot of a copy of the Deputy Commissioner's report a very brief order consisting of a line and half to the effect that everything was now made clear and the appeal of Sarmast Khan was dismissed. This all too brief judgment or order of the Commissioner Mr. D. Simson dismissing the appeal of Sarmast Khan has been amplified by the reader or Superintendent of the Commissioner's Court into the vernacular order (Ex. 82) embodying not only a translation of three issues framed by the Commissioner, but also giving an abstract of the Deputy Commissioner's report on those issues and paraphrasing in the vernacular the brief order of the Commissioner dismissing the appeal. It is in the abstract of the Deputy Commissioner's report as given in this vernacular rubkar (Ex. 82) that we find it stated "that the applicant (Sarmast Khan) is a relation of the talukdar."

This is obviously not a finding of the Commissioner but merely a reproduction in Urdu in the language of the clerk of the Commissioner's Court of the substance of the Deputy Commissioner's report to the Commissioner called for on the issues remanded to him for enquiry. Mr. Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has argued at great length on the binding character of this rubkar Ex. 82 which bears the signature in English of the Commissioner, the entire order being however in Urdu. No one can challenge the validity genuineness of this rubkar (Ex. 82), but all the same plaintiffs cannot argue in face of the Commissioner's own brief order dismissing the appeal which says absolutely nothing about Sarmast Khan being a relation of Raja Jang Bahadur that the statement in Urdu in this rubkar to the effect "that the applicant (Sarmast Khan) is a relation of the talukdar" binds the defendants to the present suits and proves that plaintiffs are collaterals of the late Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. This is not a matter of law and of rulings. It is a pure question of fact. Mr. D. Simson the Commissioner of Bahraich did not, in fact in his order dated 30th October 1861 dismissing the appeal of Sarmast Khan, give any finding to the effect that Sarmast Khan was a relation or collateral of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. I therefore do not think it necessary to discuss the various rulings cited by learned Counsel of both parties in support of their respective contentions. For the reasons given above Ex. 82 is also of no use to the plaintiffs.

Exhibit 85, Sarmast Khan's appeal to His Honour the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, contains statements about his alleged relationship to Raja Jang Bahadur Khan which must be rejected as inadmissible in evidence for the same reasons as those given by me above in disposing of similar statements of relationship contained in this memorandum of appeal to the Commissioner, Ex. 81. The learned Counsel for the defendant Raja of Nanpara objected to Ex. 85 being even admitted in evidence on the ground that it did not bear the signature or thumb-mark or mark of Sarmast Khan. In view of the decision in the Shrewsbury Peerage case (2) quoted above I cannot accept this contention of the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1 and must admit in evidence a document which is produced from the Government Secretariat, and which is obviously the genuine petition of appeal of Sarmast Khan. I cannot however admit as relevant and admissible in evidence the statements made by Sarmast Khan in his own interest about his alleged relationship with Raja Jang Bahadur Khan for the reasons which I have given above in discussing similar statements made by him in his memorandum of appeal, Ex 81.

Thus the entire group of documents connected with Sarmast Khan's fight with Raja Jang Bahadur Khan for securing the lease of Samanpur does not advance the plaintiff's case or help them to prove the pedigree attached to the plaint. It is worth noting that Sarmast Khan, by alleging that he was a collateral of Raja Jang Bahadur merely wanted the lease of one village Samanpur. His descendants, the present plaintiffs, by alleging themselves to be collaterals of the late Talukdar of Nanpara Raja Jang Bahadur's son, wish to wrench the entire taluka of Nanpara from the present Talukdar of Nanpara. (The learned Judge here discussed extracts from various revenue papers proving the existence of various members of the family and the lands and groves held by them, and proceeded): I next come to Ex. 25, page 75, which is a copy of a deposition dated 14th and 15th June 1911 of one Bala Sher Khan recorded by Mr. Kunj Behari Seth, Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow in Suit No. 62-3 of 1908. The learned Counsel for the defendants object to the admission of this document on the ground that no evidence had been produced by the plaintiffs to prove that Bala Sher Khan had given that evidence in 1911 in the interpleader suit. Exhibit 87, page 333, is an abstract from the register of deaths of village Narsingh Dih, Police Station Bahraich, for the year 1925 and it shows that Bala Sher Khan son of Kallu Khan died in this village Narsingh Dih on 11th July 1925. I therefore hold under s. 32, Evidence Act, that this deposition of Bala Sher Khan (Ex. 23) is admissible in evidence.

(The learned Judge again referred to evidence and proceeded as follows):

In this connexion I may also discuss another contention made by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, Mr. Kunj Behari Seth, who tried the interpleader suit, No 62-3 of 1908, was really incompetent to decide that case because the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich had no authority to file such an interpleader suit under the old Civil Procedure Code, and the old Court of Wards Act.

His contention was that under s. 44 of the old Court of Wards Act (No. 3 of 1899) the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich was not authorized to file any interpleader suit. He further contended that the Court of Wards of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh was not "a person" within the meaning of the term as defined by the General Clauses Act either imperial or local. In my opinion this contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, while it displays great ingenuity and research work on the part of the learned Counsel, is not really sound. Section 470 of the old Civil Procedure Code, does authorize a person whose only interest in the property in suit is that of a mere stakeholder, and who is ready to render it to the rightful owner to bring an interpleader suit to enable the Civil Courts to decide upon the rights of rival claimants to the same property. It is clear that the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich was a stakeholder of the Nanpara Estate at the time when he filed his plaint in the Court of Mr. Kunj Behari Seth, Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, within the terms of s. 470 of the old Civil Procedure Code, Act, XIV of 1882. The plaintiffs themselves in para. 13 of their plaint of Suit No. 11 of 1928 have stated that the Court of Wards was in possession of the Nanpara Estate as a trustee for the rightful owner and this position, that the Court of Wards was a stakeholder for the rightful owner, was admitted before me by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs at the time when oral pleadings of both parties were recorded. In my opinion the word "person" under s. 470 of the old Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, is wide enough to cover a corporate body like the Court of Wards of this Province.

The definition of "person" as given in the General Clauses Act, Imperial Act X of 1897, and United Provinces Act I of 1904, includes a company or association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not. The Board of Revenue of the United Provinces in the Court of Wards Department was thus a juristic person within the meaning of the word "person" as defined in the General Clauses Act; and this juristic person was holding the property of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan as a stakeholder, and as such it could file under s. 470 of the old Civil Procedure Code an interpleader suit, and it could sue and be sued as such. It is obvious that if the Court of Wards took wrongful possession of another person's property under pretext of acting under s. 41 of Act III of 1899, a person aggrieved could sue the Court of Wards for recovery of his property. It is true that s. 48 of the present Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912) gives the Court of Wards a statutory capacity as a person to sue under s. 88 of the present Civil Procedure Code, but the mere fact that no such statutory capacity to sue or to be sued was conferred upon the Court of Wards by the old Court of Wards Act III of 1899, does not in any way oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to take proceedings upon a plaint filed by a person holding as a stakeholder under the provisions of s. 470 of the old Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882. I, therefore, overrule this contention of the plaintiffs that the proceedings in the interpleader suit taken by the learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow were ultra vires and incompetent. The argument of the learned Counsel on this point, though very ingenious, is not really sound. And here, while I am discussing the general contention raised by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that the proceedings in the interpleader suit were incompetent. I may also mention another general contention advanced by the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1 that all the depositions in the interpleader suit filed in the present suits, whether on behalf of the plaintiffs or on behalf of the defendants, are really inadmissible in evidence so far as they touch the question of the relationship of the plaintiffs of the present suits to the Raja of Nanpara; because all those statements were made post litem motam and therefore under cl. 5, s. 32, Evidence Act, those statements relating to the existence of relationship by blood are inadmissible in evidence as having been made after the question in dispute was raised.

It has been urged by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs in reply to this contention of the learned Counsel for the Raja of Nanpara that the question in dispute raised in the interpleader suit was something different from the question in dispute raised in the present suits so far as the claim of Abdul Hamid was concerned. The point for determination in the interpleader suit, so far as the claim of Abdul Hamid was concerned, only related to his being the son of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan by his alleged lawfully married wife Musammata Ramzano. The question in dispute in the present suits is as to the alleged relationship of the plaintiffs as collaterals of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. In my opinion the contention raised by Mr. Wasim, the learned Counsel for the defendant Raja of Nanpara, is correct, and that all statements occurring in the deposition made by witnesses in the interpleader suit relating to the existence of relationship filed by both parties to the present suits must be ruled out as inadmissible under cl. 5, s. 32, Evidence Act. As pointed out in Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 13, page 468:

"To obviate bias the declarations are required to have been made ante litem motam which means not merely before the commencement of legal proceedings, but before even the existence of any actual controversy, concerning the subject-matter of the declarations. So strictly has this requirement been enforced that the fact that such a dispute was unknown to the declarant or was fraudulently begun with a view to shut out his declarations has been held immaterial. . . . Declarations made in the obvious interest of the declarant will, generally speaking, be rejected."

On the same page the learned author also states:

"Statements by deceased persons as to private rights are not admissible, since such rights are less likely to be commonly known, and more likely to be misrepresented by interested persons."

These observations apply with full force to the particular facts of the present case. The plaintiffs and their fathers, particularly Abdul Aziz, Amjad Ali, Mohammad Ali Khan and Ahmad Ali Khan, were all keen on fighting out their alleged right to the taluka of Nanpara from the time of the death of the late talukdar Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan in 1807. The pedigree, Ex. W-12, produced in the interpleader suit was the result of this desire on the part of Abdul Aziz Khan and others, to get their claims to the Nanpara Estate recognized in a law Court. Some of the ancestors of the present plaintiffs even consulted an eminent lawyer of Lucknow, Mr. Saniullah Beg, as to their prospects in winning the Nanpara taluka. They also approached Nawab Sarwarjang, the uncle of Rani Qamar Zamani Begam, the widow of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan and asked him to use his influence over his niece and get them a handsome allowance. That astute person Nawab Sarwarjang, on seeing the pedigree Ex. W-12 presented to him by Abdul Aziz, promptly took possession of it and never returned it to Abdul Aziz or Subbhan Ali or Ahmad Ali Khan who had brought it to show it to him, and when Abdul Aziz was giving evidence in the interpleader suit in support of the false claimant, Abdul Hamid, Nawab Sarwarjang produced this pedigree, Ex. W-12, before the learned Counsel engaged on behalf of his own niece Rani Qamar Zamani Begam and asked him to utilize this pedigree which was in direct conflict with the evidence given by Abdul Aziz in favour of Abdul Hamid, and thus smash the evidence of Abdul Aziz in cross-examination by means of this pedigree, Ex. W-12, which is the same as Ex. 1 and Ex. 15, in the present suits. All these facts clearly show that the plaintiffs or their parents or grand-parents really had, as early as 1908, a genuine intention of claiming the Nanpara Estate for themselves—an intention which has now been realized in 1928 by the plaintiffs filing these present suits Nos 11 and 12 of 1928. It cannot therefore be denied that the controversy in dispute in the present suit had arisen even when the interpleader suit was filed; and, that being the case, I hold that all the depositions relating to the relationship of the plaintiffs with the talukdar of Nanpara contained in the file of the interpleader suit are irrelevant and inadmissible in the present suits under s. 32, cl. 5, Evidence Act. They can, however, be utilized by the defendants when it suits them for the purpose of proving them as admissions against the plaintiffs under s. 21, Evidence Act.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has attached immense weight to the worth, value and genuineness of this pedigree, Ex. 1 (same as Ex. W-12 in the interpleader suits), as being the sheet anchor of the plaintiffs' claims in these two suits. Apart from the fact that the original of Ex. 1, namely Ex. W-12 of the interpleader suit, is full of mistakes, and it is not known even now when, where and by whom these mistakes were corrected, and, apart from the fact that the original of the pedigree Ex. 1 was disallowed by Abdul Aziz father of plaintiff No. 1, there is the cardinal consideration to be borne in mind as to how and from whom the unknown author of this pedigree (Ex. W-12 of the interpleader suit) came to acquire his knowledge of the various branches of this pedigree. The plaintiffs want the Court to believe, on the strength of the evidence of Syed Mazhar Hussain, P. W. No. 18, page 117, that this pedigree was dictated by Abdul Aziz father of plaintiff No. 1 to Mazhar Hussain although Abdul Aziz himself disowns all knowledge about it. Even if I were to believe that Abdul Aziz, in spite of his denial in the interpleader suit of the authorship of this pedigree, did get this pedigree (Ex. W-12 of the interpleader suit) prepared, that will not bring home to him the personal knowledge and belief that Jahan Khan had two sons Mohamad Khan and Mahmud Khan in view of the fact that Abdul Aziz had deposed in the interpleader suit (Ex. A-14, page 554, line 28) that Mahmud Khan was not the son of Jahan Khan and that Jahan Khan had only one son Mohamad Khan and that the latter had two sons Karam Khan and Mahabat Khan. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has tried to overcome this difficulty by saying that what Abdul Aziz Khan deposed to in the interpleader suit on this point was false and that he gave this false evidence to support the claim of Abdul Hamid, and that this pedigree Ex. W-12, the original of Exs 1 and 15 in these suits, was the correct pedigree except for a few mistakes in the talukdar's branch of the family which may be corrected with the help of unimpeachable historical records giving the true pedigree of the talukdars of Nanpara. This very contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs shows how utterly unreliable and worthless is this pedigree Ex. W-12, the original of Exs. 1 and 15 in these suits.

If Abdul Aziz was capable of giving false evidence in Court to support the false claim of Abdul Hamid and of deposing to a false pedigree in Court on oath, he was equally capable of getting a false pedigree manufactured with the help of Syed Mazhar Hussain in order to support his alleged claim to be a collateral of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. It is admitted by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that this pedigree Ex. W-12, the original of Exs. 1 and 15 in these suits was taken by Abdul Aziz, Amjad Ali and Sarfaraz Ali to Nawab Sarwarjang, the uncle of Rani Qamar Zamani Begam, and shown to him in support of their claim to the Nanpara Estate for maintenance, and that astute Nawab Sarwarjang kept this pedigree in his own possession and made use of it through Rani Qamar Zamani Begam's Counsel for the purpose of cross-examining Abdul Aziz, its suspected author. It is, therefore, not shown from what reliable source and in what manner and from what document, if any, Abdul Aziz was able to prepare Ex. W-12, the original of Exs 1 and 15 of these suits. Syed Mazhar Hussain P. W. No. 18, could throw no light on these crucial matters. From the sworn testimony of Abdul Aziz in the interpleader suit (Ex. A-14, page 544) all that I can gather is that he had in fact no real knowledge and belief as to the true pedigree of his family and that the steps, that he showed in the pedigree, which was evolved out of his own mind, marched to the measure of his own self-interest and were shaped after the ratified image of the claim that he advanced to the Nanpara Estate. If Abdul Aziz's statement (Ex. A-14) be believed to be true, the genealogical table in question, the original of Exs. 1 and 15 in these suits had never been seen nor heard of by him and might for aught I know have been the entire work of Mazhar Hussain or somebody else. That being so, the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jagatpal Singh v. Jageshar Bakhsh Singh (4), which I have already quoted above, becomes peculiarly appropriate to this pedigree, the original of Exs. 1 and 15 in these suits. In the words of their Lordships, Abdul Aziz's relation to the pedigree Ex. W-12 is something entirely different from the personal knowledge and belief which must be found or presumed in any statement of a deceased person which is admissible in evidence.

These remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council open out a train of thoughts which completely destroy the value of Ex. W-12, the original of Exs. 1 and 15 of these suits. Abdul Aziz never filed this pedigree Ex. W-12 in the interpleader suit. He denied all knowledge about it on oath; he impeached its correctness in various particulars. The plaintiffs themselves have disowned it where it is in conflict with the admitted pedigree of the talukdar's family. Nevertheless they wish to have it admitted in evidence as a pedigree prepared by a deceased member of the family. They have, however, failed to prove that it was either prepared by Abdul Aziz or that Abdul Aziz had that personal knowledge and belief which must be found or presumed in any statement of a deceased person which is admissible in evidence. Plaintiff Witness No. 18, Mazhar Hussain, who admits that he prepared the original of Exs. 1 and 15 of these suits, had admittedly no knowledge whatsoever of the pedigree of the plaintiffs' family or of that of the Talukdars of Nanpara and Abdul Aziz its alleged author, never owned the reputed child of his own creation. In fact Abdul Aziz swore on oath that he never gave this pedigree Ex. W-12 to Nawab Sarwarjang; that he did not know who wrote it and when shown the pedigree pointed out two mistakes in it and himself deposed to a pedigree directly at variance with the one on which the plaintiffs of these two suits have come to Court and based their claim.

A glance at the pedigree Ex. W-12 the original of Exs. 1 and 15 of these suits shows that the writer of this pedigree Syed Mazhar Hussain showed Raja Rasul Khan son of Jahan Khan Togh as the muris ala or common ancestor of the family. It is a matter of historical knowledge that Risaldar Rasul Khan never had the title of Raja conferred on him. His parentage is also clearly wrong for Jahan Khan was not the father of Rasul Khan but he was the son of Rasul Khan. Again Rasul Khan son of Jahan Khan is shown in this pedigree W-12 as having a son Raja Karam Khan; this is also obviously wrong. The word "karam" has been subsequently struck off by somebody and the word "jehan" inserted on top of it by some unknown person at some unknown date and in some unknown place. Raja Mohamad Khan is shown as the son of Jahan Khan in this pedigree Ex. W. 12. Raja Mohamad Khan and Mustafa Khan are shown as the sons of Jahan Khan. The title of Raja was never conferred upon Mohamad Khan and Mustafa Khan was not the brother of Mohamad Khan but was the grandson of Mohamad Khan as is clear from the pedigree (given in the Gazetteer and in the wajib-ul-arz of Nanpara) which is now accepted as the correct pedigree of the talukdar's family by both parties. The name of Raja Karam Khan who was the first descendant of Risaldar Rasul Khan to obtain the title of Raja is not even shown in the pedigree Ex. W-12. If Abdul Aziz its reputed author had any real knowledge of the pedigree of his family he would not have omitted the name of his important ancestor of his family who first secured for himself the title of Raja. The Urdu note at the foot of this pedigree Ex. 12 contains clear historical anachronisms. It is alleged in this note that the title of Raja was conferred upon Rasul Khan in the time of Nawab Shujaud Daulah Bahadur. It is a matter of historical record admitted by both parties that Risaldar Rasul Khan lived in the time of Shahjahan in the middle of the seventeenth century whereas Nawab Shujaud Daulah lived and flourished in Oadh a hundred years later. The place Elaj Bhandair said to be in this note in Kabul has not been identified by both parties or their learned Counsel. The expression 'qilabardari' used in this note is also another absurdity on the part of the writer of this note at the foot of Ex. W-12. The historical record shows that Rasul Khan was given the title of 'kiledar' holder of the fort of Bahraich. The expression "qilabardari" is meaningless. This note further shows that Rasul Khan constructed the fort at Bahraich. This interesting historical statement receives no corroboration from the authentic records produced by both parties. There is another note on the top of this pedigree to the effect that five villages were given to Bhaya Mahabat Khan in bhayayi rights namely Bilwa Baz Khan Kalpipara, Tahapur Bhopatpur and Samangor. This note is clearly made for the purpose of proving that Abdul Aziz was entitled to maintenance allowance as the descendant of the junior branch of the talukdar's family. There is no mention in the revenue papers or in other historical records of the alleged grant of bhayayi rights to anybody in this Nanpara Estate.

The village Kalpipara which is mentioned as having been given in bhayayi rights to Mahabat Khan was at that time a part of Gurjigani elaga which had not become part of the Nanpara Estate until the time of Raja Mudar Bux in 1807 long after the alleged existence of Mahabat Khan: see Ex. 6 wajib-ul-arz of Kalpipara page 19, Ex. 8, wajib-ul-arz of Nanpara page 27 the Bahraich Settlement Report page 39 and the Gazetteer of Bahraich page 134 Madar Bux was the grandson of Raja Karam Khan and Mahabat Khan according to the plaintiffs, was the contemporary of Raja Karam Khan. It is, therefore, clear that whoever made that note on this pedigree Ex. W-12 had absolutely no knowledge of historical facts. It is alleged by the plaintiffs that Bilwa Baz Khan and Samangaon were founded by the descendants of Mahabat Khan bearing the names of Baz Khan and Saman Khan. If these villages were founded by the grandsons of Mahabat Khan they could not possibly have been given to the grandfather in bhayayi rights; according to the plaintiffs themselves these villages were not even in existence at the time of Mahabat Khan, since Baz Khan and Saman Khan, who are said to have founded these villages, are, according to the plaintiffs' pedigree the grandsons of Mahabat Khan. Tahapur and Bhopatpur were two of the original five villages granted to Rasul Khan by Shahjahan, the Emperor of Delhi. It is not likely that these ancestral villages would have been given away to the alleged younger branch of the talukdar's family in bhayayi rights.

In this state of things the only conclusion that I can come to is to hold that Ex. W-12 the original of Exs. 1 and 15 in the present suits, is not proved to be the work of Abdul Aziz nor is Abdul Aziz proved to have that personal knowledge and belief in the truth of this pedigree which must be found or presumed in any statement of a deceased person which is admissible in evidence. I, therefore, reject as not proved the pedigrees Exs. 1 and 15 of these suits, the original of which is Ex. W-12 of the interpleader suit which was also rejected as unproved by the learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow in the interpleader suit of 1908.

I have thus far discussed all the documentary evidence adduced by the plaintiffs in support of their pedigree. All that they have succeeded in proving by this mass of documentary evidence is that they are the descendants of Mahabat Khan; but who was the father of Mahabat Khan and what connexion Mahabat Khan had with Risaldar Kasul Khan Togh Pathan, the admitted and proved ancestor of the Rajas of Nanpara, are matters which plaintiffs have failed to prove and, therefore, their contention that they are the collaterals of the late talukdar of Nanpara Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, remains unproved.

I will now turn to discuss the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to prove the pedigree set up by them and to show their connexion with the Talukdars of Nanpara. But before I do so I would like to give an illuminating picture of the manner in which these witnesses are generally secured so that one may be in a position to know how to appraise their evidence and to understand in a measure the inner workings of their minds and the springs of their conduct. In this connexion I cannot do better than quote a very apposite passage from the judgment of the learned Judges of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh who decided First Civil Appeal No. 152 of 191 (Ex. A 5 at pages 168 and 169) which is as follows:

"It is a peculiarity in the conduct of cases, relating to landed estates in Oudh that the prosecution of the claims is usually neither retained in the hands of the principal party nor deputed to a recognized legal adviser. The conduct of these important cases is almost invariably left in the hands of a person who is called in the vernacular "pairokar." It is difficult to translate the word into English or to explain exactly what the pariekar does or does not do. He ostensibly collects and advises on evidence, watches the progress of the case gives instructions to Counsel, and performs the functions which would be performed by a solicitor in England. But in many cases (and it is to be feared the majority), his actions are more questionable. He manufactures evidence. He bribes witnesses with the money for the conduct of the case that passes through his hands. He enters into negotiations with witnesses on the other side discusses with his own witnesses the evidence that they are going to give, frequently puts into their mouths what they are to say in examination-in-chief, and tutors them as to the answer to be given to meet possible questions in cross examination. In the present case the "pairokar" has undoubtedly been the real person responsible for the statements of the various claimants, and for the production of the evidence."

These remarks of the late Hon'ble Chief Justice of this Court apply with great force and with peculiar appropriateness to the all too smart pairokar Lalji who, along with his brother Babu Sheo Gopal, a Pleader of Bahraich, has supplied all the brains to the plaintiffs of the present suit to work up their case and to present it in a decent plausible light. The plaintiffs themselves and their witnesses by the evidence, which they have themselves given, fully bear out the truth of these observations of a most damaging character. (The learned Judge then discussed the oral evidence and continued): This is all the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs in proof of the pedigree set up by them. It completely fails to establish the contention of the plaintiff that they are related to the Talukdars of Nanpara inasmuch as their ancestor Badal Khan was the son of Mahabat Khan and the latter was the son of Mahmud Khan who was the younger son of Jahan Khan, the son of the common ancestor Rasul Khan. The documentary evidence adduced by the plaintiffs (Exs. 23 and 24) establishes the fact that Badal Khan was the son of Mahabat Khan but the two further essential links in the pedigree upon which the plaintiffs found their claim, namely that Mahabat Khan was the son of Mahmud Khan and the latter was the son of Jahan Khan, the son of Rasul Khan, have not been proved by any documentary evidence nor by oral evidence which is for the most part absolutely partisan and unreliable.

In connexion with this question of pedigree the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has invited my attention to the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Sabz Ali Khan v. Khair Muham- mad Khan (5), in which their Lordships make the following observation:

"It must be remembered that the persons in relation to whom this question arises are not people amongst whom there are accessible records of births and deaths, nor with whom these events are preserved in written family memorials. It is therefore necessary to depend upon oral tradition, and this requires close scrutiny, but their Lordships see no reason why in such circumstances this tradition should be regarded as weak and unsatisfactory merely because it may in one or two respects fail to satisfy the strict conditions that would be necessary for proving a pedigree where records and documents could be used."

I have discussed the oral evidence of the plaintiffs in these two suits at great length, and it seems to me that oral tradition "which alters when it alteration finds, or bends with the remover to remove" can hardly be dignified with the name of family tradition and certainly cannot in my opinion form the basis and foundation of a judicial pronouncement whereby property to the tune of five crores of rupees and more is to be taken away from two Rajas who are in bona fide and quiet enjoyment of the same and given to plaintiffs who claim it on such flimsy evidence as to their being the collaterals of the late Raja of Nanpara, Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan.

Their Lordships themselves say in this Sabz Ali Khan's case (5) that they "are much impressed with the importance of showing that claims of this character which disturb a bona fide purchases in the quiet possession of his property should not be based on untrustworthy evidence."

We in India know how readily pedigrees like horoscopes, are manufactured to suit the particular needs of the moment of the party which files them and sets up a claim on the strength of such pedigrees and horoscopes. No owner of property in India would be safe if upon mere flimsy oral testimony as to pedigree the title of such owner to his property could be challenged by any person or body of persons claiming to be the nearest agnate or agnates of the last male holder of the property in suit.

In the present suits so uncertain are the plaintiffs themselves as to the correctness and accuracy of the pedigree upon which they found their claim that they have left it to the Court to decide (as if it were a question of law and not a pure question of fact) as to which of them is the nearest agnate of the late Talukdar of Nanpara, Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. They have given an air of verisimilitude to the pedigree filed with their plaint by incorporating into it the true pedigree of the Raja of Nanpara's family and taking on to it the pedigree of their own family and thereby showing that they are the junior branch of the Raja's family. I may also point out that in these two suits we have got a written pedigree of the Raja of Nanpara and the pedigree is admitted by both parties to be correct; it is taken from unimpeachable historical records. This was not the case in the ruling in Sabz Ali Khan's case (5) mentioned above, and their Lordships of the Privy Council were obliged in that case of Sabz Ali Khan to decide the question as to the pedigree purely upon oral tradition and oral testimony in the absence of any written record. The observations of their Lordships therefore in that case cannot well be made to apply to a suit in which there is an admittedly correct written pedigree of the Talukdars of Nanpara, culled from historical records and accepted by both sides; and all that plaintiffs desire is to graft on to that pedigree the genealogical table of their own family and so make themselves out to be the junior or cadet branch of the Talukdars of Nanpara.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs also invited my attention to another ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Debi Prasad Chowdhry v. Radha Chowdhraim (6) in which it was held that evidence of witnesses who heard the names of ancestors recited by members of the plaintiff's family on ceremonial and other occasions was admissible in evidence in support of the pedigree upon which the plaintiff based his claim and that such evidence was not open to criticism on the ground that witnesses were relatives. In the course of their judgment in this case their Lordships said:

"They do not think that the relationship of one class of the witnesses is a consideration which should inspire more than the ordinary caution with which testimony is sifted where sympathy with one side is to be taken for granted."

In this case their Lordships were influenced by the weighty considerations advanced by the learned Subordinate Judge as to why a Hindu plaintiff should be believed when he stated that he had learnt the pedigree of his family by heart because the duty of performing shradh annually was imposed upon him by his religion and on that occasion he had to offer libations of water and rice-balls to the souls of his ancestors up to the seventh degree in ascent at the least, and thus had occasion to repeat and to remember the names of his ancestors. In the suits before me plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 16 are Sunni Muhammadans of the Hanafi sect and there is no similar religious duty imposed upon them by Islam to recite the names of their dead ancestors once a year during a particular fortnight. To anyone who has lived in this country and knows the ways and habits of Muhammadans, the childish attempt on the part of the plaintiffs to make the fatihas (or prayers for the repose of the dead said on Bakra Id and Giarhwin sharif) the occasion for reciting the pedigree of the family analogous to the Hindu shradh, only raises a smile on one's lip and shows to what lengths plaintiffs are prepared to go for the sake of proving their claim. I am therefore not prepared to hold that in the suits before me the fact that the witnesses of the plaintiffs prove the pedigree are plaintiffs themselves is "a consideration which should not inspire more than the ordinary caution with which testimony is sifted where sympathy with one side is taken for granted."

(6) 32 C. 84; 31 L. A. 160; 8 Sar. 708; 9 C. W. N. 161 (P. O.).

In the present suits the oral evidence as to the pedigree is to be viewed with the gravest suspicion not merely because the witnesses are plaintiffs themselves, or their partisans, but also because they have not one of them shown how and from what reliable and unimpeachable source they came to learn that Mohamad Khan, Talukdar of Nanpara, and Mahmud Khan were brothers and that Mahmud Khan was the father of Mahabat Khan. The statements of Abdul Aziz (plaintiff No. 1's father) and of Amjad Ali Khan (father of plaintiff No. 12) and of Ahmad Ali Khan plaintiff No. 3 on this point in the interpleader suit and in the mutation case, are in strange conflict with one another. Plaintiff No. 3 in these suits, Ahmad Ali Khan, has wisely refrained from coming into the witness-box to try to explain away these contradictions. Abdul Aziz and Amjad Ali are dead, but their evidence gives the lie direct to the pedigree now set up by the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs have therefore failed to satisfy me on these cardinal links in the pedigree attached to the plaint; and the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Debi Prasad's case (6) will not help them to supply this hiatus.

If the family traditions had been correctly preserved in the memory of the members of the plaintiffs' family, then there would not have been so many conflicting pedigrees deposed to by Abdul Aziz, Ahmad Ali, Amjad Ali and others. The plaintiffs have failed to prove the link which, they say, unites their family with that of the Raja of Nanpara and to quote the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh (7).

"It is the weakness of this link which is the weakness of that claim."

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs also relied upon another ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Doddawa v. Benneygawada (8) in which their Lordships make the following pronouncement:

"It will be always be a matter of great difficulty to prepare pedigrees in a country like India where there is no official register of births and deaths, where records of a family may be few and where it is essential to depend for information upon the uncertain testimony of family traditions; men's lives are swiftly forgotten and the memory of survivors often fails. It is therefore not a matter of surprise to find that pedigrees prepared in India and which may be accepted as honestly prepared are none the less not in actual agreement in every detail."

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs Mr. St. George Jackson, has strongly relied upon this observation of their Lordships to explain away the glaring discrepancies in the pedigree deposed to by the father of plaintiff No. 1 and of plaintiff No. 12 and by Ahmad Ali Khan plaintiff No. 3, in the interpleader suit and also in the pedigree Ex. W-12 which is the original of Exs. 1 and 15 of the present suit. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff has however overlooked one important clause in these observations of their Lordships.

Their Lordships had in their mind pedigrees "honestly prepared in India" They were considering the case of genuine pedigrees honestly prepared which yet differed as to minor details. They had in their mind the great difficulty of preparing an honest genuine pedigree in a country like India where there are no official registers of births and deaths and where records of a family are few and far between. These very conditions which make the preparation of an honest pedigree in India so difficult themselves facilitate the preparation of false pedigrees: for the perjurer cannot be confronted with entries in official registers of births and deaths, and in the absence of family records it is impossible to adduce proof in support of a mere negative. In the case of such a false pedigree the position of the forger and the perjurer is particularly impregnable. It is true that

"men's lives are swiftly forgotten and the memory of survivors often fails."

Their Lordships however never intended that their truthful and pregnant observation should be used as a means for putting a premium upon perjury and forgery. It was laid down by their Lordships in this ruling that a pedigree which had been subjected to investigation many years prior to the institution of the litigation in which it was questioned and which had been previously relied upon by competent authorities and which was supported by oral evidence might safely be accepted as correct. None of the conditions upon which their Lordships were able to hold that the pedigree in that case was proved exist in the present suits. The pedigree upon which the plaintiffs found their claim in the present suits was never subjected to investigation in any previous litigation nor was it relied upon by any competent authority. In fact Ex. W-12 of the interpleader suit which is the original of Exs. 1 and 15 of the present suits was rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow in the interpleader suit as not proved. So this ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council really does not help the plaintiffs in any way.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs also cited an old English ruling of 1806, Vowles v. Young (9), in which it was held that the law resorts to hearsay of relation upon the principle of interest in the person from whom a descent is to be made out, and it is not necessary that evidence of consanguinity should have the correctness required as to other facts. This may be a sound proposition of English Law but in a pedigree case in India it was laid down by the Calcutta High Court in Kedarnath Doss v. Protap Chunder Doss (10), that it was incumbent upon plaintiffs claiming as collateral heirs to show who the common ancestor was from whom they derived title; and the Madras High Court in M Jaganadham v. M. Venkata Subbha Rao (11), modified this ruling of the Calcutta High Court and held that although a person claiming as heir must show all the stages of relationship from a common ancestor, it was not the law that if the names of the common ancestors were not known it must be held that the relationship was not proved. It was held by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in 21 Ind Cas. 274 Bhabuti Singh v. Khetal Singh (12) that plaintiffs must prove their own title and legitimacy to the satisfaction of the Court before the defendants could be called upon to do so, and that plaintiffs were bound to prove not only that they were the reversioners of the last male holder but that they were the only nearest reversioners living at the time when succession opened. These principles must guide Courts in India in deciding claims based upon pedigrees set up by the plaintiffs and it is in the light of these principles that the plaintiffs' claim in the present suits has been envisaged.

As the plaintiffs have failed to prove the pedigrees relied upon by them it is unnecessary for me to discuss the evidence adduced by the defendants on the question of plaintiffs' pedigree. For the reasons given above I decide Issue No. 1 in Suits Nos. 11 and 12 against the plaintiffs and hold that the pedigree attached to both plaints of these suits is not proved and that the plaintiffs are not the collaterals or agnates of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan of Nanpara and of his sister Rani Kaniz Begam.

In view of my finding on Issue No. 1, Issue No. 2 in both suits must also be decided against the plaintiffs and I find that no plaintiff in both these suits is entitled to the talukdari property under the Oudh Estates Act or to the non-talukdari property under the alleged custom of male lineal primogeniture. Not only have plaintiffs failed to prove their pedigree attached to the plaint upon which they found their claim in both these suits but they have produced evidence which makes it very doubtful as to who amongst them is in the seniormost branch of the family. The depositions of Bala Sher Khan (Ex 23 page 75 and of Karam Sher Khan Ex. 24, page 84) make it clear that Zabardast Khan and Basalat Khan were the sons of Mahabat Khan by his first wife and Badal Khan and Musammât Sakru Begam were his children by his second wife. From this it would seem to follow that Subhan Khan plaintiff No. 12 would be in the seniormost branch and entitled to succeed in preference to Mohamad Azim Khan plaintiff No. 1. The deposition of Amjad Ali Khan (Ex. 25, page 98) which is inadmissible in evidence under s. 32, cl. 5, Evidence Act, as having been made post litem motam though great stress was laid upon it by the Counsel for the plaintiffs shows that Amjad Ali Khan belonged to the senior branch being a descendant of Zabardast Khan. If the original of Ex. 1 which is another inadmissible document for the same reason, be for the sake of argument accepted as correct, then Samman Khan's descendants Sardar Ali Khan and his two brothers who are not even plaintiffs in these suits would be in the seniormost branch. Thus plaintiffs themselves have really no knowledge about the senior or junior branches of their own family. Hast Khan's children have been proved to be in existence by the evidence of the defendants' witnesses and this statement receives corroboration from the statement of Amjad Ali Khan (in Ex. 25, page 107, line 20) that

This statement of Amjad Ali Khan who is father of Subhan Ali Khan plaintiff No. 12 is admissible in evidence against the plaintiffs as an admission under s. 21, Evidence Act. The statement in the pedigree that Hast Khan died childless is thus proved to be false. The same conclusion must be drawn from the statement of Karan Sher Khan (Ex. 24, page 85, line 5). He states that "Hast Khan's and Kadi Khan's aforesaid wives are dead." This statement is also admissible against the plaintiffs under s. 21, Evidence Act. Until, therefore, the plaintiffs prove beyond all reasonable doubt that Hast Khan was junior to Alast Khan they cannot succeed in their claim. This they have not done. They have taken the very short cut of ignoring the descendants of Hast Khan and of showing in their pedigree attached to the plaint that Hast Khan died childless. Upon this question of seniority there is no reliable data to enable the Court to come to any clear and decisive finding. The oral evidence of the plaintiffs on this point is quite worthless being obviously most partisan and based upon complete ignorance of events that happened generations ago. There is no material produced by the plaintiffs to test the evidence of their witnesses, and such documentary evidence as they have produced shatters my faith in the oral testimony of their witnesses. Before the rule or custom of male lineal primogeniture can be applied to the plaintiffs' claim the plaintiffs must show who exactly is the person entitled to the talukdari property under cl. 10, s. 22, Oudh Estates Act, and to the non-talukdari property under the custom of male lineal primogeniture.

On this question of seniority the plaintiffs have left everything in a flux ; the pedigree of the plaintiffs' family becomes in their hands a very flexible genealogical tree so much so that any branch of this tree may be made to be the senior branch. Such a pedigree is pure guesswork and nothing else. In the words of Lord Sumner who delivered the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mewa Singh v. Basant Sidgh (7) :

"It may do for those who pronounce the verdict of history, but an action of ejectment is a serious matter."

In another case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council 18 Ind. Cas. 13 Prathivadi Bhayankaram Govinda Charyulu v. Rangayya Appa Rao Bahadur (13) it was held that where a plaintiff claimed to recover possession of a village on the allegation that he was the nearest reversioner of the last male owner thereof and it was in evidence that a number of persons claimed to be the descendants from the same last male owner, his suit must be dismissed and the decree of the Madras High Court affirmed. Similarly it was held in 30 Ind. Cas. 220, Chandan Singh v. Bhabhuti Singh (14) that a person claiming as the nearest reversioner must establish that there was no intermediate heir with a better claim to succeed to the property of the deceased than he asserted and that he was bound to prove his descent and legitimacy as a necessary element for the establishing of his claim. On the strength of this ruling I must hold that no decree can be passed in favour of the plaintiffs when it is a matter of doubt as to whether plaintiff No. 1 or plaintiff No. 11 or plaintiff No. 12 is in the seniormost line of the plaintiffs' pedigree. In fact I find it impossible to say who upon this elastic and changeable pedigree set up by the plaintiffs is entitled to the property in suit ; as I find that the pedigree attached to the plaint is not proved, I must also decide Issue No. 3 against the plaintiffs and hold that no plaintiff is entitled either to the talukdari property, or non-talukdari property in suit.

Issues No. 3 (a) and 3 (b). Now I come to Issue No. 3 (a) and 3 (b) which are as follows :

3 (a). "Is there a custom of the exclusion of females from succession?"

3 (b). "Is there a custom of male lineal primogeniture?"

So far as as recorded history goes, the family history of the Talukdars of Nanpara affords no instance of the existence of such customs. The Nanpara estate is entered at No. 58 in list No. 2 and at No. 151 in list No. 1 of the lists prepared under s. 8, Oudh Estates Act. According to s. 10 of the said Act read with s. 8 the presumption is that the estate devolved on a single heir to be determined not necessarily according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture. The primogeniture sanad was granted to the Talukdar of Nanpara in 1860-61 and from that time the Nanpara Estate would descend according to the provisions of the sanad except in so far as the applicability of the sanad was expressly excluded by the Act. The sanad would not apply to non-talukdari property. If the rule of male lineal primogeniture had obtained in the Nanpara Estate from of old, then there would have been no occasion for the grant of a primogeniture sanad in 1860-61, and the Nanpara Estate would have been entered in list No 3 and not in list No. 2 of the lists prepared under s. 8, Oudh Estates Act. Moreover there is no entry as to the custom of male lineal primogeniture in the wajib-ul-arz of Nanpara or of other villages of the estate and there is also no mention of the custom of the exclusion of females in these wajib-ul-araz. In fact there is no documentary evidence of these alleged customs set up by the plaintiffs. (The learned Judge here discussed the evidence and came to the conclusion that there was no family custom of the exclusion of females from succession and no custom of male lineal primogeniture in this family has been proved by the plaintiffs).

(13) 18 Ind. Cas. 13; 13 M. L. T. 198; (1913) M. W. N. 191; 17 C. L. J. 295; 15 Bom. L. R. 463 (P. O.).

Issue No. 4. Issue No. 4 runs as follows :

The plaintiffs are not the legal heirs of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan under Muhammadan Law, and if they fail to prove the custom set up by them they can have no legal claim to any non-talukdari property. Schedule E attached to the plaint is the list of the property purchased by the Court of Wards in 1911. It includes property not descended from Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. The acquisition made by the Court of Wards on behalf of persons who, according to the plaintiffs, were mere trespassers cannot be claimed by them. This property in Sch. E was purchased by the Court of Wards for the benefit of Rani Kaniz Begam and Rani Sarfaraz Begam who were then holding the estate under the compromise of 1910 in the interpleader suit. They were acquired with the intention that they should descend like the rest of the Nanpara Estate according to the terms of the compromise. There can therefore, be no question of the plaintiffs succeeding to this property.

Plaintiffs can only if successful in their suits, have mesne profits for three years; they cannot have the income of the estate invested in purchasing zemindari property or given to Rani Kaniz Begam in cash. The plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed to the property in Schedule E as it is not the heritable asset of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. Plaintiffs in Suit No. 11 of 1928 do not set up in that case the plea that they are the heirs of Rani Kaniz Begam but they sue in Suit No 11 only as the heirs of the late Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan of Nanpara.

Then again it is not proved that Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan left any property besides what he had inherited from his father. The Nanpara taluka is entered in list No. 2 of the lists prepared under s. 8, Oudh Estates Act, so the rule of single heir succession would apply. The primogeniture sanad conferred on Raja Jang Bahadur Khan would not apply to non-talukdari property purchased since the date of the sanad. It would only apply to property conferred on the Raja by the sanad given by the Crown nor would s. 22, Act I of 1869, apply to this kind of property because s. 22 of the Act applies only to an "estate" as defined in the Act; and non-talukdari property is not an "estate" within the meaning of the definition given in s. 3, Act I of 1869. The rule of succession to non talukdari property is governed by s. 23 of the Act that is, by ordinary law (in this case by Muhammadan Law) modified by custom, if any proved in the case. Regarding non-talukdari property the presumption that it is governed by the rule of single heir succession in the case of list No 2 estate is rebuttable; but there is no presumption that the rule of male lineal primogeniture would govern such non-talukdari property in the case of list No. 2 estate and in the present suits no plaintiff has proved that he is entitled to the property under the rule of single heir succession.

The sanad being not applicable the ordinary law referred to in s. 23, Act I of 1869, in the present suits would mean the Hanafi Law of the Sunnis except in so far as it has been modified or affected by any custom set up and proved by the plaintiffs in these suits. Non-talukdari property would, therefore, in these suits go to the single heir recognized by Hanafi Law. This single heir under the Hanafi Law would be one of the sisters of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan or one of his widows. No plaintiff of these suits can possibly be the heir of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan under Muhammadan Law. The non-talukdari property, therefore, not being governed by the sanad or by the custom of male lineal primogeniture, must go to a single heir discovered in accordance with the rules of ordinary Muhammadan Law. The plaintiffs do not rely upon any custom of male lineal primogeniture as having obtained in the Nanpara estate prior to the annexation of Oudh by the British nor have they proved any such custom. Non talukdari property must, therefore, be presumed to descend to a single heir according to a family custom of single heir succession as the Nanpara Estate is entered in list No. 2. That single heir must be discovered according to the personal law of the party modified by custom, if any proved. According to Muhammadan Law plaintiffs are no heirs in the presence of sisters and widows in Suit No. 11 and in the presence of a sister and a husband in Suit No. 12. In this connexion I may also note that the nearest collateral in degree and not in line would succeed to the non-talukdari property; but it has not been shown in the present suit who that collateral is. I, therefore, find Issue No. 4 against the plaintiffs and hold that they are not entitled to the non-talukdari property.

Issue No. 5 (a). I next come to Issue No. 5 (a) which runs as follows:

"Is the adoption of Raja Saadat Ali Khan defendant No. 1 by Saltanat Begam invalid in law."

It is admitted by the plaintiffs that Rani Nasim Sahri widow of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan married Nawab Mohammad Sultan Khan on 9th May 1903, her first husband Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan having died on 30th December 1907. Her nikanama (Ex. A-1, page 1) is admitted. The fact of the re marriage of Rani Nasim Sahri on 9th May 1903 is also admitted. It is further admitted that Rani Saltanat Begam, the second widow of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, adopted defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan the son of Raja Mohamad Saddique Khan's sister Rani Sarfaraz Begam on 9th March 1909. Exhibit A-8 (page 558), which is the deed of adoption and which evidences the factum of adoption is admitted by the plaintiffs.

The questions raised by the plaintiffs in connexion with this fact of adoption of defendant No. 1 are stated in paras. 10-A, 10-B, 10-C and 10-D, of the plaint in Suit No. 11 of 1928. The first contention of the plaintiffs is that as certain fixed periods were prescribed under the will during which each Rani had to adopt a son and as Rani Saltanat Begam adopted defendant No. 1, Saadat Ali Khan before her time, that, therefore, the adoption of defendant No. 1 is void. The second contention of the plaintiffs is that the estate cannot be given to an adopted son because a gift to an adopted son is unknown to the Oudh Estates Act. The third contention of the plaintiffs is that unless the adopted mother Rani Saltanat Begam had been given a life-estate she could not legally adopt and her adopted son, defendant No. 1, could not legally take the estate under a deed of adoption. It was also argued that under Muhammadan Law in respect of non-talukdari property, there could be no bequest of a life-estate to Rani Nasim Sahri and so there could be no bequest to an adopted son to take after her. The fourth contention of the plaintiffs in this connexion is that the adopted son is not a persona designata and, therefore, the bequest in his favour failed for want of certainty.

In the oral pleadings advanced by Mr. A. P. Sen, Counsel for the plaintiffs, on 5th April 1929, it was further urged that Rani Saltanat Begam and her relatives exercised undue influence over the mind of Rani Nasim Sahri and so constrained her to marry the brother of Rani Saltanat Begam by making her (Rani Nasim Sahri) believe that she was not an ahlibiradri wife of Raja Mohamad Saddique Khan and could never get the estate of her husband and that it would be to her advantage to marry the brother of Rani Saltanat Begam. The plaintiffs gave no particulars of this alleged exercise of undue influence and coercion and they did not give any evidence on this point nor did they press for an issue being framed about it.

Another contention of the plaintiffs in respect of the adoption of defendant No. 1 is that as Rani Saltanat Begam remarried before she adopted defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan, therefore, she lost her right to adopt under the will.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, another learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, urged in his opening address that as defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan belonged to the Quli family he could not, as such be adopted under the terms of the will. This contention is not set forth in the plaint nor in the oral pleadings recorded by me at the commencement of the trial of these suits and Counsel is not, therefore, really justified in introducing this question in his opening address. I will however, discuss this point in the course of my judgment in connexion with this Issue No. 5 (a).

The will of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan is Ex. 50 (page 211 of the printed record). It was written out on 8th January 1906. It was really executed on 23rd January 1906. The valid execution and registration of this will, Ex. 53, are admitted by Counsel for defendant No. 1, the Raja of Nanpara but denied by Counsel for defendant No. 2 the Raja of Utraula, as well as by the heirs of Rami Kumar Zamani Begam original defendant No. 3. The will (Ex. 50, page 211) sets forth that Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan had four wives, namely Rani Kaniz Begam, Rani Saltanat Begam, Rani Dilafza and Rani Champa, that Rani Kaniz Begam was divorced by the Raja and after her divorce marriage with Rani Nasim Sahri took place and she was given the place of the first Rani. The will then proceeds to give a life-estate to Rani Nasim Sahri with power of alienation. On the death of Rani Nasim Sahri, and on the termination of her life-estate the full estate was to devolve on the son born to her, or, in default to a son born to Rani Saltanat Begam or in default to a son born to Rani Dilafza or in default to a son born to Rani Champa. In case no Rani had any issue then the first Rani, that is Rani Nasim Sahri, was permitted to adopt a son within two years of the Raja's death, the boy to be adopted must be a Sunni lad under ten years and must not belong to the Quli family or to the family of Rani Kaniz Begam. If Rani Nasim Sahri failed to adopt a son within the prescribed period then the second Rani, Rani Saltanat Begam was authorized within the space of two years to adopt subject to the conditions laid down concerning the boy to be adopted; if the second Rani also failed to adopt a son then the third Rani, Rani Dilafza, was empowered to adopt a son on similar conditions; and if she too failed to adopt a son then, the fourth Rani Champa, was given the power to adopt a son on the conditions given above. Till the termination of the life-estate of Rani Nasim Sahri the adopted son was to get an allowance of Rs. 50,000 a year. If Rani Nasim Sahri died in the life-time of the Raja then the second Rani, Rani Saltanat Begam, was to get possession of the estate for two years within which she was to adopt a son on the conditions laid down above and she was to remain in possession without power of transfer. Similarly, if the second Rani, Rani Saltanat Begam, died in life-time of the Raja or after his death without making an adoption then the third Rani, Rani Dilafza, was to get possession of the estate for two years within which she was to adopt a son on the conditions set fourth above and so again if the third Rani died in the life-time of the Raja or after his death without making an adoption, the fourth Rani, Rani Ohampa, was to be put in possession of the estate for two years within which she was to adopt a son on the conditions given above. No Rani was however to have the power of alienation. At the end of the will there is an important clause that if any of the Ranis contracted a second marriage after the death of the Raja then she would not be entitled to reap any benefit under any of the paragraphs of the will (kisi dafaiwasiyatnama haza sefayedat whaneki mustahiq na hogi.)

It seems to me clear upon a careful perusal of the terms of this will (Ex. 50, page 211), that if Rani Nasim Sahri died after the death of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan without making an adoption, then the second Rani, that is Rani Saltanat Begam, was at once to come into possession and become entitled to make an adoption within two years of her coming into possession subject to the conditions that the boy to be adopted must be a Sunni, under ten years of age, and must not belong to the Quli family or to the family of Rani Qamar Zamani Begam. The phrase "sharayatebala" does not, in my opinion, include, as contended for by the plaintiffs, also the condition as to the time during which the second Rani was to wait before she could make an adoption. If the contentions of the plaintiffs on this point were to be accepted as correct, then very anomalous results would flow from such an interpretation of the will. It was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maharani Indar Kuar v. Maharani Jaipal Kuar (15) that that construction of the will should be adopted.

(15) 15 O. 725; 15 I. A. 127; 5 Sar. 150; 12 Ind. Jur. 77 (F. C.).

"which bespeaks a reasonable and probable intention and rejecting that which would indicate an intention unreasonable, capricious and inconsistent with the testator's view as evidenced by his conduct and by the dispositions of his will which are not open to controversy."

According to the contention advanced by Mr. Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, Rani Saltanat Begam could not have and should not have taken in adoption Raja Saadat Ali Khan until after the expiry of two years after the death of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. As Rani Nasim Sahri remarried and relinquished her rights under the will of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, the estate would have been left without a successor or even a temporary owner for over a year if the interpretation contended for by the plaintiffs be accepted as correct. To avoid the anomaly it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that if it be considered that Rani Nasim Sahri remarried and her deed of relinquishment resulted in her losing her right to adopt a son to Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan then Rani Saltanat Begam may be deemed to have come into possession of the Raja's estate immediately when Rani Nasim Sahri's right to adopt ceased, but that Rani Saltanat Begam under the terms of her husband's will had to wait for the expiry of two years after the death of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan before she could validly adopt a son under the terms of her husband's will. This construction of the will entirely overlooks the other important clause in the will which lays down that each of the second, third and fourth Ranis immediately on her coming into possession of the estate, must within two years of her so coming into possession, adopt, and if she fails to do so, then she vacates her possession over the estate and loses her right to make an adoption. Therefore it follows logically from the terms of the will that the second Rani from the moment she came into possession of the estate had the right and power to make an adoption within two years from the date of her coming into possession of the estate; for her power to make an adoption only subsisted during the two years of possession she was allowed to have over the estate on the failure of Rani Nasim Sahri to make an adoption and on her forfeiture of her right to adopt and of her life-estate by reason of her remarriage and her deed of relinquishment.

The construction sought to be put upon the will of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs would necessarily give rise to a conflict between the provisions of cl. 5 and cl. 6 of the will, for upon this interpretation of the will as contended for by the plaintiffs, the 2nd, 3rd and 4th wife of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan, though succeeding under cl. 6 of the Raja's will and authorized to adopt only within the period of two years of her obtaining possession to the estate would have to wait till the period of time prescribed in cl. 5, for the previously mentioned wife had expired before she herself could make a valid adoption. It seems to me therefore that the phrase "sharayatebala" in cl. 6 of the will cannot possibly include the condition as to the time period laid down in cl. 5 of the will for each of the four Ranis. The only reference to the conditions laid down in cl. 4 of the will related to the kind of boy who was to be adopted, namely that he must be a Sunni lad, under 10 years of age, and must not belong to the Quli family or to the family of Rani Qamar Zamani Begam. To hold otherwise would lead to absurd results was never dreamt of by the testator. In delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Balrampur case Maharani Indar Kuar v. Maharani Jaipal Kuar (15) quoted above, Lord Macnaghten quoted with approval the following rule of construction laid down by Lord Cranworth in Abbatt v. Middleton (16):

"When by acting on one interpretation of the words used we are driven to the conclusion that the person using them is acting capriciously, without any intelligible motive, contrary to the ordinary mode in which men in general act in similar cases, then, if the language admits of two constructions, we may reasonably and properly adopt that which avoids these anomalies, even though the construction adopted is not the most grammatically accurate."

Applying this golden rule I hold that though it is possible to argue with some show of reason that the phrase "sharayatebala" in cl. 6 of the will also includes the condition as to the time limit during which each Rani had to adopt after the expiry of the time limit prescribed for the previous Rani as laid down in cls. 5 and 6, still the more reasonable and sane construction of the will seems to me to be to interpret this phrase "sharayatebala" in cl. 6 of the will to include only the conditions laid down in cl. 4 of the will relating to the qualifications of the boy who could be adopted by each of the Ranis. This construction appears to me to be in conformity with the intention of the (16) (1857) 7 H. L. C. 89.

testator, whereas the other construction pressed upon me by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs leads to very anomalous results which would in fact tend to defeat the real object of the testator.

Mr. Wasim the learned Counsel for the Raja of Nanpara defendant No. 1, invited my attention in this connexion to the judgment of the late Miera, J., in Original Suit No. 8 of 1926 (Ex. A-6 at page 420 etc.) and argued before me the question of the alleged invalidity of the adoption of Raja Saadat Ali Khan by Rani Saltanat Begam on the ground of its not having been made at the right time on lines similar to those which found favour with that learned Judge in that case. Independently of the reasoning embodied in this judgment (Ex. A-6) of my late-lamented colleague I too have come to the same conclusion. The fact of remarriage of Rani Nasim Sahri in May, 1908, having been admitted by the plaintiffs and the execution of the deed of relinquishment by Rani Nasim Sahri in favour of Rani Saltanat Begam (Ex. A-56, page 1(53) having been proved by D. W. No. 12, Mansur Ali Khan and the loss of the original of this deed of relinquishment having been proved to my satisfaction by D. W. No. 16, Ohhote Khan, it follows that according to the terms of cl 10 of the will Rani Nasim Sahri forfeited her right make an adoption as also to the life-estate she had under the will and consequently Rani Saltanat Begam came into possession of the estate at once and could validly exercise her rights to adopt a son to Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan immediately on her obtaining possession over the estate without waiting for the termination of the unexpired period of two years allowed to Rani Nasim Sahri to make the adoption had she remained unmarried and had she not renounced her rights under the will of the Raja. I therefore reject as unsound the contention of the plaintiffs that defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan, was not validly adopted because he was not adopted after the expiry of the period of two years allotted to Rani Nasim Sahri under the terms of her husband's will.

I will now take up the contention on behalf of the plaintiffs urged before me by Mr. Ali Mohammad the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that Raja Saadat Ali Khan belonged to the Quli family and as such he was not qualified under the terms of the will, Ex. 50, to be adopted as a son of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. It is true that Rani Sultan Shan Begam the wife of Raja Jang Bahadur Khan was a member of the Quli family being the daughter of Nawab Mehdi Quli Khan. She was the mother of Rani Sarfaraz Begam, Rani Kaniz Begam and Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan. Her Quli blood was thus extinguished in Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan the testator and his two sisters who were the children of a Togh Pathan talukdar Raja Jang Bahadur Khan. Rani Sarfaraz Begam the natural mother of Raja Saadat Ali Khan defendant No. 1 was married to a Syed talukdar Raja Syed Ashfaq Ali Khan; see evidence of D. W. No. 12, Mansur Ali Khan, page 290. Defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan is thus the natural son of a Syed talukdar and as such has nothing to do with the Quli family of Nawab Mehdi Quli Khan. His own natural mother was the daughter of a Togh Pathan talukdar. In fact Raja Saadat Ali Khan defendant No. 1 has got less Quli blood in him than even the testator Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan who detested the members of the Quli family.

As has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Skinner v. Orde (17), a child born in India must under ordinary circumstances be presumed to have his father's religion and his corresponding civil and social status. Defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan must therefore be admitted to have, on the strength of this ruling, the status of a Syed being born of a Syed father. This effectually disposes of the contention urged on behalf of the plaintiff that Raja Saadat Ali Khan was a member of the Quli family. Plaintiff's own witnesses Sarfaraz Ali Khan, P. W. No. 6, (page 28, line 26) and P. W. No. 7 Nawab Ali Khan (page 43, line 22) have admitted that a son of a daughter cannot be said to belong to his maternal grandfather's family. The Headmaster of the Arabic School in Mohalla Farangi Mahal in the City of Lucknow, Maulana Inayatullah as D. W. No. 21 has given on oath the meaning of the word khandan as denoting the descendants of one's paternal grandfather. I accept that meaning of the word "khandan" as correct. The Fatawa Alamgiri and the Hidaya support the evidence of this learned and respectable witness Maulana Inayatullah. His evidence has not been shaken in cross-examination and commands the assent of my intellect. The phrase "khandan Quli" used by Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan in his will is (17) 14 M. I. A. 309; 17 W. R. 77; 3 Sar. 34 (P. C.)

used by him in the ordinary sense in which a Muhammadan would use that expression and in construing a will, the race and religion of the testator have to be borne in mind. For the reasons given above I have no hesitation in holding that defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan, does not belong to the Quli family. In support of the view I am taking I may also quote the observations of the late learned Chief Judge of this Court in F. O. A. No. 162 of 1911 (Ex. A-5 at page 260) which runs as follows:

"I interpret the provisions of the will in question to mean that no descendant on the male side of Mehdi Quli Khan's family is to be adopted, and I find that Saadat Ali Khan is not a member of the family of Mehdi Quli Khan on the male side."

The same view was expressed by Sir Louis Stuart's colleague Kanhaiya Lal, J., in his judgment in that appeal. His finding on this point was that "the boy adopted did not belong to the family khandan of Mehdi Quli Khan no more than Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan did, for in India a boy is known by the family of his father or paternal grandfather rather than by the family in which his father or paternal grandfather was married."

For these reasons I reject the contention of the plaintiffs that the adoption of defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan, was invalid on the ground that he belonged to the family of Mehdi Quli Khan.

The next attack made on the validity of the adoption of Raja Saadat Ali Khan by Rani Saltanat Begam is founded on the contention that a sister's son cannot be validly adopted by a Muhammadan talukdar. It is true that according to Hindu Law a widow belonging to one of the twice born caste cannot validly adopt a boy whose mother her husband could not legally marry and therefore the son of a sister or a daughter cannot be adopted by such a Hindu. Adoption under Hindu Law is a religious act. On the other hand, adoption is unknown to Muhammadan Law and the history of Islam shows that definite attempts were made to make fosterage and adoption impossible. From the Muhammadan point of view the notion of adoption is abhorrent to Muhammadan ideals and Muhammadan sentiments see Wilson's Digest of Muhammadan Law, pages 156-157. Under s. 29, Act I of 1869, however the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar is allowed to make an adoption only in those cases in which it is permissible for a Hindu to do so. The Oudh Estates Act (Act I of 1869) is a purely secular enactment and has nothing to do with the peculiar notions of Hindus and Muhammadans on the subject of adoption. It merely lays down that in those cases in which a Hindu widow could adopt, a Muhammadan widow of a talukdar could also do so. It does not touch the question of the qualifications of the boy to be adopted. A childless Hindu widow may, with the authority of her husband, make an adoption and the same power is given to the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar by Act I of 1869. A Hindu widow who has a son born to her by her husband cannot legally adopt and similarly a Muhammadan widow if she has a son by her husband could also not adopt under Act I of 1869. Adoption, like marriage in Hindu Law, is in the nature of a religious sacrament, but no religious ceremony is necessary under Muhammadan Law for the purpose of making an adoption which is unknown to Islamic Law.

The only condition of Hindu Law which is imposed upon a widow of a Muhammadan talukdar by Act I of 1869 is that the latter must be a childless widow and authorized by her husband to make an adoption during her widowhood. The ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Raghuraj Chandra v. Subhadra Kunwar (18) relied upon by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs in his opening address seems to me to be not relevant or pertinent to the present discussion. It is obvious that the framers of Act I of 1869 under British guidance had no intention by introducing the highly technical and archaic notions of Hindu Law in the matter of an adoption by a widow of a Muhammadan talukdar who obviously would not know and could not be compelled to go through all the religious ceremonies enjoined by the Hindu Shastras upon the widow of a twice born Hindu taking in adoption a son to her late husband. It is true that under the Mitakshara a Hindu belonging to a twice born caste could not adopt a daughter's son or a sister's son but in the Punjab and in Madras and amongst Sudras throughout the whole of India a sister's son can be validly adopted by a Hindu: see Trevelyan's Hindu Law, pages 108, 141 etc. Under the provisions of s. 29, Act I of 1869 the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar can make an adoption provided she has no natural son born to her from her husband and provided she has not already adopted a son.

The view which I have taken in this matter has also found favour with Kanhaiya Lal, J., in his judgment in F. O. A. No.

(18) 108 Ind. Cas. 673; A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 87; 55 I. A. 139; 3 Luck 76; 5 O. W. N. 443; 26 A. L. J. 609; 30 Bom. L. R. 829; 32 C. W. N. 1009 (P. C.).

162 of 1911 dated 28th May 1914 (Ex. A-5 at page 234, line 40) in which that learned Judge delivered himself as follows:

"The adoption of Saadat Ali Khan is valid under the will and under s. 29, Oudh Estates Act. The circumstances under which an adoption can be made by Hindus or Muhammadans under that Act are identical, but the restrictions imposed on adoption by the personal law of the Hindus are not applicable to the Muhammadans."

I entirely concur in these observations, and it seems to me that the plaintiffs, who are Sunni Muhammadans like defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan, are not right in arguing that Rani Saltanat Begam, the widow of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan was bound by all the restrictions imposed by the personal law of the Hindus in the matter of making an adoption. Section 29, Act I of 1869, does not lay down any restrictions as to the qualifications of the boy to be adopted; and it seems to me that the plaintiffs have raised this frivolous plea merely to defeat the claim of defendant No. 1 founded on his adoption by Rani Saltanat Begam. I reject this contention of the plaintiffs as worthless and hold that Rani Saltanat Begam was legally entitled under Act I of 1869 to adopt the natural born son of Rani Sarfaraz Begam the sister of Raja Mohamad Siddique Khan.

The next attack made upon the validity of the adoption of Raja Saadat Ali Khan by Rani Saltanat Begam is based upon the allegations of the plaintiffs that Rani Saltanat Begam had remarried before she adopted Raja Saadat Ali Khan. This contention of the plaintiffs is embodied in Issues Nos. 5 (b) and 5 (c) of Suit No. 11 of 1928.

I therefore decide Issue Nos. 5 (b) and 5 (c) of Suit No. 11 against the plaintiffs and hold that Saltanat Begam had not remarried either Hamid Hussain Khan or Mohamad Kazim before she adopted defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan and that the adoption of defendant No. 1 by her was therefore valid.

The last ground upon which the validity of the adoption is impugned is even more pretentious and hollow than the one discussed above.

[The learned Judge referred to the evidence in the point and found as follows:—]

For the reasons given above this contention of the plaintiffs must also fail and indeed it was never seriously pressed before me.

Other objections to the validity of the adoption were also raised. It was asserted on behalf of the plaintiffs that non-talukdari property could not go to the adopted son unless the adopting mother was in possession of a life-estate. All the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, Mr. Sen, Mr. Ali Mohamad and Mr. Jackson, laid stress upon this contention of the plaintiffs. This contention is embodied in para. 10 (c) of the plaint where it was asserted that the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan prescribed "a course of devolution unknown to Act I of 1869" and was void under Muhammadan Law so far as the succession to the non-talukdari property by the adopted son was concerned.

This contention too is not well founded. Under Muhammadan Law pure and simple, adoption is unknown; but the right to adopt has been for secular reasons conferred upon the widow of a Muhammadan talukdar by Act I of 1869. Under cl. 5 of s. 22 unamended Act I of 1869 the adopted son succeeded in the absence of a son and of a daughter's son treated by a talukdar as his own son and under cl. 6 of that section of the Act a brother succeeded in the absence of an adopted son and under cl. 8 a son adopted by the widow succeeded. It has been strenuously argued before me that a widow, unless she had been conferred a life-estate and was in possession of the taluka, could not legally make a valid adoption. There is, in my opinion, authority in law for this proposition which has been propounded before me with great emphasis and at great length by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. Section 29, Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, confers the power of adoption upon every widow of a Muhammadan talukdar and it now here lays down that it is necessary for the widow to be in possession for life of the estate of her husband before she can make a valid adoption under the Oudh Estates Act. This Act does not make the possession of a life-estate by a Hindu widow or a Muhammadan widow the sine qua non or a pre-requisite condition before she can validly exercise the authority conferred upon her by her deceased husband. Ordinarily a life-estate does vest in the widow of a Hindu or Muhammadan talukdar who dies intestate, but where a childless talukdar has executed a valid will giving his widow authority to adopt and making his adopted son the absolute owner of the estate the absolute estate vests in the adopted son from the moment he is adopted; but enjoyment of it may be postponed or deferred, as in the present case, till the termination of the life-estate of the widow. That however is a very different thing from saying that every widow of a Muhammadan talukdar must be conferred a life-estate by her husband in his will before she can be given by him the power to make an adoption. For this broad proposition no authority has been cited before me and it cannot, be defended on any ground of reason, justice or of equity or even convenience. Act I of 1869 does in fact contemplate the succession of an adopted son and no question of the widow of the testator being given the enjoyment of a life-estate arises.

Akin to this contention is the other argument seriously pressed before me by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that Rani Nasim Sahri's life estate, conferred upon her by the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan, was indestructible and that she could not by any act of hers divest herself of that life-estate, and that such a life-estate could only be terminated by her death. In support of this contention Mr. Jackson has cited certain observations of King, J., reported as Krishnapal Singh v. Sri Raj Kunwar (1). The observations of that learned Judge referred to a life-estate which vested in a childless Hindu widow on intestacy and have no applicability whatsoever to the grant of a life-estate conferred upon Rani Nasim Sahri by the will of the testator Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. There is so far as I know nothing in law to prevent a testator who is a Muhammadan talukdar from conferring on any widow of his the power to adopt without conferring on her also a life-estate; and if the testator by his will lays down that on the adoption being effected the adopted son should come into immediate possession of the estate then the life estate, if any, of the adopted mother would be cut off at once. It is clear that if the testator is authorized by law to make a testamentary disposition of his property he can exercise that right and legally make a will contrary to the devolution of the estate on intestacy laid down in Act I of 1869, provided his will does not offend against the rule of perpetuity incorporated in that Act.

The ruling in the well-known Jutteendromhun Tagore v. Gnanedromohun Tagore (19) lays down that a testator cannot prescribe for his legatee a rule of succession unknown to law, for then he is legislating but the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan in the present suits (Ex. 50, page 211) does not in any way offend against the principle laid down in the Tagore case (19). In this will (Ex. 50) the power or authority to adopt conferred on each of the four widows of the testator is a perfectly valid power, and the bequest to the adopted son is also a good bequest for it does bequeath the estate of Nanpara to a person who would have succeeded to the estate on the death of the four widows. Section 29, Act I of 1869 authorizes every widow of a Hindu or Muhammadan talukdar to make an adoption "for the purposes of this Act". This phrase "for the purposes of this Act" cannot very well be restricted to mean "only for the purposes of intestacy": see Jutteendromohun Tagore v. Gnanendromohun Tagore (19) and Mata Prasad v. Nageshar Sahai (20). The rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Sreemutty Krishoromoney Dossee v. Maharaja Bahadoor (21) and in Rabidat Singh v. Maharani Indar Kunwar (22) are authorities for the proposition that any estate conferred on a widow may be defeated by an adoption taking place. It seems to me therefore, that the granting of the estate for two years to Rani Saltanant Begam pending adoption and to the adopted son on his adoption was a bequest valid in law.

Section 11, Act I of 1869, authorized Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan to make a bequest in favour of any person who may or may not be in existence at the time of his death but who may have been in existence within a life in being and 18 years thereafter. Section 12 of the Act deals with the vesting of an estate and the vesting is not postponed by Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan further than what is laid down in that section. In construing the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan with reference to the power of adoption conferred on each widow, Mr. Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, laid enormous stress upon the indestructibility of the life estate conferred on Rani Nasim Sahri and he invited my attention to the ruling of King, J., reported as Krishnappal Singh v. Sri Raj Kunwar (1). In view of the emphasis laid upon this ruling by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs and in deference to his argument on this point I think it is necessary to give briefly the facts of that case to show exactly what was decided by the learned Judge in that case. The facts are as under.

Diwan Har Mangal Singh was the owner of the estate. He died leaving a son Rudrapartab Singh. The latter died on 11th March, 1908 leaving a widow Shahjadi. His son Lal Banketeshwar had predeceased his father on 5th October 1899 leaving a widow Thakurain Sri Rai Kunwar. On 21st August, 1890 Rudrapartab Singh made a gift to his minor son Lal Banketeshwar, and on Lal Banketeshwar's death Sri Raj Kunwar his widow, relinquished, on 13th April 1901, the estate in favour of her father-in-law Rudrapartab Singh. The latter then made a will on 19th April 1901 by which he gave a life-estate to his widow Shahjadi, and on her death or failure to adopt a son to him he gave a full estate to Sri Raj Kunwar. A reversioner sued Thakurain Sri Raj Kunwar and her donees for a declaration that the alienation would not bind him on the death of Thakurain Sri Raj Kunwar. The defence was that Thakurain Sri Raj Kunwar was full owner of the property in suit. This was a case of intestacy so far as the surrender of the life-estate by Thakurain Sri Raj Kunwar in favour of her father-in-law was concerned. In these circumstances it was held that surrender by Thakurain Sri Kunwar of her life-estate was invalid.

This case has to my mind no possible bearing on the plea raised by the plaintiffs in the present suits. In a case of intestacy the law thrusts upon the heir an estate whether he likes to take it or not. This is in all systems of law. In the case of succession under a will the heir takes the property under the bounty of another; and he can if he likes refuse to take the bounty and then the property goes to the next person indicated by the testator in his will or to the heir-at-law, (see Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. 1, pages 644 and 645).

In Peacock v. Eastland (23) Lord Romilly, M. R., in the course of his judgment delivered himself thus:

"The real question seems to me to be this. Whether by grant at common law any man can confer upon another, against his will and without his consent any estate whatever in any property. . . ."

"In the case of Thompson v. Leach (24) it was expressly held that the estate surrendered did not pass to the surrenderee unless he accepted it. The only difference that existed between the Judges was this, that Ventris, J., admitting the principle, thought that in the absence of evidence acceptance must be implied because it must be supposed to be for the benefit of the surrenderee to accept and that therefore his assent must be implied...."

Lord Tenterden in Townson v. Tickell (25) said:

"The law certainly is not so absurd as to force a man to take an estate against his will. Prima facie every estate, whether given by will or otherwise, is supposed to be beneficial to the party to whom it is so given. Of that however he is the best Judge, and if it turn out that the party to whom the gift is made does not consider it beneficial, the law will certainly by some mode or other allow him to renounce or refuse the gift."

Rani Nasim Sahri had a life estate under the terms of the will of her husband Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan but the moment she surrendered that life estate it ceased to exist. The effect of disclaimer is clearly stated in Sheppard's Touchstone at page 285 where it is stated:

"The law presumes that every grant is for the benefit of the grantee and therefore till the contrary is shown supposes an agreement to the grant. From the moment there is evidence of disagreement, then in construction of law the grant is void ab initio as if no grant had been made."

Thus the effect of Rani Nasim Sahri's disclaimer of the life-estate granted to her under the terms of her husband's will was to make the grant of her void ab initio see Townson v. Tickell (25). The same proposition is propounded at length in Jarman's Treatise on Wills, Vol. 1, page 556 and also at pages 718 and 719. The same rule is laid down in Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 28, page 599, para. 1174, where it is said:

"The donee need not accept the gift, but unless by the will the duty of doing some act to show his election is put upon him, his acceptance of the gift is presumed and the property vests in him unless and until he disclaims."

and in para. 1175 of the same volume this eminent authority lays down as follows:

"A disclaimer puts a donee, as regards his liabilities, burdens, and rights, in the same position as if no gift had been made to him, but it does not necessarily render the gift void in regard to all persons and for all purposes, as for example, where the donee is a trustee."

As regard the effect of a disclaimer of a life interest Lord Halsbury, in para. 1188 of the same volume, lays down that the effect of failure of a prior life-interest, or other particular interest through revocation by codicil, disclaimer, forfeiture or lapse, is to accelerate the subsequent interests which are limited to take effect on the regular determination of that prior interest:

"The Court construes gifts of such interests as intended to take effect on the failure or determination of the prior interest in any manner. This rule applies both to real and to personal estate."

The principle of English law enunciated above is also to be found in Muhammadan 25) (1819) 3 B. & Ald. 31; 22 R. R. 291.

law. In the well-known work on Muhammadan Law by Mr. Ameer Ali (Vol. 1, page 644) it is said that "the validity of a wasiyat is submitted to another formality namely the implied or express acceptance of the wasiyat by the legatees."

According to the Hanafi Law which binds the parties of the present suits a legatee does not enter upon the possession of bequeathed property without acceptance: see Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. 1, pages 645 and 646. If he were to reject the bequest, it would be cancelled. In the present case Rani Nasim Sahri never at any time after the death of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan expressed her acceptance of the life-estate conferred upon her by her husband, and the possession of the estate was with the Court of Wards, and by her deed of relinquishment dated 29th May 1908, (Ex. A 56, page 1053) she expressly renounced all rights accruing to her under the will. The original of Ex. A 56 was filed in the interpleader suit and was taken away by Ohhote Khan, D. W. No. 16, who deposes before me that he sent it to the Court of Wards' office, but in fact no entry of this document is to be found in the register in which all such documents were noted: see the evidence of P. W. No. 19, pages 125 and 126. On 13th April 1924, defendant No. 1 applied to this Court that the District Registrar of Gonda might be directed to supply this copy Ex. A 56, from the copy of the deed in the registration office. No objection was raised on behalf of the plaintiffs by their learned Counsel Mr. Naimullah who appeared on that date and the application was therefore granted by me on 15th April 1929 as I was satisfied that the original of Ex. A-56 had somehow got lost either through the carelessness or dishonesty of Ohhote Khan or of someone else. The execution of the deed of relinquishment by Rani Nasim Sahri was proved by the evidence of Mansur Ali Khan D. W. No. 12, who was a marginal witness to this deed. By this deed of relinquishment Rani Nasim Sahri divested herself both under Muhammadan Law as well as under English Law of all her rights and privileges under the terms of the will of her husband Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan and I therefore hold that the contention urged on behalf of the plaintiffs by their learned Counsel that Rani Nasim Sahri's life estate was indestructible is not proved to be well founded.

The view that I am taking of the legal effect of Rani Nasim Sahri's disclaimer of the life-estate conferred upon her by her husband's will, a copy of which is Ex. A-56, page 1053, is supported by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Ajudhia Bakhsh v. Rukmin Kunwar (26). In this case it was held that the gift in remainder expectant upon the termination of a life-estate was accelerated and not destroyed by reason of the gift of the life-estate being void, and their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted with approval the principle laid down by Turner, L. J., in the case of Lainson v. Lainson (27). In Lainson v. Lainson (27) the facts were that a testator by his will gave his real and personal estate to trustees and directed them, subject to certain payments thereout, to pay the rents to his son John Lainson for life, and from and after the decease of his son he gave the estate to his first and other sons in tail male. By a third codicil the testator revoked the bequest in favour of his son and in lieu of it he gave him an annuity but he did not by that or by another codicil dispose of the rents of the estate during the life-time of John Lainson, his son. The question was whether this created an intestacy or an acceleration of the estate to the son of John Lainson. The Master of the Rolls, Sir John Romilly, was of opinion that this was an acceleration of the estate to the son and not an intestacy and that the expression "from and after John Lainson" meant "from and after the determination of his estate by death or otherwise," and that in deciding thus he was fulfilling the intention of the testator. This decision of the Master of the Rolls was affirmed by the Lords Justices on 10th November 1854 in Lainson v. Lainson (28) who held that the words "from and immediately after his decease" following a limitation for life in general point out the order of limitation merely and that where therefore the testator revoked a limitation for life which was followed by those words introducing subsequent limitation, the remainders were accelerated. The decision of the Master of the Rolls to the effect that the codicils operated as an acceleration of the estate of the grandson and did not create an intestacy was upheld. Turner, L. J., was of opinion that it made no difference whether the previous estate was removed by death or by revocation, and Knight-Bruc, L. J., held that the testator's real meaning was that the previous life-estate given to his son should be abolished in favour of those who had come after, subject only to the express provision made by the codicil for his son's benefit.

In Mallot v. Wilson (29) Byrne, J., quoted with approval a passage from Mr. Preston's seventh edition of Sheppard's Touchstone at p. 285 which runs as follows:

"The law presumed that every grant etc., is for the benefit of the grantee etc., and therefore till the contrary is shown supposes an agreement to the grant. From the moment there is evidence of disagreement then in construction of law the grant is void ab initio as if no grant had been made, and in intendment of law the freehold never passed from the grantor," and the learned Judge explained this passage by saying:

"The true meaning is that not in regard to all persons and for all purposes is the case to be treated as though the legal estate had never passed, but that as regards the trustee of the person to whom the grant was made, he is, in respect of his liabilities, his burdens and his rights, in exactly the same position as though no conveyance had ever been made to him."

In Scott v. Scott (30), Warrington, J., held that "there is no question that as a general rule the effect of a disclaimer or other destruction of the particular estate is to accelerate the estate in remainder."

In Fraser v. Young (31) it was held that the refusal of the plaintiff to receive the trust income could not be treated on the footing of a disclaimer of the legacy, and that, as neither the trustees nor the residuary legatees had changed their position on the faith of that refusal of the plaintiff it could be retracted so far as future income was concerned.

Not only have their Lordships of the Privy Council applied the English Law on the subject of disclaimer and consequent acceleration of subsequent estate to cases coming up for decision before them from India but they have also had no hesitation in applying the doctrine of Court of Equity in England relating to the execution of powers of appointment to documents executed by Indians in India. In Lajendra Prasad Bose v. Gopal Prasad Sen (32), decided as recently as 26th June, 1930, their

Lordships of the Privy Council delivered themselves of the following pronouncement:

"It is well-established law in England that when a power is given to be executed with the consent of a person and that person died before the power is executed, the power comes to an end. Their Lordships see no reason why, subject to what they have said, the ordinary rule as to construction of powers which prevails in England should not be applicable to the construction of an anumatipatra executed in India. Their Lordships are fortified in their view by the observations of the Board in the case of Amritolal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (33)."

Similarly in Bhaya Rabidat Singh v. Maharani Indra Kunwar (22), their Lordships considered the contention of Mr. Arathoon, Counsel for the appellants that the analogy presented by the doctrine of Courts of Equity in England relating to the execution of powers of appointment might be applied to his client's case, and their Lordships held that even in that case the adoption would have been valid.

In Bai Motivahoo v. Bai Mamoo Bai (34) their Lordships of the Privy Council while deprecating the general application of the English Law of powers of appointment to Hindu wills still held on the analogy furnished by the power of adoption that a Hindu testator could, by his will, legally authorize his daughter to give the absolute estate by her will to such persons as were actually or in contemplation of law in existence at the time of the testator's death.

It would thus appear that the contention so vehemently urged by Mr. Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that authority to adopt conferred by Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan on his widow must not be looked upon as a power of appointment as understood in English Law is unsound, and that the late Misra, J., had the weighty authority of the Judicial Committee when in discussing the power of adoption given by Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan's will he referred in his judgment (Ex. A-6 at pages 428 to 432) to Farwell on Powers and cited English cases in the course of his reasoning on this question of adoption.

In my opinion for the reasons given above Rani Nasim Sahri by her deed of surrender not only disclaimed her life-estate but also gave up the power to adopt a son to her husband conferred upon her by the will (Ex. 50, page 211). The result of her deed of relinquishment was not only to destroy her own life-estate but also to take away her authority or right to adopt a son.

In Carson's Real Property Statutes (Edn. 3 by Mr. W. H. Law, 1927) para. 155 (at page. 750) runs as follows:

"A person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given may by deed release or contract not to exercise the power."

The next paragraph is to the effect that

"a person to whom any power whether coupled with an interest or not, is given may by deed disclaim power, and after disclaimer shall not be capable of exercising or joining in the exercise of the power. On such disclaimer, the power may be exercised by the other person or persons or the survivor or survivors of the other person to whom the power is given unless the contrary is expressed, in the instrument creating the power."

These principles of English Law have a peculiar appropriateness to the provisions of the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. Rani Nasim Sahri as a donee was fully justified in law in refusing the life-estate as well as the power to adopt, and therefore her estate by reason of disclaimer was lost, and the estate of Rani Saltanat Begam the second widow was accelerated. In the interpleader suit and in the appeal from the decree passed in that interpleader suit Rani Nasim Sahri never set up any rights under the will of her husband (Ex. 50 page 211); she only claimed her dower debt in both Courts: she never retracted the deed of relinquishment (Ex. A-56, page 1053). Exhibit 93, p. 344 merely set forth the claim made on behalf of Rani Nasim Sahri by her agent that in case Rani Saltanat Begam is not found to be entitled to get the property in dispute under the will of Raja Muhammad Siddique Khan and under the deed of release executed by her, then she Rani Nasim Sahri, if her deed of release is held to be void by the Court may be given the property in suit if found entitled to it under the terms of her husband's will. This does not amount to any repudiation or retraction of her deed of surrender.

The terms of the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan make no distinction between his four Ranis as regards the forfeiture in consequence of the remarriage of his widows. This forfeiture clause contained in cl. 10 of the will is very clear and definite, and is to the effect that "should any of my Ranis after my death re-marry, then she will not be entitled to take advantage of, or benefit by, any of the provisions of this will of mine."

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that this forfeiture clause does not apply to Rani Nasim Sahri. Except the bare assertion of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs I have not been referred to any provisions in this will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan which would go to show that when the Raja used the words "should any of my Ranis remarry" he did not include Rani Nasim Sahri amongst his Ranis and did not intend that the forfeiture clause should apply to her. As a matter of fact Rani Nasim Sahri being the Raja's most favourite wife, any act of faithlessness to his memory committed by her marrying again another man would have aroused his bitterest ire, and she would have been the first to be deprived of all benefits under his will, could he have foreseen the shadow of coming events. There is to my mind absolutely no force in the contention of the plaintiffs that this forfeiture clause in the will did not apply to Rani Nasim Sahri. On her remarriage with Nawab Hamid Husain Khan Rani Nasim Sahri ceased to be widow of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan and forfeited her life-estate and the power to adopt a son and all other rights conferred upon her by the Raja's will.

(33) 27 C. 996; 27 I. A. 128; 7 Sar. 633; 4 O. W. N. 549 (P. C.).

It has been further argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that s. 135 (old s. 121), Succession Act, which provides for conditional bequests has not been made applicable to talukdars under s. 19, Act I of 1869. Under ss. 28 and 31, Transfer of Property Act, a conditional bequest by a deed operating inter vivos is held to be valid. Sections 28 and 32, Transfer of Property Act, correspond with old s. 118 and 182 of the old Succession Act. They embody principles of general law and these principles have been made applicable to talukdars. In Ahmad Azim v. Safi Jan (35), in which both parties were Sunni Muhammadans as in the present suits it was held by the Hon'ble Chief Judge and the late Misra, J., that a condition defeating the absolute estate on the happening of a particular contingency was not unknown to law and even recognised as valid both under English and Indian Law. The same principle was authoritatively laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Hindu in Kristoromoney Dossee v. Maharaja Bahadur (21), in which it was held that a Hindu could not create an estate of inheritance unknown to the Hindu Law but that he might create an absolute estate subject to be defeated by a subsequent event provided first, that the event must happen if at all immediately on the close of a life in being at the time of the gift; and further that the gift over must be in favour of somebody in existence at the time of the gift; see also Sreemutty Siriheemoney Dossey v. Dencbundoo Mullick (36). In 95 Ind. Cas. 113 Wahibunnissa v. Mushraf Husain (37), it was held that among Shia Muhammadans the creation of life-estate was perfectly valid and under Hindu Law an estate given to a particular individual may be defeasible on the happening of a particular event and that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and the Succession Act would apply to a Muhammadan talukdar unless there was anything in the Oudh Estates Act or in Muhammadan Law to the contrary.

It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Amjad Khan v. Ashraf Khan (38) that a Sunni Muhammadan could validly make a gift of a life-estate together with a power to alienate a third part. The view so ably propounded by the present Hon'ble Chief Judge in his judgment reported as Amjad Khan v. Ashraf Khan (39), found favour with their Lordships of the Privy Council and it is now settled law that a Sunni Muhammadan like a Shia Muhammadan could also validly create a life-estate by the terms of his will if he be so minded.

Mr. Ameer Ali in his standard work on Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, page 646 points out that "the Muhammadan Law distinctly recognizes perpetuities. So long as commencement is made in the case of a settlement or device, with a life in being, it is not necessary that the person who takes the remainder should be in existence."

The creation of a life-estate in favour of Rani Nasim Sahri by the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan (Ex. 50, page 211) was, therefore, valid in law and her disclaimer of that life-estate was also good in law. The contention on the part of the plaintiffs that Rani Nasim Sahri retracted her disclaimer is neither sound in law nor based on facts. A gift once unequivocally disclaimed cannot afterwards be claimed: see Preston's Edition of Shepard's Touchstone, pages 10 and 285, and Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. I page 601. Moreover there was in fact no retraction of her disclaimer by Rani Nasim Sahri. Exhibit 93, page 344, does not support that contention of the plaintiffs which I therefore reject as frivolous.

It was further contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the condition in restraint of marriage embodied in cl. 10 of the Raja's will was purely in terrorem and was therefore void. The English doctrine of "in terrorem" has no applicability to the facts of this case and to the clause of the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. Conditions made "in terrorem" are mere idle threats to induce the donee to comply with the condition, but not to affect the bequest unless the testator shows that his intention was not merely to threaten or enjoin the donee by the condition but to make a different disposition of the subject of the gift in the event of noncompliance with the condition: see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 28, page 588, para 1172.

Mr. Jarman in his standard treatise on Wills, has stated the rule of Civil Law in England as follows:

"All conditions in wills restraining marriage whether precedent or subsequent, whether there was any gift over or not, and however qualified were absolutely void.....but this doctrine did not apply to widows.....A condition that a widow shall not marry is not unlawful." see Jarman on Wills, Vol. II, pages 1525 and 1526

In Barton v. Barton (40), it was held that a gift by a testator to his widow on condition of her not marrying again was good and the same has been extended to a gift to a married woman by a testator who was not her husband: see Newton v. Marsden (41).

It was held by Christian, L. J., in Duddy v. Gresham (42) that "the in terrorem doctrine did not apply to a devise of real estate."

This contention of the plaintiffs that the Raja's prohibition to his widows to remarry was a mere idle threat and void in law is also proved to be without any force. The Raja was absolutely in deadly earnest when he prohibited his widows to remarry on pain of forfeiting all their rights under the will. As Mr. Jarman points out:—

"It seems clear that as a general rule a clause of cesser or forfeiture is good and takes effect on the happening of the event provided for even if there is no gift over;"

It is true that the distinction between real and personal property which prevails in England does not exist in India, but the principle enunciated in Jull v. Jacobs (43) is applicable to the present case. Mallins, V. O. in that case laid down the law in the following words:—

"A gift to A for life and from and after the decease of A to B, C and D or anybody else, means from and after the determination of the estate and whether the estate is determined by revocation or by death or by the incapacity of the devisee to take, or by any other circumstance the life-estate being out of the way, the remainder takes effect, having only been postponed in order that the life estate may be given to A. Lainson v. Lainson (27) was affirmed by those two eminent Judges Lords Justices Knight, Bruce and Turner and affirmed on the broadest principles. And therefore, without going further it is sufficient to say that that case based as it is upon the authorities from the earliest periods downwards decides the point which I have now to decide, that the life-estate being out of the way as it is here by the incapacity of the tenant for life the remainder takes effect as if there had been no life-estate."

I quote these golden words merely to show their applicability to the facts and circumstances connected with the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. As in that case so in this, the effect of the destruction of the life estate of Rani Nasim Sahri by her disclaimer was to accelerate the remainder and the Naupara estate vested immediately in Rani Saltanat Begam on the disclaimer of Rani Nasim Sahri. Rani Saltanat Begam's power to adopt a son was also accelerated and, therefore, she could validly adopt Raja Saadat Ali Khan in May, 1908. It follows from what I have said above that the adoption of defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan by Rani Saltanat Begam was valid in law and it was also in conformity with the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. (Exhibit 50 page 211.) I therefore decide Issue No. 5 (a) in favour of defendant No. 1 and against the plaintiffs. After discussing certain issues, the learned Judge proceeded with Issue No. 7 as follows.

Issue No 7 runs as follows:—

"To what extent is the will of the late Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan invalid in law;

This issue is distinct from Issue No. 16 which has been framed upon the basis of the contentions raised by Rani Kamar Zamani Begam original defendant No. 3 in the suit No. 11 of 1928. The present Issue No. 7 is limited to the contention of the plaintiffs that as Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan did not confer a life-estate upon Rani Saltanat Begam, so the latter could not exercise the power to adopt a son to her late husband as she had not been given a life-estate. There is to my mind no force in this argument on behalf of the plaintiffs. It is only in case of intestacy that the enjoyment of a life-estate by a widow is inevitable before she can exercise the power to adopt a son. Section 29, Act I of 1869, authorizes a talukdar to give the power to any widow of his to make an adoption. She need not necessarily be a widow in possession of a life-estate. The phrase "for the purposes of this Act" occurring in s. 29, Act I of 1869, is not per force restricted to mean "for the purpose of intestacy" as contended for by the plaintiffs. It seems to me that Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan was not violating the provisions of s. 29, Act I of 1869 when he conferred upon his three widows Rani Saltanat Begam, Rani Champa and Rani Dilafza the power to make an adoption without giving each of them a life-estate. The plaintiffs in para. 10 (c) of their plaint in Suit No. 11 of 1928 declared that Raja Mohammad Siddique in his will prescribed "a course of devolution unknown to Act I of 1869." I confess it is difficult to follow the train of reasoning of the plaintiffs and of their legal advisers on this point. So far as Rani Nasim Sahri is concerned the plaintiffs themselves admit that the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan is valid and they further admit that if Rani Nasim Sahri had herself adopted a son within two years of her husband's death, then that son would have succeeded to the Nanpara Estate as an absolute owner and would have excluded the plaintiffs. The argument of the plaintiff so far as I have been able to grasp it, appears to be that as Rani Saltanat Begam was not given a life-estate by her husband the latter was also incompetent to give Rani Saltanat Begam the power to make an adoption. For this proposition the plaintiffs have adduced no authority. The provisions of s. 29, Act I of 1869 do not justify them in raising this contention. The rule against perpetuity has not been infringed by the Raja's will. The adopted son is by a fiction of law considered to have been in existence at the time of the death of the testator: see Jutteenramohan Tagore v. Ganendramohan Tagore (19) and Mata Prasad's case (20).

The plaintiffs have also contended that the gift to the adopted son is void under the terms of the will and that the will itself is void in law. According to the plaintiffs a talukdar cannot give his property to an adopted son because he is not a persona designata, i. e., a person who can be found out with certainty. The answer of the defendants to this contention is that even if the grant to an adopted son be presumed to be void yet if the authority to adopt had been validly conferred and validly executed (if Rani Saltanat Begam did really make an adoption as desired by the testator) it was immaterial to consider the question whether the gift of the estate to the adopted son was valid or invalid, because in any event the adopted son would succeed even on intestacy as he would be a nearer heir than the plaintiffs under Act I of 1869, even if I were to assume plaintiff No. 1 to be the nearest collateral of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. In that event it would be no concern of the plaintiffs whether the estate conferred on the adopted son by the Raja's will would be good or bad in law. The authority for this proposition is to be found in the case of Rabidat Singh v. Maharani Indar Kunwar (22).

It is also pointed out on behalf of the defendants that the testator had laid a definite scheme for ascertaining the boy to be adopted and when that boy to be adopted he was an ascertained person (persona designata). A gift inter vivos cannot be made in favour of a person not in existence on the date of the death of the testator, but there is an exception in the case of a son to be born or a son to be adopted: see Tagore case (19). Sections 11 and 12, Act I of 1869 clearly lay down that subject to the rule of perpetuity a person who is to get an estate on the happening of a particular contingency may be ascertained for the first time when that contingency occurs and he need not be in existence on the death of the testator. This rule of English law has been extended to Oudh talukdars. A gift to the adopted son is good also under Muhammadan Law: see Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law Vol. 1, page 646. I therefore decide Issue No. 7 in favour of defendant No. 1 and against the plaintiffs and hold that the provisions in the will giving an estate to the adopted son are perfectly valid and the contention of the plaintiffs that the adopting mother must be in the enjoyment of her life estate before she can exercise her power to make an adoption conferred upon her by the terms of her husband's will is not legally sound.

Issue No. 8 relates to limitation and is as follows:—

"Is the claim of plaintiffs in Suit No. 11 within limitation."

This question of limitation can only be argued on the assumption that the question of pedigree and the question of adoption embodied in Issues No. 1 and 5 (a) are decided in favour of the plaintiffs. As I have decided both these issues against the plaintiffs, it is really a work of supererogation on my part to decide this issue. But as parties and their Counsel desire that I should decide all the issues framed in these two suits, I proceed in defence to their wishes to give my finding on this question of limitation. The plaintiffs' case on this point as set forth in their plaint in Suit No. 11 is that the life-estate of the property in suit vested in Rani Nasim Sahri to the exclusion of her four other co-widows and the absolute estate vested in the plaintiffs at the time of the death of the testator Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan, see para. 11 of the plaint. The plaintiffs in para. 17 of their plaint in Suit No. 11 allege that their cause of action for this suit arose in January 1917 "when the estate fell into possession by reason of the death of Rani Nasim Sahri." Thus it is clear from the plaintiffs' own plaint that Art. 140, Sch. I, Limitation Act was to be applied to the case. The primary question to be decided therefore is: "When did the Nanpara estate fall into possession?"

Before an answer can be given to this question it is necessary to decide the question of forfeiture embodied in Issue No. 13 and the question of disclaimer in Issue No. 15. If Rani Nasim Sahri forfeited her life-estate by reason of the forfeiture clause in the will of her husband by her re-marriage on 9th May 1908 and by reason of her executing the deed of surrender dated 28th May 1908, then the estate fell into possession on the date of her incurring the forfeiture and making her disclaimer. The plaintiffs allege that plaintiff No. 1, Mohammad Azim Khan, had a vested interest in the Nanpara Estate from the death of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan subject to the life-estate of Rani Nasim Sahri. If the adoption of defendant No. 1 by Rani Saltanat Begam be deemed to be void for the purposes of deciding this issue of limitation then the remainder would not vest in him but it must vest in someone and that someone could only be the heir-at-law, that is to say, plaintiff No. 1 who ex hypothesi is deemed to be the nearest collateral of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. If the adoption of defendant No. 1 be found to be good in law and made in conformity with the terms of the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan then in that event defendant No. 1 would be the heir-at-law to the exclusion of all the plaintiffs whether the disposal of the remainder by the terms of the Raja's will in favour of the adopted son be held to be good or bad in law.

According to the plaintiffs the estate vested in them from the time of the death of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan because the creation of the remainder was bad by reason of the fact that the adoption was void. Plaintiffs however contend that limitation only began to run against them from the date of the death of Rani Nasim Sahri. If however the life-tenant Rani Nasim Sahri passed out then limitation must count from the time that she disclaimed the estate or from the time that she forfeited the estate by her remarriage. The learned Counsel for defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan has cited Fearn on Contingent Remainder, Vol. 1, page 363 for the exposition of the meaning of the terms "remainderman" and "reversion" and has applied this English authority to the facts of this case. He has also relied upon Jarman on Wills, Vol. 1, page 704 in support of the contention that if there was no valid adoption the reversionary interest fell into possession on the death of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan and that if plaintiff No. 1, Mohammad Azim Khan, be held to be the heir-at-law then his suit was obviously barred by limitation.

Plaintiffs allege that all the widows with the sole exception of Rani Nasim Sahri, forfeited their estate by reason of remarriage. By the expression "falls into possession" is meant the time when a reversioner or a remainderman becomes entitled to the actual possession of the estate. In the present case, as I have held that Rani Nasim Sahri forfeited her life-estate by reason of her remarriage and her disclaimer, the reversioner plaintiff No. 1 became entitled to possession from May 1908, and as the present Suit No. 11 was filed in November 1928 it is obviously time-barred, not having been filed within 12 years of 1908. For the reason given above I hold that applying Art. 140, Limitation Act, to the facts of this case, the plaintiffs' Suit No. 11 is time-barred. Article 140 is the article of the Limitation Act which the plaintiffs themselves would like to apply to their case as is clear from their own plaint.

Under Art. 143, Limitation Act, also the plaintiffs' suit stands barred. This article would apply equally in the case of disclaimer or forfeiture. In the present Suit No. 11 there is the forfeiture and disclaimer of her life-estate by Rani Nasim Sahri. In his oral pleadings (page 8 of the Court' proceedings) Mr. Sen the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs urged that plaintiff No. 1. Mohammad Azim Khan could waive his rights under the clause of forfeiture in the will till the determination of the life-estate of Rani Nasim Sahri. This contention of his may hold good in English Law, but Art. 143, Limitation Act, does not confer any such right of waiver on the reversioner entitled to succeed on the date when the forfeiture or disclaimer took place. The Nanpara Estate fell into possession of plaintiff No. 1, Mohammad Azim Khan immediately the forfeiture took place in May 1908, and the present suit is therefore clearly time barred also under Art. 143, Limitation Act. It has also been pointed out by the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan, that as a matter of fact there was no waiver of their rights by plaintiffs and their fathers. In this connexion a reference may be made to the sale-deed of 20th January 1913 (Ex. A-19, page 602) in favour of Nazar Ahmad Khan by Abdul Aziz father of plaintiff No. 1 at a time when Rani Nasim Sahri was alive, as also to the statement in this sale deed to the effect that Nazar Ahmad Khan should file a suit immediately and obtain possession at once of the Nanpara Estate. There is also the evidence of P. W. No. 7 Nawab Ali Khan at page 46 line 18 who deposes that plaintiffs never waived their rights to the Nanpara Estate during the life-time of Rani Nasim Sahri. There is thus no question of any waiver, there was in fact no waiver on the part of the plaintiffs as wrongly alleged by their learned Counsel Mr. Sen.

Even under Art. 144, Limitation Act, plaintiffs' Suit No. 11 is also time-barred. Article, 144 is a residuary article and will be applied only if no other article is deemed to be applicable to the facts of the case. Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan died on 30th December 1907 but the Court of Wards was already in possession of his estate since 1905. On the death of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan the Court of Wards assumed charge of his estate under s. 44, Courts of Wards Act of 1899 as a stakeholder. This position is conceded by both parties. On 18th April 1908, the interpleader suit was filed (Ex. 26, page 122, paras. 1, 2, and 4). In para. 5, Ex. 26 all the claimants known to the Court of Wards were set forth. The plaintiffs then never came forward as claimants to the Nanpara Estate; in fact plaintiff No. 1's father supported the claim of Abdul Hamid to the Estate of Nanpara, so did Ahmad Ali and other bharyas of Tahpur.

Defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan was found by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow in the interpleader suit to be the person best entitled to the Nanpara Estate, but as he had voluntarily by a compromise on his behalf, agreed to the disposition of the property in suit in a particular way the Court passed a decree in terms of the compromise arrived at by the Raja of Nanpara and other claimants. The object of the compromise was to give an absolute estate to Raja Saadat Ali Khan defendant No. 1 subject to two life-estates. The date of the compromise is 7th September 1910, the decree on the basis of the compromise was dated 4th November 1911. The result of the judgment in that interpleader suit was that the will of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan was held to be valid and binding. It was also held that Rani Nasim Sahri by her remarriage and disclaimer relinquished her life-estate and that Rani Saltanat Begam succeeded to her rights to the estate under the will. It was further held that Rani Saltanat Begam had validly adopted defendant No. 1 who was found entitled to actual possession to the whole of the estate. Thus the title of defendant No. 1 was declared by the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow on 4th November 1911. This judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow was upheld in appeal by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh which pronounced its appellate judgment on 20th May 1914.

Exhibit A-16, page 598 and Ex. A-17, page 599 are copies of two U. P. Gazette Notifications of June 1914 announcing the title of defendant No. 1 and stating that the Court of Wards was holding the Nanpara Estate for him and on his behalf. The present suit is thus equally barred also under Art. 144, Limitation Act, whether limitation be calculated from 15th June 1914 or 27th June 1914. The possession of the Court of Wards from the date of this notification must be deemed to be possession on behalf of the rightful owner or owners as declared by the Civil Court, see also Ex. A-18, page 600, dated 1st December 1915. The Court of Wards ceased to be a trustee directly the decree was passed in terms of the compromise, and the possession of the Court of Wards from that date must be held to be adverse to the plaintiffs, for the Court of Wards' possession must be from that date considered to be possession on behalf of the person who was declared entitled to the estate; see s. 88 Civil Procedure Code, and O. XXXV, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code.

The possession of the Court of Wards was on behalf of the persons whom the Civil Court declared entitled to the property, and consequently when the decree was passed and the rightful claimant ascertained, the possession of the Court of Wards from that date must be for the persons who were declared so entitled. In this connexion the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan relied upon a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Administrator General of Bengal v. Prem Lal Mullick (44) and also on a ruling of the Madras High Court in Orr v. Muthia Chetti (45) and referred to Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 24, page 375 at 385.

The plaintiffs contend that the Court of Wards was a trustee for them till 1925 when it handed over the estate wrongly to defendant No. 2, Raja Saadat Ali Khan. This position is not tenable; three of the plaintiffs have themselves in the witness box admitted that the Court of Wards was not holding as a trustee for them: see for instance P. W. No. 4, page 47 line 34 and P. W. No. 23, page 185. They have admitted that the possession of the Court of Wards was on behalf of Rani Sarfarsz Begam and Raja Saadat Ali Khan. On behalf of defendant No. 1, it was contended that directly the decree was passed in the interpleader suit and the heir ascertained, the possession of such heir would be made to refer back to the date of the suit and the Court of Wards would in law be considered to have been holding from the date of the interpleader suit on behalf of the person who was declared to be the owner of the estate: see Rustomji's Law of Limitation, page 455. Thus limitation would begin to run against the plaintiffs from 1905. In Abinash Charan Chowdhury v. Tarini Charan Chowdhury (46) and in Dwijendra Narain Roy v. Jogesh Chandra De (47) it was laid down that possession would be deemed to be on behalf of the person who was ultimately declared to be the owner. In Mani Mandatha v. Nawab of Murshidabad (48) their Lordships of the Privy Council had occasion to discuss the question as to whether time would run against the plaintiff during the period when the Court of Wards was, as it had been termed, in possession of his estate. It was argued in that case that a disqualified proprietor had no right to sue so long as the property remained in charge of the Court of Wards. Their Lordships held that the Limitation Act though it recognized and enumerated certain conditions as legal disabilities entitling the persons affected by them to an extended period of limitation did not touch the plaintiff's disqualification under s. 6 (a), Court of Wards Act, and that there was no case made out which could suspend or modify the ordinary law of limitation as applicable to that case. In Ghisa Singh v. Thakur Gajraj Singh (49) the learned Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court had occasion to discuss the nature of the possession of the the Court of Wards as affecting the question of limitation raised in that suit. It was held that the possession of the Court of Wards must be deemed to have been the possession of Musammam Girraj Kunwar who was declared by the Civil Court to be entitled to the property. The same view of the law was propounded in Seraj Ahmad v. Ibnul Hasan. First Appeal No. 57 of 1920 decided by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh on 23rd May, 1922.

The question of taking possession will not arise in the present suit because defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan came into possession of the Nanpara Estate on his mother's death and the Raja of Utraula came into possession on the death of his wife Rani Kaniz Begam, and Rani Qamar Zamani Begam got her own villages when the estate was released. All these three persons claimed under one another. This is not a case of independent trespassers. In Ramayya v. Kotamma (50) it was held by their Lordships of the Madras High Court that adverse enjoyment of immovable property for over 12 years whether by a single person or by a number of persons in succession, even though they did not claim from one another, provided their possession was continuous and without a break, would bar the true owner under Art. 142, Limitation Act. The law on this subject is ably propounded in this ruling.

of the Madras High Court and fully supports the contention of the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan. It is now well-established law that unless there is a break in the continuity of possession the true owner would be barred by 12 years' adverse possession even if that continuous adverse possession be of two or more trespassers who did not claim under one another. In the present suits all three alleged trespassers were in possession under a common agreement, namely the compromise and the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow. Both the compromise and the decree provided that one would succeed after the other. Apart from the compromise and the decree in the interpleader suit there is also the admitted fact of relationship, namely that defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan is the heir of his natural mother Rani Sarfarsz Begam and that defendant No. 2 the Raja of Utraula is the heir of his wife Rani Kaniz Begam. The plaintiffs therefore cannot argue that, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 cannot tack on the possession of one to the other. For the reasons given above the plaintiff's suit in my opinion is also barred under Art. 144, Limitation Act.

In this connexion I may also note that as regards non talukdari property plaintiffs are certainly no heirs in respect of the property entered in list "E" attached to the plaint which was purchased by the Court of Wards in 1911. The plaintiffs cannot claim this property even if it was purchased from the profits of the estate. With regard to the non-talukdari property left by Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan it has been argued on behalf of the defendants that the will of a Hanafi Muhammadan in favour of an heir must be consented to by all his heirs and, failing such consent, the will is absolutely void. No such consent to the will on the part of the plaintiff has been proved on the record. On the contrary the indications are all the other way. If the will be deemed void as being made without the consent of the heirs then the life-estate created by the will in favour of Rani Nasim Sahri must also fail, and it follows therefore that succession to the property opened to the plaintiffs on the death of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan in December, 1907, and the plaintiffs' claim being made more than 12 years after 1907 is therefore clearly time-barred. If on the other hand the will in respect of non talukdari property be also held to be valid under Muhammadan Law, by her remarriage and her disclaimer Rani Nasim Sahri lost her rights to this non-talukdari property also, and the right to sue for this non-talukdari property accrued to the plaintiffs from the date of Rani Nasim Sahri's remarriage and her disclaimer in May, 1908 and the claim would even then be time-barred.

For the reasons given above I hold that plaintiffs' Suit No. 11 of 1928, is time-barred even on the assumption that plaintiff No. 1, Mohammad Azim Khan, is the nearest collateral to the late Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan and on the further assumption that the adoption of Raja Saadat Ali Khan, defendant No. 1, is invalid in law. I have held above that both these assumptions which I have to make while discussing the question of limitation are incorrect. The plaintiffs have failed to prove the pedigree upon which they base their claim in both suits and defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan, has proved to my entire satisfaction that his adoption by Rani Sultanat Begam is valid in law. I decide Issue No. 8 against the plaintiffs and in favour of the defendants and hold that the plaintiffs have not filed their Suit No. 11 of 1928 within limitation.

The next Issue No. 9 is as follows:

"Whether plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 12 are estopped from bringing the present suit as alleged in para. 28 of the written statement of defendant No. 1."

It is a fact that plaintiff No. 12, Subhan Ali Khan, has executed five kabuliyats in favour of defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan, and Ahmad Ali Khan, plaintiff No. 3, has executed one kabuliyat in favour of defendant No. 1, Raja Saadat Ali Khan, acknowledging the latter to be the talukdar and proprietor of the Nanpara Estate. It is therefore legally not open to these two plaintiffs during the continuance of their lease to question the title of their lessor. The kabuliyat executed by Ahmad Ali Khan on 4th September, 1927 is Ex. A-37, page 929, and those executed by Subhan Ali Khan, plaintiff No. 12, are Exs. A-35, page 919 of 11th April 1928, Ex. A-38, page 935 of 20th September 1928, Ex. A-39, page 141 of 12th April 1928, Ex. A-40 of 26th May 1928. Exhibit A-19 is a lease for the years 1335 Fasli to 1338 Fasli, Ex. A-38 is a lease from 1334 Fasli to 1338 Fasli, Ex. A-39 is from 1335 Fasli to 1339 Fasli, Ex. A-40 page 946, of 12th April 1928, and Ex. A 44, page 972, is from 1335 Fasli to 1339 Fasli and Ex. A 44 is from 1335 Fasli to 1338 Fasli. It will thus be seen that these leases were in force and did subsist at the time when these suits were filed in my court. As thekadar of defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan, plaintiff No. 3 Ahmad Ali Khan and plaintiff No. 12 Subhan Ali Khan, during the continuance of their leases cannot be allowed to deny the title of their lessor. In Bilas Kunwar v. Desrai Ranjit Singh (51) it was held by their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court that a tenant who had been let into possession could not deny his landlord's title, however, defective it might be, so long as he had not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. These plaintiffs are estopped during the subsistence of their lease from questioning the title of their lessor defendant No. 1 under s. 116, Evidence Act. This issue, however, is really of more or less academic interest only, because its effect on the rights of the other plaintiffs to bring these Suits Nos. 11 and 12, is absolutely nil. This matter however has been brought to the notice of the Court by the defendants to show in what a light-hearted and irresponsible mood the present suits have been filed by some of these plaintiffs who wish to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. I decide this issue against plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 12 and in favour of the defendants.

Issue No. 10 runs as follows:

"Is the suit as framed not maintainable on the grounds as alleged in para. 27 of the written statement of defendant No. 1?"

The contention of defendant No. 1 Raja Saadat Ali Khan, is that plaintiffs cannot sue in a body. The reply on behalf of the plaintiffs is that O. I. r. 1, Civil Procedure Code authorizes them to bring these suits in their present form. Had the plaintiffs a clearer and more accurate notion of their own pedigree, and had plaintiff No. 1 Mohammad Azim Khan, a firmer faith in the justice of his claim, the plaint in Suit No. 11 of 1928, on his behalf, would not have been drafted in that half-hearted and wayward manner that it has been drawn up, leaving it to the Court to discover, if possible, in the confused mass and welter of evidence, who was the nearest collateral of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan in the nearest male branch of the plaintiffs' family. The sixteen plaintiffs who claim the Nanpara and Utraula talukas in these suits could not decide amongst themselves, who was to be selected as the nearest collateral of Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan. Whatever be the weakness of the plaintiffs' claim as evidenced by their attitude in this matter, and, however objectionable and troublesome to the Court and to the defendants the course pursued by the plaintiffs may be, I really cannot hold that the suits as framed are not maintainable. No doubt their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh (8), objected to suits being framed in this manner. Their Lordships in this case condemned the plan of an ejectment suit where a large number of persons, more or less akin in blood, had banded themselves together in bringing a suit in the hope of ousting the defendants by a mass attack and afterwards assigning the fruits of victory to the parties entitled either by an amicable settlement amongst themselves or by further litigation inter se. Their Lordships observe that by such a procedure

"The Court as well as the opposite party is embarrassed and the issues are obscured."

Nevertheless their Lordships did not dismiss the claim of the plaintiffs on that ground but proceeded to decide the claim on the merits. Similarly, while condemning the proceedings of the plaintiffs in the present Suit I too must decide this Issue No. 10, in favour of the plaintiffs and hold that the suit as framed, though objectionable in form, is yet legally maintainable. (The learned Judge then discussed certain issues of fact and proceeded): On the findings given above on the various issues the plaintiff's Suit No. 11 of 1928 fails and I accordingly dismiss it with costs. Defendant No. 1, the Raja of Nanpara, defendant No. 2, the Raja of Utraula, and the heirs of Rani Qamar Zamani Begam, original defendant No. 3, will each be entitled to separate costs from the plaintiffs as each of these three sets of defendants had to resist separately the attack made by the plaintiffs upon them. (The learned Judge then considered some of the issues in Suit No. 12 of 1929 and, proceeded:) The next issue No. 5, runs as follows,

"Is the claim of the plaintiffs in this suit within limitation?"

This question of limitation only arises in case it is held that the transfers in favour of Rani Kaniz Begam are proved to be genuine. If on the other hand these alleged transfers in favour of Rani Kaniz Begam by her husband and others are held to be fictitious, and the Revenue Court proceedings mere paper transactions, then of course no question of limitation arises. Even if these transfers be found to be really genuine still unless plaintiffs prove their actual possession within twelve years from the date of the suit, their suit must stand dismissed as time-barred.

(51) 30 Ind. Cas. 299; A. I. R. 1915 P. C. 96; 42 I. A. 202; 37 A. 557; 19 C. W. N. 1207; 29 M. L. J. 335; 2 L. W. 830; 18 M. L. T. 248; 13 A. L. J. 991; 17 Bom. L. R. 1006; 22 C. L. J. 516; (1915) M. W. N. 757 (P. C.).

There is no clear evidence on the record that Rani Kaniz Begam was in actual possession of the property in suit in the sense that she had control over the profits of the gifted villages. The proved intention of the Raja of Utraula to the contrary, as manifest from his evidence and from his overt acts rebuts the presumption that might otherwise be raised from entries in revenue papers and from other documents showing mere paper possession. Even as regards this paper possession of Rani Kaniz Begam the plaintiffs have only adduced evidence of such possession on her part in respect of three villages, namely Utraula and Allenpur grant so far as the gifted property is concerned, and village Bairampur included in the sale-deed; the evidence of possession by Rani Kaniz Begam, so far as other villages in suit are concerned, is either wanting or is of a period anterior to twelve years from the date of the filing of the suit and so does not save limitation. There is no evidence at all of the possession of Rani Kaniz Begam over the jungles in suit or over the small acquisitions referred to in Issue No. 2 (b) of this suit. In fact the filing of this suit appears to be a mere afterthought on the part of the plaintiffs and their pairekar. The plaintiffs relied upon the herculean efforts they imagined that the Raja of Nanpara would make in winning his claim in Suit No. 4 of 1928 against the Raja of Utraula and so did practically nothing to fight out this suit of theirs. But unfortunately for the plaintiffs the Raja of Nanpara and his uncle the Raja of Utraula wisely came to terms and Suit No. 4 of 1928 was decided according to the award of the arbitrator.

Thus at the last moment, when pressed by the Court to file their documentary evidence in this Suit No. 12, plaintiffs got printed copies of the documentary evidence filed by the Raja of Nanpara in Suit No. 4 of 1928 and filed it "en bloc" as their own evidence in this suit without troubling to sift it or to produce the necessary oral evidence to make some of the documents filed by them admissible in evidence. The sensible action of the Raja of Nanpara and of the Raja of Utraula in referring their disputes including Suit No. 4 of 1928, to the arbitration of the Commissioner of Lucknow, completely upset all the calculations of the plaintiffs, and where they had expected to glean a rich harvest without a stroke of effort on their part they found but a tabula rasa and they had neither the means nor the ability, nor even the inclination, to build their own structure thereon. This explains the gaps or lacunæ in the evidence of the plaintiffs even on the question of proving Rani Kaniz Begam's paper possession in respect of the entire property in suit for twelve years prior to the filing of the present Suit No. 12. In Gur Sahai v. Chedi (52), it was held by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh following the rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (53) that, where the plaintiffs allege their possession over immovable property and dispossession by the defendants, and where it was found that the possession of the plaintiffs was discontinued when defendants entered into possession not as tenants of the plaintiffs but in their own rights, the article of limitation applicable to such a suit was Art. 142 and not Art. 144, Sch. 1 Limitation Act; and it was further held that in cases falling under Art. 142, Limitation Act, the claimant must prove his possession within twelve years next preceding the date of the institution of the suit and in cases of that nature an enquiry into questions of adverse possession was irrelevant, and in cases falling under Art. 144 where the defence was one of title acquired by adverse possession for more than twelve years it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove his possession within twelve years from the commencement of the suit.

The article of the Limitation Act applicable to the facts of the present case is clearly Art. 142, Limitation Act and plaintiffs have failed to adduce any evidence of actual possession within twelve years from the date of their suit either by Rani Kaniz Begam or by themselves. Plaintiffs admittedly have not been themselves in possession of any village of Utraula Estate. There could be no presumption as to continuance of possession on the part of Rani Kaniz Begam even if I were to assume the deed of gift to be genuine and possession to have been once given to Rani Kaniz Begam. For the reasons given above I decide Issue No. 5 against the plaintiffs and hold that the claim of the plaintiff in this Suit No. 12, is not within limitation.

The next issue is Issue No. 6 which runs as follows:

"Was the right to the land covered by the jungle in villages Nos. 8 to 12 in List A attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928 also included in the deed of gift executed by the defendant Raja of Utraula on 12th April 1910 in favour of his wife?"

The deed of gift of 12th April 1910 is Ex. A-261 (page 526 of Suit No. 12). A perusal of this deed itself shows that what was gifted was the timber of the trees of the jungle and not also the land upon which the jungle stood. The phrase in this document Ex. A-261 "without exception of any tree" clearly shows that it was the intention of the donor to give away all the trees of the jungle without exception. If he had so wanted to make a gift of the land upon which the jungle stood he would have used some such phrase as "without exception of any biswa of land." Moreover, the land upon which the jungle stood was in no risk of being taken away from the Raja of Utraula. What the latter feared was that the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich might get his jungle leased out to Government, a course of action which was extremely distasteful to the Raja. The intention therefore of the Raja of gifting his jungles to his wife Rani Kaniz Begam, was to save his jungles from being leased out by the Deputy Commissioner; and the question of gifting the soil upon which the jungle stood never perhaps even crossed his mind, nor is there any expression in this deed of gift from which such an intention can be even remotely gathered. No area of the jungle which would have reference to the land upon which the jungle stood is given. There is no evidence that existing trees have sprouted out of the old trees gifted, or that new trees had been planted in these jungles since the execution of the deed of gift. My finding on Issue No. 6 is therefore that the land covered by the jungle was not included in the deed of gift of April 1910 executed by the defendant Raja of Utraula in favour of his wife Rani Kaniz Begam and I decide this issue accordingly.

Issue No. 7—This is the most important issue in this case and is as follows:

"Had the defendant Raja of Utraula the intention to part with the property gifted by the deed of 12th April 1910? And was actual delivery of possession made to the donee (the defendant's wife) in consequence of the execution of this deed of gift?"

"Was this deed of gift a fictitious and colourable transaction which was never intended to be and was not in fact given effect to?"

The burden of proving the first part of this issue lies upon the plaintiffs and of the latter apart on defendant No. 1. This issue was deliberately framed in the manner set forth above after due consideration of the arguments of the learned Counsel of both parties at the commencement of trial of this suit. It is also in consonance with the pleadings of the parties. The plaintiffs came to Court on the basis of a deed of gift, and they must therefore, prove the intention of the donor to gift away his property and also prove the actual possession of the donee over the property gifted to her.

In Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (54) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down clearly the rule of law governing gift under Muhammadan Law as follows:

"In Chaudhri Mehdi Hasain v. Muhammad Hasan (55) it is laid down by this Board that, according to Muhammadan Law a holder of property may in his lifetime give away the whole or part of it if he complies with certain forms, but that it is incumbent on those who seek to set up such a transaction to prove that those forms have been complied with, and this will be so whether the gift be made with or without consideration. If the latter, then, unless it be accompanied by delivery of the thing given so far as it is capable of delivery, it will be invalid. If the former, delivery of possession is not necessary, but actual payment of the consideration must be proved and the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in praesenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee must also be proved. The case of Rani Khujooroonissa v. Roushan Jehan (56) supports this statement of the law."

In Amjad Khan v. Ashraf Khan (38) their Lordships of the Privy Council delivered themselves to the following pronouncement:

"In order therefore to constitute a valid gift inter vivos under the Muhammadan Law applicable to this case, three conditions are necessary: (1) manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor; (2) the acceptance of the donee, either impliedly; or expressly (3) the taking possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actual or constructively: see also Mohammad Abdul Ghani v. Fakar Jahan Begam (57)."

The first thing the plaintiffs had to prove in this case was, therefore, that the Raja of Utraula had a bona fide intention of divesting himself in presenti of his proprietary title in the villages gifted to his wife. The plaintiffs have adduced no evidence of any kind, oral or documentary, to prove that the Raja of Utraula had any such intention of passing the beneficial interest in the property gifted to his wife. On the contrary, defendant No. 1, the Raja of Utraula has not only examined himself as his own witness and subjected himself to a very severe and unpleasant cross-examination, but has also, led evidence to disprove any such intention on his part and to explain the reasons which led him to execute a fictitious deed of gift in favour of his wife.

The Privy Council rulings reported as Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Murad Bukksh (58), Mohamai Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Sakhawat Ali Khan (59), Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Sheorattangir (60) and Ram Autar v. Raja Muhammad Mumtaz Ali Khan (61) all go to prove that Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan, defendant No. 1 in Suit No. 12, was a posthumous son of Raja Raiasat Ali Khan born on 6th October, 1865, and came of age on 6th October, 1886, and that on his attaining majority and after his estate had been released by the Court of Wards, he in 1888 filed several suits challenging the entries in settlement records made during the period of his minority when many claims against him were fraudulently admitted by the agents of the Court of Wards. Some of these claims of the Raja were established to be true by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council; as for example, in the appeal by the [Raja of Utraula] Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Sakhawat Ali Khan (59).

(The learned Judge here considered evidence and proceeded:)

Village Mohammadpur Banjraha, another of the gifted villages, was won by the Raja from the Privy Council and this village must have been very dear to the heart of the old talukdar as he had fought hard and paid dearly for winning back this village: see Ram Autar v. Raja Mohammad (58) 29 A. 708; 10 O. C. 318; 34 I. A. 142; 9 Bom. L. R. 851; 11 O. W. N. 913; 6 O. L. J. 693; 17 M. L. J. 400; 2 M. L. T. 402 (P. O.).

mad Mumtaz Ali Khan (61) and the evidence of D. 2, W. 16, page 413, line 40. Villages Masihabad Grant and Allanpur Grant were originally jungle land and the timber of the jungles was very valuable and as the Raja did not desire that he should lease these jungles to Government, as suggested by the Deputy Commissioner in charge of his district, he gifted away these jungles to his wife so as to put it out of his own power to comply with the wishes of his district officer.

In fact the cream of the Raja's estate was included in this deed of gift; the valuable jungles in Tendwa, Mahua, Sonapar, Pipra and Lokia-Bhar were included in this deed of gift (Ex. A-26, page 326). It is, therefore, quite clear to me from the direct and circumstantial evidence on the record that the Raja of Utraula had no real intention of passing the beneficial interest in these villages to his wife Rani Kaniz Begam. His whole object in gifting the jungles to his wife was to screen them from the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda. In Nirmal Chandra Bonnerjee v. Mohammad Siddique (62) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the probabilities together with the more definite outlines of the evidence, should be followed when details are numerous and complicated; and in Mariam Bibi v. Shaikh Muhammad Ibrahim (63) Mukerjee, J., of the Calcutta High Court laid down the criterion to be followed in such cases as follows:

"In the case of a transfer for consideration where the question arises whether the ostensible purchaser is also the real purchaser, it is possible to apply the familiar test, usually conclusive in this class of cases, namely, what is the source of the purchase-money. In a case of gift however, when it is alleged that the transaction was fictitious, this test naturally fails and we have to rely upon other aspects of the matter, namely, the surrounding circumstances contemporaneous with the gift and the subsequent conduct of the parties concerned."

Applying this test I find that the Raja of Utraula treated the gifted property as his own; the management and collection of rent in respect of these gifted villages remained the same as before the execution of the deed of gift; the income from the gifted property was not accounted separately from the income of the rest of the estate. D. W. No. 18, Karm Ahmad, at page 323, deposes that there was no difference in the management of the gifted villages before the deed of gift was executed and after its execution. The income of these gifted villages always went into the Raja's treasury and the land revenue was always paid by the Raja himself. This witness has not been shaken in cross-examination by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. This witness was also the attesting witness to the execution of the deed of gift in respect of the residential house of the Raja. Similarly D. 2, W. 12 Zakir Husain at page 388 also gives evidence to the same effect. His evidence too is not shaken in cross-examination. This fact clearly shows that the deed of gift was really fictitious and that the Raja never had any intention of passing the beneficial interest in the property to his wife Kaniz Begam. Another piece of circumstantial evidence which also points inevitably to the same conclusion is that every act of a permanent nature in connexion with these gifted villages was always done by the Raja himself; as for instance, it was the Raja himself who gave permission to tenants to construct wells and not the ostensible owner, his wife Rani Kaniz Begam. D. 2, W. 10 Shafaat Husain, page 384, deposes that in the register of immovable property kept by the notified area of Utraula the Raja's name is entered and the Raja was paid the rent of Rs. 30 although his wife Rani Kaniz Begam was the ostensible owner of the village of Utraula. Again D. 2 W. 11, Tirbeni Prasad, at page 386, deposes that Saffali Bania constructed a well in Utraula with the permission of the Raja of Utraula: see Ex. A-260, page 325. Similarly in Allenpur-Grant, one of the gifted villages, Birtanti Kori was given an advance of Re. 50 by the Raja himself for constructing a well (see Ex. A-256, page 318) and the evidence of Ribai, the marginal witness (D. 2, W. 18, page 418) and of Birtanti himself (D. 2, W. 17, page 417) in proof of this deed of agreement.

Another circumstance which goes to show that the deed of gift was fictitious is the fact that the Raja himself paid the land revenue of his entire estate: (see Ex. A-1 to A-194). There is no rebuttal by the plaintiffs and no evidence to show that the land revenue of the gifted villages was paid by Rani Kaniz Begam, their predecessor-in-interest.

To sum up: therefore, the payment of land revenue by the Raja himself, the treatment and management of collections of rents, etc., in respect of the gifted property remaining the same before as after the execution of the deed of gift, the undisturbed possession of the Raja over the gifted property, the Raja giving compensation to Munshi Abdul Hamid in respect of the construction of the road to Phaguia, the giving of advances by the Raja to tenants for the construction of wells in the gifted villages, the rent of Utraula being paid by the Chairman of the notified area of Utraula to the Raja himself—all these are circumstances which go to prove that the Raja of Utraula had no intention of passing the beneficial interest in the gifted property to his wife Rani Kaniz Begam.

At no time did Rani Kaniz Begam ever assert her possession over the gifted property. Patwari Udai Raj, as D. 2, W. 5 (page 351) deposes that possession over the gifted villages remained as of old with Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan. D. 2, W. 8 Neeber Ghosi (page 360) who cultivates land in Utraula deposes that he has always paid rent to the Raja of Utraula and to nobody else. D. 2, W. 13 Chandika Prasad (at page 391) deposes that Bairia-Surjanpur was in the possession of the Raja of Utraula even after the khewat stood in the name of Rani Kaniz Begam. D. 2 W. 6 R m Samajh Kurmi (at page 435), who cultivates land in Bairia Surjanpur deposes that he has all along been paying rent to the Raja of Utraula and to nobody else. D. 2, W. 31 Ujjar Julaha, at page 445, deposes that he cultivates land in Masihabad Grant and has always been paying rent to the Raja of Utraula and to nobody else. Birtanti and Ribai (D. 2, W. 17 and D. 2, W. 18) referred to above, give similar evidence as regards village Allenpur-Grant. Rani Kaniz Begam had no separate rent collecting staff of her own in respect of the property standing in her name. The Raja's old servants, namely, Udit Narain Rameshwar, Mohamad Jaffar, Ali Mirza Karam Ahmao, Mohammad Naqvi and Ali Bahadur managed the property standing in her name as if it were the Raja's own property.

It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that Rani Kaniz Begam executed a power-of-attorney in favour of her husband (Ex. 186, page 347). It must, however, be remembered that this power-of-attorney was executed by the Rani two years before the deed of gift of 1910 in connexion with another matter. This power-of-attorney had no connexion whatsoever with the deed of gift of 1910 or with the mortgage deed of 1890 or with the oral gift of village Katra in 1900.

It is in evidence that both Babu Mano har Lal and the Ajodhia Bank were paid off in full, so the other contention urged on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the Raja of Utraula attempted to defraud his creditors, and could not now be allowed to take advantage of his fraud, is also shown to be unsound. Exhibit A-231, page 255, is a paper which shows that the general agent of the Ajodhia Bank Ltd., certified in Court that the Bank of Ajodhia had received in full satisfaction of all its dues, the sum of Rs. 22,110-11-9 on 18th May, 1910. The Raja of Utraula, when examined as D. 2, W. 34 (at page 453) himself deposes that he has by now paid off all his creditors including the Benares Bank. There can, therefore, be no estoppel against the Raja, and as a matter of fact no creditor of the Utraula estate is a party to this Suit No. 12 of 1928. It is, therefore, in my opinion, open to the Raja of Utraula to show the true nature of the transaction evidenced by the deed of gift of 1910. In Smyes v. Hughes (64) it was held by Lord Romilly, Master of the Rolls, that "the mere intention to effect an illegal object when the assignment was executed does not deprive the assignor of his right to recover the property from the assignee who has given no consideration for it. It is clear in the present case that no harm has been done to any creditor, and, in fact the suit is now being prosecuted for the purpose of enabling the creditors to recover something."

It is equally clear that in the present case too no creditor has been defrauded and the Raja of Utraula being a defendant his position is even stronger. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Saran Singh v. Pran Peary (65):

"The instrument being relied upon by a person out of possession, seeking to obtain possession through the medium of a foreclosure suit, it appears to their Lordships that there is nothing whatever to prevent the defendant from showing the real truth of the transaction."

The remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council apply with peculiar appropriateness to the facts of the present case. The Raja of Utraula is a defendant in this case and the plaintiffs who are out of possession are seeking to obtain possession from him and are relying upon a deed of gift executed by him. It is also proved in this case that no creditor and no other person has been defrauded by the act of the defendant talukdar of Utraula. In these circumstances it is open to the latter to prove the true nature of the transaction as to the deed of gift and to reveal the real truth about it.

And here I may pause to discuss an interesting argument advanced by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that under s. 92, Evidence Act, it was not open to defendant No. 1, the Raja of Utraula, to adduce any evidence to contradict and vary the terms of his own deeds of gift executed by him in favour of his wife. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the plea raised by the Raja of Utraula that the deeds of gift were fictitious and colourable transactions is barred by s. 92, Evidence Act. I have listened with interest to the elaborate arguments advanced on this point by Mr. Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. It seems to me however that this contention of the plaintiffs is not sound. As pointed out by Mr. Ameer Ali in his standard work on the Law of Evidence in India (Edn. 8, page 613):

"this s. (92) was framed in accordance with the current of English decisions upon the question of how far parol evidence can be admitted to affect a contract.....Evidence may be given firstly to show that there was really never any disposition at all; and secondly, to show that the document produced is not the whole disposition"

"Firstly—though evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, yet evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible. Notwithstanding a paper writing which purports to be a contract may be produced, it is still competent to the Court to find upon sufficient evidence that this writing is not really the contract. And the risk of groundless defence does not affect the rule itself, though it suggests caution in acting on it."

Taylor in his Treatise on the Law of Evidence administered in England and Ireland (Vol. 2, page 778), para. 1135, Edn. 11, lays down the rules as follows:

"Again, this rule is not infringed by the admission of parol evidence, under proper pleading showing that the instrument is altogether void, or that it never had any legal existence or binding force, either by reason of forgery or fraud, or for the illegality of the subject-matter or for want of due execution and delivery."

In a case decided by the Madras High Court before the passing of Evidence Act (I of 1872) reported as Guddalur Ruthna Mudaliyar v. Kunnaitur Arumuga Mudaliyar (66), the learned Chief Justice of Madras made the following weighty observations:

"But it is said there is a written contract, the promissory note, and that no addition to, or variation from, its terms can be made by parol. With respect to this, I take the law to be that notwithstanding a paper writing which purports to be a contract may be produced, it is still competent to the Court to find upon sufficient evidence that this writing is not really the contract. And the risk of groundless defence does not affect the rule itself, though it suggests caution in acting on it."

In Pym v. Campbell (67) Erle, J., says:

"The point made is that this is a written agreement absolute on the face of it, and that evidence was admitted to show it was conditional; and if that had been so, it would have been wrong. But I am of opinion that the evidence showed that in fact there was never any agreement at all. The production of a paper purporting to be an agreement by a party, with his signature attached, affords a strong presumption that it is his written agreement, and if in fact he did sign the paper 'animus contrahendi' the terms contained in it are conclusive and cannot be varied by parol evidence; but in the present case the defence begins one step earlier; the parties met and expressly stated to each other that, though for convenience they would then sign the memorandum of the terms, yet they were not to sign it as an agreement until Abernethie was consulted. I grant the risk that such a defence may be set up without ground; and I agree that a Jury should therefore always look on such a defence with suspicion; but, if it be proved that in fact the paper was signed with the express intention that it should not be an agreement, the other party cannot fix it as an agreement upon those so signing. The distinction in point of law is that evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, but evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible."

Similarly, in the present case the ruling in Pym v. Campbell (67) is very apposite. Here too the defence of the Raja of Uraula starts one step earlier. He admits that he executed the deed of gift in favour of his wife but he alleges that he had no intention of gifting away the property, that in short he had no animus contrahendi (the intention of entering into a contract or gift) when he executed the deeds of gift; and evidence to prove such a defence is admissible and does not violate the provisions of s. 92, Evidence Act. Pym v. Campbell (67) has been reported as John Pym v. Campbell (68). In Halsbury's Law of England, Vol. 13, page 567, para 775, are collected a large number of instances where the rule as to the exclusion of extrinsic evidence does not apply and one of these is that where the document was neither intended by the parties to be an agreement at all, evidence to show the true nature of the transaction was held admissible.

So also in Stephen's Commentaries on (67) (1856) 6 E. & B. 370; 25 L. J. Q. B. 277; 2 Jur. (N. S.) 641; 4 W. R. 528; 106 R. R. 632; 119 E. R. 903.

the Laws of England (Edn. 19, Vol. 3, page 221) it is laid down that

"written contracts like all other contracts must be made animus contrahendi, and parol evidence is always admissible to show that there was no animus."

In Bowes v. Foster (69) decided in 1858 oral evidence was allowed to be given to show that a written agreement for the conveyance of property was only a fictitious sale to avoid execution proceedings against the property. Lord Chief Baron Pollock in delivering the leading judgment in the case said:

"Where goods are professed to be transferred by deed, the deed actually transfers the property; and the moment the deed is executed by law the property ceases to be the property of the person who has executed the deed and becomes the property of the person in whose favour it has been executed. That is not so with a fictitious invoice or a receipt for money which has never been paid. The documents no doubt are evidence of a fact, but the question is whether they may not be rebutted by evidence that there was no sale and no payment Then is there any established rule of evidence or practice in the administration of justice, that, where parol documents are produced leading to one result it is not competent to contradict them and to show that the real truth is not that which the documents import? I think that there is no such rule."

Martir, B in this very case held that there was no real sale and that the invoice only created an appearance of a sale and that no property really passed by such a transaction.

The rule of English Law laid down in Pym v. Campbell (67) was followed as late as 1925 by the Patna High Court in a ruling reported as Ramdhani Singh v. Kewal Mani Bibi (70) and it was followed even before the passing of Evidence Act by the Madras High Court in the ruling quoted above, Guddalur Ruthna Mudaliyar v. Kunnaitur Arumuga Mudaliyar (66).

Finally in this connexion I may quote the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Baij Nath Singh v. Mohammad Abba (71) in which their Lordships held that under s. 92, Evidence Act as between the parties to an instrument, oral evidence of intention was not admissible for the purpose either of construing deeds or of proving intention of the parties, but that section merely prescribed a rule of evidence and did not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in question in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

So too in the present suit it is open to the defendant Raja of Utraula to depose to and to prove facts which will go to show the true nature of the deeds of gift which he executed and the motives which actuated him into entering into such transactions with his wife. In a Full Bench ruling reported as Beni Madhab Das v. Sadasukh Kotary (72) their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court had occasion to discuss the true construction of s. 92, Evidence Act; and here I may be permitted to quote the very pertinent observations, if I may respectfully say so, of the learned Woodroffe, J.:

"The rule of evidence which is embodied in para. 1 s. 92, Evidence Act, presupposes the validity of the transaction evidenced by the documents to which that rule is to be applied. If therefore that validity is impeached, is no defence to point to the apparent rectitude of the document and to claim protection from enquiry under a rule which exists against the contradiction and variance of the terms only of those instruments the validity of which is not in question. In such cases the Court is not bound by what has been described as the paper expressions of the parties and is not precluded from enquiring into the real nature of the transaction between them."

The Rangoon High Court in a case reported as Abdul v. Arlin (73) also cited the authority of Pym v. Campbell (67) as late as 1926 and held that where a person who had executed a document sought to show that the document was a mere sham deed and represented nothing, he was not seeking to vary or contradict any of the terms of the document, and oral evidence was admissible to prove that there was no such agreement between the parties as was represented by the document.

In a still more recent ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council In re Mohammad Ali Mohammad Khan v. Bismillah Begam (74) their Lordships held that if a person executed a deed of wakf but without any intention of divesting himself of the ownership of the property, his real intention being to utilize the document as a shield against any claims that might be made against him in future, then the deed of wakf was invalid as there was no real intention to create a wakf.

I think I have said enough to show that there is no force in the contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that defendant No. 1 the Raja of Utraula is estopped by s. 92, Evidence Act from pleading that the deeds of gift and the mortgage-deed are sham and fictitious transactions. I hold that defendant No. 1 the Raja of Utraula is legally competent to raise the plea that the deeds of gift are fictitious and colourable transactions. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs after the close of the oral arguments of both parties has submitted to me written arguments in reply to the arguments of the learned Counsel for the defendants and in the course of these written arguments has invited my attention to the observations made by Ashworth, J., in Lachman Das v. Ram Prasad (75), in which that learned Judge has thought fit to criticise the remarks made in Mr. Ameer Ali's work on the Law of Evidence in India, occurring at page 613. With all due respect to that learned Judge, I am in entire disagreement with him when he asserts that the remarks of Meers Woodroffe and Ameer Ali in their standard work have often misled Courts. The clear and weighty reasoning of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in the Full Bench ruling reported as Beni Madhab Das's case (72) quoted above fully meet the strictures on this point made by Ashworth, J., and I need not say anything more on the subject.

The first part of issue No. 7 casts upon the plaintiffs the burden of proving that defendant No. 1, the Raja of Utraula had the intention of parting with his property and gifting it to his wife, as also the further burden of proving that actual possession of the gifted property was made to the donee by the donor. There is no evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to prove actual delivery of possession over the gifted villages. Defendant No. 1 the Raja of Utraula has proved to my entire satisfaction that he had no intention of parting with the ownership of the gifted property and that he never actually delivered possession over the gifted property to his wife. If there was no intention to part with ownership, then, mere mutation of names and entries in revenue papers showing Rani Kaniz Begam as the owner of the gifted villages count for nothing and do not prove the actual possession of the donee. The plaintiffs merely rely upon the deeds of gift themselves to prove the intention of the donor to gift the property covered by these two deeds of gift. On the other hand, I have shown above from the various circumstances of the case and from the evidence of the Raja himself and of his witnesses that the Raja had not got the intention, the animus, of giving away his property but that his whole object was to screen it from his creditors and from the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich as far as the jungles were concerned. This was the real intention of the Raja of Utraula whether it be laudable or not. In carrying out his real intention the Raja of Utraula had to have mutation of names in the revenue registers of proprietary titles namely, the khewats, effected in the name of his wife in order to keep up the pretence of his wife being the owner of the gifted villages; and in accordance with rent Court procedure suits for arrears of rents against the tenants of the gifted villages had also to be filed in the name of the ostensible owner of the village Rani Kaniz Begam. These ostensible acts of ownership on the part of Rani Kaniz Begam really prove nothing. They are part and parcel of the scheme designed by the Raja of Utraula to safeguard his property from the attacks of his creditors and from what the Raja conceived to be the attack of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich. This scheme was inaugurated by the Raja executing the deed of gift in favour of his wife and the rest followed as a matter of course as night follows day. Actual possession or receipt of profits by Rani Kaniz Begam or by her alleged successors-in-interest, the plaintiffs, is not even proved.

As to the value attached to mutation proceedings their Lordships of the Privy Council have held in Nirman Singh v. Lal Rudra Partab Narain Singh (76) that it was well established that an order made in mutation proceedings was not a judicial determination of title or proprietary interest.

The ruling in Ma Mi v. Kallandar Amel (77) cited by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs does not go against the principle enunciated by their Lordships in Nirman Singh's case (76) quoted above; but in this case from Rangoon their Lordships held that there was a clear intention of creating a trust and direct evidence that the author of the trust Sheikh Moiuddin used to be send regularly Rs. 450 to his wife as mutawalli of the trust. In Quinn v. Leathem (78) the Lord Chancellor delivered himself of this weighty pronouncement:

"There are two observations of a general character which I wish to make, and one is to repeat what I have very often said before, that very judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found."

"The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides."

These observations of the Right Honourable the Earl of Halsbury apply with force to the contention on behalf of the plaintiffs that the ruling in the Rangoon case quoted above is applicable to the facts of the present case. In my opinion the facts of the present case are very different from the facts of the Rangoon case relied upon by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs.

Similarly in Amina Bibi v. Khatija Bibi (79), and in Emnabai v. Hajir Bai (80) relied upon by the plaintiffs' learned Counsel there was also no question raised as to the fictitious nature of the deed of gift. In the present case however the entire defence of the Raja of Utraula rests upon the plea that the deeds of gift are fictitious and colourable transactions. Equally inapplicable to the facts of this suit is the ruling reported as Mohammad Mumtaz Ahmad Khan v. Zubaida Jan (81) which has been cited by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. Delivery of possession of the gifted property was the sole question involved in the case. No plea was taken in that case as in this that the gift was fictitious and so the question of the fictitious nature of the gift was outside the scope of the ruling relied upon by the plaintiffs. These rulings, therefore, do not in my opinion help the plaintiffs at all; they cannot by citing rulings fill up the gaps in their evidence. Ostensible acts of ownership under an ostensible deed of gift do not advance the plaintiffs' case at all nor do they prove actual enjoyment of rents and profits. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Syed Uzhar Ali v. Bibi Altaf Fatima (82) "evidence of acts of ostensible ownership prove nothing."

My attention has also been invited to the observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Imam Bandi Begam v. Kamleswar Prasad (83), which runs as follows:

"Where there are benami transactions and the question is who is the real owner, the actual possession or receipt of rents of the property is most important."

Such proof of actual possession or receipt of the rents by Rani Kaniz Begam in the present case or by the plaintiffs, her would be successors-in-interest is conspicuous by its absence

For the reasons given above I decide issues Nos. 7 and 8 against the plaintiffs and in favour of defendant No. 1 and hold that the two deeds of gift were fictitious and colourable transactions and that the Raja of Utraula had no intention of parting with the property gifted by the deeds of 12th April, 1910, and 28th November, 1910, and that actual delivery of possession over the gifted property mentioned in these two deeds was not made to the donee Rani Kaniz Begam in consequence of the execution of these deeds of gift.

I next come to discuss Issue No. 9 which is as follows:

"Are the deeds of gift invalid and ineffectual under s. 13, Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) even if they be assumed to be otherwise valid and operative as alleged in para. 17 of the written statement of the defendant."

Under sub-s. 2, s. 13, Act I of 1869 delivery of possession must be made to the donee within six months from the dates of the execution of the deeds of gift. The amended Oudh Estates Act came into force on 21st February 1910, and the two deeds of gift of April, 1910, and November, 1910, being subsequent to this date 21st February, 1910, are governed by this amending Act of 1910. Delivery of possession in s. 13, Oudh Estates Act must mean delivery of actual possession apart from the mere recitals in the deeds of gift or mere paper entries in revenue registers, otherwise the requirements of actual delivery of possession in s. 13, Act I of 1869, would be superfluous and meaningless. As I have shown above in deciding issues Nos. 7 and 8, there was no actual delivery of possession to Rani Kaniz Begam or control of the management or control over the income of rents and profits of the gifted villages by her. That being the case, issue No. 9 must also be decided against the plaintiffs and I find accordingly that the two deeds of gift of 1910 are invalid and ineffectual also under s. 13, Oudh Estates Act, inasmuch as actual delivery of possession was not made to Rani Kaniz Begam within six months from the date of the execution of each of these deeds of gift.

The next issue is issue No. 10 relating to village Katra and is as follows:

"Did the defendant Raja of Utraula make an oral gift of village Katra entered in list No. 4 at item No. 1 attached to the plaint in suit No. 12 of 1928 to his wife in 1900, and has she been in proprietary possession since then till her death in 1919?"

The alleged oral gift of village Katra, said to have been made in 1910 (?), is governed by the provisions of the Unamended Act I of 1869, and s. 17 of the Act requires that the deed of gift must be registered and there must be actual delivery of possession. In the case of the gift of village Katra there was no deed of gift executed and registered and actual delivery of possession has not been proved. Apart from the order of mutation there is no evidence even of any oral gift having been effected in favour of Rani Kaniz Begam by her husband defendant No. 1. As has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chokhey Singh v. Jote Singh (84), mere mutation of names by itself confers no proprietary title. In the application made on behalf of the Raja of Utraula for mutation of names in respect of village Katra (Ex. 86, part III, page 4. Suit No. 12) there is not a word said regarding the nature of the transfer; there is only a desire expressed that mutation of names be effected in favour of Rani Kaniz Begam in respect of village Katra of which the applicant was the owner. There is no casual mention even that the village has been gifted to Rani Kaniz Begam. Again in the statement of Subhan Ali Khan, special agent and Naib of the Raja of Utraula (Ex. 188, page 351, Suit No. 12) there occurs the phrase that village Katra has been orally given away by the Raja to his wife Rani Kaniz Begam. The phrase used by the agent is "zabani dediya". There is no assertion by the Naib Subhan Ali that actual possession of this village Katra had been made over either to Rani Kaniz Begam or that the Raja of Utraula had any real intention of parting with this village or that the Rani had accepted the gift of this village made to her by her husband. Under Muhammadan Law certain requirements have to be fulfilled in respect of oral gift even and these have not been deposed to in the present case. In Chaudhari Mehdi Hasan v. Mohammad Hasan (55) their Lordships of the Privy Council stated the law as follows:

"By the Muhammadan Law (by which the present case is governed) a holder of property may in his lifetime give away the whole or part of his property if he complies with certain forms; but it is incumbent upon those who seek to set up such a transaction to show very clearly that those forms have been complied with. It may be by deed of gift simply, or by deed of gift coupled with consideration."

In Sadik Husain v. Hashim Ali Khan (54), the Privy Council laid down that the necessity under Muhammadan Law for delivery of possession in the case of a gift without consideration was not modified by the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882), although the gift was made by a registered deed of trust.

The Rajah of Utraula or rather his agent on his behalf did not use any such technical terms as hiba with reference to the oral gift of village Katra to Rani Kaniz Begam. The intention of the would-be donor seems to me to be merely to have mutation of names effected in favour of his wife in respect of village Katra and nothing more. Exhibit 193, page 356 is a copy of the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Utraula in the mutation case relating to the village Katra to the effect that at the time of verification of the khatauni or register of proprietary titles by the proprietor, mutation of names would be effected in favour of Rani Kaniz Begam with consent of the agent for Raja Muhammad Mumtaz Ali Khan. Thus it is clear that no enquiry was made by the Revenue Court as to the fact of actual delivery of possession to the donee nor as to the intention of the donor to gift this village to his wife. The simple desire of the Raja to have mutation of names effected in favour of his wife was blindly carried out by the Revenue Court regardless of the requirements as to certain forms necessary to make the oral gift of village Katra valid under Muhammadan Law. Neither under the Oudh Estates Act nor under Muhammadan Law can mere mutation of names confer title. Rani Kaniz Begam never had any actual possession over village Katra as is clear from the evidence of Udit (D. 2, W. 6, page 355) and of Mahomed (D. 2, W. 7, page 357) and of the Raja himself (D. 2, W. 34 at pages 454, 467 and 468).

Exhibits A-391 (page 5, part III. Suit No.

Barhai a cultivator of village Katra recorded on 22nd December, 1919, in a mutation case which proves that village Katra was all along in the possession of defendant No. 1 the Raja of Utraula and that the latter always got rent from the tenants of his village. Exhibit A-390 is another deposition of another cultivator of village Katra, namely Udit who also gives similar evidence of possession by the Raja of Utraula over this village. Thus, even if it be assumed for the sake of argument that an oral gift of village Katra was made by the Raja of Utraula in favour of his wife it was not a valid gift in the eye of the law, whether the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act or of pure Muhammadan Law be made applicable to the construction of this oral gift. I accordingly decide issue No. 1 and hold that the Raja of Utraula did not make any valid gift of village Katra in favour of his wife Rani Kaniz Begam and that the latter was never in proprietary possession of the same till her death in 1919.

I next come to issue No. 11 which runs as follows:

11(a) "Was the mortgage deed of 17th August 1890, relating to the property at No. 18 (a) (b), (c), (d) and (e) entered in list A attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928 fictitious?"

11(b) Were the sale-deeds relating to the property marked Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of List B and Nos. 14, 15, 16, and 17 of List attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928 benami and acquired with the money belonging to the defendant?

[The learned Judge decided issue No. 2 (a) against the plaintiffs and in favour of defendants and held that the mortgage-deed of 7th August, 1890, was purely fictitious.]

Issue No. 2(b) relates to certain smaller items of property claimed by plaintiffs. These acquisitions may be divided under two heads:

(a) Acquisition of tenant and grove rights in miscellaneous plots situated in village which were mutated in the name of Rani Kaniz Begam.

(b) Acquisition of shares of under-proprietary rights in villages of which the Raja was the undisputed superior proprietor.

[The learned Judge held that the plaintiff's suit in respect of these items in dispute in List A attached to the plaint referred to in Issue No. 2(b) fail for want of proof.]

The items of property mentioned in Schedule B attached to the plaint and covered by group (d) of this issue have been mentioned in para. 3 of the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1928. The plaintiffs are not the heirs of Rani Kaniz Begam under Muhammadan Law but they claim this property under the custom of single heir succession to the exclusion of Rani Kaniz Begam's husband and her have failed to prove the custom of the exclusion of females by collaterals, and they have not even pleaded any custom of the exclusion of husbands by collaterals.

Then again it is to be noted that the purchases made in the name of Rani Kaniz Begam by the Raja of Utraula defendant No. 1 were in respect of under-proprietary rights in villages in which he held superior proprietary rights. This was done obviously with a view to avoid merger of under-proprietary rights in superior proprietary rights. By the device of purchasing under-proprietary rights in the name of his wife the Raja of Utraula preserved intact these under-proprietary rights notwithstanding the fact that he as superior proprietor had purchased them. These purchases were really benami transactions.

In respect of item No. 1 of schedule B attached to the plaint there is the sale deed of a three annas under-proprietary share in village Bhairauli executed by Madar Khan and others. Item No. 2 of schedule B attached to the plaint relates to village Bannu Kapur, the sale-deed of a one anna under-proprietary share in respect of which was executed by Tilakgir Goshain (Ex. 3, part 3, page 14). Item No. 3, schedule B attached to the plaint relates to village Tilokpur the under-proprietary rights of which were sold by Musammal Subhaga to Rani Kaniz Begam on 17th May, 1901, (Ex. 87, part 3, page 16). Mr. Abdul Hamim (D. 2, W. 16, page 401, line 5) had deposed that he advised Pt. Kanhaiya the manager of the Utraula Estate to purchase the under-proprietary rights in this village on behalf of the Raja in the name of his wife Rani Kaniz Begam. Mumtaz Ali Khan (D. 2, W. 32 at page 44) a nephew of Changur Khan has fully proved the execution of the saledeed of under-proprietary rights by Chunjr (?), Madar and others in village Baairauli in favour of Rani Kaniz Begam. He has proved that the sale consideration in respect of this saledeed was paid by Pt. Kanhaiya the Naib of the Utraula Estate on behalf of the Raja of Utraula but the saledeed was drawn up in the name of Rani Kaniz Begam ismfarazi. To the same effect is the evidence of Husain Ali Khan (D. 2, W. 23, page 450). The evidence of Budhgir (D. 2, W. 27, page 437) who is the son of Tilakgir Goshain not only proves the execution of the saledeeds (Ex. 3, page 14, part 3 and Ex. 27, page 16, part 3) but also that they are benami transactions and that Rani Kaniz Begam never had actual possession and enjoyment of the property entered in these benami sale deeds.

Exhibit 184 (page 341, part 3) and Ex. 241 (page 61, part 2) are copies of plaints filed by the Raja of Utraula against Rani Kaniz Begam and others for recovery of under-proprietary rent, and Ex. 185 (page 344, part 3) and Ex. 242 (page 65, part 2) are the decrees passed in these suits. These documents clearly go to show that the Raja of Utraula defendant No. 1 merely purchased these under proprietary shares in villages in the name of his wife in order to enable him to sue his recalcitrant under-proprietors for arrears of under-proprietary rent due from them without allowing the shares of those under-proprietors, which he had purchased from getting merged into his superior proprietary title. The Raja of Utraula under legal advice wanted to preserve intact the joint and several liabilities of the under-proprietors for payment of their under-proprietary rent and so he resorted to this dodge by buying up the shares of indigent under-proprietors in the name of his wife Rani Kaniz Begam. In this connexion, in support of his arguments, the learned Counsel for the Raja of Utraula cited two rulings reported as Rudra Partab Singh v. Sikandar Khan (85) and in Jugnu Khan v. Rudra Partab Singh (86).

There is no presumption that the doctrine of advancement prevails in this country. No presumption can, therefore, be made that the husband wanted to make a gift to his wife. In Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gunga Persaud Gosain (87) their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that "there is no authority in Indian law, no distinct case, or dictum, establishing or recognizing such a principle or such a rule."

Further on, their Lordships go on to state that

"various reasons may be urged against the abstract propriety of the English rule".

and in Maulvi Saiyid Uzhur Ali v. Bibi Ulfat Fatima (82) that their Lordships of the Privy Council re-affirmed their view and held "that there was no presumption of an advancement by the name of a son being used as a purchaser other than in the case of the name of a stranger being used."

In Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ramjit Singh (51) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the purchase of house property by a Hindu in the name of his Muhamadan mistress was a benami transaction and they repelled the contention that the intention of the talukdar was to confer a beneficial interest upon his mistress. They further held that

"the exception in our (English) Law by way of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply in India."

Similarly in Guran Ditta v. Ram Ditta († 8) it was held that a deposit by a Hindu of his own money in a Bank in the joint names of himself and his wife, and on the terms that it was to be payable to either or the survivor, did not on his death constitute a gift by him to his wife and that there was therefore a resulting trust in his favour in the absence of proof of a contrary intention and there was no presumption of an intended advancement in favour of a wife. In Prince Suleman Kadar Bahadur v. Nawab Mehndi (89) their Lordships of the Privy Council held a sale of a house between husband and wife to be benami although the wife was in possession of the house solely on the ground that the purchase money was paid by the husband. On the strength of the rulings quoted above it was argued by the learned Counsel for the Raja of Utraula that the slightest evidence as to the source from which the purchase money came was sufficient to establish the benami nature of the transaction.

In Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandarama Pillai (90), their Lordships of the Privy Council rejected the contention that a purchase of property by an Indian out of his own money in the name of his wife was not a benami transaction because it was made in pursuance of an alleged oral ante-nuptial agreement. The Madras High Court in Mollaya Padayachi v. Krishnaswami Iyer (91), following the ruling reported as Kerwick v. Kerwick (92), held that the purchase of immovable property by a Hindu in the name of his wife was a benami transaction and that the wife was merely a benamidar and that there was no presumption of an advancement.

Once it has been established that the source of money of the transaction flowed from the husband and that the transaction stood in the name of the wife, then it followed upon the strength of the rulings cited above that the transaction was a benami one and the wife was a mere benamidar. So too in the present suits all the circumstances point to these deeds of sale being all fictitious and the Raja of Utraula is clearly proved to be owner of the property in suit. For the reasons given above I decide issue No. 11 (b) also in favour of defendant No. 1 the Raja of Utraula and against the plaintiffs.

I come next to issue No. 12 which runs as follows:

"Do the villages marked 4 and 7 and entered in List A attached to the plaint in Suit No. 12 of 1901 constitute part of the Bilaspur estate within the meaning of s. 3 the Act I of 1896."

Item No. 4 List A attached to the plaint is village Masihabad-Grant and item No. 7 of the same list is village Allenpur-Grant. Exhibit A-246, p. 278 is an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of village Masihabad-Grant which shows that the Regular Settlement was made with the Raja of Utraula in respect of this village. This village must, therefore, be deemed to be a talukdari village and part of the taluka of Bilaspur within the meaning of s. 3, Act I of 1869. Exhibit A-247, p. 279, is an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of village Allenpur-Grant which shows that this village was formerly known as Durgapur jungle and was declared to be the property of Government. The latter sold it to one Mr. Cearns who renamed it after his wife as Helenpur which was subsequently corrupted into Allenpur. This village was subsequently acquired by the Raja of Utraula. It is, therefore, non-talukdari property. The conclusion arrived at by me in respect of these two villages, Items Nos. 4 and 7 of List A attached to the plaint, is virtually accepted by the learned Counsel of both parties. My finding on this issue is that item No. 4 Masihabad-Grant is talukdari property and item No. 7 Allenpur-Grant is non-talukdari property.

The next issue is issue No. 13 which is as follows:

"Is the suit as framed not maintainable on the ground that the suit is brought collectively by all the plaintiffs?"

This issue is virtually the same as issue No. 10 of Suit No. 11 of 1928 which I have decided in the early part of this judgment.

I need not, therefore, repeat once more my reasoning on this issue. For the reasons given by me in deciding issue No. 10 of Suit No. 11 of 1928, I decide this issue in favour of the plaintiffs and hold that Suit No. 12 of 1928, as framed, is also maintainable.

The last issue in this case is issue No. 14 which is as under:

Upon my findings in the issues decided above I decide this issue against the plaintiffs and hold that they are entitled to no relief.

For the reasons given above I dismiss also the claim of the plaintiffs in Suit No. 12 of 1928 with costs. Each of the defendants will be entitled to his separate costs from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have unnecessarily dragged defendant No. 2 the Raja of Nanpara in their Suit No. 12 of 1928, even after the Raja of Nanpara's claim in Suit No. 4 of 1928 against the Raja of Utraula in respect of this very property in suit had been dismissed by me in terms of the award of the arbitrator. The plaintiffs, when pointedly asked by the Counsel for the Raja of Nanpara to discharge his client, did not think it proper even at the time of hearing arguments to withdraw their suit against defendant No. 2, the Raja of Nanpara. It cannot, therefore, now be argued by the plaintiffs that their claim was only against the Raja of Utraula and that defendant No. 2 the Raja of Nanpara, was only a pro forma defendant. Even the reason which ostensibly justified the plaintiffs in impleading the Raja of Nanpara in this Suit No. 12 at the outset had long since ceased to exist when the Raja of Nanpara's claim against the Raja of Utraula had been dismissed by this Court. These considerations in my opinion justify me in allowing the Raja of Nanpara to have his full legal costs separately from the plaintiffs in this Suit No. 12 of 1928.

The result is that Suit No. 12 of 1928 like Suit No. 11 is dismissed with costs, and each of the defendants is allowed to have his costs separately from the plaintiffs who will bear their own costs.

In conclusion, I feel constrained to note that the trial of these two suits has made me realize with deep regret the absence of a law against champerty in India. As pointed out by the former Hon'ble Chief Judge in his judgment in F. O. A. No. 162 of 1911 (Ex. A-5 of Suit No. 11 at p. 264):

"there can be no doubt that toleration of champerty implies encouragement of fabrication of documents, fabrication of oral evidence, and the toleration of conduct in Courts of Law which is a direct incentive to retrogression in public morality."

This is the third litigation since 1904 connected with the Nanpara Estate, and it is as frivolous and vexatious as the claim set up by Abdul Hamid in the interpleader suit or that set up by Abdul Halim in the suit decided by the late Misra, J., on 16th September, 1927: see Ex. A-6, p. 297 of Suit No. 11.

The hope expressed by Kanhaiya Lal, J., at the close of his judgment in F. O. A. No. 162 of 1911, (Ex. A-5 at p. 296) that the rightful claimants will now be able to enjoy the Nanpara Estate "freed from the risk of further litigations" has so far been proved to be a vain hope. It is a matter for regret that in the present suits one of the financiers who has entered on this highly speculative litigation is no less a person than Maharaj Kunwar Captain Sardar Singhji, Dewan of Rutlam, son of Maharaj Adhiraj Sir Nahar Singh K. O. I. E., the Ruler of the Shahpur State in Rajputana, who has thought fit, behind the back of the Government of India and without its sanction, not only to buy up property in British India but even a law suit into the bargain. It is no concern of this Court if certain persons unwisely throw away good money after bad; but it is a matter of prime importance to this Court and to the sound administration of justice and its fair name that such champertous conduct and such champertous litigation should be strongly reprobated. But however strongly a Judge may condemn this evil, it cannot be eradicated unless the Legislature steps in and passes an Act making champerty illegal, at least in the Province of Oudh where it is most rampant.

Finally, I cannot conclude this lengthy judgment without expressing my deep sense of obligation and gratitude for the very able and illuminative arguments advanced before me by Mr. Wasim and Mr. Hyder Hussein, the learned Counsel for the two principal defendants, the Raja of Nanpara and the Raja of Utraula. A just meed of praise and appreciation is also due to Mr. St. George Jackson the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs for the great care and learning that he displayed and the painstaking efforts that he made in putting up as stout a fight as one could well put up for a weak and lost cause, the genesis of which is shrouded in iniquity.

Adverse possession—Landlord and tenant—Entry in village papers as bila tasfia tenants and twelve years' possession—Possession, whether adverse—Adverse possession, essentials of.

Where a person is in possession as a tenant the mere fact that he is entered as tenant 'bila tasfia' in the village papers and has held land for over twelve years, cannot make his possession adverse to the rightful owner. [p. 700, col. 2.]

To prove title to land by adverse possession for the statutory period it is not sufficient that some acts of possession have been done; the possession required must be adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitors; the possession must be actual, physical, exclusive, hostile and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitations. Babu v. Thakur Din (1) and Jegendronath Roy v Baldeo Das (4), followed. Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Mohan Singh (2) referred to. [p. 701, col. 2.]

Second Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 31st October, 1930, upholding that of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, District Sultanpur, dated the 14th December, 1929.

Mr. Bhagwati Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hyder Husein, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 31st October, 1930, affirming a decree of the Munsif, Musafirkhana at Sultanpur, dated the 14th December, 1929.

The dispute in this case relates to Nos. 16-3, 9 2 and 16-4 in village Gajanpur in the District of Sultanpur.

The defendant No. 1 Sitla Bakhsh Singh brought a suit against Harbans Singh (plaintiff No. 2) son of Onkar Singh for arrears of rent under s. 108 (2)/127 of the Oudh Rent Act in respect of plot No. 16-3 and obtained a decree in July, 1929. Sarbjit Singh (plaintiff No. 1) and Harbans Singh (plaintiff No. 2) brought the present suit in September, 1929, for a declaration that the plots in suit were owned and possessed by them jointly with defendants Nos. 4 to 10 and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had no right to or interest in the said plots. The claim was resisted by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 on 'various grounds.

The learned Munsif found that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were the original proprietors of the plots in suit but the plaintiffs have now become owners thereof by right of adverse possession for more than twelve years. He therefore decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

The defendant No. 1 alone appealed from the whole decree under O. XLI, r. 4, Sch I, Civil Procedure Code. The appeal was dismissed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge on the finding that the plaintiffs had succeeded in establishing their adverse possession for more than twelve years before the suit. The defendant No. 1 has now appealed to this Court from the whole decree.

I have heard the learned Counsel on both sides at some length. In my opinion this appeal should be allowed. As I understand the judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, he has found that the plaintiffs have succeeded in establishing their adverse possession simply because they have been entered as 'bila tasfia' tenants in the village papers for more than twelve years. In my opinion this finding is clearly wrong and cannot be accepted. The possession of the plaintiffs, who are holding the plots in suit as tenants according to the entries in the village papers, did not and could not become adverse to the rightful proprietors merely because they (plaintiffs) were entered as tenants 'bila tasfia' in the village papers. It has been definitely found in this case that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the proprietors of the plots in suit. The entries in the village papers show that the plaintiffs are the tenants of the plots in suit. The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 (or their ancestors) have all along been recorded as proprietors of the plots in suit while the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 (or their ancestors) have all along been recorded as tenants of the said plots. As pointed out in the case of Babu v. Thakur Din (1) where there is no reliable evidence to prove that the plaintiffs physically dispossessed the defendants or that they ever asserted a hostile title and all that is made out by the evidence is that the plaintiffs have been in possession for many years, that they have never paid any rent in respect of it and that in the village papers they have been recorded as 'bila tasfia' tenants whereas the defendants have been recorded as proprietors, these facts are by

The respondents' learned Counsel has attempted to show that the plaintiffs had asserted a hostile title in or about 1904, in certain proceedings relating to mutation or correction of entries in village papers. I have not been referred to any documentary evidence on that point. As to oral evidence, I think there is no clear evidence on that point which can be safely relied upon. It should be borne in mind that it has been definitely found in this case that the title to the plots in suit is in the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and not in the plaintiffs. The fact remains that the plaintiffs never succeeded in their attempt to get themselves recorded as proprietors of the plots in suit. The assertion, if any, was never accepted by the Revenue Court. Their assertion, if any, was surely unfounded at the time it was made and cannot by the mere lapse of time convert what was a tenant title into that of a proprietor—See Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v Mohan Singh (2). The respondents' learned Counsel has referred to the case of Nadir Singh v. Anpurna Kuar (3). It was held in that case that where it is found that a person has been in continuous possession of some property for more than twelve years without any right whatever and that, although he did not at any time make any openly avowed claim of right to it, his acts and the circumstances attending his possession clearly show that he intended to hold possession as of right, he has to be declared as having acquired title by adverse possession. In my opinion that ruling does not help the plaintiffs in this case. The entries in the village papers show that the plaintiffs or their ancestors have all along been recorded as tenants of the land in suit and were never recorded proprietors thereof. They were thus holding the land as tenants. The mere fact that no rent was realised from them is of no consequence. If they ever attempted to assert a hostile title that assertion was not accepted by the Revenue Court. They never instituted any suit in the Civil Court to establish their right or title to the land in suit. They were content that possession should remain with them as tenants simply and so they have all along been recorded as tenants of the land in suit. It should be noted that the judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge shows that it was not contended before him that the plaintiffs or their ancestors had ever asserted a hostile title to the land in suit. It appears that what was argued before him was simply this that the plaintiffs should be held to have perfected their title by adverse possession as they had been entered as 'bila tasfia' tenants of the land in suit for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit. It should be borne in mind that to prove title to land by adverse possession for the statutory period it is not sufficient to show that some acts of possession have been done; the possession required must be adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitors; in other words, the possession must be actual, physical, exclusive, hostile and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitation—See Jogendronath Roy v. Baldeo Das (4).

In my opinion the plaintiffs' claim is not made out. Hence I allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Courts and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Under O. Application for Revision from an order of the Second Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated the 11th September, 1931

Mr. Rama Shankar Srivastava, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Sri Ram and Narain Lal, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 150 on the basis of a pro note. The suit was contested by the defendants. The claim was decreed by the learned Second Additional Judge of the Small Cause Court, Lucknow, on the 11th September, 1931. I find there is no judgment according to law in this case. The order which is to be taken as the judgment of the Court runs thus :—

“Decree for Rs. 150 and costs. Attempt to be made to realise first from defendant No. 1.”

It is impossible to treat this order as the judgment of the Court. Under O. XX, r. 4 (1), Civil Procedure Code the judgment of a Court of Small Causes must contain the points for determination and the decision thereon. The Judge of a Court of Small Causes is expected to apply his mind to the decision of a Small Cause Court case as carefully as he would apply his mind to the decision of a regular suit. Under O. XX, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code a Judge in a Small Cause suit may reduce his remarks to a minimum and they need not contain more than the points for determination and the decision thereon but this minimum must be intelligible, thus enabling the High Court in revision to satisfy itself that the decree or order was according to law without the necessity of perusing the whole record. The learned Judge ought to have written a judgment according to law to enable this Court to see if the case had been decided properly. He is directed to write his judgment according to law and submit the file to this Court without any unnecessary delay. The case will then be taken up by this Court for disposal. An early date will be fixed as soon as the record is received back from the lower Court after compliance.

Second Appeal against a decree of the Additional Sessions Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 22nd December, 1930, reversing that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 18th November, 1929.

Mr. Hyder Husein, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ghulam Imam, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 22nd December, 1930, setting aside a decree of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 18th November, 1929.

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge and they need not be repeated in detail.

The dispute in this case relates to certain zemindari shares in three villages called Kalkaura, Nakha and Kambhain in the District of Sultanpur.

The principal parties to the suit are the descendants of one Jasai Ram who died long ago. The plaintiff is the son of Sat Narain, one of the three sons of Jasai Ram. The principal contesting defendants are the descendants of the remaining two sons of Jasai Ram, namely, Ghisiawan and Bindeshuri. All the descendants of Jasai Ram were living jointly as members of a joint Hindu family before the year 1897. The property in suit originally belonged to one Beni Dayal Singh. Bindeshuri obtained a possessory mortgage from Beni Dayal Singh on the 28th August, 1895, in respect of certain shares in five villages including the three villages mentioned above. The property in suit was not comprised in the said mortgage but the descendants of Jasai Ram had been in possession of that property also along with the shares covered by the mortgage in the three villages mentioned above. It is not clear by what right they got possession of the property in suit which was not comprised in the mortgage, but the fact remains that they got possession of the property and held it as their property for more than twelve years. Achchebar Singh (defendant No. 13 (since deceased) sued for redemption of certain shares as transferee from Bajrang Singh son of Beni Dayal Singh in 1915. Bajrang Singh was the father of the defendant No

12. It was finally decided in that suit that Achchebar Singh was not entitled to redeem the entire shares of Beni Dayal Singh in villages Kalkhaura, Nakha and Kam-bhain and that he could redeem only the shares covered by the mortgage of 1875. The property in suit was thus left in the possession of the descendants of Jasai Ram.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has found that the property in suit as well as the property covered by the mortgage was the joint property of all the descendants of Jasai Ram and that the plaintiff is entitled to a one-third share in the property in suit which was not included in the partition which took place among the descendants of Jasai Ram in the year 1897. He held that the descendants of Jasai Ram were in possession of the property in suit as joint tenants before the partition of 1879 and that it came to be held after that partition by all the descendants of Jasai Ram as tenants-in-common. He therefore gave the plaintiff a decree for a one third share in the property in suit holding that the plaintiff's claim was not barred by time.

Some of the defendants have filed this appeal in this Court.

In my opinion there is no substance in this appeal.

The findings of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge that the property in suit is the joint property of all the descendants of Jasai Ram and that it came to be held after the partition of 1897 by all the descendants of Jasai Ram as tenants-in-common are findings of fact based upon admissible evidence and cannot be impugned in second appeal. The possession of one tenant-in common is not adverse to the other until ouster. As pointed out in the case of Dagadu Govind Bodake v. Sakhubai Nana Bodake (1), where the co parceners in a joint Hindu family come to partition and divide the joint property with the exception of a portion of it, they are, in absence of indication to the contrary, tenants-in-common with reference to the excepted property. I am not prepared to accept the contention that the property in suit was not the joint property of the descendants of Jasai Ram as they had originally acquired it as trespassers. In the first place it appears that this plea was not raised in defence in the lower Courts. In the second place I think there is no substance in this plea. It may be that the property was originally acquired by the members of the joint family as trespassers, but they held it as such for more than twelve years and it became the property of the family after that period in which all members were interested. They held the property treating it as joint property of the family. The plea in question must therefore be repelled in second appeal. No ouster or adverse possession is satisfactorily established.

In my opinion no case has been made out to disturb the judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. Hence I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Revenue Record—Entry contrary to express agreement—Evidentiary value

Where an entry in the village papers to the effect that certain persons are under-proprietors is contrary to the express terms of a compromise between the parties is no value whatsoever, the presumption of its correctness is destroyed by the terms of the compromise.

Second Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 5th November, 1930, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 29th May, 1930.

Messrs. G. Hasan and Ali Jawwad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hyder Husein, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This is the defendants' appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Gonda dated the 3rd November, 1930, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the same place dated the 29th May, 1930.

(1) 73 Ind. Cas. 369; 47 B. 773; 25 Bom. L. R. 806; A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 31.

In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiffs asked for a declaration that the defendants have no proprietary or under proprietary rights in certain plots of land, the list of which was attached to the plaint, situate in village Daulatpur, mohal Inderdawan Singh, Pargana Nawabganj, in the District of Gonda. The defences with which we are now concerned, were that the plots in question were held by the defendants in under-proprietary rights and that the suit was barred by limitation. Both these defences were upheld by the Court of first instance and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. On appeal the learned District Judge of Gonda has disagreed with the Subordinate Judge on both points, allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

In second appeal before us the same two questions are reiterated on behalf of the defendants. The judgment of the learned District Judge is so clear and exhaustive that we do not think that we can usefully add to it. The plaintiffs are admittedly the owners of the mohal and they concede that the defendants held the plots in question in the right of tenants. The onus, therefore, is on the defendants to establish that they possess rights higher than those conceded to them by the plaintiffs. In discharge of this onus they rely on entries made in village papers since the year 1800 up to the present day. These entries certainly support the defendants' case, and we are asked to give effect to them, as, it is argued, they must be presumed to be correct. The learned District Judge has faced this argument in all its details and has come to the conclusion that the presumption is wholly rebutted by the agreement entered into between the predecessors-in-interest of the present parties so far back as the year 1893. The agreement was filed in the form of a compromise in proceedings for mutation of names in respect of a much larger area which comprises the plots in suit. The plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest claimed by an application in the Court of Revenue that his name be entered in respect of that area in the revenue papers as proprietor. The appellants' predecessor seemed to have resisted the application up to a certain stage and then the parties mutually settled the controversy by filing the agreement to which reference has just now been made. On the record of this case this agreement is marked as Ex. 3. Except five plots the rest of the plots in suit have been found by the learned District Judge to be covered by the terms of this compromise.

On the question of the construction of this agreement, there can be no two opinions. The appellants' predecessor in-interest agreed to hold the plots in suit, except the five plots, in the right of a tenant on a payment of yearly rent of Rs. 31. As regards the remaining five plots, the learned District Judge is of opinion that they too may well be considered to have been included in the agreement, Ex. 3. We are not prepared to affirm this opinion, but, as we have already said, the onus lay on the defendants to show that they have rights superior to tenancy rights in any of the plots in suit and we think that they have failed to discharge that onus.

On the question of limitation, we agree with the learned District Judge that the suit out of which this appeal arises is not barred by time. The learned District Judge rightly thinks that this point as well as the point just now disposed of are covered by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Mohan Singh (1). In the course of arguments the learned Advocate for the appellants placed before us a decision of a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Bipin Chandra Chatterji v. Dawan Singh (2), as a decision in support of his arguments. We think that decision is wholly irrelevant to the facts of this case. The entries in the village papers in favour of the appellants were made in teeth of the terms of the compromise. They are therefore of no value whatsoever, and whatever evidential effect they had by reason of a presumption in their correctness, that effect has been altogether swept away by the clear terms of the compromise.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 436—
Order directing Magistrate to frame charge—Legality

Section 436, Criminal Procedure Code, only empowers a Sessions Judge to direct a further enquiry; it does not empower him to direct the Magistrate to frame a charge and to try the accused on that charge.

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 13th of July, 1931, reversing that of the Magistrate, First Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 2nd of March, 1931.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Muhammad Amin Khan, for the Government-Advocate and Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Five persons were sent up for trial charged with offences under ss. 323 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code. A Magistrate of the First Class enquired into the offences and discharged four of the five persons sent up, under s. 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He framed a charge against the fifth man, named Ramzan, under s. 325 of the Indian Penal Code. He then apparently was transferred, for Ramzan was tried by another Magistrate who acquitted him. A petition for revision was then filed by the complainant against the order discharging the four persons referred to above. This petition came before the learned Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, who found that the Magistrate had apparently made no reference whatever to the evidence on the record but had mentioned in the course of his order of discharge that he had examined the Police papers without recording the result of his examination and finding that there had not been a proper enquiry and that the said Magistrate had acted perversely, he accepted the petition for revision and ordered a further enquiry. Unfortunately, the order was as follows:—

"* * * I direct further enquiry against the respondents who will be charged for causing simple hurts to the complainant and who will be duly tried on that charge." * * * * *

This order was passed on the 7th February, 1931. The case went back to a Magistrate of the First Class Sheikh Abdul Rahim who took up the inquiry. No further evidence was led before him and apparently neither party wished him to commence proceedings de novo. The Magistrate, therefore, proceeded to record an elaborate order weighing all the evidence on the record and, finally, came to the conclusion that that evidence did not carry conviction and, for that reason the four persons were discharged.

Against this order of discharge the complainant preferred a second petition under s. 436 of the Criminal Procedure Code, challenging in the very first ground the construction placed by the Magistrate on the order of the learned Sessions Judge dated the 7th February, 1931. The learned Sessions Judge decided the petition on the first ground. He held that he had ordered the learned Magistrate to frame a charge and to try persons against whom that charge was framed, and that, therefore, the Magistrate had misinterpreted the order passed and that he had acted wrongly in not framing a charge and proceeding to try the said persons. He accordingly accepted the petition and directed another Magistrate to read carefully the order of the 7th February, 1931, and directions contained therein and then to proceed in accordance with law.

It is against this order that the four persons concerned have submitted this petition to this Court and on their behalf, Mr. Mohsin Shah has urged that the learned Sessions Judge had no power to order a trial, his power under s. 436 of the Criminal Procedure Code being confined to the ordering of a further enquiry, and that, therefore, the Magistrate had acted within his jurisdiction in considering the question as to whether, on the record, a charge should or should not be framed. On the other hand, it has been contended by the learned Counsel for the Crown, firstly, that this Court has no jurisdiction in the matter and, secondly, that the learned Sessions Judge when passing the order dated the 7th February, 1931, acted within his jurisdiction. So far as the first objection is concerned, I am satisfied that I am empowered, sitting as a Court of Revision, to rectify any error in law made by Subordinate Courts which error would lead to injustice. As to the second contention, s. 436 of the Criminal Procedure Code is perfectly clear and only empowers a Sessions Court to direct a further enquiry. It has been held more than once that an enquiry is not a trial and the definition of the word "enquiry" to be found in s. 4 (k) of the Criminal Procedure Code bears out that interpretation. I must hold, therefore, that the learned Sessions Judge was in error when he directed the Magistrate to frame a charge and to try the persons so charged on that charge. All that he was empowered to do was to direct the Magistrate to hold a further enquiry and then to proceed in accordance with law. If the result of that enquiry warranted his so doing, the Magistrate was to frame a charge. If the result of the inquiry rendered it, in the opinion of the Magistrate, impossible to frame a charge he was entitled to discharge the persons before him. In the present case the Magistrate has dealt very thoroughly with the evidence and has come to a considered opinion on that evidence and that opinion is that it is insufficient for a charge.

In these circumstances, I accept this petition, set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge dated the 13th July, 1931, and restore the order of discharge passed by the Magistrate on the 21st March, 1931.

Held, that in view of the fact that the assessment for the years 1922-24 to 1927-28 was final and not subject to appeal and that for the purpose of allowing depreciation the life of motor cars is taken as five years under the Income-tax rules, the assessee was not entitled to claim depreciation on the cars which were in use from 1922-23, in a year subsequent to the said five years [p. 706, col. 2.]

Held, further, that the fact that no depreciation account had been maintained as required by the rules did not give rise to any inference that no allowance for deductions had been made in the assessment for the years 1922-24 to 1927-28. [p. 707, col. 1.]

Case referred by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Punjab, North West Frontier and Dhi Province Lahore, with his No. 221 531-1132, dated the 23rd July, 1931.

Mr. Kirpa Ram Bajaj, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. N. Aggarwal, for the Respondent.

Addison J.—The Commissioner of Income-Tax, Punjab, has referred the following question of law for decision, namely:—In view of the fact that the assessments in this case for the years 1923-1924 to 1927-28 inclusive were made to the best of the Income-Tax Officer's judgment under s. 23 (4) of the Act and that for purposes of allowing depreciation under the Income tax rules the life of motor-cars used in connection with the business is taken as five years, is the assessee entitled to claim depreciation on the cars in use from 1922-23 in a year subsequent to the five years?

The facts stated are as follows:—No return was made by the Government Mail Service, Rawalpindi, for the years 1923-24 to 1927-28 inclusive and the Income-Tax Officer assessed the income of the firm for these years under s. 23 (4) to the best of his judgment. For the year 1928-29 an assessment was made on the firm again under s. 23 (4) on an income of Rs. 1,60,000. Subsequently the Income-Tax Officer considered that his original assessment omitted certain profits and he issued notice to the firm under s. 34 read with s. 22 (2) of the Act. On receiving this notice the firm in question filed a return declaring their income to be Rs. 1,59,765. In these proceedings the firm claimed depreciation on the prescribed form to the extent of Rs. 53,580 on certain motor-cars and lorries valued at Rs. 2,67,903. The Income Tax Officer held that depreciation was admissible only on cars of the value of Rs. 84,631 and on this sum allowed depreciation to the extent of Rs. 16,972. As regards the other cars for which depreciation was claimed and disallowed the reason given by him was that they were in use in 1922-23 and thus, as depreciation was only permissible for five years, there could be no claim for depreciation in the year 1928-29, the assessments for the preceding five years having been made to the best of the Income-Tax Officer's judgment under s. 23 (4), these assessments being final and not capable of being re-opened. The assessee's appeal was dismissed by the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax and this reference was thereupon demanded and allowed by the Commissioner of Income Tax.

The matter is simple. In my judgment the question referred must be answered in the negative. Once an assessment has been made to the best of the Income Tax Officer's judgment on a net income under s. 23 (4) of the Act it follows that all expenses incidental to the business must be assumed to have been taken into consideration in arriving at the net income assessed. Such an assessment is final, conclusive and not open to appeal. It was argued, however, that as no depreciation account was maintained by the Income Tax Officer as required by the departmental rules it should be assumed that this allowance was not given for the years referred to. This does not follow. The depreciation account is merely for the convenience of the department; nor does the fact that under s. 10 (2) (vi) of the Act the depreciation allowance can be carried forward to a subsequent year if there is no profit in the particular year for which it is claimed, help the assessee. In all the years in question there was a profit. In my judgment the assessee has no case and it must be held that the depreciation demanded is inadmissible as all claim to it must be taken to have been exhausted in the assessments for the five preceding years in which it was claimable. I would allow the Commissioner of Income-Tax his costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 100.

Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 30, 48, 49 and 59—Jurisdiction of High Court to revise orders of Sessions Judge and Magistrate on merits—Charge for adultery—Strict proof of adultery, necessity of.

The provisions of ss. 48 and 49 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation apply only to orders passed by the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner acting under the express provisions of the Regulation. The High Court has, therefore, jurisdiction to revise the orders of the Sessions Judge or a Magistrate of the First Class in a case tried by them under s. 59 of the Regulation. [p. 708, col. 2.]

In a charge of adultery under s. 30 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation, it is necessary to prove by direct evidence either the commission of adultery or such circumstances as raise an irresistible conclusion that adultery has been committed. This cannot be done by merely alleging that the woman is of bad character and that another person has been visiting her father with whom she had been residing. [p. 708, col. 2; p. 709, col. 1.]

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 24th July, 1931, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Leiah, dated the 18th May, 1931.

Mr. S R Lall, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Khurshaid Zaman for The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

Order.—This petition for revision raises an important question of jurisdiction. The petitioner Musammatt Sabhai has been convicted under s. 30 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation III of 1901 and has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. Section 30 of the Regulation has enacted a substantive offence and provides that a married woman who knowingly and by her consent has sexual intercourse with any man who is not her husband is to be deemed to be guilty of the offence of adultery punishable with imprisonment which may extend to five years. The petitioner was tried and convicted by Sardar Balwant Singh Garewal, Magistrate First Class, Leiah in the District of Muzaffargarh and her appeal was dismissed by the Sessions Judge of Multan on its merits.

As I was doubtful whether there was sufficient evinence in support of the conviction I issued notice to the Crown; at the hearing of the petition the Crown was represented by Mr. Khurshaid Zaman, Advocate who raised a preliminary objection that this Court is not competent to interfere on revision where a person has been convicted under any section of the Regulation concerned and, in support of this objection he relied upon ss. 48 and 49 of the Regulation, the former of which provides that "no appeal shall lie from any decision given, decree or sentence passed, order made, or act done, under any of the provisions of this Regulation," and the latter authorises the Commissioner to call for the record of any proceeding under the Regulation and revise any decision, decree, sentence or order given, passed or made therein. It appears to me, however, that these two sections merely relate to orders passed by the "Deputy Commissioner" or the "Commissioner" in exercise of powers expressly conferred on them by the Regulation and which mainly have the effect of ousting the jurisdiction (original and appellate) of the ordinary Courts. So far as the appellate and revisional jurisdiction of this Court with regard to proceedings pending before or cases decided by the Magistrates or Sessions Judges is concerned it is not affected by these sections.

Section 59 of the Regulation expressly provides that an offence punishable under s. 29 or s. 30 of the Regulation may be tried by a Court of Session or by the Court of a Magistrate of the First Class and that the offence punishable under s. 37 may be tried by any Magistrate of the First Class. It seems to me that the present case was decided by the Magistrate, First Class, under the provisions of s. 59 and therefore the Appellate Jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge and the revisional jurisdiction of this Court is not affected.

The Regulation mentioned above has the effect of constituting special tribunals for the trial of specified offences, of providing special procedure for dealing with certain acts which affect public tranquility and, lastly, of constituting new offences. It further confers power on the Deputy Commissioner to withdraw proceedings from the ordinary Courts and to commit them for trial to specially constituted tribunals and to dispose of them himself and also to pass certain orders himself without reference to such tribunals. But persons who offend against the ordinary criminal law or against the newly constituted offences are amenable either to the jurisdiction of the ordinary Criminal Courts or, at the discretion of the Deputy Commissioner, to the jurisdiction of the specially constituted tribunals. When, however, jurisdiction is exercised by ordinary Criminal Courts even with regard to the specially constituted offences, the exercise of such jurisdiction by them is subject to the appellate and revisional jurisdiction of the superior Courts. The application of the provisions of ss. 48 and 49 is, therefore, only to orders passed by the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner acting under the express provisions of the Regulation, I am, therefore, of opinion that this Court has jurisdiction to revise the order of the Sessions Judge and the Magistrate in the case on its merits. If, however, I had held that the objection raised on behalf of the Crown is sound still I would have had jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Sessions Judge owing to its being without jurisdiction, thus leaving the convict to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Commissioner. But I am of opinion that I am competent to revise the judgments of the Magistrate and also of the Sessions Judge on the merits. I have not expressed any opinion on the merits of the case as I have not heard Counsel on that aspect of the case, and I proceed to do so now. To be heard on 29th January 1932.

After further hearing his Lordship made the following Order.—This judgment will be read in continuation of my order of the 21st January, 1932. I have now heard Counsel and am of opinion that an offence under s. 30 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation has not been proved against the petitioner. A complaint was filed by the husband of the petitioner but no specific time was mentioned when the petitioner had committed the offence. Some evidence was given at the trial by persons who alleged that they had actually seen her committing adultery but the occasion mentioned by them is different to that mentioned by the complainant in his statement. In any case the evidence has not been considered to be reliable and the Sessions Judge has upheld the conviction merely on the testimony of the husband who in his examination in-chief did not state that he had witnessed the offence on any particular occasion though in cross examination he did say that he had actually seen the persons concerned committing adultery with the petitioner a few days before the statement. The Sessions Judge has upheld the conviction for the following reasons.

"Now, in a case like the present, the important witness is the husband. For this reason the law insists that such a complaint shall be brought by the husband. The offence is such which by its nature is committed in secret, and it is not likely that there will be a number of eye-witnesses to it. The evidence of alleged eye witnesses is, therefore, a priori suspect but unless very good reason is shown why the husband should bring a false charge, it is reasonable to believe him. It is unlikely that a husband will accuse his wife of adultery without a cause."

This is a reasoning which does not appeal to me. The husband may have other motives for bringing a false charge and in this case it is conceded that the husband and wife have been living separately. The latter is living with her father. The mere fact that another person has been going to visit the father of the wife is no proof of her adultery with that other person. In a charge for adultery it is necessary to prove by direct evidence either the commission of adultery or such circumstances as raise an irresistible conclusion that adultery has been committed. This in my opinion cannot be done by merely alleging that the woman is of bad character and that another person has been visiting her father with whom she had been residing.

The evidence of the witnesses who have deposed to have seen the petitioner committing adultery is not reliable and, as I have already stated above, does not correspond with the testimony of the husband. I have not been able to follow the whole of the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge but after an examination of the evidence am of opinion that the charge has not been proved against the petitioner.

I accordingly accept the petition and setting aside the conviction acquit Musamat Sabhai and direct that she be released from jail forthwith.

PRITAM SINGH—ACCUSED—

RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 497 (5)—Bail—Power of High Court to cancel—Grounds for releasing on bail.

The High Court has jurisdiction to consider whether or not the order of a Subordinate Court passed under s. 497, Criminal Procedure Code, should or should not be maintained and also whether under the provisions of sub-s. 5 of s. 497, an accused person should be allowed to continue at large.

Where a person is accused on a charge of a serious nature such as an attempt to murder, bail should not be allowed for the reason that the injured person was not well enough to attend the identification parade.

Petition praying that the bail of Pritam Singh be cancelled and he be remanded to custody.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, The Government Advocate, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Respondent.

Order.—As a result of certain happenings at Ludhiana on the 29th November, 1931, a lad named Ashiq Hussain was seriously stabbed. Certain persons were arrested under s. 307, Indian Penal Code, on a charge of attempting to murder the said lad. The Magistrate refused to release these persons on bail whereupon they moved the Sessions Judge asking that they be allowed on bail. The learned Sessions Judge recorded a somewhat lengthy order on the 5th December, 1931, enlarging the said persons on bail on their furnishing security in the sum of Rs. 2,000 with one surety each. One of the principal reasons for allowing bail appears to have been that up to the 5th December, 1931, identification parade had not been held and, therefore, the prosecution were not in a position to state definitely which, if any, of the persons arrested had actually inflicted the knife wound on the boy.

An application has now been put in on behalf of the Crown under s. 497 (5), Criminal Procedure Code, setting out the facts and asking that the bail of one of the said persons, namely, Pritam Singh, should be cancelled and he should be remanded to custody. Notice of this application was issued on two occasions but strange to relate on neither occasion was it possible to serve Pritam Singh with the notice although Mr. Sethi who appeared for him to-day informed me that Pritam Singh had been regularly appearing in Court at the hearings of the case which appears to be proceeding. I have also been told to-day that, as soon as the injured lad was in a condition to do so, he was called upon to identify his assailant and that he had identified Pritam Singh as the man who actually inflicted the knife wound on him.

Mr. Sethi has contended first that this Court has no jurisdiction either under s. 497 or s. 439, Criminal Procedure Code, to interfere with the discretion of the Sessions Court. In this view I am unable to concur. Had the learned Sessions Judge refused to admit Pritam Singh to bail this Court would undoubtedly have been moved in the matter and could, had it thought fit, have passed an order in favour of Pritam Singh. Similarly, to my mind, it is within the jurisdiction of this Court to consider whether or not the order of the Sessions Judge passed under s. 97, Criminal Procedure Code, should or should not be maintained and also whether under the provisions of sub-s. (5) of s. 497, Criminal Procedure Code, Pritam Singh should be allowed to continue at large. While I am in favour of exercising the Court's discretion in matters relating to bail liberally in the case of ordinary offences, I do not think that when a person is arraigned on a charge of so serious a nature as attempt to murder, bail should be allowed especially, when the main reason appears to have been that the injured person had not been well enough to be subjected to the ordeal of an identification parade. Under these circumstances I consider that at the present moment Pritam Singh should be taken into custody. I, therefore, cancel his bail and direct that he surrender to that bail and be taken into custody until such time as the Magistrate concerned is in a position to come to a definite conclusion in the case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100, O. XXXII, r. 1, O. VI, r. 17—Suit by major as minor—Application for amendment—Amendment, when to be allowed—Bona fides, whether question of fact.

Where a suit is instituted by a next friend for a person described as a minor who is really a major and an application is subsequently made for permitting the real plaintiff to continue the suit as a major what the Court has to see is whether at the time the wrong recital was entered in the plaint those responsible for it were acting bona fide or not, that is to say, whether they themselves were mistaken and if there was no mistake and at best gross carelessness permission should not be granted. Amritsaria v. Gamun (1), Durga Devi v. Gur Narain (2), Shanmuga Chetty v. Narayana Ayyar (3), Narayan Chandra Das v. Dulal Chandra Dutta (4), Taqi Din v. Obaidulla (5), Sheorania v. Bharat Singh (6) and Ruhul Amin v. Shankar Lal (7), referred to.

Though the question whether the conduct of a person was bona fide is usually one of fact the High Court can interfere in second appeal if there is no evidence to support the finding. [p. 711, col 2.]

Second Appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, dated the 2nd July, 1930, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Panipat, dated the 16th December, 1929.

Mr. Din Dayal Khanna, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Shamair Chand, Mehr Chand Sud and Qabul Chand, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The only point agitated in this second appeal is what should be the consequences on the facts found. The plaintiff, a man of over twenty-three at the time the plaint was presented, sued as a minor with his mother as his next friend. On the 22nd of May, 1929, the plaint was presented in this form. On the 17th of August the plaintiff, who had been shown as minor in the plaint, put in a petition that he wished to continue the suit as a major. An order was passed that he was to come with his next friend at the next hearing and on the 11th of November he again presented a similar application. On the 11th of November he finally applied to be treated as a minor and to be allowed to continue the suit as such and to be represented by his next friend. The question of his age was put in issue and the trial Court decided that he was over twenty-three years at the time the suit was instituted. On the application put in on the 2nd of December, to the effect that if the Court found that he, the plaintiff, was a major he wished to be allowed to amend the plaint accordingly, permission for amendment was given and a decree for pre-emption of the house on payment of Rs. 50 was passed.

On appeal the learned District Judge wrote a lengthy judgment in which he found as follows :—

"The plaintiff was born on 24th February, 1906, and was more than twenty-three years old at the time of the suit. Two facts are against this finding. In the sale deed itself plaintiff is mentioned as a minor. The second fact is that both plaintiff and his brother who died in 1910 and was born in 1909 were named Manga. Two living brothers never have the same name and it is, therefore, very probable that plaintiff was never born on 24th February, 1906. Plaintiff also does not look twenty-four. This means that though the evidence shows that plaintiff was born in 1906 he was really not as old as 24."

This is not very satisfactory, but the finding remains and the entries relating to the three sons of the father of the plaintiff make the matter perfectly clear, when read with P. 2, the entry of death. He must have been at least twenty-three years of age at the time the suit was instituted. There were three sons. The youngest was born in 1909 and he is shown as having died at the age of one year in 1910. The plaintiff must be the eldest or the second son. Whatever the reason of the identity of the two names may be whether faulty copying or bad writing or something else, the fact remains that the plaintiff cannot have been less than twenty-three at the time the suit was instituted.

The judgment continues :—

"These two circumstances make the bringing of a suit in his name through a next friend a bona fide mistake."

The rulings are then quoted and the Court holds, being under the impression that it was a bona fide mistake, that the amendment was rightly allowed and the decree rightly given.

Counsel contends that the only Lahore ruling on the point, Amritsaria v. Gamun (1), does not deal with the question of the amendment except obiter, but treating the fact of the amendment as past history which cannot be gone into, holds that the failure of the plaintiff to sign the plaint as a major after the mistake was discovered is immaterial. This is so. The only other Lahore case is Durga Devi v. Gur Narain (2), the converse case, for the minority was established on the challenge of the defendant and proved by evidence, and it was held that where the plaintiff had no knowledge of his minority, and had no intention of deceiving the Court, an opportunity should be given to him to amend the plaint. It is argued with considerable force that the same principle applies where a major sues as a minor. He is presumably well aware of the fact of his majority and it is only where he is ignorant that he has attained majority that he can claim that he should be allowed to amend his plaint. In Shanmuga Chetty v. Narayana Ayyar (3) and Narayan Chandra Das v. Dulal Chandra Dutta (4) it is clearly stated that the mistake was bona fide. Taqi Din v. Obaidulla (5) goes further and would allow amendment whether the mistake was intentional or not. As opposed to these we have Sheorania v. Bharat Singh (6) which takes the extreme view in the opposite direction and Ruhul Amin v. Shankar Lal (7), a case very closely resembling the present where the minor was 24 years of age at the time the suit was instituted. Counsel contends that the finding that it is a bona fide mistake is a finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. If this be conceded it is only a finding of fact so far as the conduct of the mother is concerned, and although at the time the suit was instituted the major, being shown as a minor, technically took no part in the matter, his subsequent conduct brings, him, I think, into the picture and makes it necessary for him to show that he was acting bona fide throughout. This he has wholly failed to do. It is not shown or stated that he did not know of the presentation of the plaint, and his subsequent conduct in presenting two petitions to be allowed to be treated as major and finally asking to be allowed to remain a minor, shows anything but good faith on his part. If the definition of bona fide be taken from the Limitation Act and it be held, as I understand the District Judge to have thought possible, that the mistake arose from a slavish following of the recital in the sale deed, possibly again by the lawyer engaged, it cannot be said that anybody exercised due care and attention. While I am of opinion that a finding that the conduct is bona fide is usually a finding of fact being an inference of fact from facts, here there are no facts from which to make the inference. There is no evidence whatsoever as to how the next friend or the minor or the lawyer came to make the mistake.

While, therefore, I think the Allahabad rule is too strict, it appears to me that the rule laid down in Taqi Din v. Obaidulla (5) is too lenient and what is to be seen is whether at the time the wrong recital was entered in the plaint those responsible for it were acting bona fide or not, that is to say, whether they themselves were mistaken and though it would be possible to go a long way in presuming the fact under certain circumstances, no such circumstances here exist.

I hold, therefore, that there was no mistake whatever and that at best there was gross carelessness, and at worst the parties concerned deliberately misled the Court. It is possible to theorise as to why plaintiff was shown as minor, but I do not think there is any advantage in doing so. I am of opinion that the appeal must be accepted and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

I think that I should not conclude without giving two further quotations from the judgment of the District Judge:—

"To be sure their evidence is worthless as they are not shown to have bought or purchased houses and do not give the date on which they base their opinion of the market price, but at the same time defendant gave no rebuttal and there is no evidence before me that this sum does not represent the true market price of the house."

"This is an entirely wrong way of looking at the matter. If the evidence is worthless as the District Judge held, it can establish nothing and the position is precisely the same as if no witnesses had been produced."

Again

"There is little to choose between the evidence of either side and the volume of the evidence is greater on defendant's side."

If there is little to choose between the evidence of either side, that side must lose on which the burden of proof has been laid.

Under O. III, r. 4 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code, as amended in 1926 a Pleader cannot act for any person unless he has been authorised for the purpose by a document in writing.

Where a vakalatnama authorised the Pleader to refer the dispute to arbitration and also gave authority to the Pleader to engage another Pleader who would have authority to exercise all the powers which had been given to the former and a Pleader who had been engaged by the original Pleader applied to the court for referring the dispute to arbitrators and the court accordingly referred the case;

Held, that the reference was illegal inasmuch as the Pleader who had signed the application for reference was not appointed in writing as required by O. III, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code.

Petition for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Lahore, dated the 18th May, 1931.

Mr. Prakash Chandra, for the Petitioners.

Sheikh Akbar Ali, for Mr. *Dina Nath
Bhasin*, for the Respondents Defendant.

Judgment—The suit which has given rise to this petition was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Lahore, against the defendant respondent, by the following six persons as plaintiffs:—

1. Amir Shah (Major)
2. Iqbal Ali Shah | minors through their
 | next friend Amir
3. Iftikhar Ali Shah | Shah, plaintiff No. 1.
4. Musammat Rahmat Bibi (major).
5. Musammat Mehraj Begum (major).
- and 6. Syed Hussain Shah (major).

The plaint was presented by Lala Panna Lal, Advocate, who filed a vakalatnama on behalf of the plaintiffs. In this vakalat nama Lala Panna Lal was specifically authorised to compromise the dispute or to refer it to arbitration. Authority was also given to him to engage another Legal Practitioner for himself, who would have authority to exercise all the powers which had been given to Lala Panna Lal by the vakalatnama.

On the 18th of May, 1931, *Lala Panna
Lal* was not present in Court but another Advocate, Lala Joti Sarup, appeared for him. At the commencement of the proceedings, an application praying that the suit be referred to the arbitration of certain persons named therein, was presented.

This application was signed by Amir Shah, plaintiff No 1, Lala Joti Sarup, Advocate and Sheikh Abdul Aziz, defendant. A joint statement by Amir Shah and Lala Joti Sarup, and another statement by the defendant were recorded supporting the application and praying that the dispute be referred to the arbitrators named in the application. Another application signed by Amir Shah, as the next friend of Iqbal Ali Shah and Iftikhar Ali Shah, minors, plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, was also filed asking for permission to refer the dispute to arbitration on behalf of the minors. The court granted both these applications and referred the case to the aforesaid arbitrators.

On the 2nd June, 1931, apparently before the arbitrators had entered upon their duties, a petition for revision was presented in this court on behalf of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 5 for setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge referring the suit to arbitration. Various grounds are urged in the petition, but the only one argued before me is that the reference is invalid, inasmuch as Musammat Rahmat Bibi and Musammat Mehraj Begum (plaintiffs Nos 4 and 5) had not signed the application for reference to arbitration, nor were they personally present in Court on the 18th May, 1931, and that Lala Joti Sarup, who purported to act on their behalf, had no authority to refer the dispute to arbitration.

As stated above, the plaintiffs, including Musammat Rahmat Bibi and *Musammat
Mehraj Begum*, had engaged Lala Panna Lal, Advocate, to file the plaint and prosecute the suit on their behalf, and in the Vakalatnama had specifically given him authority to refer the dispute to arbitration. It is clear that even if specific authority to refer the suit to arbitration had not been conferred on the Advocate by the vakalatnama, he still had the power to do so under the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Surendra
Nath Mitra v. Tarubala Dasi* (1). But *Lala
Panna Lal* did not sign the application to refer the dispute to arbitration, nor was he present in court on the 18th of May,

(1) 123 Ind. Cas. 545; 57 O. 1311; A. I. R. 1930 P. O.

34 O. W. N. 553; 11 P. L. T. 461; 31 L. W. 803 (P. O.).

1931, when the Subordinate Judge passed the order of reference. On his behalf another Advocate Lala Joti Sarup appeared, and it was he who signed the application and made a statement in court praying that the dispute be referred to the arbitrators named therein. Lala Joti Sarup had filed no authority in writing either from Musammam Rahmat Bibi and Musammam Mehraj Begum or from their duly authorised Pleader, Lala Panna Lal to "act" on their behalf. Now, O. III, r. 4 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended by Act XXII of 1926, lays down that "no Pleader shall act for any person in any court, unless he has been appointed for the purpose by such person by a document in writing signed by such person or by his recognised agent or by some other person duly authorised by or under a power-of-attorney to make such appointment". In this Rule a distinction is made between "acting" and "pleading" and in cl. (5) it is provided that for "pleading" all that is necessary is that the Pleader shall file a memorandum of appearance, signed by himself and containing certain particulars. As used in the Code the word "Pleader" has the meaning given to it in s. 2 (15) of the Code of the Civil Procedure where it is defined as "any person entitled to appear and plead for another in court and includes an Advocate, a Vakil and an Attorney of a High Court". It is clear, therefore, that, while Lala Joti Sarup could appear for Lala Panna Lal to "plead" on behalf of the persons who had engaged the latter Advocate, he had no power to "act" on his behalf without a document in writing executed in the manner prescribed in O. III, r. 4. It is not denied that in referring a pending suit to arbitration the Advocate "acts" and not merely "pleads". It is therefore clear that the reference on behalf of Musammam Rahmat Bibi and Musammam Mehraj Begum, plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5, was unauthorised and is not binding on them.

I accept the petition, set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge referring the suit to arbitration and remand it to him for disposal in accordance with law. Having regard to all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this court.

Cantonments Act (II of 1924), ss. 184, 185, 207—Construction of building before New Act—Notice to alter after Act—Non-compliance—Prosecution under new Act—Competency of—Limitation.

Under the Cantonments Act of 1924 erecting or re-erecting a building without the permission of the Cantonment authority and failure to comply with a notice to alter or demolish a building are separate offences; and therefore non-compliance with a notice given after the enactment of 1924 is punishable under the Act of 1924 even though the building in respect of which such notice was given was erected before 1924. [p. 714, col. 2.]

Further, prosecution for such disobedience may be launched within 6 months of such disobedience. [ibid.]

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 20th July, 1931, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 2nd June, 1931.

Mr. S. L. Puri, for the Petitioner.

Malik Muhammad Amin and Sardar Bahadur Beant Singh, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The petitioner Parma Nand is the owner of a building within the limits of the Rawalpindi Cantonment. Recently it has been discovered that he has divided the building into two portions by constructing a boundary wall so as to be able to rent it into two portions to two different tenants. It appears that the portion separated from the main building in this manner was originally appurtenant to the main house as a range of out-houses. There is some dispute as to the date when this separation took place. It is contended by the petitioner that it was in or before 1922, on the other hand it is conceded on behalf of the Crown that it was sometime in 1924-25 but not before. The question, however, in my opinion, is immaterial for the decision of the present petition.

On the 10th January 1930 the Cantonment Board served a notice on the petitioner to demolish the wall in question and on his failure to do so prosecuted him under s. 268 of the Cantonment Act, 1924. The Magistrate convicted him and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 150. His appeal has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge and consequently the present petition for revision has been made in this court.

I have heard Counsel on both sides and am of opinion that on the merits there is no force in the petition. Before the present Cantonment Act was enacted in 1924 the law applicable to cases like this was contained in the Cantonment Code of 1912. Section 92 of the Code made it a condition that any person who erected or re-erected a building should do so after the permission of the Cantonment authority. Sub-s (3) of that section provided as follows :

"Where any building is begun or erected without the giving of the notice and the submission of the plans and specification required by this section or in contravention of any order of the Cantonment authority issued within six weeks of the receipt of a valid notice thereunder, the Cantonment authority may, by notice in writing, to be delivered in a reasonable time, require the building to be altered or demolished as it may think necessary."

Section 107 of the Code provided a penalty up to Rs. 50 in case of any person who failed to comply with any notice issued under the section referred to above and also continuing fine.

Section 92 of the Code has now been sub divided into two sections of the Cantonment Act. Section 84 provides that a person who intends to erect or re-erect a building within the cantonment limits shall apply for sanction of the Cantonment authority and shall comply with any direction that may be given by such authority. Failure to do so is made punishable with a fine which may extend to Rs. 500. Section 85 provides that a Cantonment authority may at any time by notice in writing direct the owners to alter or demolish as it thinks necessary, any building or any part thereof erected without notice to the authority or without its sanction. Then s. 268 provides a penalty which may extend to Rs. 200 in case of non-compliance with the notice of the above description in addition to continuing fine.

It would thus be observed that the only change that has been made under the present Act is that instead of making it necessary for the Cantonment authority to issue a notice for demolition within a reasonable time it is now provided that such a notice can be given at any time. The learned Counsel, however, contends that at the time when this notice was given the Cantonment Code of 1912 had ceased to be in force and as the offence had been committed when that Code was in force therefore no action could be taken under the Act of 1924. In my opinion there is no force in this contention because the learned Counsel seems to ignore the disinction between ss. 184 and 185 of the present Act. The provisions of sub-cl. (3) of s. 92 of the Cantonment Code are analogous to those of s. 185 of the present Act while s. 184 of the Act is analogous to the remaining provisions of s. 92 of the Code. Both the enactments draw a clearer distinction between two sets of offences. One relates to the erection or re-erection of a building without the permission of the Cantonment authority; the other offence is the failure to comply with a notice issued by authority. In this case the notice was given when the Act of 1924 was in force and it is for the disobedience of that notice that the petitioner was prosecuted and he could therefore be prosecuted under the Act of 1924.

The period of six months within which as provided by s. 207 of the Cantonment Act of 1924, the offences under the Act are made triable could have applied only if the prosecution of the petitioner had been for erecting the building without sanction; the prosecution is for disobedience of the notice and it is conceded that it was launched within six months of such disobedience.

The only question that needs consideration in this case is whether the fine imposed upon the petitioner is not excessive having regard to the fact that the unauthorised erection took place more than eight years according to one version and six years according to the other before the action was taken by the Cantonment authority; in the meantime the petitioner has been paying taxes on two separate buildings. I consider that under the circumstances the fine should be reduced and I reduce it to Rs. 50. To this extent the petition is accepted. The balance of fine, if paid, shall be refunded to the petitioner.

MOHAMMAD HANIF ACCUSED—

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 494, —Permission to withdraw complaint—Omission to record reasons—Legality.

In granting permission to withdraw a prosecution under s. 494, Criminal Procedure Code, the Court is not bound to record any reasons for granting any such permission. Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (2), approved.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ambala, with his No. 32 of the 25th January 1932.

Petition for revision under s. 435 Criminal Procedure Code against an order passed by the Magistrate, First Class, Ambala, dated the 28th November, 1931.

Report.—A criminal case was brought against the applicant, Lala Lakshmi Narain Verma, Advocate, Ambala Contonment. An application was subsequently made for the institution of a criminal complaint against one of the prosecution witnesses, named Mohammad Hanif under s. 193 Indian Penal Code. The application was accepted, and a complaint was instituted by the Court concerned. When the case came up for hearing, however, the Public Prosecutor stated that he had been directed to withdraw from the case. The accused was accordingly discharged. Lala Lakshmi Narain has lodged a revision application against this order.

No reasons have been given by the learned District Magistrate for the withdrawal of the prosecution. The learned Magistrate also appears to have given his consent more or less automatically in accordance with the District Magistrate's order. There are two conflicting views as to whether such reasons are necessary or not. In Abdul Gani v. Abdul Kadar (1), it was held that prosecutors may not withdraw from a prosecution without giving reasons; and in withholding or according consent the Court is acting in a judicial capacity and must record its own reasons. From the fact that the Court originally concerned has deemed fit to institute a complaint, there must be some prima facie grounds of prosecution, so that there should be some definite reason for not proceeding with the complaint.

On the other hand, it has been held in Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (2) that it is not necessary on a permission to withdraw under s. 494, Criminal Procedure Code to record any reasons for such permission. The same view appears to have been taken in Madras, while the Rangoon view is based upon a Calcutta decision.

On the whole, it appears to be undesirable that a person who has been found on a preliminary enquiry to have committed the offence of perjury should be absolved by a purely executive order. For these reasons, I report the case to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court for such action as they may deem fit to take in the matter, together with the connected application against another witness, who has been similarly discharged in the same proceedings.

Order.—There is the authority of the two High Courts for the procedure adopted by the District Magistrate and I do not consider any further action necessary on this reference.

Order accordingly.

ABDULLAH—CONVICT—APPELLANT
versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 300, Exception 1—Murder—'Grave and sudden provocation'—Mere vulgar abuse—'Provocation not grave and sudden'—Sentence.

Mere vulgar abuse is not such a grave and sudden provocation as is contemplated by Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Penal Code. But provocation though not grave and sudden may be a sufficient reason for not imposing the capital sentence.

Vulgar abuse may amount to provocation even though the party abused is a mere kamin.

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 8th December, 1931.

Mr. J. R. Agnihotri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

Agha Haider, J.—Abdullah, Indian Christian, has been convicted of the murder of one Sardar Ishar Singh, a well-to-do Rats of Chak 132 R.B. in the District of Lyallpur, and has been sentenced under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code, to death. He has appealed to this Court and the record is also before us under s. 374 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for confirmation of the capital sentence.

On the 8th August, 1931, at about 10 A. M. the accused was sitting in the pohara of Sardar Ishar Singh together with a number of other persons. Balwant Singh, P. W. No. 3, who had fever, was also lying there. The accused was a servant of one Bal Singh, a nephew of Sardar Ishar Singh. Sardar Ishar Singh came and addressed the accused as the son of a dog and told him that if he stole his bhusa he would have him imprisoned. The accused replied that he had not stolen his bhusa and that, if anybody did so he could be imprisoned. The accused resented the abusive language which the Sardar had used towards him and asked him not to do so. The Sardar got infuriated at this mild protest and struck the accused on his forehead with the ferrule of his umbrella, causing a slight bleeding wound. The people present told Abdulla that he should not be angry and speak to the Sardar in an impertinent manner. After this incident Sardar Ishar Singh left the place. He returned again at about midday and again addressed the accused in the same manner, saying "you son of a dog, are you still here? If you steal my bhusa again I will have you imprisoned." The accused kept quiet and the Sardar went towards the village. All of a sudden a cry of agony was heard and five persons, who have appeared as eye-witnesses, saw the accused hitting Sardar Ishar Singh with a hatchet, Exhibit P. 1. The result of this attack was that the Sardar died on the spot. Some of the eye-witnesses went forward apparently with the idea of intervening, but, it is said, the accused told them not to come near him, otherwise he would kill them. This story is amply borne out by the evidence of Balwant Singh P. W. No. 3, Manga, P. W. No. 4, Rura, P. W. No. 5, Umra P. W. No. 6 and Wadhawa Singh, P. W. No. 7. These witnesses have been fully cross-examined but nothing has been brought out which would in any way cast any doubt upon their veracity.

(1) 81 Ind. Cas. 950; 1 R 756; 2 Bur. L. J. 287; A. I. R. 1924 Rang 168; 25 Cr. L. J. 1106.

In the appeal before us the learned Counsel, who represented the appellant, did not deny the factum of the fatal attack which the accused had made upon Sardar Ishar Singh in the manner deposed to by the eye witnesses. He, however, argued that the case fell within the purview of Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the accused was entitled to the benefit of the rule of "grave and sudden provocation" and should therefore be convicted under s. 304 (1) of the Indian Penal Code. A mere vulgar abuse, however, is not such a grave and sudden provocation as is contemplated by Exception 1 to s. 300. This part of the argument, therefore, fails.

The learned Counsel further argued that there was provocation, though not of the technically, "grave and sudden" character as mentioned in the Exception noted above, and that the capital sentence was not, therefore appropriate under the circumstances of the case. There is force in this argument. The deceased Ishar Singh seems to have been a foul-mouthed old man who appears to have been in the habit of abusing and bullying the poor servants and dependants of his family. He abused the accused in the morning and further struck him on the forehead causing it to bleed. These insults were offered in the presence of several persons who were the associates and fellow-workmen of the accused and it is but natural that he must have resented this conduct. Sardar Ishar Singh returned to the pohara at about noon and once again abused the appellant in the manner which apparently was habitual with him. This repeated insult infuriated the accused who picked up the hatchet, Ex. P. 1, which happened to be lying near by and without any premeditation, made a murderous attack on Sardar Ishar Singh. When dealing with the question of grave and sudden provocation, the Sessions Judge observed in his judgment that "the provocation could not be said to be sudden and regard being had to the language which is commonly used to kamins it could not be said to be grave."

I do not agree with this view of the Sessions Judge which appears to countenance the use of foul language towards the kamins. I believe in the dignity of man as a man and I do not think that it is the privilege of any person to abuse or maltreat his fellow human beings. If he does so he is taking a mistaken view of that code of universal morality which regulates the mutual relations of the citizens of a civilised state, whatever their position and status in life may be. In my opinion, having regard to the conduct of Sardar Ishar Singh and the repeated insults which he had offered to the accused, who seems to be an impulsive young man, the provocation was grave. Under these circumstances the sentence of death which has been passed upon the accused by the Sessions Judge was not called for.

I would, therefore, while maintaining the conviction of the accused under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code, commute the capital sentence to that of transportation for life. To this extent only the appeal is allowed.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—I concur.

AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—PETITIONERSversusEMPEROR—RESPONDENT.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Accused not preferring appeal—Application for revision by third party—Power to interfere.*

The High Court has power to interfere in revision under s. 439, Criminal Procedure Code, with an order of conviction even though the accused has not preferred an appeal and the application for revision is made by a third party, e. g., the Bar Association. Bhim Sen v. Emperor (1) and Emperor v. Mohan Lal (2), relied on.

Petition for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Lahore, dated the 3rd February, 1932.

Messrs. J. N. Aggarwal and S. R. Sawhney, for the Petitioners.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Nine ladies, Shrimati Lilawati, Shrimati Parkash Devi, Shrimati Gian Devi, Shrimati Dayawati, Shrimati Gur Devi, Shrimati Puran Devi, Shrimati Kasturi Devi, Shrimati Basant Kaur and Shrimati Pushpa Kumari were challaned and convicted under s. 151 and sentenced, with the exception of Pushpa Kumari, to four months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 each. In default they were ordered to undergo two weeks' further rigorous imprisonment each. Pushpa Kumari whose age is given as 14 to 15 was fined Rs. 100 and in default one month's rigorous imprisonment. The High Court Bar Association has put in a petition of revision on their behalf. These ladies did not appeal and took no part in the case refusing to enter upon their defence, but they put in a written statement denying that they were guilty of any offence.

It was not contended before me that this Court had no jurisdiction to intervene because the persons in question had not appealed. I have, however, looked up the law and I find that a number of High Courts and other Courts have held that this Court has jurisdiction to intervene without any regard to the question of the failure of the accused to appeal. The rulings are summarised in 131 Ind. Cas. 360 Bhim Sen v. Emperor (1), and I might add to those rulings a ruling reported as Emperor v. Mohan Lal (2), where action was taken by the Oudh Chief Court on a petition put in by the President of the Bar Association. There is, therefore, no ground for doubting the jurisdiction of this Court to intervene. It is not a question of any right of the accused nor the locus standi of the High Court Bar Association but the High Court itself has power in any case to which its attention has been drawn in any manner whatsoever to interfere in the interests of law and justice.

I have gone into the record of the case. I do not find any ground to interfere with the conviction under s. 151. There is evidence which would justify such a conviction and in the circumstances as the matter is purely one of discretion I am not inclined to interfere.

At the same time so far as the sentences are concerned, I am definitely of opinion that the sentences passed are much too severe. According to the learned Magistrate himself, and his finding is based on the evidence, eighteen persons, nine men and nine ladies in question, formed a procession for the purpose of preaching the wearing of khuddar. As they entered Anarkali a very large crowd assembled amounting according to the evidence of the Magistrate, to about two thousand people in number. This crowd became excited and the Magistrate ordered them to disperse as he feared a breach of the peace. One minute was given them to do so. Most of the crowd did disperse but the processionists did not disperse and were accordingly arrested. The ladies in their written statements have stated that they never heard the order to disperse and considering that they were in the heart of a large crowd of about two thousand persons this is quite possible. It may well be that seeing that the excited crowd had dispersed the processionists, whose objects were quite lawful and peaceful, did not think that they had been called upon to disperse. In the circumstances, therefore, the offence committed, if any, was of a somewhat technical nature, though I point out that it is a serious thing to refuse to disperse when ordered to do so by a Magistrate.

I would, therefore, accept the revision so far as to reduce the sentences of fine, except in the case of Pushpa Kumari, to Rs. 15 each, and in default one week's rigorous

As regards imprisonment the remainder of imprisonment already undergone would be sufficient in the circumstances of this case and I order accordingly. PRABANDHAK COMMITTEE

AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Sikh Gurdwaras Act (VIII of 1925), s. 18 (g)—Person in possession of property proved to be office-holder—Presumption regarding nature of property.

Where it is proved that a person is an office-holder, the burden of proof is on him or on those who claim through him to show that the property in dispute was his personal property and did not belong to the Gurdwara.

First Appeal against the decree of Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, Lahore, dated the 21st June, 1928.

Messrs. Badri Das and Achhru Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bhagat Singh, for the Respondents.

Bhide, J.—The appellants Musammatt Shiv Devi and Musammatt Lal Devi filed a petition under s. 5, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, claiming certain property which was included in the consolidated list of properties published under s. 3 of that Act and shown as attached to a notified Sikh Gurdwara called "Guru Kotha" situated at Wazirabad. The property included two parcels of land, viz., (a) 178 kanals of land attached to a well called Ghumman Singh Waia, and (b) 45 kanals and 14 marlas attached to a well called Khuki Guru Kotha. The petitioners claimed this land to be their personal property as the heirs of Sunder Singh, deceased, who was the son of Musammatt Shiv Devi and husband of Musammatt Lal Devi. The Tribunal to which the petition was sent for disposal has decided that the petitioners have a life-estate in property (a) and that it will revert to the Gurdwara Guru Kotha on their death and that they have no right to property (b) which belongs to that Gurdwara. From this decision the present appeal has been preferred.

The main points raised by the learned Counsel for the appellants were that Sunder Singh deceased was not an office-holder and did not hold the lands in dispute in that capacity, that the lands were inherited by Sunder Singh from his father Nihal Singh as his personal property and that the petitioners are therefore entitled to inherit them. The first contention seems to have no force. Sunder Singh was described as a mahant of the Gurdwara in paras. 2 to 4 of the petition itself and it was stated therein that he was forcibly ousted therefrom by the Akalis in the year 1921. In addition, there is on the record a copy of a statement made by Sunder Singh himself before the Tahsildar of Wazirabad in November 1922 (vide Ex. R. 1) from which it appears that Sunder Singh held charge of the Gurdwara as a pujari or mahant for some time. This evidence receives further support from the statement of Guranditta Mal (P. W. No. 4) a member of the Managing Committee of the Gurdwara and from Ex. R-4, a list of articles prepared in May 1919, when the charge of the Gurdwara was transferred to Sunder Singh. It is true that on the death of Nihal Singh the charge was at first formally given to Sant Attar Das and then to Musammatt Shiv Devi, but that was only on account of the minority of Sunder Singh. I have therefore no hesitation in agreeing with the Tribunal's finding that Sunder Singh was an office-holder.

In view of the provisions of s. 18 (g) Sikh Gurdwaras Act, it was conceded on behalf of the appellants that if Sunder Singh was an office-holder, the burden of proof lay on the petitioners to show that the property in dispute was the personal property of Sunder Singh and did not belong to the Gurdwara. The petitioners have however failed to discharge this onus. The oral evidence on the record is of little value. The documentary evidence seems to be almost entirely in favour of the respondents. The most important document bearing on the question is an award dated 9th July 1898 given by Sardul Singh and others, on a reference to arbitration: vide Ex. R-13. It appears that, on the death of Ganda Singh, who was a mahant of the Gurdwara, a dispute arose amongst his widow Musammatt Mehtab Kaur, Uttam Singh, his chela and Nihal Singh, who was his sister's son, about the succession to the mahantship and the property attached to the Gurdwara. The dispute was referred to arbitration and it was decided that the 178 kanals of land attached to Ghumman Singh Wala should go to Musammatt Mehtab Kaur, and Nihal Singh and their heirs, but that they should have no right to alienate the land and that in the absence of any heirs it should be considered to be the "wakf" property of the Gurdwara. The area of 45 kanal 14 marlas attached to "Khuhi Guru Kotha" was declared forthwith to be the wakf property of the Gurdwara. As regards the award, it was contended on behalf of the appellants that it was not acted upon. But the evidence on the record shows that Uttam Singh and Nihal Singh were appointed mahants and discharged their duties by turns in accordance with the award and that a committee was also appointed in accordance with the award and exercised its powers of appointment and removal of mahants and supervised the management of the Gurdwara. On the death of Nihal Singh, Musammatt Shiv Davi petitioner, approached this committee for the appointment of Sunder Singh as a mahant and carried out their orders. There is therefore no substance in the contention that the award was not acted upon and I see no good reason why the award should not be held to be binding on the petitioners.

It is true that Nihal Singh made some conflicting statements at times to suit his interests claiming the land as his own; but his will dated 23rd May 1913 (Ex. R. 16-1) shows that he was conscious of the fact that the property now in dispute was not his personal property. It is significant that in his will Nihal Singh did not claim to be the full proprietor of the land. He clearly says therein that he was not competent to alienate the land and that the powers of his male heirs would be similarly restricted. It was urged that such restrictions could not be legally imposed by a will so as to fetter the powers of the beneficiaries. But the will was really in favour of the Gurdwara and not of Nihal Singh's heirs. Besides on a careful perusal of the contents of the award and the will, it seems to me that the will did not really create any new restrictions, but merely declared such restrictions as were already in existence.

The petitioners have produced no evidence to show that the property in suit was acquired by mihant Ganda Singh or any of his predecessors as his personal property. Even the mutations relating to the succession to the property on the death of Ganda Singh or any of his predecessors were not produced. The only mutation of which a copy is produced is the one relating to the succession of Sunder Singh, but that was sanctioned after the present dispute had arisen and is of no significance.

I accordingly hold that the award dated 9th July 1898, referred to above, is binding on the petitioners. Affirming the decision of the Tribunal, which is in conformity with the terms of the award, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Interest—Interest by way of damages, when awardable.

Interest can be allowed only either under a contract, express or implied, between the parties or when the requirements of the Interest Act have been satisfied. Where these conditions are not fulfilled interest cannot be allowed by way of damages for the wrongful detention of money. [p. 720, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 14th October, 1927 modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Kasur, District Lahore, dated the 23rd December, 1926.

Mr. M. C. Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Rai Sahib Lala Mool Chand, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by the plaintiff Nanak for the recovery of the price of the goats supplied by him to the defendant. The learned Additional Judge holds that a sum of Rs. 100 was due to the plaintiff as the balance of the price of the goats supplied by him up to the end of November, 1925. This finding is clearly one of fact and cannot be attacked in second appeal.

As regards the number of goats delivered in December, 1925, the learned Judge has reached the conclusion that 102 goats were supplied, and he has allowed Rs. 460 as the price of those goats. The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant contends that there is no evidence in support of the finding that 102 goats were supplied to his client, and the finding cannot, therefore, be sustained. It is true that there is no direct evidence that those goats were supplied in December, but the learned Judge bases his conclusion upon two pieces of evidence. In the first place, he refers to the evidence of the witness Ghulam Mustafa, who was admittedly in the employ of the defendant from 12th November, 1925 to 20th February, 1926, and who states that on three occasions during the period of his employment the plaintiff supplied 55, 43 and 59 goats respectively. He then refers to a telegram which was sent by the defendant to the plaintiff on the 28th November, 1925, in which the latter was asked to supply 100 goats; and he assumes that the last two instalments, namely, 43 and 59 goats admitted by Ghulam Mustafa to have been delivered to the defendant, were in pursuance of the telegram. The learned Judge could draw from this evidence the inference he did, and it cannot be said that there is no evidence in support of his finding. It must be remembered that the defendant has withheld his account books, and it is difficult to believe his version that he being a contractor did not keep any accounts, showing his dealings with the plaintiff and with the Military authorities to whom he was supplying mutton.

The lower Appellate Court has, however, made a mistake in awarding interest by way of damages for the wrongful detention of money. There is ample authority for the proposition that interest can be allowed only either under a contract express or implied between the parties or when the requirements of the Interest Act have been satisfied. It is not disputed that there was no contract for the payment of interest, and it is clear that the conditions prescribed by the Interest Act have not been fulfilled in the present case.

The respondent has filed certain objections which impeach the findings of facts recorded by the Additional Judge. The objections must, therefore, be dismissed.

The result is that the appeal of the defendants is accepted so far as to reduce the decree made against him from Rs. 575 to Rs. 560. In all other respects the appeal is dismissed and the parties are directed to bear their own costs in this Court.

JAGNA AND OTHERS—CONVICTEDS—

PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Cantonments Act (II of 1924), s. 118—Gaming—'Public place', meaning of.

A verandah of a private house accessible to a public street is not a public place within the meaning of s. 118 of the Cantonments Act and the mere fact that it is open to the road, and can be entered by the public is not sufficient for holding it to be a public place. Mul Sing v. Empress (1), Bhagwan v. Empress (2), Empress v. Ratan (3), and Empress v. Kalandar Khan (4), referred to.

Criminal Revision reported by the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated the 18th February, 1931.

Report.—The petitioners, 12 in number, have been convicted of gaming in a public place and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 20 each under s. 118, Cantonments Act, 1924.

The conviction is based on the evidence of a Sergeant of Police, who states that he found the accused gaming at cards with money at the side of a public road. Evidence was produced in defence to show that there was a meeting at the house in question for the purpose of reading the scriptures and that no gaming took place. The defence evidence was not accepted by the lower Court, which convicted the accused as already mentioned.

There is no reason to doubt that gaming was going on, but it is open to question whether it occurred in a public place or street, within the meaning of the Act. The only reason given by the learned Magistrate for finding that this was the case is that the verandah became a public place when once it was used by the public for gaming. There is however no evidence to show that the accused were participating in the gaming as members of the public and not as friends of the owner of the house. No inquiry on this point seems to have been made.

The authorities which I have been able to find relate to s. 13, Punjab Gambling Act, 1867, where the offence is substantially the same. But in Mul Singh v. Empress (1) it was held that a tharra attached to a shop and situated on the verge of a village bazaar was not a public place. The question whether a tharra situated actually, might be a public place was left open. In Bhagwan v. Empress (2) a verandah attached to the room of a private house, looking on an alley, was held not to be a public place. Similarly, the chabutra of a shop was excluded from the definition in Empress v. Ratan (3) and Empress v. Kalandar Khan (4). The last three cases are not before me, but are cited from Khandekar's Indian Criminal Court Manual.

There is no suggestion that the accused are regular gamblers or that the place is a common gaming house. The verandah is stated by the only prosecution witness to be on the side of the public road. It is not stated to be part of the road, though the witness says that it is an open place and that anybody can go into it. In the light of the rulings cited above, the mere fact that the verandah is open to the road and can be entered by the public does not appear to be sufficient reason for holding it to be anything but a private place. The proceedings are, therefore, submitted with the recommendation that the convictions may be set aside.

As there is no note on the record regarding the realization of fine, information will be given after inquiry from the Magistrate concerned.

Order.—The question is whether a verandah of a private house accessible to a public street is a public place within the meaning of the Act. The evidence is that the site is open for the use to the public. The words are not very clear as it is previously stated that the site is the verandah of the house. On the whole I am not satisfied that the place is shown to be a public place. I accept the reference and acquit the petitioners. The fine if paid will be refunded and the money confiscated returned to the owners.

Party No 2—1. Hazara Singh, 2. Teja Singh, 3. Sohan Singh and 4. Megh Singh.

Only one member of party No. 1, namely Jagat Singh was injured while on the side of party No. 2 Hazara Singh, Sohan Singh and Megh Singh bore injuries.

The result of the two trials has been the acquittal of all members of party No. 2, it being held that Teja Singh who was found to have inflicted the spear wound, which caused the death of Bhagat Singh of party No. 1 had acted in exercise of the right of private defence. As regards the members of party

No. 1 Jogindar Singh in accordance with the opinion of three out of the four ~~seefers~~ was found guilty of being individually responsible for causing the death of Ujagar Singh of party No. 2 by means of a spear thrust in the abdomen and has been sentenced to transportation for life under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. Pal Singh and Anckh Singh of party No. 1 were jointly found guilty of causing simple hurt to Megh Singh of party No. 2, and each has been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 323, Indian Penal Code. They and the other members of party No. 1 were not found to be constructively liable for the murder of Ujagar Singh and so were acquitted of this charge.

We have, therefore, before us only the appeals of Jogindar Singh represented by Mr. Sethi, and Pal Singh and Anckh Singh by Mr. Saunders.

The cause of this encounter and the facts relating thereto are briefly as follows:

Some four or five days previous to the occurrence there was a quarrel and a fight between the two deceased persons owing to one Tota Singh, a partner in cultivation of Bhagat Singh, having turned off the water from Ujagar Singh's field some 15 minutes before the latter's turn was up. The two were separated but apparently the affair still rankled in the mind of Ujagar Singh for on meeting Bhagat Singh in the gali on the morning of the 28th he attacked the latter with a kahi which he had in his hand at the time. Bhagat Singh avoided the blow and going to his house, which is on the north side of the village pond, he reappeared armed with a barchhi. Ujagar Singh likewise ran to his haveli, which is on the opposite side or south side of the pond and emerged similarly armed. These two abused and challenged each other from opposite sides of the pond, each of them being apparently soon joined by the other members of the two parties equipped with weapons of different kinds. While Jagat Singh (brother of Bhagat Singh) and Ganda Singh, a cousin of Ujagar Singh, who has appeared as a defence witness, on the one side and Harnam Singh on the other were trying to keep the peace, Jogindar Singh, who was carrying a gandali, aimed a blow at Ganda Singh, which the latter avoiding retreated in the direction of party No. 2. The members of this party advanced towards party No. 1, Megh Singh going round the east side of the pond while Ujagar Singh, Hazara Singh, Sobhan Singh and Teja Singh went round the west side. Bhagat Singh on seeing Megh Singh advancing attacked him with his barchhi but Megh Singh warded off the blow with the iron pointed dang which he was carrying.

The two then appear to have grappled with each other and in course of this struggle each dropped his weapon. It was at this juncture that Pal Singh and Anckh Singh, appellants, were alleged to have come up and beaten Megh Singh with dangs causing him six simple injuries consisting of four contusions and two scratches. Megh Singh is then said to have retreated and Jogindar Singh picking up the barchhi dropped by Bhagat Singh and the latter picking up the iron-pointed dang dropped by Megh Singh and joined by Pal Singh and Anokh Singh ran in the direction of where the other members of the two parties were fighting. On reaching the spot Bhagat Singh was alleged to have aimed a blow at Teja Singh, who avoiding this dealt Bhagat Singh a blow in the stomach with the barchhi which he (Teja Singh) was carrying. Bhagat Singh fell, whereupon Jogindar Singh struck Ujagar a similar blow with the barchhi of Bhagat Singh which he (Jogindar Singh) had picked up. Ujagar Singh on receipt of this injury also fell, and it appears that the fight then came to an end. Hazara Singh of party No. 2 made a report at the Sarhali Police Station at 2 p. m. the same day, and the only portion of this report to which reference need be made for the purposes of the appeal of Jogindar Singh is the statement therein that one Hari Singh was responsible for causing the death of Ujagar Singh by a spear thrust and that in addition to others, Kartar Singh (P. W. No. 4), Sohan Singh (P. W. No. 10), Thakur Singh (P. W. No. 11) and Ishar Singh (P. W. No. 12), whose evidence has been believed by the learned Sessions Judge were present during the fight.

The defence set up was that the fight took place between Bhagat Singh and Ujagar Singh only and each was responsible for causing the death of the other by means of a spear thrust. This, however, has not been established. Jogindar Singh appellant also pleaded an alibi, but, as the learned Counsel for this appellant has not referred to the evidence in this connexion, it is unnecessary to deal with this matter. Now in connexion with the appeal of Jogindar Singh only two points, as urged by his learned Counsel, arise for determination: (1) whether the prosecution has established that Jogindar Singh took part in the fight and was responsible for causing the death of Ujagar Singh and (2) if so, whether he acted in exercise of the right of private defence.

The participation of Jogindar Singh in this affair and his responsibility for causing the death of Ujagar Singh depends entirely on the evidence of the four prosecution witnesses mentioned above. Their testimony has been criticized in respect of certain details mentioned by them, but after a careful examination of their evidence I see no reason whatever for disbelieving them in regard to Jogindar Singh having caused the death of Ujagar Singh. The petty enmities disclosed by the cross-examination are insufficient to discount the value of their evidence; on the contrary it would appear that these four witnesses were not ill-disposed towards the members of party No. 1 and tried to help them in their evidence. As observed by the learned Sessions Judge, owing to one member of each party having been killed, the others were disinclined to press the matter and wanted to bury the hatchet. Consequently the prosecution experienced some difficulty in obtaining the evidence from the members of party No. 2. Indeed Hazara Singh denied the correctness of the report made by him and had to be treated as a hostile witness, while Sohan Singh and Megh Singh were given up by the prosecution on the ground that they had become hostile.

It is also urged on behalf of the appellant Jogindar Singh that Hari Singh had been mentioned as the assailant of Ujagar Singh in the First Information Report, but it is clear from the evidence not only of Hazara Singh but also of the other four prosecution witnesses referred to above, that Hari Singh was not present during the affair. His name probably crept into the report either through an oversight or through mistake on the part of Hazara Singh.

Turning now to the question as to whether Jogindar Singh in assailing and injuring Ujagar Singh was acting in exercise of the right of private defence, it is apparent from the evidence that this appellant could not possibly have entertained any apprehension whatever that he was going to be attacked by Ujagar Singh. On the other hand, it is in my opinion, quite evident that in assailing and injuring Ujagar Singh he was actuated by revenge. I would, therefore, hold that Jogindar Singh has been rightly convicted and I would dismiss his appeal.

As regards the appeal of Pal Singh and Anokh Singh the only point urged by Mr. Saunders was that as these appellants had been found not constructively liable for the murder of Ujagar Singh, and had been acquitted in respect of the charges under s. 302-149, Indian Penal Code, they should not have been convicted of causing simple hurt to Megh Singh not having been charged with the commission of an offence under s. 323, Indian Penal Code. The learned Counsel relied on an unreported Division ruling of this Court in Criminal Appeal No. 111 of 1929, Boota Singh v. King Emperor. There three persons were tried for the murder of one Sher Singh and the learned Sessions Judge, while convicting Boota Singh under cl. (1), s. 304, Indian Penal Code, declined to apply s. 31 to the case of the other two persons, but convicted them of an offence under s. 324, Indian Penal Code, for having caused hurt at the same time to the two companions of the deceased. The Bench set aside their conviction on the ground that they were not charged with the commission of this offence. No reasons were, however, given nor were any authorities quoted in support of the view taken.

In Dasarath Mandal v. Emperor (1) it was held that when the accused are charged under ss. 304 and 325, Indian Penal Code, they may be convicted of an offence under s. 323, Indian Penal Code, though no charge under that section has been drawn up against them. But when they are charged under ss. 304 and 325 read with s. 149, Indian Penal Code, in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by another person in the course of a riot and the commission of the riot is disbelieved they should not be convicted under s. 323 in respect of their individual acts with which they are not charged and which are not imputed to them in the Judge's charge to the jury. A similar view was taken in Panchu Das v. Emperor (2). But it will be obvious that the dictum in these two cases as to the illegality of the convictions is based on the omission of the Judge to impute the commission of those particular offences in his charge to the Jury.

In the present case it is manifest from the evidence that though the appellants were not charged with having caused simple hurt to Megh Singh, the commission of this offence was imputed to them and clearly brought out by the evidence. This offence was committed in the course of the same transaction and they might have been charged with it according to the provisions of s. 236, Criminal Procedure Code. The omission to do so would not however render their conviction for this offence illegal in the circumstances on the application of ss. 137 and 238 of the said Code.

(1) 34 O. 325; 5 Cr. L. J. 424.

(2) 34 O. 693; 5 Cr. L. J. 427; 11 C. W. N. 666.

In my opinion, therefore, the conviction of these two appellants under s. 323, Indian Penal Code, is not illegal, and I would affirm the conviction; but as they have been enlarged on bail and probably sufficiently punished for their offence I would reduce the sentence to the period of imprisonment already undergone.

IDA—ACCUSED—APPELLANT
versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 19, 20—Keeping chhavi blade in one's house—Nature of offence—Essentials of offence under s. 20.

An essential ingredient of s. 20 of the Arms Act, is that the man doing any act mentioned in cls. (a), (c), (d), or (f), of s. 19, should do it in such a manner as to indicate an intention that such act may not be known to any public servant. Merely keeping of a chhavi blade in one's own house and possessing a stick that would fit into it, cannot be regarded as falling within the purview of s. 20. The case would fall more appropriately under the definition of s. 19 (f).

Criminal Appeal from an order of the First Class Magistrate, Lahore, dated the 25th March, 1931.

Mr. D. R. Sawhney, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The facts of this case briefly are that the appellant Ida was suspected in a case under s. 457, Indian Penal Code, and his house was searched on 14th September, 1930. At the time of the search of the house, he himself was not present but his wife was in the house. In the course of the search, Khuda Baksh, head constable, found the head of a chhavi lying under some bags in the room occupied by Ida and his wife, and a dang standing in one corner of the same room. The chhavi blade was fixed on to the dang and fitted it. He reported this to the authorities and Ida and his wife were challaned for an offence under s. 20, Arms Act. The learned Magistrate discharged the wife, as her possession was, in the eye of the law, possession of the husband, and convicted Ida under s. 20, Arms Act, and sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

Ida has presented an appeal through Jail and I have examined the record with the help of the learned Public Prosecutor. The recovery of the chhavi from the house of Ida is satisfactorily proved by the evidence of Khuda Baksh, head constable, and of Devi Das and Mehar Din, who were witnesses as to this search. There cannot, therefore, be any doubt as to Ida being in possession of this chhavi.

The only question for consideration is whether the sentence awarded is called for in this case. An essential ingredient of s. 20, Arms Act, is that the man doing any act mentioned in cls. (a), (c), (d), or (f), s. 19, should do it in such a manner as to indicate an intention that such act may not be known to any public servant. I do not see how the keeping of a chhavi blade in one's own house and possessing a stick that would fit into it, can be regarded as falling within the purview of s. 20, Arms Act. The case seems to me to fall more appropriately under the definition of s. 19 (f). The learned Public Prosecutor concedes this point.

I think, therefore, that a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice in the present case and I modify the conviction from one under s. 20, Arms Act, to that under s. 19 (f) of the same Act, and reduce the sentence to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

In a prosecution of a motor driver for an offence under s. 338 Penal Code, it cannot be said that the car has been used by the accused for the commission of the offence within the meaning of s. 516-A, Criminal Procedure Code, and it is illegal for the Magistrate to detain the motor car pending conclusion of the trial. Emperor v. Ilahi Bakhsh (1), followed.

Criminal Revision reported by the Sessions Judge, Sargodha, dated the 27th April, 1931.

Report—The accused who is a motor driver is being prosecuted for an offence under s. 338, Indian Penal Code. Pending trial his motor car has been seized and placed in the custody of the court. The accused applied to the Magistrate (Sheikh Alaaddin Arshad, Magistrate, First Class, Sargodha) that the car be returned to him; but the Magistrate has dismissed his application with the following order,

"I have seen the order of the District Magistrate on the file. The motor car appears to have been used for the commission of an offence under s. 338, Indian Penal Code and it would be needed to be shown to the witnesses when evidence is being taken. The car should be kept where it is till the decision of the case."

The order of the Magistrate is clearly illegal and without jurisdiction in my opinion as it cannot be said that the car had been used by the accused for the commission of an offence: see on this point Emperor v. Ilahi Bakhsh (1). The Magistrate has apparently been influenced by the order of the District Magistrate on the accused's previous application on which the District Magistrate wrote that the car cannot be returned till the prosecution evidence had been recorded or till the trial Magistrate finds that it shall not be needed any more for the purpose of the trial. I do not think the car is needed at all during the trial, and even if it is necessary to show it to the witnesses, security can be taken from the accused to produce the car on every hearing. It is not known when the trial is going to end and the car may deteriorate if it is kept without use and proper care in Court custody or custody of the Police. Cases of this nature crop up frequently and an authoritative pronouncement is necessary in the end of justice as to whether the Magistrate can pass an order under s. 516-A, Criminal Procedure Code, for custody of the motor car pending the conclusion of the trial.

I, therefore, forward the case to the High Court with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate be set aside and that he should be directed to return the car to the accused taking security, if necessary, for its production whenever required by him for purposes of the trial.

(1) 4 P. L. R. 1904.

Order.—The Magistrate's order detaining the motor car pending the conclusion of the trial is illegal and cannot be sustained. He has apparently been influenced by the order of the District Magistrate which was obviously improper as it was his duty to decide the matter himself on the facts and the law applicable to the case.

I think it would be straining the language to hold that the motor car was used for the commission of the offence within the meaning of s. 516 A, Criminal Procedure Code. The ruling in Emperor v. Ilahi Bakhsh (1), is directly applicable to the case. It is to be observed that all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, and even the plea that the car is needed to be shown to the witnesses when evidence is being taken cannot now be urged.

I accordingly accept the recommendation made by the learned Sessions Judge and quash the order of the Magistrate detaining the car.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 34—Income Tax Rules, r. 25—Assessment of Life Insurance Companies—Rule 25, whether mandatory—Recourse to other modes of assessment, legality of—Chargeability and assessability—Difference.

Rule 25 of the Income Tax Manual is of a mandatory character and provides the only manner in which the income, profits and gains of Life Assurance Companies can be determined. The assessing officer has no discretion to depart from its provisions and to have recourse to the other provisions of the Income Tax Act for the purpose of determining and assessing the income, profits and gains of a Life Assurance Company. [p. 727, col. 1.]

There is a clear distinction between chargeability and assessability. The former expression connotes liability to pay income-tax; the latter expression has reference primarily to the machinery, which ought to be utilized, and the procedure that must be followed in determining the amount which should be levied as income-tax. [p. 728, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, no machinery exists to make it possible for the Income Tax Authorities to assess the income, profits or gains of the company during a particular year the assessment for that year is not legal. [ibid]

Section 31, Income Tax Act, pre-supposes that the income, profits or gains which can be assessed under it should have been chargeable during the preceding year and also must have escaped assessment. [p. 726, col. 1.]

Civil Reference case referred by the Commissioner, Income-tax, Punjab, N. W. F., and Delhi Provinces, dated the 21st January, 1929.

Messrs. Badri Das and Har Gopal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. N. Aggarwal, for the Respondent.

Order.—This reference under s. 66, Income-tax Act, has been made by the Commissioner of Income-tax, under the following circumstances:

The Lakshmi Insurance Company started business on 1st May, 1924, and as provided by s. 8, Life Assurance Companies Act, 1912, the first actuarial report as to its financial condition and the valuation of its liabilities was prepared for the period ending 30th April, 1928, that is to say, for the first four years of its actual working. As a result of this valuation a profit of Rs. 1,25,684 was found to have been made by the company. In this manner the average net profits for one year have been found to be Rs. 34,707. The company was for the first time assessed to income-tax for the year 1928-29 on the basis of this income and there is no dispute as to this. But during the year 1928 the Income-tax Officer also proceeded to assess the company to income-tax in respect of its profits for the year 1927-28 professing to act under s. 34, Income-tax Act. To this course an objection was taken on behalf of the company that the Income-tax Officer had no legal power to proceed under that section in the circumstances of the case. Consequently on the application of the company the following question has been referred for the opinion of this court:

"Whether in the circumstances of this case the assessment made under s. 34 for the year 1927-28 is legal."

We have heard Counsel for both parties and I am of opinion that our answer should be in the negative.

Now s. 34, Income-tax Act, reads as follows:

"If for any reason, income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax has escaped assessment in any year * * * the Income-tax Officer may, at any time within one year of the end of that year, serve on the person liable to pay income-tax * * * a notice * * * and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income etc."

The section, therefore, pre-supposes that the income, profits or gains which can be assessed under it should have been chargeable during the preceding year and also must have escaped assessment.

There is no question raised before us that the income, profits or gains in question, if assessable were chargeable. But it is contended that they did not "escape assessment" because this expression implies that they should have been assessable which it is further contended, means that they were capable of assessment during the previous year. Now it seems that there is clear distinction between chargeability and assessability. The former expression connotes liability to pay income-tax; the latter expression has reference primarily to the machinery, which ought to be utilized, and the procedure that must be followed in determining the amount which should be levied as income-tax. It, therefore, appears to me that during the year 1927-28 no machinery existed which made it possible in law for the Income-Tax authorities to assess the income, profits or gains of the company during that year.

Section 59, Income Tax Act provides that the Central Board of Revenue may, "....." make rules for carrying out the purposes of the Act and for the ascertainment and determination of any class of income; it further particularly provides that it may make rules prescribing the manner in which and the procedure by which the income, profits and gains of the insurance companies shall be arrived at. In pursuance of the powers conferred upon the Central Board of Revenue rules have been framed by it and the relevant rule is r. 25 which is to be found at page 67 of the Income-tax Manual (Ed. 2). That rule lays down that in the case of Life Assurance Companies, whose profits are periodically ascertained by actuarial valuation, the income, profits and gains of the life assurance business shall be the average annual net profits disclosed by the last preceding valuation.

Now there is no question that in the year 1927-28 no profits of the Lakshmi Assurance Company had been ascertained by actuarial valuation, and consequently no assessment was possible during that year under the Income Tax Act according to the rule cited above. In other words during that year there were no means provided by law for ascertaining or assessing the income of the company. But the learned Counsel who represented the Income-tax Commissioner before us contended that if the actuarial valuation was not available to the Income-tax Officer during the year 1927-28, it was open to that officer to proceed in the ordinary way, that is to say, to levy the income-tax after obtaining a return of its income from the company as is done in the case of ordinary individuals, companies or associations, and in this connexion he contended that the provisions of s. 59, Income Tax Act, are enabling provisions and that it is not incumbent on the Central Board of Revenue to frame rules under that section. This is true, but the Central Board of Revenue have made the rules under that section and the rule concerned is of a mandatory character. It provides the only manner in which the income, profits and gains of Life Assurance Companies can be determined. It does not give any discretion to the assessing officer to depart from its provisions and to have recourse to the other provisions of the Income Tax Act for the purpose of determining and assessing the income, profits and gains of a Life Assurance Company.

That being so, it is clear, in my opinion, that in the year 1927-28 it was not possible under the provisions of the existing law for the Income-tax Officer to assess the Lakshmi Insurance Company to income-tax. Can it, therefore, be urged that the income, profits and gains of the company "escaped assessment" during that year as that term is used in s. 34, Income Tax Act. A thing cannot be said to escape certain consequences unless it is capable of facing or being subjected to those consequences and, as, in my opinion, the income of the company was not capable of assessment under the rules laid down by the Central Board of Revenue, which have the force of law, during the year 1927-28 in the absence of an actuarial valuation, which valuation according to the wording of r. 25 referred to above is to be utilized for assessing the income of the succeeding years till the next valuation is made, it cannot be said to have escaped assessment.

It is further to be noted that according to r. 25 cited above the last preceding valuation has to be made the basis of the succeeding assessments. In the present case there is no last preceding valuation with reference to the income which should ordinarily be taken as the basis of assessment for 1927-28.

I would, therefore, answer the question in the negative and leave the parties to bear their own costs of these proceedings.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Second appeal—Effect of construction of words in document—Question as to—Question of fact.

The question as to the effect of the construction of the words in a document which is neither a document of title nor the foundation of the plaintiff's claim is one of fact and not of law. Wali Muhammad v. Muhammad Bakhsh (1), relied on.

Second Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 9th July, 1925.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Respondents.

Coldstream, J.—On this appeal coming before us to-day a preliminary objection is taken by Counsel for the respondents to the effect that the only question arising in the appeal is one of fact which has been finally decided by the lower Appellate Court.

The question for decision is whether or not the second defendant in the suit, a firm known as Shankar Das Shib Lal was liable as surety for the debt found due by the first defendant to the plaintiff firm on a bahi account relating to the sale of goods by the latter firm to the first defendant.

The plaintiff firm's contention in the suit was that the firm Shankar Das-Shib Lal through its proprietor Shankar Das, had guaranteed payment by the debtor in respect of the transactions to which the suit related which transactions commenced in 1917 and this contention was sought to be established by oral evidence and also by the evidence of some post-cards written by Shankar Das. The lower Appellate Court held that the alleged guarantee had not been established.

In reply to Mr. D. C. Ralli's objection Mr. Badri Das for the plaintiff firm, the present appellants, argues that the decision of the lower Court turns on the construction of the words in the post-card written on the 13th April, 1918, and that the question of their effect is one not of fact but of law which is still open for decision on second appeal.

U. N. B.

There is in my judgment no doubt as to the validity of the objection put forward by Mr. D. C. Ralli. It is obvious that the postcard is neither a document of title nor the foundation of the plaintiff's claim. It was produced with other post cards merely as evidence in support of a prior guarantee which was held not proved as a fact. Applying the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Wali Muhammad v. Muhammad Bakhsh (1) I must hold that the matter in second appeal involves no question of law. The lower Court's decision was final and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1—Mortgage suit—Parties—Persons claiming paramount title.

A person who sets up a title paramount to that of the mortgagor and mortgagee should not be joined as a party to a suit to enforce the mortgage as he is neither interested in the mortgage-security nor in the right of redemption.

First Appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 28th August, 1930.

Mr. Govind Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hargopal, for the Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On the 9th April, 1923 the firm of Messrs. Brij Lal and Sons, carrying on business as iron merchants at Rawalpindi, borrowed Rs 6000 from the Punjab and Kashmir Bank, Limited, and executed a promissory note for that sum in favour of their creditors. They also created an equitable mortgage in favour of the Bank by depositing title deeds in respect of certain immoveable property which belonged to them. It appears that the dealings between the parties continued up to July, 1926, and in March, 1930, the Bank brought the present action for the recovery of a certain sum of money by the sale of the mortgaged property. The trial Judge made a preliminary decree on the 25th August, 1931, and as the amount due to the mortgagees was not paid in pursuance of that decree, he made the decree final on the 28th August, 1930.

There is no dispute about the money due by the defendants to the plaintiffs, and the arguments in the appeal have been narrowed down to a few technical objections. In the first place, it is urged that Ram Labhaya, who was impleaded as a defendant in the suit, raised an objection that he was not a partner in the firm of Messrs. Brij Lal and Sons, but that the trial Judge neither framed an issue nor recorded evidence on that matter. It appears that Ram Labhaya declined to receive the summons and absented himself from the court. It was only at a later stage of the trial that he came forward and denied his being a partner in the firm. If the learned Judge had enquired into the plea of Ram Labhaya, he would have probably come to the conclusion that this defendant was a member of a joint Hindu family with the other defendants and was consequently a partner in the firm. It is, however, clear that the immoveable property, which was mortgaged to the Bank, belonged to the firm of Messrs. Brij Lal and Sons; and that Ram Labhaya could have no interest in that property, if he was not a partner in the firm. If the decree holders seek to execute the decree against him personally, the question of his liability may be tried and determined in execution as prescribed by O. XXI, r. 50, sub r. (2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Counsel for the appellants also contends that Ram Labhaya's brother Jai Gopal was a necessary party to the suit, as he was the owner of the immoveable property and that he should have been impleaded as a defendant in the case. A perusal of O. XXXIV, r. 1, however, makes it clear that only a person having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption can be joined as a party to a suit relating to a mortgage. It has been repeatedly held that a person, who sets up a title paramount to that of the mortgagor or mortgagee, should not be joined as a party, for he is interested neither in the mortgage security nor in the right of redemption. It is, therefore, clear that the claim made on behalf of Jai Gopal cannot be entertained and it is significant that he himself never came forward and made an application to be impleaded as a defendant.

Lastly, it is argued that the period of three days prescribed by the preliminary decree for the redemption of the property was inadequate, and that the trial Judge should have fixed a longer period for the payment of the money. Considering that the defendants had been making efforts to delay the decision of the suit, and that it was open to them to make an application to the court under O. XXXIV, r. 2, sub r. (2) for an order to extend the time fixed for the payment of the money, I do not think that any useful purpose would be served by setting aside the final decree in order to give the debtors further time for payment. Indeed, it is not suggested that they would be able to provide the money, if the time for payment thereof be extended.

For the foregoing reasons I would affirm the decree of the trial Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 5—Mortgage suit—Appeal against preliminary decree—
Stay of proceedings in lower Court.

Where an appeal has been preferred against a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, the Appellate Court has power to stay further proceedings in the lower court and it is a general rule to do so where no loss would be caused to the decree-holder by the stay of proceedings. Chote Lal v. Sultan Singh (1) and Karam Ilahi v. Amir-ul-nisa (2), followed.

Petition under O. XLI, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, for stay of proceedings in pursuance of the preliminary decree pending the decision of the appeal cases noted above by the High Court.

Mr. J. N. Aggarwal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

Order.—The petitioner in this case seeks to obtain stay of proceedings. A preliminary decree has been passed against him in a mortgage suit and he has preferred an appeal against that decree which is pending in this court. It has been urged by the opposite party that there is no occasion to stay proceedings as the final decree would later be followed by execution proceedings which could then, on proper cause being shown, be stayed.

In 111 I. O. 383 Chote Lal v. Sultan Singh (1) Mr. Justice Addison stayed further proceedings on the ground that it was the general rule to do so.

The same view was expressed by Mr. Justice Zafar Ali in 119 I. O. 489 Karam Ilahi v. Amir-ul-Nisa (2)

I am unable to see what loss would be caused to the decree holder if the proceedings were stayed at this stage and I accordingly make the Rule absolute.

Enhancement of sentence—Principles—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 304-II, 325—Offence under provocation—Resultant death—Nature of offence.

The principles upon which the High Court habitually acts as a court of revision in relation to the enhancement of sentences, where the law allows a discretion to the Court whose sentence is impugned, are that it should not interfere if the sentence passed involves substantial punishment, and should interfere if the sentence is manifestly inadequate. The Court is, in particular, slow to interfere where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail, though this circumstance is no insuperable obstacle. The Court also frequently declines to interfere in order to enhance a sentence, on the mere ground that it would itself have passed a heavier sentence, contenting itself with pointing out that the sentence is so far light that a heavier sentence would have been maintained. Empress v. Chuni Lal (1), relied on, Crown v. Budha (2), referred to. [p. 732, col. 1.]

Criminal Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 16th May, 1931

Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. W. Fairlie, for Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellant Bhola Nath has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Multan of an offence under s. 304-II, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year. He has appealed through Mr. B. R. Puri and an application for enhancement of the sentence has been preferred by the Government Advocate under instructions from the Local Government.

The case for the prosecution is that on the 26th of January, 1931, at about 10 A. M. the appellant who was at that time the Senior Assistant Superintendent of the Central Jail at Montgomery thrust a wooden substance into the rectum of a long term prisoner named Nura, which caused a perforation nearly 4" above the anal orifice, and in consequence Nura died two days later in the early hours of the 28th of January.

The appellant denied his guilt. The learned Sessions Judge, however, held that Nura died as the result of the injury caused by the appellant, but having regard to the peculiar circumstances in which the offence was committed he was of opinion that the ends of justice would be met by imposing a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment.

On appeal Mr. Pari for the appellant and Mr. Fairlie for the Crown have taken me through the record and have addressed lengthy arguments in support of their respective contentions. Both Counsel are agreed that the four points which require consideration are:—

- (1) What was the origin of the incident?
- (2) How and by whom was the injury inside the rectum caused?
- (3) Under what section of the Penal Code did the offence (if any) fall?
- (4) Sentence.

Before dealing with these points it is necessary to state a few facts relating to the deceased which have been established by the documentary and unimpeachable oral evidence on the record. The history-sheet of the deceased as well as the evidence of Major S. D. Sondhi, I. M. S. (P. W. No. 2) who was Superintendent of the Montgomery Jail at the time, Major P. D. Chopra, I. M. S. (D. W. No. 7), Deputy Inspector General of Prisons, Punjab, and Rai Sahib Gokal Chand (D. W. No. 1) show that Nura was undergoing a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for 14 years under s. 397 of the Indian Penal Code having been convicted on the 31st of August, 1915. Since his incarceration he had been in several jails and during this period he had been punished no less than 117 times for offences under the Jail Rules. Major Chopra states that in the Central Jail, Lahore, he was considered to be a "man of very bad character", a "desperate" and "violent fellow".

On one occasion he supplied a razor to another convict who assaulted the Jailor at Lahore. He was declared to be "incorrigible" and transferred to the Montgomery Jail. According to Major Sondhi he did not improve himself in this jail and numerous complaints of misconduct were made against him. At Montgomery the appellant was in immediate charge of Nura and as such he had to enquire into these complaints and have him punished by proper authority.

It is common ground that on the morning of the 26th at about 9 A. M. a parade of the prisoners was held in the chakar, and after the Superintendent had left but while the appellant was still there, the incident in question took place. As to how it originated three different and conflicting versions have been given by the prosecution. One of them is contained in the dying declaration of Nura made before Mr. Sadiq Ali Shah, Magistrate, on the 26th of January, 1931; the second is given by Khanun (P. W. No. 8) who was an associate of the deceased and the third deposed to by Sant Charan Singh (P. W. No. 17). The learned Sessions Judge has rejected the first and second of these versions and after consideration I have no hesitation in agreeing with him. As Counsel for the Crown has not challenged the findings of the Sessions Judge on this point I do not think it necessary to discuss them in detail here. The learned Judge has accepted the evidence of Sant Charan Singh (P. W. No. 17) as correct and this view is endorsed by both Counsel before me. According to Sant Charan Singh, after the parade had been finished and the Superintendent departed, the appellant Bhola Nath came outside the iron-barred gate of barrack No. 6 and began to talk to the witness. As Bhola Nath turned his back towards the outer door Nura, who was standing beside the wall, came up and assaulted him striking him with a shoe on his face two or three times. On this Bhola Nath shouted to the lambardars and directed them to catch hold of the assailant. A number of prisoners ran immediately towards the spot, and caught hold of Nura, while he was aiming another blow at Bhola Nath. These persons overpowered Nura and began to beat him. Thereupon the witness withdrew into his barrack and did not see what happened afterwards. He is positive, however, that so long as he was on the scene Bhola Nath did not take any part in the beating.

As to what followed Sant Charan Singh is unable to throw any light upon, but there is the evidence of Mohammad Shafi (P. W. No. 9), Phuman Singh (P. W. No. 10), Turez (P. W. No. 11) and Narain Das Garg (P. W. No. 18) that after the deceased had been overpowered by the lambardars and others the appellant took hold of a wooden instrument and thrust it into the rectum of the deceased. The witnesses are not agreed as to the nature and size of the wooden substance which was used by the appellant. Some say that it was a sharp-pointed killa like a peg; others describe it as a rough and an unpolished danda; while the deceased had stated that it was a ruler. Soon after the occurrence when the Superintendent, Major Sondhi, arrived on the scene, he found near the spot two broken pieces of a ruler (Exs. P. 2, and P. 3), neither of which had any blood or faecal matter attached to it. The learned Sessions Judge has noticed at great length the discrepancies in the statements of the witnesses on this point and, while holding that it was not possible to reconcile them or to say with certainty what wooden weapon was actually used, he has held that the medical evidence left no doubt that it was some sort of polished ruler which had been used in the crime. Counsel for the appellant has laid great stress on these discrepancies and has argued that this circumstance discredits the testimony of all the eye-witnesses and that it is highly unsafe to rely on it, either for the purpose of fixing the identity of the person, who had thrust the wooden instrument inside the rectum of the deceased, or for determining the nature of the instrument itself. I think, however, that the discrepancies are not of great importance, as on an occasion like the one in question it is not possible for the eye-witnesses to keep in their minds an absolutely correct impression of the size and dimensions of the instrument used. In my opinion, the evidence leaves no doubt that after the deceased had beaten the appellant with a shoe and been overpowered by the prisoners the appellant lost self-control and picking up some sort of wooden substance which was lying near by introduced it into the rectum of the deceased.

The medical evidence is conclusive as to the cause of death. Major Sondhi, as soon as he heard of the incident, proceeded to the hospital and found Nura bleeding from the anus and complaining of pain in the abdomen. On examination the witness
